It is feared Bulgaria will soon enter the war against Turkey, according to private advices received. The Turkish Minister of the Interior accompanied by a German staff officer visited Adrianople and ordered the removal.

SNOWSTORMS IMPEDE THE ITALIANS.

UNDINE, Italy, July 2.—The Italian advance in the Tyrol is being seriously hindered by continued bad weather which is exceptional in midsummer. The mountaineers do not remember a season when there has been so much snow on th heights. The Italian troops are encountering snow storms and thick fogs which have interferred with long range firing. Hail stones were beating today in the lines across in parts of the Tyrol where the advance upwards is still in progress. Stronger and more elabor ate Austrian defences are confronting the invading forces.

LONDON, July 2.—Three British steamers the Inglemoor, the Cassia and the Wellburg, were torpedoed and sunk by a German submarine; the crews of the Inglemoor and the Cassia were landed at Falmouth, the crew of the Wellburg is safe. The Cassia was a tank steamer of 4,556 tons, and the Wellburg was of 3,591 tons. The Ingleinoor was 4331 tons and was 363 feet long. German submarines and mines accounted for a total of 103 steamers and sailing vessels during the month of June.

FRENCH DEFEAT FURIOUS GERMAN DRIVE.

PARIS, July 2.—Furious German attacks in the Argonne by an etnire army corps with the object of breaking through the French line in the hope of reaching Verdun continued yesterday. Eighty thousand Germans were hurled back with great losses in another sudden Teuton offensive in the region of Verdun. It is believed this movement was intended to lighten the pressure being exerted by the French against the Germans north of Arras.

GREEKS MARCHING TOWARDS ALBANIA.

ROME, July 2.—A despatch from Antivari, Montenegro, says two large Greek bands are advancing toward Beerat, Albania, after occupying the villages along the way.

PORT DALHOUSIE, Ont., July 2.—R. Y. The sister makes the statement as being generally known throughout London.

SPAIN FINDS IT DIFFICULT TO REMAIN NEUTRAL

MADRID, July 2.—Spain is experiencing difficulty in maintaining neutrality and an official order has been given not to discuss the question in public. The deputies of the left, who oppose the government policy, informed Premier Dato they proposed a speech-making campaign directed against the cabinet because of the suppression of public meetings. The Premier replied that he would authorize a meeting on condition that neutrality be not mentioned.

BRITISH DESTROYER DAMAGED BY EXPLOSION.

LONDON, July 2.—The torpedo boat destroyer Lightning was damaged last night off the east coast by a mine of torpedo explosion. She is now in harbor. Fourteen members of the crew are reported as missing.

An earlier report said the Lightning was lost. The destroyer carried a peace compliment of 90 men.

SHIP CARRYING BORDEN MARKED BY GERMANS.

NEW YORK, July 2.—The Tribune prints the following:

"Rumors in German circles yesterday predicted that the White Star liner Adriatic, which left Wednesday for Liverpool with a large cargo of war material, uniforms and automobiles, consigned to the allies, has been marked for attack by German submarines. Aside from being a floating arsenal, local Germans point out, she is an especial mark because some prominent Englishmen are among he passgers.

"Sir Robert Borden, Premier of Canada, is one of the passengers, bound for London to consult with the British Cabinet.

"Other passengers were Captain F. Conway Jenkins of the Royal Artillery Corps; Dr. Charles Sacolen, ellian Consul at Edinburgh, and a number of British Army officers.

"The Adriatic, under ordinary circumstances, would enter the danger zone on Tuesday evening, July 6."

ALIES RESTROY ENEMY AERODROME.

AMSTERDAM, July 2.—The Telegraaf reports that the aerodrome at Chistelles, near Brussels, has been destroyed. L'Echo Beige reports that two submarines and four destroyers are in Zeebrugge harbor. Allied aviators are regularly seen above the harbor dropping bombs.

Trophies of St. Julien

Mr. E. C. Sprague, Front street, has an interesting collection of trophies from the battle of St. Julien, which he will put on exhibition. They were picked up after the battle by Charlie Sprague and sent to his father, Mr. E. R. Sprague, North Front street. Among the curios are clips of British and German picked cartridges and French copper bullets

A wicked looking piece of steel is the heavy fragment of a German "Jack Johnson" or "coal box" it is over an inch thick and has a score or more of jagged edges

Charlie Sprague also picked up the brass case of a French shell. This he took to a French soldier who made an artistic scoop and shovel out of it and decorated it with French, English and German bullets.

Dominion Day, 1915, was quietly observed in Belleville. There was no celebration of any kind, and what with picnics, and attractions in outside places as Napanee and Tweed, the streets were bare of citizens

At Tweed the Fifteenth Band played at a big celebration which drew a large crowd

At the Altar

Cummins—White

A quiet wedding was celebrated at 1.30 yesterday afternoon at the home of Mr. Frederick White, Howard St. when his sister, Miss Florence White, was united in marriage to Mr. John Cummins of Front of Sidney. The Rev. R. C. Blagrave, rector of Christ Church, officiated in the presence of immediate relatives. The young couple were attended by Mr. Fred White and Mrs. Rosina Sayers of Picton. BULGARIAN RESERVISTS TOLD TO BE PREPARED TO REPORT.

LONDON, July 2.—Bulgarian reservists in London were served with a notice today to gather at their respective regiments so as to know where to report immediately in the event of being called to the colors.

At the Bulgarian Consulate it was said that the notification was only a formality necessitated by a change of regimental depots.

ALLIES CAPTURE STRONGHOLD OF KRINTHIA.

LONDON, July 2.—A despatch last night from Athens says that the allies have taken the Turkish stronghold of Krithia, on the Gallipoli Peninsula, to the western edge of which Gen. Ian Hamilton's report of yesterday carried his forces; but there is no confirmation.

Gratification over the British progress in Gallipoli is hardly more pronounced than the realization of the tremendous task which faces England and France in their attempt to clear the Turks from their natural defences barring the way to Constantinople.

SERBS TAKE AUSTRIAN TOWN.

NISH, Serbia, via London, July 2.—An official communication issued today by the war office states that on June 27, the Serbians succeeded in forcing a landing at Micharskada, near Shabatz, and captured the place, making 185 prisoners and taking much material.

HUSBANDING HER RESOURCES.

Not only the press but the Government of the United Kingdom is now urging upon the British people, in the most impressive manner and by all public means, the pressing duty of practising every possible, personal and domestic economy, from this time until the end of the war. There is every need of it, from private as well as public points of view.

This has been an instructive war. Almost every opinion held concerning it at the outset has had to be greatly modified or entirely reversed. The popular cry at the beginning was "business as usual," including pleasure, amusement and extravagance. People were even advised to spend freely, that business might not be disturbed. One by one in the Homeland, pleasures and amusements have been denounced and, more or less, renounced. Football was the first to go—horse-racing the last. Now comes the demand that every unnecessary form of private money-spending shall be abandoned, no matter what business or industry, not directly contributing to the prosecution of the war, may be adversely affected or even ruined.

The pity of it is that this idea was not got hold of sooner. Had it been, the war might be much nearer a successful issue at present. Certainly the people of the United Kingdom would have been in a far better position to bear the financial strain which has already been imposed on them, and must still further be imposed. Fortunately, however, Britain is rich, compared with Germany; and it is not yet too late. Germany, with her usual military foresight, saw what was coming as soon as her first ill-conducted, although nearly successful rush towards Paris had been definitely stopped. She recognized at once that the war was likely to be of considerable duration. Since that time, nothing that could be saved or utilized in any way in Germany has been wasted. Her organized and scientific economy has done much to keep her in a position still to prolong the war.

There are many things in connection with Germany's military and its associated social organization, which Britons would do much better to profit from than sneer at. British military foresight has not always been keen; and Britain, of course, has not been constantly thinking of and preparing for war during more than a generation. But it is not to the credit of the British War Office that the Germans should have got so far ahead of it in another matter of even more immediate importance than the husbanding of all their resources. We refer to the supply of the kind of shells required for waging successful war on the peculiar entrenchments which have been resorted to in this great struggle.

As soon as the Germans had "dug themselves in," on the Aisne, they realized that they could not be "dug out" or even seriously troubled by ordinary shrapnel shells. From this, they promptly inferred that their opponents would be equally secure in their entrenchments, and could only be got out by means of high explosives. This first great lesson of the war was not lost on them for a day. They immediately set about the production of high explosive shells by every means which they could command. Every available man and bit of material was devoted to that purpose.

While the British were marking time in their trenches during the late autumn and winter the Germans were unceasingly manufacturing shells wherewith to drive them out—and Russia back—in the spring. The British War Office did not even begin to think seriously about high explosive shells until they should have been ready to use them in unstinted quantities.

When the history of the land part of this war comes to be written it may be disclosed that Britain has not even been "muddling through" during the past six months. Effective "muddling" only commenced a few weeks ago. God grant that, with rational economy, enlightened activity, and enormous expenditures it may yet get the Empire and the world through the clouds which of late have begun to lower so ominously.

SECRETARY LANSING.

Mr. Robert Lansing, who has now been formally appointed Secretary of State by President Wilson is far better qualified for this important position than his late chief, William Jennings Bryan. For several years he has served as Assistant Secretary and Counsellor of the State Department, and has earned the reputation of being one of the best constitutional lawyers in the United States. He was born in Watertown, New York, in 1854, was educated at Amherst College and was called to the Bar in 1869. Most of his legal work has been done in connection with international tribunals, including the Alaskan Boundary Commission, and practically every international question involving the United States during the past twenty years.

It is interesting to recall that when the Behring Sea Seals Claims Commission held its session in Halifax in 1897, Mr. Lansing was Assistant Counsel for the United States Government. The Senior Counsel was Hon. Don M. Dickenson, who was Attorney General in Grover Cleveland's Cabinet. The Commissioners in that tribunal were the late Justice King, of the Supreme Court of Canada, representing Great Britain, and Judge W. L. Putnam, of the Superior Court of Massachusetts, representing the United States. The Canadian Counsel were Mr. V. Rodwell, K.C., of Victoria, B.C., Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper, who as a former Minister of Marine and Fisheries, was familiar with the details of the dispute, and Mr. Frederick Peters, K.C., ex-Premier of Prince Edward Island.

Mr. Lansing will be remembered by those who observed his work before the Commission, as a cultured gentleman of unfailing courtesy and a lawyer of fine ability. He made many friends in Halifax, who will be pleased that he has been promoted to this important post, at this critical time. It is interesting, also, to note that Mr. Lansing's wife is a daughter of the late John W. Foster, a former Secretary of State.

The cost of living in Canada is steadily increasing. The Labor Department Index Number for May, 1915, was 147.6, as compared with 147 in the previous month, and 136.3 in May, 1914. The cost of living is now higher than at any period in the history of the country.

Mr. Tennant, Under Secretary for War, recently let the British public into the secret of the great development that has taken place in the air service since the beginning of the war. For every pilot whom Britain had at the commencement of operations it now has ten. The one flying school with a capacity of twenty pupils has expanded to eleven schools with a capacity of more than 200 pupils. Great Britain is actually building giant machines similar to those which are being used by the Russians. By all testimony British airmen are individually superior to those of the Germans. We need not fear deficiencies in the air service.

SHELLS.

the bugle sounds reveille for a nation to arise,
A sleepy-headed nation that has slumbered far too long;
It is time for men and masters to awake and rub their eyes;
There's a note of sheer compelling in the bugle's lusty song:
Shells, shells, shells: By the hundred million, shells!
Shells to blast and batter down the Huns!
There are voices loudly calling
Where our gallant lads are falling—
Shells, shells, shells for British guns!

Get up you horney-handed and the men who own the shops,
For the master and the workman must be toiling hand in hand:
There is not a soul among you but will work until he drops,
For now the truth is spoken you may know and understand.
Shells, shells, shells! By the hundred million shells!
Shells to pelt the foeman till he runs;
For the lesson must be heeded
How the Germans have succeeded—
Shells, shells, shells for British guns!

It was shells that drove the Russians from the land that they had gained;
They were short of ammunition—they could only stand and die.
It is shells by which the strangle-hold on Belgium is maintained,
And it's up to us to make the only adequate reply.
Shells, shells, shells! By the hundred million, shells!
That's the ringing call to Britain's sons.
There's just one job before us
If we love the land that bore us—
Shells, shells, shells for British guns!

—Touchstone in London (Eng.) Daily Mail.

A "HIGHLANDER."

He was a fine specimen of a kilted Highlander. When he asked for his tram ticket he spoke with a strange intonation which one lady assured another was the Gaelic accent. At last the inquisitive old gentleman who is always in a tram put the question:

"And what part of the Highlands do you come from?"

There was a twinkle in the Highlander's eye as he replied, "Me name sorr, is Murphy."—Manchester Guardian.

"NOT MEN—BEASTS."

(From the London Morning Post).

As officer at the front, who is in a responsible position, writes to a friend —a man of standing in the City of London—a letter which the latter has sent to us. From it we take these passages:

"I wish I could chat about—but that is impossible. I can, however, tell you how hopeless all of our wounded have been taken by the Huns, and when retaken by us every wounded man was dead—bayoneted while lying helpless. I may, at least, be allowed to tell you how a certain headquarters hospital of a Canadian contingent was found by the Huns, and every helpless man in it burned to death. I could make your flesh creep with the bare recital of the studied bestiality of the Germans—of crucified wounded nailed to barn doors with bayonets, of women who have handed over young daughters to the British private soldier for protection before they themselves dared to indulge in the luxury of death.

"I tell you here and now Germans are not men. They are beasts and every man with German blood in his veins should have no place in England now. If ever they are turned out of the country I hope to God they will be kept out for good, so that this war may not have been fought in vain. Forgive me. We feel rather warm on this subject when we see by the papers that German prisoners have picnics; and, by the way, what particular politican is being indemnified by the inmates of Donington Hall?"

Trial is Inexpensive. — To those who suffer from dyspepsia, indigestion, rheumatism or any ailments arising from derangement of the digestive system, a trial of Parmelee's Vegetable Pills is recommended, should the sufferer be unacquainted with them. The trial will be inexpensive and the result will be another customer for this excellent medicine. So effective is their action that many cures can certainly be traced to their use where other pills have proved ineffective.

There are 362 sections for the horse classes at the Canadian National Exhibition—the most complete in the world.

The prize list for the Canadian National Exhibition amounts this year to approximately $40,000. It practically all goes to the agricultural classes.

A FREE TRIP to San Francisco 1915 and Return

The "Ontario" Gives you the Opportunity

Will you join the special party being sent upon an all-expense-paid tour of over 7000 miles by The Ontario to the great World's Expositions at San Francisco and San Diego? A little work in your spare time for one month and the trip is yours. Are you willing to try to win it?

THE Panama-Pacific International Exposition to be held in San Francisco in 1915 is a national undertaking, and authorized by the Congress of the United States. It will exhibit the resources and achievements of all the peoples of the earth, and will represent an outlay of over fifty million dollars.

The Panama-Pacific International Exposition will be the "last word" in expositions. It celebrates an event of world importance—the completion of the Panama Canal, the greatest physical accomplishment in history—one that will affect the commerce of all the world and the relations of all peoples. No celebration of this event would be adequate unless it surpassed in dignity, grandeur and importance any previous affair of its kind.

It is with this fact in mind that this wonderful Panama-Pacific International Exposition has been planned and will be carried out.

Many circumstances and conditions combine to give this Panama-Pacific International Exposition fundamental differences and advantages—to increase its educational and its commercial importance—to make it more than ever before an exposition demanding the attention of manufacturer, consumer, student, art-lover, nature-lover and sight-seer—in short, to make it above all others in history one that should be seen.

It is the first international exposition to be held on the shores of the Pacific. It is the first to be held in a seaport. It is the first that has celebrated a contemporaneous event. It is the first that has celebrated an event of world-wide importance. It is the first that has been held in a spot where the climate permits its being open for ten months and where flowers grow the year around. These factors, and many more, have been considered in the plans of this exposition and will be found reflected in the beauty, dignity, attraction and brilliancy of the finished result.

Copyright, 1914, by Panama-Pacific International Exposition Co.

Some Facts About the Great Exposition

(From San Francisco Examiner.)

The biggest fact about the Panama-Pacific International Exposition is that it has been completed at San Francisco on time in spite of the greatest war of all times, and that, in so far as the actual exhibits and participation are concerned, the war has had, if any, deleterious effect.

One big facts there are in plenty, as the dome of the Horticultural Palace, which is the biggest glass dome in the world. This dome is 185 feet high, and has a diameter of 152 feet, were rolled as a hoop it would be 484 feet in every revolution. Two hundred tons of steel were used in the construction of this beautiful hemisphere.

The south gardens, in which this Palace stands, has among other plantings 526,000 bulbs from Holland, 160,000 begonias, 200,000 pansies and 200,000 poppy plants.

There are twenty-four formal gardens, with fountains and flowers.

The three main courts and the two connecting courts have an area of twenty-three acres.

The wall of growing plants which separate the grounds from the city is twenty-seven feet high, has 105,000 square feet of surface, and 8,800 flats two feet by six feet planted to mesembryanthemum were needed to complete the work.

Enough macadam and asphalt was used to pave a road fifty miles long by sixteen feet broad. There are twenty-two miles of straightway paved roads within the grounds.

Forty-five hundred piles, which if placed end to end would be forty miles long, were used under the Palace of Transportation. Eighteen thousand piles, which if similarly placed would be 180 miles in length, were used under the palaces.

The machinery Palace is the largest frame building in the world, having a measurement of 968 feet by 368 feet. More than 8,000,000 board feet of lumber were used in this building.

In this building the only indoor aeroplane flight that has ever been made was successfully accomplished.

In reclaiming the Exposition grounds from the sea 1,700,000 cubic feet of sand and silt were pumped into the fill. Fifty thousand cubic yards of the finest loam were spread on top and 16,000 cubic yards of fertilizer were cultivated in for the flower beds and lawns.

To light the Exposition 950 searchlights with faces varying from eighteen inches to four feet across are used. A total of two billion candle power is used to illuminate the grounds and palaces.

There are no overhead wires.

The largest mural painting is twelve feet by 100 feet.

All of the buildings are lighted by the dual system, having electric light for the principal source of the illumination, but with gas lighted exits.

To see the whole of the exhibits in the palaces it would be necessary to walk forty-seven miles of aisles.

The largest single piece of statuary is the elephant in the Nations of the East, which is forty-five feet high.

Approximately seventy miles of blue print paper three and one-half feet wide have been used in the plans.

Five hundred thousand dollars has been offered as prizes for the live stock shows, and three miles of ribbons will be pinned on to the winners.

The tallest flag pole from a single stick of timber was presented by Oregon. The flag on this pole floats to the breeze 220 feet above the pavement.

Did you know there are over 160 distinct breeds of pigeons in Canada? There are 163 included in the Canadian National Exhibition, 21 different breeds of rabbits and 24 cavies.

The bearded man nodded silently, his eyes shifting from one face to the other. Fagin grinned, and poured out another drink.

"Now listen again," he went on, half angrily. "That boy's worth money to us—a thousand pounds—but it wouldn't do yer any good ter be mixed up in the affair, would it? What chance would yer have in this estate, or for yer commission either, if Howe or Clinton got an inklin' of yer game? Good Lord, man! they'd hang yer instead of the other fellow. You'll have ter let some us in it, I reckon, ter explain why yer left Sir Henry, an' came down here. Have yer got that fact later yer brains?"

Grant glared at him wickedly, but remained silent across the table.

"Yer already in bad enough, without huntin' more trouble. Better leave the boy alone. I thought, at first, we'd have ter use him, but I don't now. Let the girl believe he's deserted, and that yer in a position ter help him. That will serve yer purpose better than the other scheme. It may awaken her gratitude, her sweet love!"

"Damn her love!"

"So it isn't love, eh, that makes yer so anxious, I thought as much. What is it, then—revenge!"

Grant held his breath a moment, his dull eyes on the faces of the two men.

"Well, I might as well tell you," he snarled at last. "I loved her once, I guess; anyhow I wanted her badly enough. I want her now, but not in just the same way. I want to show her I'm the master. I want to give her a lesson, and that cub brother of hers. I'd have got them all, the Colonial with them, if that damned Colonial spy hadn't stolen my coat. I had them, dead to rights, Fagin, and the papers to prove it. Now I don't care how it's done, so I get her. I thought she'd marry me to save the boy, but if she won't, why then, you carry out your plan—what is it?"

Fagin laughed, again emptying his glass.

"Easy enough. She's alone, except for her father, and he can't get out of bed. We've got Jenks here, an' the damned old coward will do whatever I tell him."

"But she despises me—"

"Oh, no! We'll make you a victim. That will leave things in hope'ss shape between yer two. We'll play it off as a drunken lark—eh, Jones? My God! It won't be the first time we've done the trick either. Do you remember that love-sick couple over at Tom's River, Nell? I never laughed so much in my life. This is a better one. Lord! but won't old Skinner rave, an' mighty little good it will do him. Come, what do yer say, Grant? Are yer game?"

"Hell's fire—yes." He got to his feet, gripping the back of his chair. "Bring—bring 'em in; this is a good place."

Fagin struck the table with his fist. "Of course it is, drink ter the bride after the ceremony. Bill, bring in the preacher."

"It was growing daylight. I could perceive the glow of the sky out through the window, but the candles still sputtered on the table, casting grim lights and shadows on the faces of the three men. As Bill disappeared into the parlor, I stole silently back to the library door.

"Tom," I whispered briefly, "find the boys, and bring them in here, through that broken window. They are in the orchard to the right, and there are no guards in front. Move lively, but be quiet.

"What is it, Major?" asked young Mortimer, eagerly.

"I don't explain now. I must get back where I can see and hear. But there is going to be a fight. Hold the men ready here until I call. See that your weapons are in good order.

"I caught the glint of his eye, but could wait no longer. I was already back, unnoticed under the stairs, when Bill came forth, gripping the collar of his prisoner's coat, and urging him down the hall. I crouched lower, the morning light threatening to reveal me, but they had yet other mind more at ease, now I knew that

SOUTH HASTINGS SUNDAY SCHOOL ASSOCIATION HELD UNION PICNIC

Foxboro was in Holiday Attire on Tuesday When Residents of the Surrounding Country Flocked to the Village in Hundreds—Sports and Music Galore—Everybody Happy

Important and interesting events have been fairly crowding upon us the past week or ten days so it is about time we began to chronicle them.

The list began with the Presbyterian lawn social on Thursday of last week. The crowd was very large; the long tables in the dinning hall were loaded with delicious viands; the booth dispensed delightful ice cream and strawberries and the fish-pond afforded excellent sport and most satisfactory fishing. Nor was the literary portion of the feast a whit behind the rest. Foxboro band, Pinnacle quartette, Foxboro quartette, Miss Moore, soloist, Mrs. (Rev.) Currie, elocutionist all contributed generously to the pleasure of the evening and there were addresses by the local clergy.

Patriotic Sunday was observed with great enthusiasm in the Presbyterian church. The sacred edifice was lavishly adorned with flags and bunting. The Sunday School Cadets were tiny flags fastened with the cadet pin and the seniors were badges of red, white and blue ribbon. The regular program furnished by the Pastoral Assembly was used and besides that the cadets assisted by the choir sang "We're the Sunday School Cadets." The Misses Spencer gave a duet "O Canada" and little Mildred Elliott sang "We'll Never let the old Flag fall" This was the second event.

The third and crowning one occurred on Tuesday. It was the concensus of opinion picnic under the auspices of the South Hastings Sunday School Association. Foxboro was certainly en fete that day. Almost every residence was decorated with flags, pennants and bunting. White streamers bearing the word welcome in large letters of brilliant red were stretched across the street at either end to greet the floods of visitors. The old-fashioned picnic dinner was held in Mr. Floyd Ackley's grove, after which the men and boys formed in procession and headed by the Foxboro band marched up the street and down, then returned to the lawn of the Methodist church where patriotic songs were sung, inspiring addresses were given by Mr. Harrison of Kingston, and Rev. Kerr of Belleville, after which a fine program of sports was run off. This is the first affair of its kind to be held in this part of Ontario. The number of men and boys present was a most gratifying feature of the occasion. Political pleaies and gatherings under various secular auspices have been held mostly on legal holidays but to see hundreds of men of all ages leaving their work in the busy season and driving some of them miles with their families to attend a Sunday school picnic is surely encouraging in this day when we hear so much about decline of religion and spiritual indifference.

Bridge Street's Annual Picnic

Bridge Street Methodist Sunday School held its annual Dominion Day picnic to Twelve o'Clock Point. The steamer "Brockville" was the boat chartered for the occasion. There was a good attendance of the public. The day was ideal at the Point, those who were there, missing the intense heat of the city. In the afternoon a number of races were run off for the delight of the children under the direction of the following—Judge Deroche, superintendent, R. B. Frederick, F. A. Deacon, W. R. Deacon, W. D. M. Storey Percy Gifford and others.

CHARGE WITHOUT OFFICERS

Canadians Proved That They Had Plenty of Discipline

Harry B. Free, formerly of Campbellford, who is at the front in France, says, in writing to a friend: "Perhaps you have heard that the Canadians have no discipline. Well, let me tell you that one battalion, No. 4, made a charge without officers and pulled it off as if they were on parade. Does that look like no discipline? It was certainly touch-and-go for about three days. The gas bombs were hellish. I could smell them two miles away. We all have respirators and gas helmets now and there is little to fear from them. On the whole, my new occupy we go through German trenches and up about half a mile to our first line. Now we have made progress here, occasionally we chew off a few yards somewhere, but on the whole the line does not change very rapidly.

Crentore's Band will be back to the Canadian National Exhibition this year, but there will be representative bands there from all over Canada.

FREAKS TO BE BARRED

Custom Inspectors Ordered to Stop Them at Border

Canada is not to be a freak country any more. William Banks, Sr., the official police censor, after communicating with Ottawa, has received word that the customs officials at all border points have been instructed to turn back all freaks of any nature. It means that circus sideshows will be up against it, as well as monstrous "attractions" which have in the past been featured on the Midway at the exhibition. Apparently the fat lady, the living skeleton, the Siamese twins, the "dope fiends" and other unusual specimens of humanity are now on the list of undesirables.

The line will also be drawn more closely for theatrical productions. The official censor has found that many immoral shows that have been prosecuted across the border have been shown at various places in the province. The effect of this order, to the censor, are not always burlesque troupes. For example, Mr. Banks had to be satisfied in condemning one of Bernard Shaw's productions submitted to him last season.

Towel Shower and Evening Band Concert

The Women's Institute of West Belleville will hold a towel shower from 4 to 6 o'clock, Monday, July 5, in the pavilion of the playground. Refreshments served, good musical program. In the evening the Salvation Army Band will give a concert on the play grounds. The proceeds from candy and ice cream booths, etc., will go to playground fund. No admission. Everybody come. Gifts of towels also received in the evening.

The Premier Investment

One of the well-known Investment Houses of Toronto, Messrs. A. E. Ames & co, states that in an experience extending over a quarter of a century, there has not been such a wide interest in Government and Municipal investment as at the present. Discriminating investors of all classes, such as Insurance Companies, Banks, Loan Companies, and private Investors, are all taking advantage of present opportunities. This is due to the past splendid record of Canadian Municipal securities for absolute safety and present attractive prices.

The agricultural and implement building is the largest on the grounds of the Canadian National Exhibition. It contains 76,648 feet of floor space.

The Art Gallery with 7,084 feet of floor space, is the smallest of the more important buildings at the Canadian National Exhibition.

Frugal Shakespeare.

Shakespeare was unlike the dramatists of his time, somewhat like Dante Gilpin—he "had a frugal mind." When fortune smiled upon him in London he kept retired and saved money, and it is to this self chosen obscurity that may be attributed the fact that so little is known about him. In about ten years from his coming to London—that is, in 1597—he was beginning to make purchases of property in his native town of Stratford. And a few years later he had withdrawn to live like a private gentleman in probably the best house in the little Warwickshire town. He quietly resumed the placid life he loved by the banks of the Avon of his youth.

Beginning of English Snuff Taking.

The battle of Vigo bay, fought in 1702, led to the adoption of the snuff taking habit in England. After defeating the combined French and Spanish fleets Sir George Rooke, the English commander, sacked the town of Vigo, the booty including several thousand barrels of the finest snuff. Although smoking was then firmly established in England snuff was almost unknown, but when this enormous quantity was thrown on the market at a low price it was bought out of curiosity by all sorts and conditions of men. The novelty caught on so well that for the next 100 years the English snuffed far more tobacco than they smoked.—London Chronicle.

A Great Work of Art.

It was Apelles who visited the studio of Protogenes in Rhodes and, finding the artist absent, drew a thin colored line in such a way that the latter knew that only his brother in art could have done it. But, not to be outdone, Protogenes drew a thinner line upon that of Apelles, and when this was seen Apelles drew a third line upon that of Protogenes. This panel was then looked upon as the greatest work of art. So says the story, in the palace of the Caesars.

The Lawyer Countered.

On one occasion, Judge Bodkin tells in his reminiscences, Lord Justice Holmes was amusingly cross-examined by a junior barrister who was defending a prisoner before him. Though the prisoner was a rather poor specimen, the barrister eloquent appeals to the jury to take into account the fact that he was an orphan. The judge grew impatient.

"I really don't see," he exclaimed, "how the fact that your client is an orphan bears on the case. He is old enough to take care of himself, and it is quite natural at his age he should have lost his parents. For instance, I myself am an orphan."

"Yes, my lord," interposed the counsel, "and should your lordship ever have the misfortune to come before a jury of your fellow countrymen I trust that circumstance will be taken into consideration in your lordship's favor."

The police received a message yesterday morning from the Anglo American stating that a couple, a man and his wife, had left the hotel having got paid their board bill. Sergeant Harman went on their trail and located Wm. John Saunders and Della Saunders, on the charge of vagrancy. It is claimed that Saunders had just got out of jail at Napanee. He and his wife are alleged to have secured dinner, supper and lodging at the Anglo. A previous report had come in the day previous of a couple leaving a house on Coleman Street without payin for board. They were remanded for a week.

REINFORCEMENTS.

This has become a great word in this war, which is consuming with such voracious and insatiable appetite the manhood of our nations. To place the first armies in the field is becoming a small matter compared to the demands to make up for those who are falling and keep the ranks complete. But a greater problem than this is on our great agencies for man building. It is easy to supply the numbers needed to fill the gaps in the army, but where is the wastage in the qualities of manhood going to be made up. Every official man who fails represents an investment in education, and a measure of virility and virtue which has left the institution of our land yet to produce. Can we produce more to take his place? Every institution that has a part in the making of men will be called upon now to supply reinforcements of character. Like the munition factories, these must be speeded up to supply the demand. The Young Men's Christian Association, as one of these institutions, has a new and loudly call to put its part in giving to our country its needed reinforcements on Manhood.

On the Jungfrau

Story of a Slip of the Foot in a Snowstorm

By DWIGHT NORWOOD

There is a little town in the Bernese Alps called Grindelwald. It is occupied both in winter and summer principally by English people who go there for relaxation. A fine hotel furnishes accommodation for these pleasure seekers, who in winter skate on the rink attached to the hotel or glide over the crusted snow on skis. At 5 o'clock an English afternoon tea is set in the hotel, after which is rather a luncheon than a tea and upon which the appetites of the guests, excited by the winter sports, are satisfied, half a dozen girls in Swiss costume serving the viands.

The mountaineers at Grindelwald are in readily devoted to climbing. There are mountains enough in the immediate neighborhood to furnish a field for the ambition of the most expert climbers. There are the snowy summits of the Wetterhorn, the Schreckhorn, the Finsteraarhorn, the Eiger, the Monch, the Silberhorn, but the queen of the range is the Jungfrau. Every summer some of these mountains are climbed by men whose hands are sufficiently balanced to enable them to make such an ascent and whose passion lies in ascending to cold heights.

One night a young American named Harvey arrived at Interlaken, so called from being between the Brienz and Lake Thun in the region of the Bernese Alps. The rain was pouring in torrents, coming in his introduction to a locality noted for its beautiful scenery anything but pleasant, and the same matters would be was informed that the sun had not been seen there for two weeks.

But the next morning he was awakened by a ray of sunlight and, jumping out of bed, looked through a window High in the heaven stood the Jungfrau, white as the moon after daylight of a morning. He was first impressed with the beauty and grandeur of the sight, then was seized with a desire to stand on the mountain's summit.

Harvey was directed to go to Grindelwald, which is but few miles Interlaken by the narrow gauge cogwheel railroad. From there he could go by the same transportation to Lauterbrunnen, still farther up in the mountains, at the base of the Jungfrau peak, where he could find guides who would conduct him on the ascent.

In the train were a party of Americans and a number of English people, some going as far as Grindelwald, while others would make a stop to Scheidegg and thence down to Lauterbrunnen and back to Interlaken

On this journey Harvey made the acquaintance of a party of Americans, among whom were several young girls. One of these girls, Miss Adelaide Ledge, proved more attractive to the young American than the Jungfrau. And, though after reaching Grindelwald he was every day about to start for the ascent, it was a month before he made his final preparations for doing so.

Meanwhile a full fledged love affair had developed between him and Miss Ludledge. Love among persons who have nothing to do but enjoy themselves grows rapidly, and with this pair it galloped. Before the thirty days had passed they had pledged their troth.

Most of those at Grindelwald were English people, and among them was a young scion of a noble house, the Hon. Mr. Chidley. Chidley was at first attentive to Miss Rutledge, but when Harvey became devoted to her withdrew from a rivalry that appeared hopeless. Whether he was much smitten with her, whether his predisposition for her had any effect on the manifestation of this story, has never become known.

When Harvey finally got away from Miss Rutledge, who was holding him from his desire to rise in the air as a weight holds down a balloon, the climbing was accomplished by a party of climbers that was organized to go with the ascent of the Jungfrau. The party consisted of four besides the guides, two Americans and two Englishmen, one of the latter being the Hon. Mr. Chidley. They were to go up during an afternoon to a clubhouse on the side of the mountain provided by an Alpine association, where they would remain till about 2 o'clock in the morning, when they would resume their climb.

The dangers attending mountain climbing are well known. Every year a number of climbers meet with accidents and add more graves to those in the cemetery devoted to the bodies of the killed. Naturally Miss Rutledge was solicitous with reference to her lover's safety and clung to him at their parting, but with him go

Most of the guests at the hotel were outside to see the starting and waved a succession of climb and a safe return. Miss Rutledge's handkerchief being the last to be withdrawn. The party reached the clubhouse before sunset and helped themselves to what they needed from eatables cached there, leaving money to pay for what they used. Then they threw themselves on the straw which was provided instead of beds.

It was more than an hour before Harvey, when they were awakened by their guides, who prepared such a breakfast as would be expected on an extremely cold day, after which the straw beds were thrown into a corner. Then, with much laughter and jollification in turning out in the cold, a knock in the morning, and the climbers started on their march in silence that was maintained till after day had broken.

It is by no means certain when a party undertakes to make an ascent that it will succeed. In this case it gained the summit and looked over the Alpine area, its various peaks and formless surface something like that of an ocean of gigantic billows. Harvey was delighted and inquisitively resolved that if he lived long enough he would climb every important peak in Switzerland.

Man proposes and God disposes. This was destined to be his only mountain ascent.

In the descent first came a guide then an Englishman, then an American. The fourth man was Chidley, the fifth Harvey, the sixth a guide, a rope passed from the first to the last bound around the body of each person.

When the party left the summit there was scarcely a cloud in the sky Two hours later the sun was suddenly obscured, and the party was advancing in a dense snowfall. Much depended upon the first guide, who selected the route. His movements ordinarily when the man behind him slipped and fell. The third man was pulled off his feet, and the weight of the two combined threw the front guide. The strain of three fallen men was too much for the rope, which held taut by the three rear men. It broke, and the front half of the party went down into an abyss.

Chidley, who was now front man, threw himself in the opposite direction from that in which the others had fallen. He felt into a depression some thirty feet deep, covered with snow, and caught on the bowlder on what was beneath him. Harvey and the rear guide fell on the opposite side. The rope held.

That night Chidley staggered into a chalet high up on the mountainside and reported that he was the only member of the climbing party left alive. He said that after hanging several hours to the rope between him no one side of a sharp ridge and Harvey and the guide on the other side broke and all had fallen. Chidley expected, he said, to go down into an abyss, but had only fallen into thirty feet of snow and was not hurt. As soon as the storm ceased he had found his way to the ridge and continued the descent alone.

Chidley was piloted to Grindelwald, where he told his story. The end of the rope about his waist showed evidence of having been cut by ice or a rock edge about four feet from his body. It was stated by the guides that any of the others of the party had fallen on ground that would not necessarily bring death he said that the other side of the ridge was very deep and he had no hope that they could have survived the fall.

Miss Rutledge after the first paroxysm of grief subsided on joining a new party to go up the mountain and hunt for the others of the party that had fallen. She could not be persuade her to remain failed. The party started soon after daylight in the morning, and she was the only woman with it.

Chidley was so overcome by the terrible experience through which he had passed that he expressed himself as unable to guide the rescue party to the scene of the accident. This set them all against him, for his guidance was essential. No officer could induce him to go, and they were obliged to content themselves with his pointing out the ridge from which the fall had occurred, which could be seen from the hotel.

The party, armed with ropes, food and stimulants, started up the mountain. On approaching the clubhouse a man was seen standing before the door looking down upon them. Then another came out and stood beside him. It looked as though at least one of the missing men had been saved. Presently those two men came down to meet the party. They were Harvey and the rear guide.

The relief felt by Miss Rutledge was such that it is to be conceived. She threw herself into Harvey's arms.

The men showed the end of the rope that had held them to Chidley. It had been cut with a knife. He could fray the end to be carried as it with him with a stone, but not the end next to Harvey. The two men had slid down several hundred feet on snow. The three men who had preceded them had gone much farther, but could be seen from a point near which they had fallen. Harvey and the guide, not being able to rescue them without ropes, had continued the descent and had stopped for food at the clubhouse.

The party proceeded to a ledge above the three men they sought and, having rope in plenty, assisted them up an ascent too steep and too slippery for them to climb, especially as one of the party had broken a leg. Having effected this rescue, all returned to the hotel at Grindelwald

The Hon. Mr. Chidley saw them coming at a distance, recognized them and knew that all had been saved. Moreover, they brought with them evidence that he had discovered how near he was to safety and had sacrificed two of them in his desire to insure it for himself. A train was leaving Grindelwald, and he left with it.

The reason why Harvey never published another mountain is apparent. In the first place, after his experience on the Jungfrau he had no desire to climb another mountain. In the second place a Jungfrau in the person of Miss Rutledge, who became Mrs. Harvey, prefer vato on his again doing anything of the kind.

...ABOUT FRUIT AND FRUIT-EATING.

No wonder one feels feeling nervous at times in this age of rush and rack-et, but it is quite possible to put on the brake, as it were, and not let the nerves run away with us and spoil our health. Here are a few hints on the subject:

If people fret you it is not necessary to be rude to them. Try instead to avoid them. Don't read books that irritate you. Books are plentiful; therefore put away the offending volume and choose another. If noise at night worries you don't let it continue to do so. Get up and see to the matter and put it right.

Don't let yourself get into the habit of being bored. It is not worth a while. When you feel it coming on plunge at once into some task that will take all your time and energy.

...Small Green Onions.

When the they grow onions appear try cooking and serving them as you would asparagus. Wash them well, tie in bunches, drop in boiling salted water and cook for ten minutes. This time allowance is for very young vegetables, about the size of lead pencils. Drain, place on toast and pour over them a hot cream sauce flavored with chopped parsley. These will be found delicious, as they do not retain the onion flavor to which so many persons object. Young onions are excellent in almost all spring salads and are especially good with fresh tomatoes, cucumbers and...

A SHREWD WOMAN

By EUNICE BLAKE

Martin Kemper was a mountaineer of the Swiss Alps. He owned a number of goats and made cheese of their milk. One day when Martin was climbing up to a considerable height he came to a steep place on his track in a dying condition, for he had slipped and fallen over a cliff. Martin stanched the blood flowing from the wound and otherwise cared for the sufferer until he died. Then he went down to the village to report the matter.

Martin's wife, Gretchen, was a very shrewd woman, and before doing anything of importance he was used to consulting her. So he went home and told her of his experience and that he was about to report it that the body he had left on the mountain side might be buried.

"Don't you say anything about it," said Gretchen. "You might be accused of having committed a murder."

Martin had thought of that himself, and this was one reason why he had mentioned the matter to his wife. He concluded to keep his mouth shut. But there were two things he did not think of. In ascending a stranger he had got some blood on his sleeve, and when descending into the mountain he had met Jacob Kirshner going up. Kirshner found the body and in telling of his find mentioned having met Kemper coming down the mountain. This excited some suspicion that Kemper had been the cause of the stranger's death, and a man was sent to his home to investigate. Kemper received him, and the visitor noticed a spot on his shirt sleeve that looked like blood.

To make a long story short, Kemper's not having reported the stranger's death led to his undoing. He was tried for murder and convicted, to be sentenced on a Friday at the hour of 12 noon.

Gretchen, his wife, was borne stricken at the result of the advice she had given her husband, who attempted to comfort her by telling her that if he had reported the matter he might still have been convicted. The misfortune was in finding the body. Gretchen, who, as has been said, was a woman of great shrewdness, set her wits to work to think of some plan whereby she might save her husband.

She went to Adolph Switzer, the head man of the canton, and besought him to save her husband, assuring him that it was her opinion that he was wrongly convicted and it was she, if any one, that should be punished. Switzer replied that the verdict was a matter for the courts, over which he had no power, and Gretchen went away disconsolate.

One morning some time before the hanging Gretchen, being still asleep, dreamed of a plan by which she might save her husband. When she awoke, though, she did not consider it likely to succeed, still she believed it possible. At any rate she determined to try it.

Her husband had, among other things, a chronometer which had been given him by a watchmaker in Geneva and which he valued very highly. He secured the time once a month regularly and found that his watch never varied more than a few seconds. The result was that Martin furnished time for the whole Swiss valley. The day before the hanging the sheriff asked a citizen to go to Gretchen and get the time, that in order to execute his prisoner in exact accordance with the sentence. Gretchen gave the inquirer time fifteen minutes behind what was correct, stating that she had learned that owing to bad weather the astronomer in Geneva had observed the sun had been unable to do so for several weeks and had discovered a considerable error in his chronometer. The sheriff set his watch in accordance with the time given him.

On the morning of the hanging Gretchen went to the head man of the canton and asked his son for an order for the body of her husband that she might give it burial. Switzer replied that he would prepare the order after the execution had taken place and not before. Half an hour before 12 she went to Switzer's house with her chronometer, which she set ahead fifteen minutes, and when the hands pointed to 12 Switzer signed the order. Gretchen had a horse and a cart in waiting a short distance from the house, and, jumping into the cart, she whipped the horse to a gallop, traversing a mile to the gallows. On the way she turned the hands of her chronometer backward to correspond with the time she had given the sheriff. When she reached him his and her timepieces both marked ten minutes to 12. She held the dead man's order aloft, crying:

"A reprieve, a reprieve!"

The sheriff read the order and, thinking that the condemned man had been pardoned, turned him over to his wife. Then the two jumped into the cart and drove like mad to a railway station a few miles distant, where they caught a train bound for the French border.

The misunderstanding that Gretchen had brought about between the head man of the canton and the sheriff was not discovered till an hour after that fixed for the execution and when the prisoner was well on his way to foreign territory. As soon as the truth was known a conference was held by the authorities, but nothing was ever done about the matter, for when they learned that Kemper was in a foreign land they did not try to get him, and in time his wife convinced them that he was an innocent man. Then he returned to his home.

Needn't Be Parents.

Ontario children under 16 years of age will in future be granted admission to moving picture theatres if accompanied by an adult, the law now being shifted back to the position in force for several years. By a new amendment this year the regulation providing for the sponsorship of a guardian or member from the child's household when admission was sought, has been cancelled because of its unworkable nature.

The list of exceptions and conditions throughout last year caused much confusion, however. The only one of proving relationship being made at theatre proprietors. Children will now be admitted if in company with a responsible man or woman.

WOMEN IN QUEER ROLES.

Mrs. Patterson Is the Only Lady Recruiting Officer In England.

Slowly, but none the less surely, woman is proving her right to equal and, indeed, the superior, of man in various occupations. This is very evident from the fact that women clerks are being largely employed in the banks, while some time ago one was started exclusively by women, Again, in Stock Exchange offices, insurance offices, and commercial houses, more women are being employed every day.

It is significant that a lady at the present time holds the position of Inspector of Agents to the Commercial Union Assurance Company, Ltd., receiving the same rate of payment as "man.

Quite a novel profession for women, the utility of which is being recognised more and more every day by large business houses, is that which is known as "welfare worker," who looks after the physical and moral welfare of women and girls in large businesses. Welfare workers are women whose tact, resourcefulness, and sympathetic ability make them specially valuable in dealing with a large staff of women and girls. A university course of economics, a year's training at a Settlement, and a few months' business training are all the desirable preliminaries.

Among the more advanced posts which women are admirably filling to-day, particularly in the scientific world, might be mentioned the appointments which have been given to two ladies in the National Museum of Science and Art, one in the Zoology Division and the other in the Botanical Division. These ladies are employed as assistants.

But distinguished positions gained by women are legion. Miss Marie Stopes, D.Sc., is the only established lecturer on paleobotany; Miss Ethel Robertson is assistant to the Professor of Protozoology at London University; Miss Alice Werner holds the post of Professor of African Languages at King's College; Miss A. Czaplika, who holds a travelling Fellowship of Somerville College, has gone to Siberia under the auspices of the Oxford School of Anthropology to study the native tribes in the Yenesei Valley; while Miss Gertrude Lowthian Bell's studies in Syria have won tributes from learned societies.

Referring to curious occupations chosen by women, it is to be noted that there is at least one woman slaughterer, three gardeners, grocers and three grooms, while the only woman authorized to fly the recruiting officer's ribbons is Mrs. J. G. Patterson, Pixboro', Horley, Surrey.

THE SMITH HARDWARE CO.

IN A SUBMARINE.

Life Not So Unpleasant as Many People Imagine.

The modern submarine has been rightly termed a "matchbox full of machinery." Its interior is a mass of delicate mechanism, and five men can easily operate every movement of a submarine merely by turning hand-wheels, or pulling switches and levers. When on the surface the craft travels like a motor boat. It is driven by petrol engines which answer two purposes. They either operate the propellers in the rear of the submarine when it is awash or they can be connected to a dynamo which generates electricity for the storage battery. The latter is the heart of the underwater vessel when it is beneath the waves. The electric battery drives the propellers and does all necessary work after the submarine has left the surface.

Five men working in unison can operate a submerged submarine. The first man stands at a handwheel, which controls the horizontal or diving rudder. His eyes are fixed on a gauge which shows the degree of submersion and an instrument which tells him if the vessel is keeping on an even keel.

A second man operates the vertical helm from the conning tower, steering by compass. The third man has charge of the electric motors in the stern of the boat, and a fourth stands by the central hand-wheel at the torpedo breeches in the bow of the vessel.

The fifth man is the commander in the conning tower, who delivers all orders to his men by means of speaking tubes.

Torpedoes are fired from a tube by means of a handwheel. When this is spun rapidly round air pressure are set at work which send the deadly missile flying out of the tube at a mile-a-minute rate.

Although space is limited, life in a submarine is not so unpleasant as many people imagine. Under water the craft speeds quietly and smoothly with no vibration. The hum of the motors and the sharp words of command from the speaking-tubes are the only sounds which break the silence which reigns. The crew sleep in hammocks slung under the deck, and the commander has a collapsible berth. Cooking is carried out by means of electric stoves and all garbage is shot from the vessel through pneumatic outlets.

SCHOOL FOR SPIES.

War Reveals Strange Facts Regarding German Methods.

Among the many things revealed to us by the war is the fact the practically every German is a spy.

Little surprise need be felt, therefore, at the discovery the French have just made of the existence of a School for Spies at Lorrach, in the Grand Duchy of Baden. There, in a sort of university for the formation of the perfect spy, spectacled Herr Professors initiated their pupils into the mysteries and artifices of espionage.

The University of Espionage of Lorrach admitted women, of course, as well as men. Before admission the candidate would be questioned by military officers, pretending to be police magistrates, who would decide whether the applicants possessed the necessary aptitude and inclination for the profession.

The length of study lasted from a few weeks to several months, according to the degree of perfection or the importance of the position the candidate desired to attain.

The professor began the course of instruction with lectures, illustrated by colored prints, on the uniforms, arms and other technical details of the military and naval organization of foreign countries; photographs were shown of British, French and Russian soldiers; full explanations were given of the army and navy effectives in each country, the strength of the different garrisons, and the strategical utilization of the railways.

Students were told how to collect this information quickly, and given to convey it to headquarters without arousing suspicion. They were told, for instance, how they could mark on a railway time-table the number of regiments at a given town by a system of simple figures.

When the students' instruction was complete he was provided with false papers, and sent out to "try his luck." He (or she) was then probably told, however, that any spy who got into trouble would be disavowed by the Government.

The "Boomerang."

Reuter's Calro special correspondent says:

The Australian and Turkish trenches at Saribair are at some points only 20 yards apart. The Turks throw hand-grenades, which in many cases are caught by the colonials, and thrown back with great force by some of their "giants," and the Australian's missiles explode in his own trenches.

The Turkish position at Gaba Tepe is a very strong one. It is a mass of trenches, and the guns are run on rails underground to any point desired. There is also a road running under the ground from Gaba Tepe to Maidos.

The Queen Elizabeth is doing great work. An officer described the effect of one shot from the giant ship. Another says the Asiatic's long line of camels was seen coming over the hills. The Queen Elizabeth fired and nothing more was seen of the camels.

Prussian Losses.

Prussian casualties in the war are estimated at 1,409,489 in an official statement issued at Berlin recently. The same statement said that $75,000,000 damage had been done to German soil by the Russian invasion of the province.

CHERRY JELLY

From a recipe of Charles Francatelli, Chief Cook to Queen Victoria. Published in 1865.

Clean 2 lbs. cherries and a handful of red currants, and bruise stones and kernels in a mortar; place in small preserving pan with 1 lb. John Redpath's sugar-loaf and ½ pint spring-water; boil on the stove-fire about five minutes, taking care to remove scum as it rises; pour into a beaver jelly-bag and filter in the usual way. Mix jelly with two ounces clarified isinglass, and pour into jars or moulds.

EXTRA GRANULATED SUGAR

to preserve its luscious flavor for the winter days to come.

For over half a century Redpath has been the favorite sugar in Canada for preserving and jelly-making—and always the same, you can use it according to your recipes, year after year, with full confidence in the results.

Fruit put up right, with Redpath Extra Granulated Sugar, will keep as long as you wish, and when opened a month or a year hence will delight you with its freshness and flavor. "Let Redpath sweeten it."

Get your supply of sugar in Original REDPATH Packages, and thus be sure of the genuine—Canada's favorite sugar, at its best.

Put up in 2 and 5 lb. Sealed Cartons and in 10, 20, 50 and 100 lb. Bags.

FOR OUTING WEAR.

Chic Chapeau of Flexible Straw For the Little Man.

WHITE STRAW HAT.

Smart in the extreme are the outing hats shown this year for the smaller boy. Take the one illustration, for example. This hat is of white flexible straw, built with a hexagonal crown, and a flexible brim which may be worn turned either up or down. A band of white grosgrain ribbon ends in a jaunty bow at the side.

HOW TO DRESS.

The Advice of a Famous Actress Not to Be Followed Too Closely.

"Dress your character, not your figure, is the advice of a famous actress —and rather surprising this advice seems at first hearing. But think it over and the excellence of the idea will appeal to you. Every woman has a certain individuality of her own —temperament. If you will—that makes her a little, or perhaps a good deal, different from all other women. It is this individuality—this temperament—that woman should dress up to, according to the fitness. In order to make the personality more marked and convincing.

But an instinctive carrying out of this advice with no need to the promptings of reason may result in disaster. For example, there is always the woman who weighs 200 pounds or there about, and whose personality is distinctly kitchenish. Is she to dress her character—or her figure? There is also the little woman who ought to belong to the cuddly, appealing class, who yearns to be impressive and stately. If she has any sense she dresses the garments of the irresistible woman she may spend her chances of being irresistible.

The actress in her part always is dressed in conformity with the character she is portraying, but her costumes—and here is an important point —are made to suit her figure lines while expressing a special sort of personality. Therefore if the delightful flounces of the 1830 period suit your type exactly, but are a bit trying to your too solid figure, adopt the flounces, but see to it that they are cut and so arranged that the lines of the silhouette are right. This is true also of most millinery styles, of classic draperies or oriental modes. They all may be worn, when they suit the type exactly. If they do not they may be easily adapted to the figure that is to sustain them.

Startling Figures.

The public generally cannot talk in what is meant when the British Government talks in million sterling." When Mr. Lloyd George mentioned the other day that Great Britain, France and Russia were putting up £2,000,000,000, or $10,000,000,000, it fairly set people a-thinking. To give some idea of what that sum really amounts to it is best to calculate it in gold. This would cut at 16,625 tons. If this were loaded into coal trucks to carry seven tons each it would mean a line of 2,375 trucks, and allowing each truck to measure seven yards they would stretch along a railway track a little over nine and a half miles.

Useful Men of Straw.

At Oxford Colonel Pearce Serocold, of the King's Royal Rifles, who has been invalided home, said that during the retreat from Mons the Royal Rifles found themselves in the northeast corner of the Ypres salient. One of the battalions received a tremendous consignment of clothes, and this gave them a brilliant idea. They put on the new clothes and stuffed the old ones with straw and whatever they could find, and then left them, carefully disposed in natural attitudes, in the trenches. The Germans shelled the trenches for three or four days before finding out the ruse.

Flag Stamp Fees.

There is an excellent old skin tonic, used for generations, which will probably be of interest to the women of this area of this page. It may be prepared at home and contains nothing that is to the least bit harmful to the face which is more than can be said of so many of the so called skin tonics on the market. Make a bag of cheesecloth, double thickness, and fill it with bran, a teaspoonful of orris root and a half cake of castile soap chopped up fine. This bag may be used in the bath and on the face and makes the skin smooth, white and fine.

STARCHED COLLARS USED.

Starched linen and pique collars are attractive below round, youthful faces, but they are hopelessly trying on thin faced women and on women past the freshness of youth. With these childish collars are worn knotted ties of soft silk in striped black and white or dotted black and white effects, or of crepe de chine in sombre shadings. The effect with one of the new gannishly tailored suits is very smart, indeed, but women of mature years do well to reserve themselves to a more formal type of collar of handkerchief linen or batiste touched with a little hand embroidery or finished with hemstitching. A collar of some sort, how ever, must be worn on the dark tailored suit to give it the correct air.

Wrestling For Recruits.

An interesting story is told of the way the 56th Sikhs, which so distinguished itself in the Tirah campaign, was raised, the formation was entrusted to Colonel "Jim" Cook and Captain R. R. Holmes, and the method adopted by the last-named officer were somewhat unique. Given a free hand by the 14th and 45th Sikhs, Captain Holmes found a difficulty in obtaining recruits in the new corps. Eventually he went to Loodiana, a fruitful recruiting ground, for the purpose of looking for men himself. Each time he entered a village he challenged the local wrestlers, and competed with them on the understanding that all he beat should join the new regiment.

Although some of the native wrestlers beat Captain Holmes and the members of his party, most of the challengers gave in. The result was that in four months he had got together by this very strange method the finest batch of native infantry that ever stepped.

"Horse" Cottage.

The Burns Cottage at Arr, which two suffragettes recently attempted to blow up, is under the charge of trustees, who purchased it in 1881 from Mr. Arr. Shoemaker for the sum of £4,000. The birthplace of the poet has up till that time been in use as a public house, trustees abandoned the license, and after a year's remained as half a dozen other extraneous buildings which had been added to the principal and original cottage—buildings as nearly as possible to the state they may have been in in Burns' time. A new museum was built at the northeast corner of the grounds. Most of the relics were removed to the museum, which now contains a priceless collection—a fleet of Kilmarnock editions of the poet's work, for which £1,000 was paid—and a Burns' family Bible, acquired at a cost of £1,700.

LAID TO REST

The funeral of the late Francis Michael Lally took place from the family residence 15 Queen street, on Thursday, July 1st to St. Michael's church where a requiem high mass was sung by Rev. Father Killeen, assisted by St. Michael's choir.

The burial took place in St. James' cemetery. Rev. Father O'Connor, officiating at the grave.

Wm. A. Quinlan, Frank T. Quinlan, of Montreal, Arthur I. Bird, Charles A. Dolan, Wm. L. Doyle and Gerald L. Jeakins of Belleville acted as pall bearers.

The spiritual and floral offerings were many, including tributes from friends in the city, Montreal, Minneapolis, Minn., and Phoenix, Arizona

Eccentric Count Bertrand.

Count Bertrand, who lived in Paris, was a very eccentric man, and in one of his eccentricities he ascribed his long life. Once a year he would betake himself to bed and stay there for three months. On these occasions he would see no one but his servant who brought him his meals, and even him he forbade to speak. Just before the Germans began the siege of Paris the count went to bed, and the servant, true to his injunctions, said nothing of the events going on around him. One day the bread proved so bad the count demanded an explanation, thereby, of course, he learned that Paris was encompassed by the enemy. Springing out of bed, the count paced the floor, repeating, "What should a Bertrand do under such circumstances?" Suddenly he stopped, exclaiming:

"He should go to bed!" and to bed he went and stayed there until the siege was over.

A Snake That Grows.

There exists in Venezuela a species of snake of an exceedingly venomous and crafty character. This snake utters a cry that is the almost exact imitation of a cock crow. The unwary traveler when walking through the bush will be astonished to hear near at hand this extraordinary crowing. He proceeds toward the spot, when the snake darts out and stings the unfortunate man with its terrible forked tongue. If not taken promptly in hand the sting will in nine cases out of ten turn out to be fatal.

World's Biggest Battleship.

The most powerful armored-clad warship in the world is now being built at the new Armstrong yard at Walker-on-Tyne for "a foreign navy." This vessel, which will greatly exceed in offensive power and defensive qualities any battleship at present afloat, will be 620 feet long, 94 feet wide, and will have a tonnage of 30,600. She will carry eight 15in. guns, fourteen 6in., ten 4in., and two torpedo tubes. Her protection will include 13 1-2in. armor on the main belt, barbettes, and gun shields. The heaviest guns at present in use in the British navy are 13.5in., and the stoutest armor is 12in.

Appropriate.

Here is the Bishop of London's latest story. An old parishioner was extremely ill, and the prayers of the congregation were invited for him. During the service the news reached the vicar that he had passed away at the age of eighty odd. He sadly announced this fact, and, as something really appropriate, the choir promptly sang "Brief Life is Here Our Portion!"

Politeness in China.

In China parents are held responsible for the manners of their children. Accordingly, when children of their parents, people try to be polite. If you are mobbed in a Chinese town you should look straight in the eye of the people and say: "Your parents did not pay much attention to your manners. They did not teach you the rules of propriety." A remark like this will make the crowd slink away, one by one, ashamed of themselves.

Leghorn or Bolivar.

Leghorn straw hats are a pleasant revival. Nothing could be lovelier for a summer hat with thin frock than a leghorn at its best. And its summer hats in leghorn are at its best. They are soft, with undulating crowns, and they are trimmed with velvet flowers and ribbon in a charming way. One milliner manipulates it chorus plaques into smart little toques that sit with unexpected jauntiness atop some of the new frocks.

Not to Be Fooled.

"When Shlumerputs arrived home a hour later than usual he was silting a clare.

"I stopped in a concert hall for a few minutes," he observed. "The music was intoxicating."

"That's right!" exclaimed his better half. "Blame it on the music"—Wisconsin State Journal.

The amount given in prizes the first year of the Canadian National Exhibition was $17,000. This year over $60,000 will be distributed.

Most infants are infester by worms, which cause great suffering, and if not promptly dealt with may cause constitutional weeknesses difficult to remedy. Miller's Worm Powders will clear the stomach and bowels of worms and will so act upon the system that there will be no recurrence of the trouble. And not only this, but they will repair the injuries to the organs that worms cause and restore them to soundness.

Poultry fanciers will not have a monopoly of the prizes this year at the Canadian National Exhibition. Classes have been added for utility breeds, and they are filling up well.

Alcohol Gives Way to Tea

The restriction of the sale of spirits in England has resulted in a greatly increased consumption of tea, and even though the new laws regarding the use of alcohol should be relaxed after the war a large percentage of people will have acquired a permanent taste for nature's stimulant—tea. Undoubtedly the consumption of tea is increasing throughout the world, and will continue to increase at a greater rate during the next few years, and until the supply can cope with the demand higher prices for tea must be expected.

ALLIES AGAIN VICTORIOUS ON GALLIPOLI PENINSULA

Complete Capture of Lines Gained by the French Forces--British Destroyer Wolverine Inflicts Heavy Loss on the Turks When Latter Make Concerted Attack Along the Coast on the Southern Front--Turkish Losses Everywhere Officially Reported to be Considerable--In His Counter-Attacks Enemy Blows Up Two Mine Galleries in Front of Allies' Left Center.

LONDON July 3.—An official statement given out by the British Government last evening announces the capture of certain trenches in the Dardanelles operations which complete the capture of that part of the Turkish line gained by the French on June 21.

The full text of the statement follows:

"General Sir Ian Hamilton reports that on the afternoon of June 29, hostile columns moving west from Achi Baba and south from Kilid Bahr towards the Turkish right flank indicated that the enemy was preparing for a counter-attack against a position we captured on the previous day. During the evening two mine galleries in front of our right centre were blown in, after which the enemy subjected the trenches to a heavy rifle fire for two hours. After a lull and another outburst of fire a determined attack was made against the left of our position with the bayonet. This attack was repulsed with a heavy loss to the enemy.

"On the southern front the Turks made a concerted attack along the coast, where H.M.S. Wolverine, a destroyer, got searchlights and guns on to the main body and caused a heavy loss.

"To the east the attack was pressed closer under a heavy artillery fire, but finally was checked about forty yaards from our parapet. Bomb attacks and intermittent shelling continued, but no further general attack was made, and at 6.30 a.m., the French moved out, and by 7.20 a.m. had taken a strong syste mof entrenchments immediately in front of the left centre of the line called by them quadrilateral.

"A number of Turks were driven out of the trenches by the French bombardment, and much execution was done during their retreat. Subsequently ternches adjacent to the quadrilateral to the south wer captured after more serious fighting, thus completing the capture of all of that part of the enemy's line required to round off the gains made by the French on June 21. The enemy's losses everywhere were considerable. The captured positions are being consolidated."

Turk Dead Cover Ground.

PARIS, July 3.—The following official statement was issued last night by the War Office:

"In the Dardanelles, after the successes gained by the British troops on June 28, the Turks attempted several violent counter-attacks against the positions taken from them. They were repulsed with heavy losses.

"On June 30 we carried a Turkish redoubt in the form of a quadrilateral, including six successive lines of trenches. The ground is covered with the bodies of Turkish soldiers. We have not been counter-attacked."

What the Turks Say.

CONSTANTINOPLE, July 3.—The repulse of more Anglo-French attacks on the Gallipoli Peninsula was announced by the Turkish War Offie yesterday in the following statement:

"Near Avi Burnu the enemy on Monday delivered a violent attack against our left wing, but was repulsed. Near Sedd-el-Bahr the enmy renewed his attacks against our right wing, but these were unsuccessful and he sustained heavy losses."

GERMAN WARSHIPS BADLY CRIPPLED BY THE RUSSIANS

Important Naval Engagement Off the Island of Gothland--German Cruiser Reported Sunk--Italian Forces Capture Key to the Isonzo Valley--Austro-German Forces Closing in Upon Lublin--Russian Sub. Sinks Three Vessels.

GRADUALLY CLOSING IN UPON LUBLIN.

LONDON, July 3.—The Austro-German armies are steadily advancing on the east front with Field Marshal Von MacKensen drawing near to Lublin which might be termed one of the outlying defences of Warsaw.

GERMAN FLEET SEVERELY CRIPPLED.

LONDON, July 3.—Ten cruiserda and twenty torpedo boats were engaged in a naval battle off the Island of Gothland, Friday morning. Despatches from Petrograd today reported that a German cruiser was badly damaged and forced ashore and advices from Swedish points report the destruction of a German torpedo boat. The rest of the German fleet fled and was pursued by the Russian fleet for a considerable distance, the damage to the Russian cruisers is described as quite insignificant.

RUSSIAN SUB. SINKS THREE.

LONDON, July 3.—A Petrograd despatch reports a Russian submarine today sank a Turkish steamer and two sailing vessels loaded with provisions in the Black Sea, the submarine afterwards shelled three armed schooners and drovet hem ashore.

ITALIANS CAPTURE KEY TO ISONZO VALLEY.

LONDON, July 3.—A despatch from Rome reports the Italian forces have occupied the town of Tolmino considered the key to the Isonzo Valley and have commenced bombarding the Austrian forts in the vicinity with their heavy artillery.

GERMAN FLEET BADLY BATTERED BY THE RUSSIANS.

COPENHAGEN, July 3.—The German battleship Wittlesbach, which is damaged, and a battleship of the Kaiser class, with many shots under the water-line, from the battle in the Baltic, have returned to Kiel.

The Politiken's Petrograd correspondent states it is reported that not only was a German torpedo boat sunk at Windau, but a cruiser of the Magdeburg type was also lost.

Fought Off Gothland.

CHRISTIANIA, July 3.—A naval battle between Russian and German ships has been fought off the island of Gothland, south and east of Stockholm. The battle lasted throughout last night and this forenoon, and while there is evidence that it was of a sanguinary character, no details have become known beyond fragmentary information from residents of the island, who observed a small part of the action and scattering reports from Baltic ports.

Throughout the night the sound of heavy firing disturbed the inhabitants of the Swedish island, and early this morning a fleet of warships was observed moving north in Lsurgarn harbor. Heavy firing was heard intermittently along the east coast, and at 10 o'clock four cruisers were observed closly engaged near the island. Later a eGrman torpedo boat, with many wounded aboard steamed into Katthaammsvik.

Two submarine cables at widely separated points on Gothland connect with the Swedish mainland, and each has brought its distinct version. Both state that four cruisers could be seen from shore engaged in battle, and one has it that a large flotilla of torpedo craft was also engaged. This is supported by the fact that a German torpedo boat is reported ashore at Skerry, and that the bodies of 40 dead German sailors have been washed ashore there.

The Stoeckholm correspondent of Reuter's Telegram Company says:

"The German mine-layer Albatross was chased by four Russian cruisers and ran ashore to escape capture. Twenty-one of the mine-layer's crew were killed and twenty-seven wounded."

An official statement issued by the Russian War Office on July 1 told of an attempt by German warships to bombard the port of Windhau, Courland, and land troops. This attempt was repulsed. Windhau is a Rusian port across the Baltic from Gothland Island.

SATURDAY, JULY 3, 1915.

A GREAT TRIUMPH AND A GREAT TASK.

"Things were on the up-grade twenty-four hours after Lloyd George took charge of the munitions problem, and in a very few weeks the supply will not only meet the British demands, but Britain will be able to assist Russia." This is the testimony of an American gentleman who has been the guest of Sir John French at the British headquarters in France. This is a remarkable, and we believe, well-warranted tribute to the confidence which the appointment of the great statesman has inspired in the British Army and people. The "little Welsh attorney," once jeered at and derided by the aristocracy is now hailed as the saviour of the nation. The man, denounced by class and property interests as a "Limehousing" Socialist is now acclaimed as the financial and organizing genius to furnish the armies of the Allies with the winning weapons. It is a great change and a great triumph.

Mr. Lloyd George has undertaken a task of extraordinary difficulty, but he has gone about it in a way which spells success. Once organize British industries, Mr. Lloyd George says, are in position to equal and surpass the output of munitions in Germany and Austria, which, he estimates at 250,000 shells a day.

But the New York Post thinks Britain must do more than organize for such an output. She has to outstrip the great stocks of ammunition which German foresight had piled up in advance.

"To overcome this handicap, what are England's resources. We need take only one standard of comparison. In 1911 there were in the United Kingdom about eleven and a half million industrial workers. In 1907 there were in Germany about eleven and a quarter million industrial workers. We may assume that at the outbreak of the war the industrial armies in the two countries were about equal. From their ranks must obviously come the labor for the munition factories. On the basis of mere numbers, therefore, England and Germany should be turning out the same amount of supplies. In favor of Germany are two factors, the accumulated stores of ammunition already mentioned, and the unquestionably superior organization which obtains better results from the same amount of labor. In favor of England, however, is one following counterbalancing factor. Germany at the maximum of her efforts will be maintaining in the field nearly twice as large an army as England. That must mean a much greater drain on the industrial population. Even German superiority in organization cannot overcome this deficiency. The more men the Kaiser places in the field, the more men he withdraws from industry. On the whole, therefore, we may assume that when England settled down to work, she had equal Germany's output of munitions. If we thus check off England against Germany, we have France, Italy, Russia, and the supplies from the country to balance against Austria's contribution: a showing which totals up decidedly in favor of the Allies."

The Post, however, does not take into account the capacity of Canada to produce shells. Our industries are properly organized we shall be making a very substantial contribution to the superiority in munitions to the obtaining of which Mr. Lloyd George has set himself.

But in addition to munitions, as the New York Post points out, the importance of other arms is apparent. The machine gun has been used by the Germans with extraordinary effect in the defensive. At Neuve Chapelle and elsewhere the Allies lost heavily in the face of small bore guards armed with the automatic gun. Some experts have gone so far as to state that the machine gun is replacing the rifle for infantry action with the German armies. And after shells and machine guns come other factors—traction machinery, chemical supplies, and by no means least, aeroplanes. "H. G. Wells may not be altogether visionary in calling for huge squadrons of aeroplanes for the invasion of Germany. Certainly the effectiveness of the English aviation service has been such as to call for a large increase."

THE DARDANELLES.

Many descriptions have been written of the narrow channel on which at the moment the eyes of the world are fixed, but it may be again said that the passage is forty-five miles long from its mouth at the Mediterranean to the Sea of Marmora. Its greatest width is five miles, and its least width is less than a mile. The entrance from the Mediterranean is two miles wide, and from this point the Asiatic shore immediately curves inland, while the land on the European side runs straight and unbroken. Here is a line of barren cliffs and rock, while on the Asiatic side are sloping gardens and rich vineyards. This description is given in a very interesting little book, "The Dardanelles: Their Story and Their Significance in the Great War," just published by Andrew Melrose.

The book, which has been written by the author of "The Real Kaiser," goes to point out that at Chanak, where the Narrows actually begin, navigation is most dangerous by reason of the current and the shallows. For this reason ships making the passage are forced to hug the European shore. The currents sets persistently down the Straits and is due to the amount of water emptied into the Black Sea by the many large rivers which discharge into that sheet of water. There are baffling counter-currents in places near the shore, but in mid-water, the direction of the current is constant towards the Mediterranean. Its force is set down as from three to four miles an hour, but many circumstances tend to make it vary. The winds affect it, and it may be noted that the season of the north wind is the spring and summer, while the south wind blows in the autumn and winter.

The author of the book has a good deal to say on the ancient as well as the recent history of the Dardanelles. He takes a very hopeful view of the future of Constantinople—"A city the magic of which can never pass away."

"The white minarets will still rise above the yellow houses, the pleasant gardens will slope to the sweet waters over which glide the countless caiques, and the glamour of Stamboul will abide for ever where the tides of the Bosphorus sweep into the Propontis. Nothing of the romance of the city will depart with the power of the Turk. The same polyglot multihued crowd will nightly throng the bridges to Galata. The same mystery will brood over the high walls that bisect the tree-filled gardens.

The charm, the fascination, and the grandeur of Constantinople are, in this writer's opinion, abiding qualities.

The Balkan States are arming, but whether for the big war or for indulging in another scrap among themselves does not yet appear.

A Washington correspondent of the New York Post gives the American capital's estimate of the Wilson Cabinet. The first place of all is given to Franklin Lane, Secretary of the Interior.

"Washington knows Franklin Lane of old," says the writer, "for he has already spent ten years in two offices in this city, and he is the kind of a public servant who should be retained in harness as long as he will stay there. The republic needs him, and men like him, for there is slnew to this mind, and, what is better yet, it is forward-looking. According to general opinion here, if anybody is to be conferring an other honorary LL.D. on Mr. Lane next month, he might characterize the Secretary of the Interior thus: 'A far-sighted statesman, not to be swerved from his course by any consideration of self; wholly beyond the cant of professional patriotism; a clear and vigorous executive, bringing a trained and able mind to the solution of difficult problems of society and State; a wise and fearless counsellor in hours of calm and of national stress.' Lane is soundly and completely American—intensified by his Canadian birth, which many here regret, as they think of his future and a certain very precise Constitutional requirement that prevents any but the native born being chosen for President."

Lane was born in Prince Edward Island but went to the United States when six years old.

SONNIE'S PRAYER.

Listen, Saviour, while I pray
For my daddle, far away;
Gone—as mother says—to fight
For our Country, King and Right;
On the distant battle-field.
Shield my daddie, Saviour, shield
On the distant battlefield.

When the shells are falling near,
Wounding, killing—front and rear;
When the trench is bullet-swept,
Safely may he then be kept;
Shield my daddie, Saviour, shield
On the distant battle-field.

Take away my mother's fear,
Bid her dry each big warm tear;
Thou cans't guard him to the end,
And from every foe defend;
Shield my daddie, Saviour shield
On the distant battle-field.

Answer, Saviour, while I pray
For my daddie, far away;
Grant us victry, send us peace,
Let this cruel war-time cease;
Until then my daddie shield
On the distant battle-field.

THE FALLEN CANADIANS.

Tonight, through that incomparable scene of exposition, a St. Paul's service, the nation mourned the Canadians fallen in the war. It might seem at first thoughts that the end of the war was the fitting time for such commemoration, but the service rose naturally out of the strong impulse among Englishmen to pay tribute to "the men who saved the situation" the other day north of Ypres. Then, as the Bishop of London said in his sermon, "the manhood of Canada was tested and came out pure gold." There is nothing more impressive than a national service in St. Paul's at night, when the corona of lights under the dome gives the sense of space and exaltation and when as this time, a huge crowd fills the church and can be only dimly realized in the half-darkness of the nave. Many well-know Canadians and Englishmen were there, the House of Commons sent a delegation of all parties, headed by the Colonial Secretary, and the Lord Mayor came in state. But the mourners to whom all eyes turned were the wounded Canadian soldiers from the London Hospitals, men who in saving the situation nearly saved themselves. Some were wearing the blue hospital dress, many were too weak to stand. Behind the soldiers sat the relatives of the dead men. The Canadian "Eyewitness," whose spirited narrative was quoted by the Bishop, was there, also Mr. Rudyard Kipling, another eye-witness of soldiers' doings. Lord Dundonald represented the King and Queen. The ritual of St. Paul's, with its long exquisite expressiveness by centuries of experience, was never more satisfying than tonight when we were celebrating the sacrifice of the newest of the free nations in the cause of the oldest. The noble elegiac music reached its strongest note of emotion when at the end the Horse Guard's band under the dome sent out that whirring roll of drums preluding Hadel's funeral march. Afterwards "The Last Post" was heard from somewhere by the western doors in spirals of remote sound. The Bishop of London put the second battle of Ypres into a phrase: Here the blundering Goliath of the world met his David, and he was a Canadian.—Manchester Guardian.

CHALLENGE TO CONSUMERS

Canada, through her great producers industrially, has been challenged to show what she can do. She may not have yielded the best, in the exercise of her talents and capital, but she has made some articles that she adorn and wear and satisfy, and that is a great achievement. Next to heading up the maker of good and helping him to good sales, the duty in this country is the ability to buy at home. Why should not our merchants get the benefit of every purchase which can be made in Kingston?

"Oh," says some one, "but we cannot sell some things we want to—he has such a one tried real hard! A merchant puts the issue in this way: "I may not have the identical thing that some one asks for. It may not be in general demand. You know we buy what we think the people want. Occasionly we do not rise high enough in our appreciation. We have not anticipated a call for some expensive goods. But we can buy things as cheaply as the cheapest. We can get what he wants as well as he can. We are in touch with the trade and have options which only the trade can control. So I like the idea which you are advancing, buy at home. Buy everything and see what the effect will be on business."

The Whig hopes to follow up this theme in a series of special illustrations which have come to some thought and considerable money. It believes that there will be a ready response of the people to the points as they are made. It is assumed that the effect will be as good here as it has been elsewhere, and let us add, confidently, that the record in that has gladdened the heart of everyone wherever it has been tried.—Kingston Whig.

men were all on hand. Within minutes the entire squad would be crowded into that room, eager to trouble to begin. Probably Fagin did not have a half-dozen fellows in the house. If we could strike swiftly enough we might overpower them all, without creating alarm outside, where the main body lay. Some twenty-five men had brought us good luck in hauling the front of the house left unguarded. These thoughts swept over me, and left me confident. The time had come when I was to serve her, to prove our worthiness. I felt ready and eager for the trial.

I caught a glimpse of Jenks' face, as Bill pushed forward. The man was gray with terror, his parchment-like skin seamed and contorted. It was a tall, loose-jointed creature, wearing a long black coat flapping about his knees. The guard fairly held him up in the doorway, and both Fagin and Jones laughed at the pitiful sight, the former ending his roar with an outburst of profanity.

"Let Me Pass, Sir—This Is My House."

"Go on back ter the front door, Bill," he ordered sternly. "This fellow'll never run away; his legs wouldn't carry him. Now, Mr. Preacher," glowering savagely at the poor devil across the bottle-strewn table, "do yer know who I am?"

Jenks endeavored to answer, from the convulsive movement of his throat, but made no sound. Fagin cursed again.

"If it wasn't such a waste of good liquor I'd pour some of this down your gullet," he scrutinized, shaking a fluffilled bottle in his fist. "Then maybe you could answer when I spoke to you. Now, see here, you canting old hypocrite, I'm Red Fagin, an' I guess you know what that means. I'm plain, an' I don't like your style. Now you're goin' to do just what I tell you, or the boys will have a bangin' time down in the ravine. Speak up, an' tell me what you propose ter do."

Jenks wet his dry lips with his tongue, clinging to the sides of the decanter, with both hands.

"What—what is it you wish of me?" his uncertain gaze wandering over the three faces, but coming back to Fagin.

"You are to marry this officer here to a young lady."

"What—what young lady?"

"Mortimer's daughter—Claire is the name, isn't it, Grant? Yes, Claire; you know her, I reckon."

I could hear the unfortunate man breathe in the silence, but Fagin's eyes threatened.

"Is—is she here?" he faltered helplessly. "Does she desire the—the ceremony?"

"That doesn't happen to be any of your business," snarled in Fagin brutally. "This is my affair, an' the fewer questions you ask the better. If we want ter come from, what hell have you got to do with it, you enfeebling apostrophe! I haven't asked either of them about it. I just decided it was time they got married. Stand up, man, and get on that door," he threw a shotgun from his belt and flung it onto the table. "There's my authority—that, an' fifty hell-hounds outside waiting my say. I don't loot the house, an' be done. Do you want the buryin' over in them? I don't give a damn which way you do it, so you marry 'em. Now, what's it goin' to be, parson? Well, I reckon it won't hurt your conscience particularly. Bill! Where's Bill?"

"You sent him to guard the front door," explained Jones.

"That's right, I did. You'll do just as well. Go up stairs, an' bring the girl down. She's with the old man, an' Culberson is guarding the door. Better not say what she's wanted for. Just tell her Captain Grant wishes to speak to her a moment.

Jones straightened up, and pushed past the guard, who had crowded back under his weight as he went up over my head. Grant arose, and stood, looking out of the window, the light of the sunshine, and Jenks dropped into the nearest chair, still staring at Captain Fagin. For the first time I seemed to entirely grasp the situation. I put to my feet, yet gave not more so much as a step, for Fagin was facing the hallway. It appeared would be better to wait until after the girl came down stairs, until those in the house were all together, and then see what I could do for Grant, what she would say, how she would act, when she understood what was proposed. The minutes for my decision was short, as it seemed scarcely a minute before I heard their footsteps above.

CHAPTER XXXII.

A Threatened Marriage.

Fagin heard them coming, and took his boots from the table, and sat up straight in his chair; the preacher pushed his back until Bill concealed behind the door; Grant never looked around. Jones came into view first, and behind him, Claire, her cheeks flushed, her head held high. At the door she paused, and looked calmly at the man calmly surveying the occupants.

"You sent for me, sir," she said coldly. "May I ask for what purpose?"

Even Fagin's cool insolence was unable to withstand entirely the girl's tone, and her calmness of demeanor. Apparently he had never met her before, for his recollection, however, he did get to his feet, half bowing, and stammering slightly.

"I am Red Fagin, Mistress," he said, striving to retain his accustomed roughness. "I reckon you have heard of me."

"I have," proudly, her eyes meeting his, that terrible, wonderful creature, purpose may be in ordering me here. I wish to return to my father who requires my services."

The guerilla laughed, now angered by her manner.

"Well, I hardly thought I'd tell you who I was so you wouldn't try any high and mighty, business," he said, fiercely. "That ain't the sort of thing that goes with me, an' yer ain't the first one I've found that's a peg or two. However, I don't mean you no harm, only you'd better behave while ye're here. Know that man over there, don't yer?"

He indicated with a nod of the head, and Claire glanced in that direction, but without speaking.

"Well, can't you answer?"

"I know Captain Grant, if that is what you mean."

"I want plain-talking English, wasn't I? Yer ought to know him—yer engaged ter him, ain't yer?"

"Certainly not," indignantly.

Grant turned about, his face twitching.

"This is not my fault, Claire," he exclaimed swiftly. "Don't blame me for it. I am also a prisoner, and helpless."

She never looked at him, never answered, her entire attention concentrated on Fagin, who was grinning with enjoyment

"That's sure right, young lady," he said grimly. "The captain he—sorry 'bout yer—got his own neck. There's no love lost atween us, let me tell yer. But we're not to blame ourselves after all, as I reckon, we've got about all that is in the house worth carin' away. Now we're goin' ter have some fun, an' leave two happy hearts behind. Ain't that it, Jones? Clinton's licked; Washington has his hands full up north; an' this hull blame country is ours. Somewhere, Mistress, I've heard tell that you an' this Captain was pretty thick—how is it?"

Her eyes exhibited indignant surprise, but, after an instant's hesitation, her lips answered.

"I hardly know what you mean, sir. We were children together."

"An' engaged ter be married—eh?"

"There was an arrangement of that nature between our parents. But why should this interest you?"

He ignored the question, but his eyes hardened.

"I heard it this way. You were engaged until a few weeks ago. Then you met a cultured Continental, a spy, an' imagined yer fell in love with him. Now do yer know what interest I've got? I'm with the Red-coats, an' if I can turn a trick for that side I'm a-goin' ter do it. You'll be blessin' me fer it some day, perhaps. Now, Miss, I'm a-goin' ter marry yer off before leavin' this house. I reckon yer don't intend ter make no fuss about it, are yer?"

She did not appear to comprehend, to realize the man was in earnest; she even smiled slightly.

"Is this some joke, sir, that I fail to grasp?" she asked. "Will you not explain?"

"Explain, hell!" and Fagin clapped his hat on his head, uttering a rough oath. "I spoke plain enough. Yer goin' ter marry Grant, here an' now, an' there's the parson, waitin' ter do the job."

The party turned, and as she recognized Jenks, the color deserted her cheeks, and her hands grasped the back of the chair for support.

"Marry Captain Grant! I?" she exclaimed, horrified. "No, never!"

"Yes, yer will, yer pretty dearie. Good Lord, why not? He's not so bad; there's many a girl would jump at the chance. Your plantations join, an' he's a King's officer."

"Listen to me, sir," she broke in, now cool and determined. "I'll give you my answer. I have already given it to Captain Grant. I will not marry him—not even to save this house from destruction; not even to release my brother from your hands. We can suffer. If necessary, for we are of a fighting race, but I shall never yield to threats."

She swept past him, around the end of the table, and confronted Grant, who drew back a step, scowling.

"So this is your way, is it, to win a woman; you cannot win by such means! No, there is no need of your answering; I understand the whole despicable scheme. You managed, being as a prisoner of this creature's! You are his puppet. I've known it for months. I've heard it from Eric, and from that moment I despised you. While I believed you an honorable soldier I was able to treat you with outward respect, but no longer. You threatened me with a forced marriage once before, and failed. Now you endeavor to succeed with the help of this outlaw. But you never shall! I do not speak again. Take off your hands to me! You are not a prisoner. Those men are here at your direction; you are concerned in their infamy. I would rather die than have you touch me!"

She turned her back upon him, her face white, her eyes blazing, but Fagin's laugh stood between her and the entrance, grinning savagely.

"Let me pass, sir; this is my father's house."

"Not while I am here, Mistress," he snarled, without moving. "The old man isn't ridin' after me with a squadron of cavalry today. This happens ter be my turn ter give orders, an' yer'll do what I do. Ye hear—yer'll obey! Those were n't pretty words yer spoke ter me. Grant, but they don't hurt none. You damned little spitfire, I'd marry yer myself if I could, just ter break yer pride. As it is, I'll do the next best thing fer one. So it's the spy yer want, is it?"

She stared at him without a word, a depth of hatred but no fear in her level eyes.

"Look yer tongue, have yer? Well, we'll find it fer yer fast enough. What's the fellow's name?"

"To whom do you refer?" she asked, her passage blocked.

"The Continental who's put Grant out of the running?"

"I presume you mean Major Lavrence, although I have no authority to couple my name with his."

"Oh, indeed! I'll show yer authority in plenty, Mistress. Come, now, I'm done discussing this matter. As long as yer father isn't able ter attend ter this affair I am a-goin' ter act in his place. We'll have a loyalist marriage, by God! Grant, you're a-goin' ter, yer coyote—Jones, hustle him along. Now, Captain, there's a bench, an' a table, an' the front door an' windows. Mistress Claire—"

I was all ready, pistol in hand, burning with a determination to shoot Fagin down, yet her voice halted him.

"Wait!" she cried, standing erect and scornful. "I will not consent to this. I am going to leave this room."

"Oh, I reckon not," and he leered into her eyes. "Don't rouse me, or yer'll find out I'm a wolf ter bite. Yer get back there beside Grant, or I'll make yer."

"You will? You dare not!"

"Don't I, Mistress?" he cried savagely. "I'll show yer."

He reached forth one great hand, the fingers gripping her sleeve, but now wrenched away, the cloth torn, as she sprang back.

"Fagin, I know you, but I'm not afraid of you. I know you for a cruel, cold-blooded murderer, an outrager of women, a thief, and an outlaw. No, you cannot stop me now. You are a low-down cowardly cur, making war on women and children, sneaking around in the paths of armies, plundering and looting the helpless people, and every man associated with you. Neither you, nor all your company, can make me marry you. Never! I will die first. No, don't move, and don't think you are dealing with a frightened girl. I am desperate enough, but I can act—"

"Hell! Jones, take that hell-cat by the arms!"

"Jones will do nothing of the kind—and you—stand! back, Fagin; don't dare lay a hand on me again!"

Her face was white, her lips set, her eyes blazing, but Fagin, assured of her helplessness, laughed, and stepped forward. From what hidden conceal-ment it came I knew not, but there was the flash of a polished barrel, a sharp report, the whirl of smoke, and the brute went backward over a chair, crashing to the floor, with hands flung high over his head. I was aware of the swift rush of a body past me, of steps going up the stairs, and then with a yell, my men poured out from the library into the hall.

A Sharp Report, a Whirl of Smoke and the Brute Went Backward Over a Chair, Crashing to the Floor.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

The Fight in the Hall.

Scarcely comprehending that Claire had escaped from the room, I was swept forward by the onrush of bodies. The preacher was knocked standing beneath the table, but Fagin lay motionless underfoot. Jones and Grant turned to a door at the right, and I leaped after them. One of the two fired, and the ball struck my shoulder, the impact throwing me back against one of my men. An instant I felt sick and dizzy, yet realized I was not hurt seriously, and managed to stagger to my feet. The door was closed and locked, and, although my head reeled, I began to think clearly.

"Another way, lads!" I cried. "Quick, into the hall!"

We tumbled out through the narrow door, and I found myself next to Eric. But we were too late to head off the fugitives, or prevent their entering their horses. In through the rear door, confused as to what had occurred, yet shouting excitedly, Fagin's wolves, seeking trophies. They were a wild, rough-looking crew, but KEEN EYED even in that dim light. "For an instant, cowed within the limits of the hallway, both sides paused, staring at each other in mutual surprise and hesitation. Then I heard Jones' bellow of command, and Grant's sharp voice profanely ordering them to come on. With us there remained no choice; we must fight it out where we were, regardless of numbers.

"Fire! you damned fools—fire!" Grant shouted, and I saw him, a crashing of guns, the dense smoke swirling between us. A Dragoon at my right reeled, clutching; another behind gave vent to a yell as he plunged head first into the hallway stairs. There was the sound of splintering wood, of breaking glass. I felt the blood in my veins leap to the fever of it.

We were upon the fellows with a rush, firing in their very faces, and leaping over them. There was little room between the walls, barely space for a half-dozen to fight in. Shoulder to shoulder, we struck, hind, eager to strike also, pressed up so recklessly that we buried them beneath us. To me it was all confusion, uproar, deadly fighting. I could think only of right or left, and of the struggling devils in my front. Faces, forms, came and vanished in the swirl of battle, and some harmless artillery before me, flashes of fire burned my eyes, strange features, bearded, malignant, glared at me. I leaped straight at them, striking fiercely. Once I saw Grant, and aimed a blow at him. The man sank, swallowed in the rush.

Our mad onrush swept them back, then downward. I stumbled over dead bodies, slipped in pools of blood, yet kept my feet. Every muscle ached; I was cut and pounded, yet drove into the mass, shouting to those behind:

"Come on, lads! Come on! We're driving them!"

A yard, two yards, three—beyond the door where the men had escaped we won our way. Then they could go no further. Blocked, unable to retreat, wedged helplessly against the far end of the hall flew turned like enraged

Busy Trenton

THIS latest news of the town and surrounding neighborhood is given in an interesting manner.

TRENTON, July 30.—The Trenton Bowling Club has been accorded the privilege of using a portion of the city grounds by Rev. Father Connolly, Owing to the fact that a fence across the Governor Simcoe Park was considered objectionable the park commissioners found it necessary to withdraw the offer to lease to the club, and in consequence there was a possibility that other suitable property could not be secured. We are pleased to know that the club will shortly have the greens in condition for the game.

On Friday evening Misses Aileen O'Rourke and Helen Thomson will sing patriotic entertainment in Brighton.

Miss Halliday has disposed of her grocery business in east Trenton.

The town hall is receiving a coat of paint. Mayor Fortune is bound to have things looking spick and span for the 7th of July.

A little son of Mr. Knox, Wragge street, was accidentally struck yesterday by an automobile driven by Mr. S. S. Young. Fortunately Mr. Young is a very moderate driver so the little fellow escaped with "very slight injuries."

Mr. M. W. Murdoff left today on a business trip to Boston, Mass.

More fine residences have been built in Trenton this summer than in any previous summer, had the contractors state that they are likely to be busy until fall.

We have been assured on fairly good authority that the Board of Education has almost decided to procure land for building purposes in east Trenton.

The condition of Mr. S. J. Young remains about the same, with slight tendency towards improvement.

Messrs. Stanley Vandervoort and H. Buller of Belleville were town visitors today.

Concession space at the Firemen's Park for I.O.O.F. Field Day, July 7, is already at a premium. Applicants who have not reserved space will have to make haste

Citizens are again urged to decorate their residences on July 7th

Towel Shower and Evening Band Concert

The Women's Institute of West Belleville will hold a towel shower from 4 to 6 o'clock, Monday, July 5 at the pavilion on playground. Tea served, good musical program. In the evening the Salvation Army Band will give a concert on the playgrounds. The proceeds from candy and cream booths will go to play ground fund. No admission, everybody welcome. Gifts of towels also received in the evening.

Why Young Girls Grow Pale and Weak

The Blood Supply is Deficient and Unless the Trouble is Remedied Consumption May Follow.

When girls grow weak, pale and miserable, then is the time for parents to take prompt steps. Delay means danger — Perhaps consumption. The girl in her teens cannot develop into a happy, robust woman without an abundant supply of rich, red blood in her veins. It is the lack of this blood that is the great trouble with nine girls out of every ten. They grow weak and depressed; lose their appetite, are breathless after the slightest exertion and suffer from headaches and backaches. When girls are in this condition there is no medicine can compare with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. In the use of these pills there is speedy and rapid health, with glowing cheeks and sparkling eyes, for every unhappy fragile girl who is struggling on to womanhood a wretched state of health. This is why thousands of girls and women, robust and attractive, are constantly recommending Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to their suffering sex. Miss Edith Brookman, Savona, B.C., says: "At the age of fourteen I became very anaemic. I was as pale as a ghost. I suffered from headaches, severe palpitation of the heart at the slightest exertion. I had little or no appetite and seemed to be drifting into a decline. I was attending high school in Vancouver at the time, and the doctor advised me to stop. I did so and took his treatment for some time, but it did me little or no good. Upon the advice of a friend I began taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and in a very short time they gave me back complete health and enabled me to resume my studies. I have enjoyed the best of health since, and owe it all to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills."

These Pills are sold by all medicine dealers or may be had by mail, post paid, at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Refugees Leaving Mexico City

The flight of foreigners in Mexico is graphically told in the following letters which Mrs. H. Bateman, 66 Station street, has received from her sister, Mrs. ———, a nurse who has for some time resided in that country—

Transport "Buford"
Galveston, Texas, June 16, '15

Dear sister,

I have at last got out of Mexico, on a U.S.A. transport, we are quarantined here until Saturday. I don't know if we shall get a boat direct from here to England, or if we shall have to go by way of New York. There is a direct liner here now, but she is taking on cotton, so may not care to take on passengers. There are about 10 people going to England, so they may take us. We left Mexico City on wagons and went 100 miles that way. We were held up by bandits, but they did not take anything away. We were not armed, but our men in charge did not let them take anything. We came out with guarantees of safe conduct from both factions. Then we got on a train which had been sent from Vera Cruz and we had Pullman cars to sleep in. The first night we put up at a wayside station. We were two nights going down to Vera Cruz and one day. When we got there the customs officials searched our baggage for gold and silver, and ourselves personally, taking away letters, etc., but when we got on board the transport everything was different. We have a jolly time and grand food. I have a lovely cabin for Godfrey and myself. He is as happy as a king. The soldiers give him a fine time. If we go to New York it will be an Embury liner, so you have time to get in a line to me there. We shall be here 3 more days and 5 days to New York. Drop a line in care of Dr. Mallory Line, New York. I will drop you a line from New York to let you know what boat we will be going to England on. We are using real money here, not bits of cardboard and paper. Hope you are getting on all right. It is fearfully hot here. There are 390 refugees on board. A number remained in Vera Cruz, to take other boats to other places. 500 came on the train from Mexico

Your loving sister,
Ada.

S. S. Comho, June 25, 1915

Dear Sister,—

Tomorrow we arrive in New York, and we hope to take the "New York" of the American Line, which sails at noon. If we should not be able to go on her I will let you know. I shall not be able to advise Fred as you will know what boat we are on in case anything happens to it.

We have had an uneventful voyage so far, it was fearfully hot until we got out of the gulf, and well away from it. Today is quite cool. I should have liked to have visited you, but I feel that I cannot spare the extra money and I want to get down to work again. I had to leave my money in Mexico, $3,000, the exchange is so bad. I changed $315 in Vera Cruz and only got $170, so you see what it is like. I would have got about £250 for the $5000 instead of £300. So I have decided to lose it or get it all I left it in bank stock, a good business of hospital and property at the back of it, so I hope to realize it all in good time. Well I must close now.

I am booked to leave on the "Adriatic" White Star Line, on Wednesday, June 30th.

Your loving sister,
Ada.

Crow Lake Fishing

Fishing has begun in real earnest on Crow Lake. As yet, real good fish stories are rather crude but already many a four-pounder, and twenty-pounder, "just slipped off the hook just when about to be landed in the boat."

R.R. Constable Rounded Up Tresspassers

Special Constable Morden of the Canadian Northern has been in town for a couple of days and is causing considerable fear to some residents. His task is to stop trespassing on the C.N.R. tracks, property and the bridge. Yesterday he took the names of a dozen or more people who invaded the company's land and they may be brought into police court for their offence. In the afternoon he arrested Richard Kelly on charges of drunkenness and trespassing on the Moira River bridge

Fork Prong Entered Knee

Sergeant Francis J. Naphin, Great St. James street, is home incapacitated owing to an accident which he met with while working in his barn. A man was hanging him and by mistake struck the officer with the tine of a fork in the knee. The joint penetrated the flesh and touched the bone. The sergeant was attended by a physician and will be forced to rest for a few days.

Strawberry Social

The home of Mr. and Mrs. T. H. Thompson, Bleecker street, was the scene of a delightful strawberry ice-cream social last evening under the auspices of the Young People's Society of Emmanuel Reformed Episcopal Church. The interior was prettily decorated in honor of the occasion and the affair was well patronized by the young people and the members of the church and some $30 was realized for the society. Music was furnished by the Citizens' orchestra. Mr. Harry MacKay and Miss Pearl Thompson sang solos and Miss S. McPherson recited. Miss Dorothy Ford played the piano and Mr. J. D. Ford of Toronto, the violin. The function lasted until 10.30.

Soldiers at Deseronto

Lieut. McCarger went to Deseronto yesterday and took in charge two soldiers. One was Harry Arjeveault of the 39th Battalion, who was accused of desertion. It is claimed he has been away from the local camp for a number of weeks. The other man was Solomon Marsele, charged with attempt to desert.

At the annual Spring Regatta of the Winnipeg Rowing Club Hugo Monaghan of the Bank of Montreal staff, a former Picton boy, was one of the four oarsmen who won the championship. There were twelve crews entered for the race. The silver trophy goes to the Club for one year, but each winner received a pewter for permanent possession.

A cough is often the forerunner of serious pulmonary afflictions, yet there is a simple cure within the reach of all in Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, an old-time and widely recognized remedy, which if resorted to at the inception of a cold, will invariably give relief, and by overcoming the trouble, guard the system from any serious consequences. Today's Market

"Cherry-ripe" would define the appearance of Bell-ville's market this morning. Box upon box, crate upon crate, of the claret-colored fruit was exhibited and sold at the rate of six cents per box. The cherry crop is larger than for some seasons past and lower prices are expected.

New lines of spring and early summer produce and fruit are constantly invading the market square. The red currant has arrived at the price of ten cents per box, while the strawberry is at its latest best today. Ten and eleven cents per box are the quotations.

Gooseberries reign at 10 cents per quart.

"Young" cabbage is a new arrival Heads sold at 5c and 10c according to size. They were eagerly bought up.

Green peas still sell at 20 cents per quart

New potatoes have invaded the local market in force, having by some men been brought in by wagon loads. Ten cents per berry box was asked for the tubers

Eggs are a phenomenon on the local market today. Dealers say they are firmer and have raised quotations from 18c to 19c. But the farmer has lowered them to 20c uniformly. For the past few weeks they have been bringing 21c and 22c. Wholesalers say there are large shipments going out.

Chickens show no changes, except in size. A pair of fine spring birds would sell for $1 to $1.10, while last year's hatching brought $1.40.

Butter was sold at 32c and 33c per pound. This is no change from last week.

Hay has gone up in price again. 8 loads were sold this morning at $16 with the exception of one which brought $19. Baled hay is firm at $19

Oak Hall

The One Price Clothiers

There are 242 sections for the horse classes at the Canadian National Exhibition—the most complete in the world.

The prize list for the Canadian National Exhibition amounts this year to approximately $60,000. It practically all goes to the agricultural classes.

All exhibits at the Canadian National Exhibition from foreign countries are admitted to the Customs free of duty.

There are enough performes in front of the Grand Stand each year of the Canadian National Exhibition to furnish a programme for twelve theatres, all going at once.

There are 10 sheep classes exhibited at the Canadian National Exhibition, divided into 70 sections.

Unusual interest attaches this year among the agriculturalists, to the new competition for field grains at the Canadian National Exhibition.

THE GREAT POPULARITY CAMPAIGN GROWS MORE INTERESTING EVERY MOMENT

A Very Close Race in All Districts—Candidates and Their Friends Already Working Most Earnestly for Premier Honors—Work Not Money Will Win.

Interest increases hourly in The Ontario's great Popularity Campaign. From every quarter of the wide field come most encouraging reports from the various workers. They tell us they find the work very easy. It requires very little persuasion to induce their friends to take The Ontario if they are not already subscribers. The merits of the paper as a record of local news are already so well known that argument is scarcely necessary to be applied. The work really becomes a pleasure.

The bulk of the returns so far have been in the nature of coupons, but subscriptions are now coming in freely.

All candidates are reminded that the first lot of Coupons must be delivered at The Ontario office not later than 6 o'clock p.m., July 5th.

Those at present running in the paper must be sent in on or before July 15th to be effective.

This is a contest in which workers are going to win. In all previous newspaper competitions of this nature, there has been only one prize of surpassing value, as for instance an automobile held up before all the competitors. The result was that there was a strong temptation on the part of the well-to-do candidates to spend money on subscriptions that they gave away to their acquaintances.

Instead of one capital prize, The Ontario is giving away eight capital prizes. The bulk of the cost is all tied up in one big prize. Each of the tours are of more moderate value and not so high that any candidate who does a little cannot obtain such a lead that no candidate by the use of money would find it practical or possible to overcome.

It is therefore a certainty in the Panama-Pacific that in every district and in every instance the workers will win.

Thus there is the greatest of incentives to do faithful work, and those who do so will have the satisfaction of going upon one of our splendid tours.

Everything is fair. All will stand an even chance of winning. The rules will be adhered to with the utmost strictness. The publishers will play no favorites. Anyone will be freely advised as to the best methods of working, but absolutely no information as to the standing of any candidate will be given out prior to the time of publishing the list.

There are many changes in the polling today, and the amount of general activity is surprising.

The Ontario Government has given a guarantee to the War Office for the captured German guns to be loaned to the Canadian National Exhibition. The Association is under heavy bond for the return of the precious trophies.

Except at Fair time the ground of the Canadian National Exhibition are used as a public park.

When the Dominion Government contributed $500 to the Canadian National Exhibition prize list that of the officials insisted upon adding prize classes for poultry, eggs and stock.

MONEY IN ICE FISHING

A PICTURESQUE OCCUPATION WIDELY FOLLOWED.

Season Which Has Just Closed Has Been a Good Old-Fashioned One For Fishermen—Hot and Open Fishing Still Popular — Little Shooting Nearby—Visitors to Canada Are the Three.

The fish huts down on the ice at Burlington Bay, Hamilton, all along the north shores of Lakes Erie and Ontario, near the various small bays, and most conspicuous of all on Kempenfeldt Bay, facing Barrie and Allandale, are always a mystery to visitors to Canada, although to the native Canadian they are for the most part commonplace. Astonishingly few know what they are for when they see them first. Then the obliging well-informed part in the adjoining seat of the train supplies the ellipsis. The next time they taste fish they are more or less fish on the theory, or at their hotel, they appreciate its delicacy of not-cold-storage flavor, more highly still.

It is doubtful whether mid-winter fishing will ever become as popular as dangling the oiled-silk over the gunwale of a soft-cushioned skiff, at quiet, calculated anchor among Agassiz's wavering green sedges. But it has its devotees. They are strictly in it for the money. The winter just past has been a good, old-fashioned, good season for them, starting about the middle of December last, when the thermometer went down with a bump.

At that "bump" every ice-hole fisherman on our Ontario bays and lakes went joyful and hied him away to his favorite cot on the shore with many strange fixings heaped to his sleigh. Then he picked up his bearing, figured out the currents, and shifted his position from that of the previous winter if experience dictated so. Next, he erected his "camp" on the ice in a very simple affair—light enough to be hoisted on to his sled. Some times he has to build it. He is his own architect, and there are no building bylaws, so that a few sections of battered corrugated iron, half a dozen boards or so, with a torn old sail cloth, suffice when thrown crudely together—but strongly, for the structure has to weather many's the fierce winter's gale and snowstorm.

The man or boy who follows the ice-fishing must be no weakling. Sometimes he is one who warms blooded and husky that, by choice, he clings with a sort of grim affection to it—both to it and the small sheltering stove that often adds to its comfort—and is satisfied. Instead with a wind-break of canvas nailed to two stout sports, that is the prop into the ice between his battery of ice-holes and the chilly breeze.

Of course the first job confronting the winter angler after providing shelter is to cut the ice-holes and cut his holes. It is as much as man and that can do to cut a couple of these; many are content with three. If the fates are propitious, they are content if they will keep him busy because each of the lines that he gnaws at a hole is barbed with two—sometimes more—hooks.

The holes are about 18 inches square, cut clear through the ice no matter how thick, with an ice-chisel; sometimes, ice, can be managed handily with an ordinary axe, along with certain paltry superstitions held by the wind is blowing in-shore, and every stroke nea the close of the operation is a spurt of fierce labor that general, finds lodgment in the fingers, face and neck.

After being dropped through, the ends of the several lines are fastened to the cleat on spike driven in one side of the sled, having attended to each hole individually, expectant fisherman stands or sits by and avidly results from those wriggling minnows with which he has primed each and every hook.

Sometimes he watches a line tautly—only to discover that a fair-sized "sardine" has put him to the end of his disappointment of hauling in; sometimes it will be only one of the best specimens "lying" in the water, as in the trade: "lissee"); nevertheless it will soon come, out of it must come, or the whole business is for nought. So with the inevitable herring, or yellow pike, or sunfish caught in the "wrong" day.

The work would be a poor one for article. With five or six holes there is something requiring attention every minute: sometimes several lines, and at different holes. If it is a shiner, or a book, or a perch, or a red line (in a location with swift currents), or a bite, or fresh bait, the fisherman must go from hole to hole removing the thin ice which has formed by means of a cup or ripper, or a cold dab; th latter operation is still called a person's job.

What fish are mostly taken in this way for Toronto consumption? Those caught above principally, unless in the more favored localities like Georgian Bay, where such grand catches as a champion; sturgeon are to be occasionally hooked, for as we all know a fair day's taking" In the neighborhood of fifty or sixty pounds, though exceptions. Indeed a hundred pounds' falls to a single man's lot, and just by way of an occasional "bite" (and fish), sometimes another fifty on top of that.

One sees some grotesque figures out among the ice floats. Sometimes the man who has had his face frozen will be seen wearing padded shoes of course to prevent their being slipped on, and the picture he makes with feet twice the usual size will at least afford one's attention for a moment.

On the bigger lakes, where he often takes miles from shore, he will rig one sort of a rude sail out of an old "tent" or canvas; frequently when regaining home ith trip is made in a few minutes, where it took an hour or more to come out in the morning.

SANDY BEND JUSTICE

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

"This yere court bein' open," said Judge Hoke of Sandy Bend as he fell behind him to see if his guns were handy—"this yere court bein' open and the goddess of justice bein' ready for business, I will call the case of Lee Hung, who is charged with stealin' a Sickax from the camp of Jim Robin son. That ain't any need of lawyers or witnesses, for the feller done my self as he cum to-town with the tool on his shoulder. We are not goin' to eat way he looks, for that ain't our biznees. Jim Robinson saw him when he picked it up and fired three shots at arter him and never techod a hair. In one way this court feels that she orter let that heathen go his way to pay off Jim for bein' such a poor shot. It's jest possible that the critter mistook that pickax for a mewl or a bag of flour, but that's neither yere nor there. Why he didn't hide the tool in nuthin' in this court nor the statocs of this state. What he orter to look at is ar' the fact that he stole it and that Jim Robinson had the gall to come to me when I was busy in my Red Dog saloon and boiler for a warrunt."

"I wanted to get it back by law," explained the plaintiff as he stood up.

"Waal, ye went that way, Jim, and I'll give ye credit for it. Lee Hung, durn yer hide, I'm goin' to fine ye $20 that would be purty steep fur a white man, but I'm goin' down to crush the heathen whenever I gits a show. Jim, you not only had three shots at the Chinyman, but missed him every time and then bothered me fur an hour. Ye orter be ashamed of yerself, I'm free to say.

"We now her afore us the case of Joe Parker versus Hank Scott, and the witnesses may step to the front as I'm to do my talkin'. Joe had a missin' claim on Paradise hill, and as he was lyin' in his shanty one night somebody stuck a dead with colic in walks Hank and sez he had a mine to sell him and he'a goin' to jump it. He picks up Joe's claim and Joe and carries him out and dumps him down on the rocks and Hank takes hull possession and begins to sing religious hymns. Joe is tied up with colic, but he has two guns to use. Does he use 'em? Does he ax Providence to relieve him of that colic fur ten seconds and help him kill Hank from top of lead. Not a bit of it. He jests shuts his eyes and tries like a betty as Hank sings him out. An hour later the colic is gone. But does he shoot? Does he make an effort to recover his claim? He don't. He walks three miles on a mighty dark night to rout me out and demand justice. He picks up Hank's claim fur about $30 and costs. Hank Scott, stand up. Nobody but a duffer would take advantage of an enemy's misfortune with miner's colic, and I shall fine ye $20 and costs. What ye ye sebin' to say, Pete Holden?"

"I wanted to say, your honor," began the farmer—"I wanted to say that my client"—

"Ye hain't got no client," interrupted the judge.

"The next case on the docket pre sents peculiar circumstances. This yere court, who is not given to be it out of court and all the time, was a-ridin' one day by the side of the other day on his cayuse when he came up with a Chinyman who had found a twenty ounce nugget. The Chinyman was so befted that nugget and was sure all was solid stuff he suggested to the heathen his willingness to exchange his cayuse for it. I don't go for to say that the hoss was hardly worth it, but he was a right good hoss, and

Lesson I.—Third Quarter, For July 4, 1915.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, II Sam. xviii, 1-15. Memory Verse, 5—Golden Text, Eph. vi, 1—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

Our lesson title is "Absalom's Fall ure," but "Absalom's sin and grev sorrow" might perhaps have been bet ter. There is not so much of profit in the lesson verses as there is in what precedes and follows, and as this is our last lesson on this book we must gath er all we can in the space at our dis posal. Our last lesson was in chapter xii, and records of David's great sin he was told that the sword should nev er depart from his house and that the Lord would raise up evil against him out of his own house (xii, 11). Here "There is always a reaping from all service, either good or bad (Gal vi, 7; Rom. viii, 7). Chapter xiii tells of the beginning of the household troubles and of the flight of Absalom and his sojourn three years in Geshur. Chap ter xiv tells of the part of the wise woman of Tekoa and of Absalom's re turn to Jerusalem and reconciliation with his father (yet dwelling two years there without seeing his face (xiv, 28-33). Absalom's remarkable beauty is described in verses 25, 26. The utter helplessness of the sinner and the great mercy of God are most impressively combined by the wise woman in verse 14.

Chapter xv describes Absalom's re bellion and his plight of the king, and would have been a much more sugges tive and helpful chapter than the one assigned us, which is only reading the Kidron and going up by Olivet (verses 23-30) and the surrender of our Lord to doing the same thing because of the rebellion of His own Israel (John xviii 1). The pathetic words of devotion on the part of David's servants and of that little Gittite (verses 15, 21) should be our response to His words to our Lord Jesus. See also the devotion of Hushai, David's friend, in verses 32-37 and David's submission to the will of God in verses 25, 26. Chapter xvi tells of Shimei's cursing and how David left him entirely to God. Chapter xvii describes the suicide of Ahithophel he cause the counsel of Hushai was pre ferred to his. It also tells of David's friends who so kindly cared for him at Mahanaim. Our lesson, chapter xviii, tells of the battle between Absa lom's army and that of David and of the defeat of the former and the death of Absalom. It is truly pathetic to listen to David's instructions to the leaders of his hosts, "Deal gently for my sake with the young man, even with Absalom" (verse 5), and then to hear his heartbroken cry when he learned that Absalom had been slain "O my son Absalom, my son, my son Absalom! would God I had died for thee, O Absalom, my son, my son" (verse 33). See also xix, 4. Does it not help to make more real the love of God in giving up His only begotten Son to die for us? (John iii, 16; 1 John iv, 9, 10; Rom viii, 32.

The folly of seeking to make a name for oneself is shown in verse 18. A grand illustration of the significance of the command in Heb. ii, 2 is seen in Ira ster verses 19-32. The words are, "Write the vision, and make it plain upon ta bles, that he may run that readeth it," but they are generally misquoted, "that he the runs may read," as if one could take it in as they do the other statements in the roadside when trav eling sixty miles an hour by train. The true meaning evidently is, get the message correct and then run and tell it. In our lesson Cushi had the message, for he had seen what he was to tell. Although indolent Ahimaaz was the fleetest messenger, he knew noth ing, and his running was in vain (verses 21, 30, 32), and he had to stand aside. And there are many running today whom God never sent. They know nothing, but the worst of it is that they take pride in not knowing and yet think that they have been sent. It is blessed to be able to say, "That which we have seen and heard declare we unto you." "We cannot but speak the things which we have seen and heard" (I John i, 3; Acts iv, 20).

After Absalom was dead all Israel joined for David, and said one to an other, "Why speak ye not a word of bringing back the king?" David him self sent to the priests and elders of Judah, saying, "Why are ye the last to bring the king back to his house?" Then as one man they went the way that Absalom and all the men of Is rael had gone. So the king returned unto his house, who had entered him. Shimei, who had cursed him, was one of the first to meet him and confess his sin and seek forgiveness (xix, 16-23). Mephibosheth had impov ished for him all the time that he was gone and was so glad to see him back that he wanted to let Ziba have all the inheritance (xix, 24-30). Bar zillai, who had taken care of the king at Mahanaim, was also richly over flow ing, but would not go to Jerusalem, as David desired, saying that he was too old (xix, 31-40). It would seem from Jer. xli, 17, that David conferred on Chim ham his personal patrimony at Beth lehem, and it may have been there that the Messiah was born, on Chimham's property.

G.T.R. to Inaugurate Transcontinental Through Service

An important railway announcement is made today. The Dominion is to have a new service between East ern and Western Canada.

Fast Passenger service is to be in augurated on July 13th between Toronto and Winnipeg over the Can adian Government Railway, (The Transcontinental), the Grand Trunk System, and the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway.

These three railways are combining to make this new service of a superior class in every respect. The additional line is the appropriate name which has been chosen for the principal train on both its east and west bound journeys.

This train will leave Toronto each Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday, and Winnipeg on each Sunday, Tuesday and Thursday, its equipment consist ing of colonist sleeping cars, electric lighted first class coaches, tourist and standard sleeping cars and dining car, which will be operated through without charge.

The mileage by this new route be tween Toronto and Winnipeg via the "Canadian National" will make a fast run, covering the distance in forty-two hours. Westbound passen gers leave Toronto at 10.45 p.m. and travelling over the Grand Trunk lines are at North Bay at 7.20 o'clock next morning. A splendid run is made over the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway, through the scenic beauties of Timagami and the interesting Cobalt district.

Cochrane is reached at 4.25 p.m. and "The National" there begins its journey over the main line of the Can adian Transcontinental, its solid roadbed, little curvature and no no ticeable gradients, all contributing to the greater comfort of travel by day or night. It traverses a country of wonderful possibilities in which tens of thousands of settlers will carve out their homes in the future.

The region between Cochrane and Winnipeg is one possessing great at tractions for the sportsman as well as the settler, for here are situated some of the finest fishing waters on the Continent, while big game abounds in the forests. There is an ever changing panorama of beauty. Great rivers, flowing north and south, thrust their mighty arms in the bright of land country and here the Indian, unspoiled by civilization, still makes his home. It is indeed virgin territory that is traversed and one not yet been marred by fire or the lumberman.

Before entering the Province of Manitoba the train runs through the famous Nibigami (country of lakes) region, another of Canada's beauty spots, and then Dorsets, reaching Win nipeg at 3.50 p.m.

Eastbound "The National" leaves Winnipeg at 4.15 p.m. arriving Cochr ane at 6.15 p.m. next day and Toron onto eighteen hours later—arrival in the Queen City being timed at 12.05 noon.

At Winnipeg the Grand Trunk Pac ific lines afford splendid connections for all important points in Western Canada, the Pacific Coast, California, etc., and also furnish a new short route to Alaska and the Yukon, trav elling the Canadian Pacific Railway and other marvels of scenic interest.

The opening of this new route makes an epoch in the history of Can ada as the new service will provide for fast through travel from Halifax to Prince Rupert, Vancouver, Victoria and other Pacific Coast cities, via an All Canadian Route, the Canadian Government Railways (Intercolonial Railway) in the Province of Quebec, the Grand Trunk System in a Union Station, (Bonaventure) Montreal, thence Temiskaming & Northern On tario Railway, Transcontinental and Grand Trunk Pacific connecting in the Union Station at Winnipeg, forms a continuous band of steel from ocean to ocean.

Publications pertaining to this new route with ocean to ocean map may be obtained from all principal ticket agents and passengers representatives of the Canadian Government Railway and Grand Trunk System.

Discovery of Gold

Very favorable report is to hand from the gold prospect of Messrs. Feeney & Cowain on lot 4 in the 2nd concession of Elzevir. Mr. Geo. F. Armour, Govt. Engineer, visited the spot one day last week and expressed surprise and delight with the excel lent showing of mineral and with the geological formation of the district. Samples were taken from a 12 ft. vein at a depth of 6 feet and showed gold at any point with which the engineer was highly pleased. Three samples previously sent to Mr. Ar mour from this vein assayed $1. 70 and $3.00 respectively, or $50 dollars in gold to the ton. If the engineer's report is favorable the property will be taken over by a party of capitalists who will both develop opment work at once. The mine is located about a mile and a half from the C. N. Ry. station at Actinolite and accessible by a first class gravel road.

MANY CANADIAN DEAD REPORTED FROM GERMANY

...LONDON, July 2.—Unofficial German lists of Canadians who have been buried in Germany indicate that many of the prisoners of war taken at St. Julien have died. The causes are not stated, and their friends are only left to conjecture. It is believed here that the effects of gas poisoning are largely responsible, for the Canadian division had to abandon its wounded when the sudden collapse of the French Turcos left their right flank in the air and forced them to readjust their lines.

CANADIANS CELEBRATE

Reserves at Shorncliffe Camp Parade in Honor of Dominion Day.

LONDON, July 2.—A Dominion Day celebration took place among Canada's soldiers at Shorncliffe early yesterday morning. The bugle and drum bands of the 11th, 12th, 42nd, 43rd, 49th Battalion and the Princess Patricia's reserves, paraded to Folkestone, receiving a hearty welcome. A military tattoo was held at night, when the massed bands performed. There was no formal celebration of the day in London, business proceeding as usual in the military and Red Cross offices.

ROTHSCHILD LABORS IN FIELD

He Was Captured by Germans While Driving Automobile.

...BERLIN, via London, July 2.—A Bavarian courier reports that among the prisoners of war at Lerchenfeld (one of the quarters of Vienna) is a member of the Paris branch of the Rothschild family, who was captured while driving an automobile. The courier declared that efforts made through the Spanish embassy to have special treatment accorded the Rothschild resulted in his being compelled to go to work in the hay fields with other prisoners at 4 o'clock the next morning.

Catholic Priest Fittingly Honored by Protestants

...ARTHUR, Ont., July 3.—The Protestant citizens of Arthur presented Rev. Father Doherty on his departure with an address and a purse of gold, in recognition of the high esteem in which he was held during his thirty-three years' pastorate here. He lived a life in which he encouraged man as his brother, and with his departure he carries the love of the whole community.

Retail Trade Active in Rural Ontario

Trade in wholesale lines in Toronto has been quiet the past week, says Dunn's report. Weather conditions have been unfavorable for business in summer lines of merchandise there having been but few warm days. The outlook for the grain crops, however, is satisfactory. A very large yield of winter wheat is expected. A large crop of this grain is now being harvested in the States; hence the lower prices. Spring cultivation is being extensive course and there is practically no speculation in commodities. These institutions have unusually large liquid assets, and some of them are likely to participate in the new British loan. Quite a good retail business is reported in most country districts in Ontario, where the farmers are in a prosperous state. Prices as a rule, for leading staples, are firm. Wool is very firm, the washed combing bringing about 33c. per lb. It is thought that this is only a temporary condition, as Australian wools can be had, down here much cheaper. The prices of canned goods are unsettled and lower, owing to the unusually plentiful supply of new fruits and vegetables. Seven district failures are reported for the past week.

Gott Mit Uns on Prisoner's Arm

German Arrested in Lakefield is Now Lodged in Jail.

There is an interesting character, a German, sojourning in the local jail, says the Peterborough Examiner, who may prove to be worth while interviewing. He was arrested in Lakefield, this week, and could not give a very good account of himself. The constable found him trying to get into a barn to spend the night.

He came before Magistrate Langley at Lakefield charged with vagrancy. He gave his name as Eugene Nieder, and explained that he came from Chicago to Toronto, and then to Peterborough, and was on his way to Montreal. He was a baker by trade. Magistrate Langley remanded him until next Tuesday, when he will come up for trial in Peterborough. Meanwhile the police are looking for some further information about his movements.

At the Police Station the prisoner was examined for marks when his finger prints were taken. His right forearm was tattooed with a Cross, Rifles, Crown and German flag. Between the backs of the rifles was a German helmet. There were also the 1895 and 97 on opposite sides under the flag. Besides these figures were 13, 14, in Berlin, 06, and the name J. Lorentz. Across the top were the words in German, Gott Mit Uns.

J. Lorentz is evidently the correct name of the prisoner, and he has given a fictitious one to the authorities. He says he is 40 years of age and was born in Baden, Germany, where he learned to talk the English language fairly well. By the tattoo it is evident that he was in the German army. Gott Mit Uns is the German battle cry, interpreted, "God is with us."

So far it has not been ascertained what his intentions could have been in the district, even if he had any connection with the German Government.

Only 128 Typhoid Deaths Among the British at Front

...LONDON, July 2.—Remarkable evidence of the efficacy of inoculation against typhoid was furnished by Harold J. Tennant, Parliamentary Under-Secretary for War, in the House of Commons this afternoon.

In the British expeditionary force in France, he said, there had been but 227 cases and 128 deaths up to May 27. Of this number 508 cases were persons who had not been inoculated and 105 of these died. There were only 22 deaths among the 308 men inoculated, who, despite inoculation, contracted the disease.

Sir William Osler, speaking at a meeting of the Research Defence Society, said the fact that there had been only 1,000 case of typhoid fever during the period of war among the forces of the Empire was something which only those who understood the history of typhoid in other wars could appreciate. It was a matter of much satisfaction that at least 60 per cent. of the wounded return to fight. "We are going for the first time to have a war in which the butcher will be accountable for the largest number of deaths, and not disease," he said.

Letters to the Editor.

To the Editor of The Ontario.

Dear Sir.— In reply to the letter I sent to the council re painting iron fence around the river bank. I interviewed six or seven aldermen and they said that my estimate was never brought before the committee or council meeting.

The chairman said he had brought it before the committee, and he sent in his estimate, and also the estimate of the work. His report was $5 for doing the job and furnishing all the material I have no doubt he can get it done for $2 amount if he pays the balance, to whoever does the work out of his own salary, rather than let me do it.

If the street surveyor Mr. Hedderson made the estimate, of his own accord, I cannot very quickly see his lack of experience in that line of work. The idea of painting 700 feet of iron work 6 feet high and furnishing material is absurd. It would cost more than that to buy coal oil to wash it. It rests with the council and chief magistrate, Mayor Panter to investigate the matter and see if that is the way the chairman of Public Works is looking after the affairs of the city.

Yours truly,

H. Melmont.

Mr. S. H. Pearse, editor of the Campbellford News, announced in last week's issue that he had "donned the King's uniform last week and is taking a course of instruction at Barriefield Camp with 60 other men qualifying for Overseas Service." His brother, Mr. Robert N. Pearse, is conducting the business of the paper as usual.

THE CANADIAN VOLUNTEERS

(Original by Allen P. McDuffi.)

O'er the world there came a wail of Sobs of women, groans of men, As the gallant Belgian soldiers Fought though they were vanquished then.

To uphold the cause of freedom, Checking William's countless hordes Ere they o'er the shores of Britain Their relentless carnage poured.

Belgium's country was made desolate, Reeking babes made mutilate, And their maidens, and their women, Victims of lascevate lust.

Long the Germans had been sleeping South and Britain in place of war, Carnage in their high ideal. Hoped still to hold their power afar.

O'er the world there came a wail, a Britain answered "here am I" Britain! unshod, made for courage And the rights of liberty.

Russia of the vast expanse, By the millions sent her sons, Fought they for "The Little Father," To repel the ruthless Huns.

France of old she knew the terror, Paris—there, within her gates! Humbled—stalked the German's soldiers She remembers and with hate

And she hurried, sent her soldiers, To repel the advancing guns, Bravely have her soldiers answered, Fought they for "The Land of Joan."

And Australia leant and hastened, India's sons did gather there, And our noble brave Canadians, Last will after.

We have pro dly seen them marching Step by step, in earnest band, Some in Belgium, some in France, In a strange and distant land.

And our hearts are sick with sorrow, Like the Spartans of yore, when Forth they sent their sons to battle, "Wear our country called them then

For our country and for honor, In the fighting line they fell, If they cowardly had loitered; Would be counted 'neath the Germans Lash.

In the years to come, the nations Of the earth will then recall, How there came the wail of Belgium And how there our sons did fall.

O'er the world there came a wail of Sobs of women, groans of men, Canadian volunteers are answering They will fight for right, like men.

"The Standard Works"

(As a original poem by Alice Payne McDavitt, Foxboro, Ont.)

If you are rich, go, write your verse, And in for attic—hide it. Hang after you and yours are dead. Your work will read.

If you are poor, don't turn to verse, You'll starve, not one will heed it. Think of great poets, lacking bread. Your baby—who will feed it?

If you are wise, your talent hide, Write not mysterious verse. Your finished will sneering, call you "queer."

And often something worse.

If foolish, you will write your songs, (Like poets—turned to ashes). Rich, the gods, and fools, and gods. And feed your family—bashes.

Some Standard Works" in bindings fine.
Librarians will ponder.
Your name (written large) will there appear.
You're 'neath the daisies yonder

Perhaps a stone they'll place above, "The Poor Fool"—buried under
And just two hundred years from now Your fitting ghost will wonder.

For long since, you are singing there, The fate of song will immortale. What difference 'Standard Works' to you,
Or praise of any mortals!

Gold Found in Elzevir

Gold is being found in large quantities near the western boundary of Elzevir on the Herry property. Any persons visiting the property can be convinced of the richness of the find by scooping up the ground and panning. Messrs. Cowan and Feensy are prospecting the ground and finding ore running in value from $50 to $200 per ton. The trend of the vein is eastward toward Madoc.—North Hastings Review.

There will be 21 sections for field grain this year at the Canadian National Exhibition, 5 for grain in sheaves and a similar number for grain in sacks.

Popular Oshawa Pastor's Farewell

Presented With a Chime Clock by His Congregation.

Members of the Official Board and Ladies' Aid of King Street Methodist Church, Oshawa, met on Friday evening, June 25 at the Church to express in words and to present a chime clock as a slight token of their deep appreciation of the efforts of the pastor, Rev. S. C. Moore, in their behalf.

Mr. A. J. Adams read the following address and Mr. R. B. Bale presented the chime clock:

Oshawa, Ont., June 25th, 1915.
Rev. and Mrs. S. C. Moore,
Dear Pastor and wife:

We the members of the Quarterly Board and Ladies' Aid of King St. Methodist Church, Oshawa, desire to convey to you an expression of our sincere appreciation of your earnest and painstaking efforts as our Pastor in our behalf for the past four years.

Your clear, concise and comprehensive interpretation of the truth, your forceful presentation and illustration of the Gospel; together with your kindly, Christian spirit has always been noted by us to our pleasure and profit. We trust that the instructions and inspiration thus received will abide with us and commend a kind and beneficial influence over our future lives.

We appreciate to the fullest extent the fact that we have labored harmoniously together as Pastor and people for four years, yet words fail to express our appreciation of the numerous instances in which you have demonstrated your true worth by your untiring efforts to promote the Christian activity in this place, and the hours and hours spent in the building of this church, which to us has proved to be a home, as well as the pleasure of your home, the Parsonage, at our disposal at all times. In these and many other ways you have both served the cause of Christ and the church with efficiency and earnestness, in all departments as well as in our individual Christian lives which are very much the richer and stronger, because of your patient and faithful labors.

As you go from us, we feel sure that the loss we sustain here, in your removal will be well compensated by the gain that the church will reap where you go. You carry with you both, our tenderest regard and sincerest good will, in slight token of which we ask you to accept this (Chime Clock), trusting that as it points to the passing away of the golden moments of time, each opportunity it may also point back to the many pleasant memories of time and lasting friendship formed in Oshawa.

Signed on behalf of Quarterly Board. Committee—A. R. Goyne, A. J. Adams, C. H. Northy, H. C. Bale, H. U. Hagerman and Ladies' Aid—Mrs. Clatworthy and Mrs. Kirby.

Mr. Moore in reploying reviewed briefly a few important events of his pastorate. He refefred to the loyalty of the Board, the splendid organization of the Ladies' Aid, and the excellent co-operation of the whole church without which the past four years success could not have been made.

Mr. A. R. Goyne in a few well-chosen words told of good financial condition of the church. During the last four years over $50,000 had been raised, and a large amount of subscriptions had been promised for the building fund but were not due till 1916.

The ladies served dainty refreshments and a pleasant evening was brought to a close.

Letter From the Front

Following is a passage of a letter received by Mr. Wm. Storing from her nephew, Gunner F. B. Day, who is with the first contingent in France, which we have been requested to publish:

"One never knows what is going to happen out here on the battlefield and we all get through safe. A good rest out there will just do me all the worlds of good after this life here as this is a very tiresome life, no spoon of any kind just to kill all the time. The battlefield is covered with dead. Well I suppose you hear a lot about the Canadians. They have lost a lot of officers and men which we miss very much specially the officers as they are all a good natured lot and do a lot for their men.

JUDGE HUYCKE THREATENS TO ABOLISH DIVISION COURT

At the sittings of the Division Court at Havelock on Thursday last, Judge Huycke brought up the matter of the prosecution and conviction of barrister Payne of Campbellford for speeding on the occasion of the last visit of the Judge to Havelock which alleged offence was caused in an endeavor to enable His Honour to catch a train. Judge Huycke interrogated Constable McNicholl as to the facts of the case as draws told that he had not witnessed the alleged offence but that he was told by Magistrate Joyce to lay an information against Mr. Payne before Magistrate Mathison. His Honour, after having assured that the village had not passed a by-law regulating autos, informed the constable that if he had been a County Constable he too would have dismissed him, but as he was a village official only, he had no power to do so. He then related the facts of the case and stated that if Mr. Payne had defended the charge that it would have been dismissed on account of a conviction, that it would have been set aside, and said that if the town council did not remit the amount of the fine, that he himself would reimburse Mr. Payne. He referred to the struggle Havelock had to obtain a Division Court and the fact that it was through his efforts that it was finally established here. He said that since that time the results had ben far from satisfactory in regard to the condition of the accommodation.

He said that from what he had been able to gather that he considered the Payne prosecution as a personal affront to himself and the Court and that he had about come to the conclusion to abolish the Court in Havelock. Whather the Payne case was a matter of vindictiveness to Mr. Payne or to himself mattered little, but that he was told by Magistrate Joyce to lay an information against Mr. Payne before Magistrate Mathison. His Honour, after having assured that the village had not passed a by-law regulating autos, informed the constable that if he had been a County Constable he too would have dismissed him, but as he was a village official only, he had no power to do so. He then related the facts of the case and stated that if Mr. Payne had defended the charge that it would have been dismissed on account of a conviction, that it would have been set aside, and said that if the town council did not remit the amount of the fine, that he himself would reimburse Mr. Payne. CORONER'S INQUEST HELD

Jury Found That Child Met Death at the Hands of Some Unknown Person.

About three weeks ago a child was born to an inmate of the home of Mrs. Pappa, 11th con. of Rawdon, and was stated to have been still-born, but the suspicions of neighbors were aroused, and an investigation took place, and the body, which was buried under an apple tree in the garden, was exhumed by order of Dr. Ferguson, and brought to Stirling, where a post-mortem examination took place, conducted by Dr. Pyne. Dr. Pyne's opinion, who testified that the child had been born alive, and apparently strong and healthy. An inquest was accordingly opened on Friday last before Coroner Algar, and after some evidence was taken was adjourned to June 25th, when further evidence will be taken, and a verdict rendered that the child came to its death by the hands of some person or persons unknown.

There are several other children in the home, and Mr. Wrightmyer of Belleville is having their case brought before two magistrates with a view to having them removed to the care of the "Children's Shelter" at Belleville.

Death of Wallace Hare

Wallace Hare, formerly a well known carpenter and builder of Prince Edward County, died in Toronto after a somewhat protracted illness. For the past few months Mr. Hare had resided with his daughter, Mrs. W. H. Hagar, 109 Grenadier Avenue, and prior to that made his home in Wellington, Ont. Mr. Hare was born in Prince Edward County seventy-four years ago. He was well known throughout Prince Edward County, where he was highly thought of. In religion he was a Methodist and in politics a Liberal. He leaves two children—Mrs. W. H. Blakely, Toronto, and Clinton Blakely, Belleville, Ont. His wife predeceased him about six months ago.

Hard and soft corns both yield to Holloway's Corn Cure, which is entirely safe to use, and certain and satisfactory in its action.

LIEUT. WILKINS RETURNS HOME

Arrived in Norwood on Sunday Last: on Few Months Sick Leave.

Lieut. Harold O. D. Wilkins, of Belleville, son of Mr. F. W. Wilkins, D.T.S. of Norwood, said the first of our brave sons to return from the battle front, arrived home at Norwood, Saturday afternoon from England, on a few months' sick leave. Lieut. Wilkins, who holds the rank of 2nd Lieut. in the regiment, was dangerously wounded last March, while on active service in France. For some time he was confined to the hospital, his condition being very critical. A strong plugukey, however assisted greatly towards his recovery, which became sufficiently advanced to allow his return to Canada. For one, has passed through such a trying ordeal as Lieut. Wilkins, is indeed fortunate. He sustained his injuries while heading his men in a night attack on the German trenches. He was assailed by only a few feet away when he fired, and Lieut. Wilkins was able to distinguish the features of the man by that of the rifle. The bullet struck him under the collar bone, passed through his body and come out between his shoulder blades. One of his company who was following him, was struck in the head by the same bullet and killed.

The escape of Lieut. Wilkins was indeed a narrow one, and his friends will rejoice with him in his preservation. He was looking fine on Sunday and complete convalescence.

Aged Resident Dead.

At his home in South Marysburgh, Matthew Ostrander passed away in his 73rd year. When eating dinner on the previous Monday Mr. Ostrander was suddenly stricken and never rallied. The deceased was born in South Marysburgh and resided there his whole lifetime. He was prominent in church work and for over forty years was a member of the Official Board of the Methodist church and at the time of his death was a member of the Trustee Board of Consols Church. His wife, Joanna Farrington, survives, together with a family of two—W. J. Carscder of South Bay, and Mrs. Amos Beagard, Point Traverse. He also leaves two brothers and three sisters—Hiram Ostrander, Bloomfield and Mrs. Ostrander, Milford; Mrs. John Losey, Sr., South Bay; Mrs. A. Rutter, Belleville, and Mrs. Susan Gallagher.

Mrs. Ed. McQoid, 77 years old, picked for W. H. Norton on June 25th by a dozen of strawberries, in six and one-half hours, then wished there were more berries so she could make out one hundred the same day.

BROTHERHOOD OF THE AIR

"HOW THE CHICKENS COME HOME TO ROOST."

By Mr. William G. Shepherd, in the Westminster Gazette.

Headquarters of the British Army, Northern France.

I stood out on the flying field at dusk this evening with a score of General French's young flying men, and "saw the chickens come home to roost."

Of all the tense hours, on the flying grounds, the one hour of twilight and dusk, before nightfall, is the hour that tugs hardest at the nerves of the British flying men. Wherever a flying man may be making tea or coffee in the cafe of some near-by village, reading in his quarters, or engaged in other pastimes that occupy him and his comrades when they are not in the air, you will see a certain nervousness and distraction come over him about sunset. Soon he will stir himself and, whether he walks along the French roads to where his flying grounds are situated, or whether he is lucky enough to get a lift in a passing automobile, you will find him, some time before darkness begins to fall, on his own particular flying field. He is "waiting for the chickens to come home to roost," as he calls it.

I walked out of town early this evening with two flying men who had fastned me to watch the evening roosting.

"I've got a couple of pals who've been up in the sky all the afternoon," explained one of the flyers to me. "I want to see whether they've come in or not."

"Yes," assented the other young Englishmen, "there are four fellows from my mess who went out this afternoon, and you rather want to know they're in before dark, don't you see?"

When we got to the field we found thirty or more of the young lithe Britishers who make up General General French's flying squad at this particular place in the fighting zone. They stood about in knots, chatting cutting nervously at the grass with their canes, or sitting in the lee of the hangars to protect themselves from the cold fifty-mile-an-hour wind. I noticed that, with all their seeming iddleness and preoccupation, their sharp trained glances were raking the evening skies.

"There's ——, I think," said one young fellow. I followed his gaze, and what I saw was a dot in the sky no larger than the head of a pin.

"NO. I think that's ——," said another youth.

"Right you are," said the first one. "I was mistaken."

How he knew he was mistaken I could'nt understand. Neither could the flying-men explain to me how they had developed the ability to distinguish one aeroplane from another. They have simply developed it, and that's all. The aeroplanes are all as like as two pins; but there's something in the individual flying of a man, or it may be other waves of telepathy that one flyingman in the air can send to a mate on the ground, that help the flyers to tell one speck in the air from another.

The spot grew bigger; suddenly the machine tilted and spiralled down dizzily. Within a minute or two it had alighted and two heavily-furred young Britishers climbed from it.

One after another the spots appeared in the sky, were recognized as ——, the machines alighted, or —— climbed out, and came over to join our group.

"Who isn't yet?" was always the question they asked. As the dismantled from the battle line, where the daily shrapnel had broken about them, they were as anxious and anxious as we for the safe return of the chaps who, as yet, were not lucky enough to be "in" for the evening roosting.

At last all were in but one. Night was almost upon us. A man in an aeroplane must see the grass when he alights, or he never does. Little throw of the lever, which he must give at the last moment, that will bring him to earth lightly instead of with a crash.

"He's a young fellow and a new flier," explained an officer to me, "and I'm rather worried about him. He's not got out the flares," he said to an attendant.

The flares are white lights that are placed on the field when a flyer is benighted; by them he can trace his way through the night sky to his own flying field, and with difficulty, can measure his low height from the ground, at that last ticklish moment before landing.

"Suppose the young flyer didn't come back. Where might he be?" This wasn't any ordinary peace time flying meet; this was war time. He might be a wreck of broken bones and bleeding flesh; men, had been trying to kill him all hunters shooting at a bird; they had hunted him in packs; if he had gone near the trenches it was certain that a thousand German rifles had potted at him. he might be a prisoner in the German lines, for if his engine had stopped at the wrong time, he had been forced to come down. There were so many places he might be, and so many terrible things might have happened to him that it wasn't to think of it. And yet, there we were waiting for him. I pinched myself to see whether it wasn't all a dream.

We were waiting for a man who might be dead. There were the soldiers setting out the flares and getting ready to light them. No one was speaking now.

"That's him," said an officer.

"Yes," answered three or four of the young men, at once.

"Where?" I asked.

"Can't see him yet, but that's his propeller," explained one of my friends.

Their trained ears had caught the hum of the aeroplane engine long before I could hear it.

Soon he came into view; it was almost dark and the aeroplane loomed large when I caught the first glimpse of it. It settled down on to the field, two young fellows piled out of it, hurriedly, on account of their many clothes, and walked over to us.

"Who isn't in?" asked one of them.

"Everybody's here," said the captain.

"Good," said the young fellow, for whom we had all been waiting.

Then we all dispersed. Every "chicken" had come home to "roost."

"Have you ever waited out there for a fellow who didn't come?" I asked the captain.

"Several times," he said simply. "And the worst of it is," he added in his quiet English way, "is that you never know what became of the man who doesn't come hom."

It's the vesper rite of the British Army flying-men to watch the evening sky. He has done his day's work for the great British Field-Marshal; all that he has been that allent man's eye, looking down from the sky; at evening time he looks himself over to see whether he's still alive and well—and then he goes to the little French farmhouse in which he lives with his comrades—with the chaps who may not come back at roosting time tomorrow night—and eats a big dinner, just as if he were only a common human being.—Exchange Telegraph Company's Special.

LANDSCAPE GARDENING TRIUMPH AT PANAMA-PACIFIC EXHIBITION

The Exposition looks as if it had been set down in a wonderful garden that had existed for ages. This vast garden, a triumph itself, stands out like a gay and brilliant feather in the Exposition's cap of beauty. It was designed by the labor of a famous genius in the art of landscape gardening, John McLaren, and the beauty of it is on par with the gorgeous picture it frames.

The fact that the Exposition opens and closes in midwinter presented the first great problem to the gardeners. It was solved by the use of evergreen trees throughout the entire area. Great trees were chosen, varying in height from thirty to fifty feet, so that they might not be dwarfed by the height of the buildings. More than 500 trees and plants of this size were trained and transplanted. Beside that task the job of moving Birnam's wood was child's play.

The gardens necessarily had to be a blaze of color at the opening, as they will be at the end, of the Exposition. For this reason the most scientific degree of planting was used in the utilization of hundreds of thousands of flower bulbs.

Among the great trees that line the avenues the Monterey cypress predominates. These high and graceful trees are everywhere supported by tall fire and pines. Between noble rows of these lodging the avenues banks of low growing umbrella trees, which have been trained for this purpose for years, form a shelter for the most gorgeous profusion of flowers and fern. The south fronts of every building will be a veritable blaze of color, pansies, azaleas, peonies, lilies, tulips, poppies and hyacinths, to mention only a few of the long list.

In the South Gardens alone more than 400,000 flowering plants have been set out and most of these will be in full bloom this month. The entire landscape gardening scheme conforms in the most wonderful way with the color scheme of the Exposition. A striking example of this blending of plant life with architecture and color is found in the Court of Four Seasons where huge masses of gray foliage accentuate the soft color scheme of the court.

There is scarcely a square foot of the ground between the Exposition buildings, not given up to roadways, that the landscape gardener has not painted deftly with nature's own colors.

PRIZE LIST READY FOR DISTRIBTTION

Canadian National Exhibition adds New Classes for Live Stock and Poultry—First Egg Exhibit.

The undeniable economic truth that agriculture is the factor that must be counted upon to restore the financial and commercial equilibrium of Canada has appealed so strongly to the directors of the Canadian National Exhibition, that never before has such attention been paid to the farming live-stock, poultry and allied branches of the Big Fair than is the case this year.

Instead of curtailing and retrenching in the prize list, as might reasonably be expected in this year of stress, the Canadian National Exhibition has taken just the opposite course and has increased the money and prizes with the kind co-operation of the Dominion Government, which has contributed $5,000 to be partly distributed over the regular prize list and partly spread over new classes that have been added at the suggestion of the Department of Agriculture.

The additional classes are for five animals in horses, cattle, sheep and swine. In the horse class there are six of these new sections; cattle, six; swine, five; and sheep, two.

To make matters even more attractive, a gold medal will be awarded by the Canadian National Exhibition to the breeder of animals winning a sweepstakes. This is in addition to the medal and other prizes that go to the exhibitor.

Another entirely new departure is the egg exhibit. There will be seventeen sections in this added exhibit, twelve open to producers only and the remaining five devoted to the commercial classes and open to all.

Still another change from the old order of things will be found in the poultry prize list. Hitherto only the fanciers have been catered to, but this year classes have been opened for utility breeds, and it is expected that the entry list will be very large. Pens in each case are to consist of 1 male and 3 females of the same breed

Grain growers will also find some changes that will be of interest. The most important is the addition of field grain. There will be 21 sections for this class.

Presentation and Address at Halloway

On Monday evening, June 21st, the friends of Miss Flossie Wright assembled at her home, and our pastor, Rev. W. Jones, read the following address:

Dear Miss Wright,—

"Just to address to you a few friendly words of greeting, not because such a course is customary but because there are thoughts of appreciation lying deep in our affection and enriched by our sincere respect for your thoughts that will not be quiet.

"As you can see we are a representative crowd from among your many friends in the church, Epworth League, Sunday School, Choir and Women's Missionary Society.

We remind ourselves that this is the first month of summer, the month of roses, and therefore an opportune time to gather at your happy home.

"We have come not only to express to you our appreciation for all that you have done for us, but also to place upon your brow the wreath of our love and admiration.

"We have greatly enjoyed your happy and cheerful disposition and your genial and true friendship has left behind a shadow in all our gatherings, your worth companionship and fidelity to the highest good has both helped and inspired us all.

"Then to speak of the many honors that you have received from time to time by the kindness of your friends is but another evidence of the fact that you have ever stood high in the good graces of your friends. But why multiply words?

"We think of you as an efficient member of our choir, as an untiring and successful Ex-President of our Epworth League, as a faithful and capable president of our Women's Missionary Society and as a true and faithful co-worker in everything that tends to the social intellectual moral and spiritual uplift of the community.

"Believing, therefore, that our motive is worthy and that our appreciation is ample we ask you to accept this little gift from our hands, hoping that it may increase the pen in language quite understandable our feelings of love and appreciation.

Signed on behalf of your many friends.

Miss Wright was presented with a beautiful parlor clock, one-half-dozen silver knives and forks, and a cut glass jawin honor of her approaching marriage.

Miss Wright made a suitable reply, after which all joined in singing, "For She's a Jolly Good Girlie."

The Dearest Travel Dreams Ever Entertained Could not Imagine a More Attractive Trip Than The Daily Ontario's Splendid Transcontinental Tour. There Are Many Advantages That Make This Trip Far Superior to All Others.

1. It is a Special Pullman Trip. The members of the party will travel across the continent by special pullman car from Belleville, and not have to go with a mixed, miscellaneous crowd.

2. It will not be a hurried trip of fatiguing railway travel and no chance for rest and little opportunity for sight-seeing. Stops are made for sight-seeing at the important points only, and places of no interest passed without wearisome waits.

3. The party will have a delightful water trip to break the monotony of the railroad travel from Seattle to Vancouver, B.C., via Victoria B.C. a wonderful experience in itself.

4. The party will have sight-seeing auto trips in a dozen interesting cities. It will be a great "Seeing America" trip and will give a splendid acquaintance with our neighbors, in that part of the trip through the United States and the return will be through the Canadian Rockies.

5. The trip will be varied in the most restful and splendid manner, rail and water, mountain scenery and crossing the great prairies, sight-seeing at Expositions and auto trips in various cities.

6. It will be a leisurely trip, thirty days being consumed enroute, and something interesting and delightful for every day.

7. It will a carefully chaperoned trip. A special conductor or guide will accompany the party all the way from Belleville Station, and parents will not feel uneasy about allowing their daughters to take this trip for they will be as thoughtfully looked after as if in their own homes. The members of the party will have every comfort and luxury of the finest Pullman car and dining service and will be accommodated at the most exclusive hotels.

8. It will be a great educational trip. Few of us know our own continent as well as we might. The journey across the continent going and coming will be made by different routes, affording the greatest scenic beauties and the most interesting sights. A visit to the two world's expositions at San Francisco and San Diego will be a liberal education in itself.

9. It will be an all-expense-paid trip. The Tourists do not need to take a cent of money with them. The Ontario pays all the bills from start to finish. The members of the party can safely leave behind them their pocket books, and all their worries about travelling.

10. The Ontario Offer is absolutely fair. There are no complicated and confusing rules. The territory is divided into eight districts giving to each candidate, as nearly as may be, an even opportunity to secure votes. There are no long-term subscriptions. Five years for the Daily and ten years for the Weekly editions are the longest periods that will be accepted.

11. A Dollar counts the same everywhere. A dollar counts the same number of votes whether paid on the daily or the weekly edition.

12. It will be a Short Contest. Most newspaper contest last from two to three months. The Ontario Panama-Pacific Contest will be over in less than five weeks. It will be a short, sharp, decisive campaign, in which those who work will win.

13. Work not Money Will Win. In many newspaper contests there is an unfortunate tendency for the wealthier candidates to use money freely in giving out complimentary subscriptions towards the close. That is because there is only one capital prize of surpassing value, as, for instance, an Automombile. In The Ontario Contest there are EIGHT CAPITAL PRIZES of more moderate cost, so that there will be little or no incentive on the part of any candidate to spend money on complimentary subscriptions. But, in any event, the candidate who works can easily secure such a lead as will make it entirely impractical for any one else to overcome the majority with mere money.

There are scores of additional reasons why The Ontario offer is unique and attractive, but we have had space for only a few.

There Are Features to The Ontario's Offer That Make It the Most Attractive, the Fairest, and in Every Way the Most Wonderful That Has Ever Been Made By a Canadian Publisher.

DO NOT SAY—"THAT WILL BE A FINE TRIP FOR SOMEBODY."

STORY OF THE EXPOSITION

FROM THE SAN FRANCISCO EXAMINER

By the Panama-Pacific International Exposition is celebrated the crowning physical achievement of mankind, the completion of the Panama Canal. Like the event that it celebrates, the Exposition itself is in every respect the crowning achievement of its kind in history. In dignity, beauty, grandeur and importance it far surpasses all its predecessors both in this country and in Europe.

The Exposition is a national accomplishment. It is the concrete result of a national and world-wide demand for a fitting celebration of an event so far-reaching and powerful in its influence upon the future of the commerce of all nations as the opening of the canal, which brings the East and West 8,000 miles closer to each other.

San Francisco made its first formal bid for the Exposition in February, 1904. The disaster of 1906 obscured for a time the project launched two years before. But four years later, when San-Francisco, by an exhibition of courage and energy that amazed the world, had arisen so magnificently from her ashes, the project was revived. The task of securing the Exposition was approached with the same energy and determination displayed in rebuilding the city. International Exposition Company was formed and a month later at a great mass meeting in the Merchants' Exchange more than $4,000,000 was subscribed spontaneously as a nucleus for the Exposition fund. From that day the Exposition project marched on with irresistable force. Other cities entered the field with a claim for the honor of celebrating the opening of the canal with an international exposition. For eight months the contest continued, until in January, 1911, San Francisco won the light brilliantly on the floor of Congress. A month later President Taft signed the authorizing act and eight moths later President Taft came to San Francisco and turned the first spadeful of earth for the Exposition.

In the years that have intervened since the work has gone forward steadily. At the outset the scope and purpose of the Exposition were decided. The Exposition was projected as one contemporaneous in character, a period in the world's history unprecedented in the extent and importance of progress in every field of human endeavor; to focus the new alignments of races and interests brought into being by the inter-hemisphere waterway; to bring the East into close relation with the West; to display to the most striking manner possible the natural productivity and commerce of every nation and in particular of this nation, the richest and most powerful of all.

In 1912, President Taft officially announced the Exposition to the world and formally in the name of the government of the United States invited the nations of the world to participate. With few exceptions the nations of the world quickly accepted and pledged themselves to representation befitting their importance.

Not even the Great War, which is desolating Europe and changing the map of the world, was allowed to halt the Exposition's march toward realization. A moment of tension when the first roar of the guns evoked an echo of horror and consternation throughout civilization, was followed by a greater determination to carry the project through to its ultimate triumph. The faith of the men who thus dared earned its reward. In the shadow of the calamity of war the struggling nations saw the Exposition as a beacon lighting the road to future restoration and rehabilitation. They are all represented—England, Germany, France, Austria-Hungary, Turkey, even indomitable Serbia and stricken Belgium—represented on a scale even greater than some of them planned. And with them every other important country on the globe is represented, not with the casual background representation that is the Exposition custom, but representation that shows progress in all the arts and industries.

Here is the list of those that have accepted:

Guatemala, Haiti, Salvador, Dominican Republic, Honduras, Panama, Mexico, Peru, Costa Rica, Bolivia, Japan, Ecuador, Uruguay, Canada, Liberia, France, Nicaragua, Cuba, China, Portugal, Sweden, Netherlands, Argentina, Denmark, Chili, Brazil, Venezuela, Persia, Paraguay, New Zealand, Turkey, Australia, Italy, Siam, Greece, Austria, Switzerland, Norway, Monaco, Bulgaria and Serbia, and not one has drawn back.

San Francisco set about the herculean task of financing, planning, and constructing the Exposition upon the day it won its great victory in Congress. Money was given with characteristic generosity, $7,000,000 from the private citizens of San Francisco $5,000,000 fromthe city. The State pledged $5,000,000 more. Millions were raised by the rich ad prosperous counties to finance elaborate representation. Fifty States in the Union appropriated money for participation, a great majority of them housed in splendid State buildings. Altogether with foreign and private representa- exhibition at the Canadian Nation sents an expenditure of $50,000,000.

To control all the business of the Exposition a committe of thirty citizens under the presidency of Charles C. Moore was appointed. Dr. Frederick J. V. Skiff, the greatest authority on expositions, was chosen director-in-chief of the executive staff.

After the site at Harbor View had been selected, for reason both of unrivalled beauty, utility and convenience, the grounds were prepared and the building work commenced under the Division of Works, headed by Harris D. H. Connick. With $14,000,000 to spend, this division began work three years ago, preparing a site from the sea, and erecting palaces which include sixty-four acres of exhibit space.

The architectuari plan was evolved under the direction of an Architectural Commission, with George W. Kelham as chief of architecture. The erection of the eleven central palaces, Festival Hall and the five courts proceeded steadil, with no interruption.

The work of the Department of Sculpture, under Karl Bitter, involved the making and installation of 100 separate groups of statuary, and about 1,000 separte figures. The reproductions of these statues, from small models made by the sculptors, was done under the direction of A. Stirling Calder, Bitter's assistant who remained on the grounds from the beginning of the work.

Jules Guerin, the famous American colorist, devised and supervised the carrying out of the color scheme. This is the first exposition to be designed in color. The completion of the buildings of the Exposition on schedule time and within the budget constitutes an achievement which is in itself one of the most notable feats of this great enterprise.

ORIENTAL EXHIBIT AT THE PANAMA-PACIFIC AN AMAZING REVELATION

Like Venus, rising from the foam, the civilizations of the Orient rise in slow resplendence before the eyes of the onlooker, from the exhibits of the Oriental countries at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition.

The European exhibits take precedence, by reason of the higher civilization they represent, and more especially because ofthe tragic relief in which they are thrown by the great war.

To sheer astonishment and wonder, however, the European countries are quite outdone by the exhibits from the Orient. Americans may not be over-familiar with the finer shades and varying traits, superiorities and excellences of this or that country in the old world. European civilization as a whole, however, is not new to the people of the United States. Our own civilization is a vital part of it.

The Oriental civilizations, on the other hand, are startlingly new to the western eye. All the exhibits of Japan, China and parts of Australasia, so see the actual blending of the Occident and Orient.

Japan's exhibit, her temple, erected in hat country and shipped to the United States, ranks foremost among the Oriental exhibits, not merely on account of its enormous cost, $1,000,000, but because of its breadth and variety. It is a wide horizon of artistic and cultural, industrial and commercial activities the Japanese exhibit unveils.

The French historian, Hyppolite Taine, was among the first to proclaim that the surest way to grasp the history and civilization of a country is to study its literature. Japan seemingly has made Taine's suggestion its motto. It is through its art, rather in pavilions, its buildings, its gardens, that Japan seeks to convey to the world the significance of her civilization, the character of her culture, the measure of her achievements and the trend of her ideals.

The Japanese art section in the Palace of Fine Arts is replete with the works of art, both ancient and modern, from the land of the Rising Sun. The art exhibit is divided in two sections, one devoted to contemporary art, the other to the art of ancient Japan.

The step across from the section the exhibit housing the modern art that housing the ancient art is like taking step to an ancient mystical country. In that exhibit are found pottery from buried mounds 1,000 years old, and ante-dating the Christian era. There are splendid embroideries there, which have been copied needle paintings, on which artists have labored for years with silk threads. There is a wealth of costly decorations, brilliant gold and silver work, bearing evidence of endless labor, evidence of amazing skill and artistic feling in ages when the race was reckoned with the rising and setting of the sun.

These treasures of art of both ancient and modern Japan come from many sources, the largest collection being the Emperor Mutsuhito. On the present ruler, treasures never before exhibited to strangers, have been exported in Japan's exhibit at the Exposition.

The immense Japanese gardens built around the pavilion of that country are a revelation in the art of Nipponese everyday life. The natural mowing of the wheels of industry in that country is given a setting reproduced in its industrial exhibits in Manufacturer's Hall, in departments of Mines and Metallurgy and Transportation.

Crossed side by side with Japan's evidence of her marvellous swing in the practical' idealism of the age are exhibits of her mythologic age. Ancient Buddhist statues in wood, and stone, and clay, together with altar pieces and many religious carvings, are shown in an old Buddhist temple that was transplanted direct from Japan to the Exposition grounds.

The intensive farming of Japan, and into life by the expansion of population without a corresponding increase of soil to hid the growing workers, is shown in large exhibits installed for the purpose.

In the blending of the practical and the artistic that gives Japanese civilization so much force and claims for it the marvel of admiration but praise among the nations.

Japan more than any other country in the Orient has been assuming her place in European civilization in the present generation. It has sent students to American, Universities and has special commissioners to Europe.

It is estimated that 175,000 people in the United States annually visit the Canadian National Exhibition. Canadian visitors to the international exhibition to the disturbed conditions abroad, it is expected that the attendance will be considerably swelled.

The running track of the Canadian National Exhibition is one of the few on the continent giving a 220 yards straightaway. Many records have been equalled or broken on Athletic Days in past years.

Achievements of Engineering at the Panama-Pacific

The superlative beauties of Exposition architecture, color and sculpture demand all the admiration of the casual visitor. But those whose eyes can see beneath the surface of things will marvel as much at the work of the engineer who laid the foundation and erected the skeleton of it all and the builder who put it together.

How large a part the engineer played in the making of the building may be estimated from the fact that more than half of the $14,500,000 construction budget was devoted to engineering and construction work. At one time almost 3000 civil and electrical engineers and draftsmen were employed by the Division of Works When things were humming in that department, which was responsible for all the construction work and which was ruled by a construction wizard, Harris D. H. Cornick, there were more than 350 experts, architects, engineers, clerks and inspectors working on the job constantly.

When the engineers first looked up on the exposition site much of it was under the waters of the bay and much of it was low lying and swampy. First they built a sea wall and pumped two million cubic of sand and silt from the bay into the fill. And then on that they laid down fifty thousand cubic yards of loam. After clearing and filling sewerage systems and water systems, gas light and power mains were buried underground. Water and flirnations systems, fire protection, illuminating power units were installed, wharves, docks, slips, and railroads built and then plumbing, heating and ventilating systems, public utilities sufficient enough for a city of 25,000 people.

Most of these and many other problems were solved by the engineers and constructors before a building had risen. The problem of combining rapidity of construction with low cost and beauty in the end as well as the final problem of combining low wrecking cost with high salvage value."

The hydraulic fill of the made land was started on April 13 and completed in September, 1912 and cost $300,000. After that commenced the work of building. Nearly 23,000 piles, for two hundred miles of piling, went under the sites of the main exhibit palaces of the Exposition.

Exposition Art Collection Unrivalled

There is one department at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition that has been stinted above all others by the present European war. This is the department of Fine Arts, housed in a mighty Greco-Roman palace one-fifth of a mile in length. Art treasures of the Old World that otherwise never would have been removed from their places in famous galleries have been shipped to San Francisco.

In this palace, with curving colonnaded wings stretching east and west along the shores of the Fine Arts Lagoon, are forty-one lighted and two steel walled exhibit galleries. Fifteen of these galleries — are grooded, as the entire structure is—by sanction of the artists of renown of many nationalities. Twenty-five have been allotted to the United States.

Eminent artists will be found in the individual exhibit galleries, where they will be found the work of the great European masters. Among the artists of international renown who will have separate exhibits will be James McNeil Whistler, William M. Chase, John S. Sargent, Joseph Pennell, William H. Chase, Carl Melchers, Richard Fryer, Frank Duveneck, Edward W. Redfield, John Twachtman, John W. Alexander, Edmund C. Tarbell, Alson Skinner Clark and the two well-known artists, Liljefors and Carl Larssen.

There will be forty Whistlers in the Whistler gallery, an equally representative collections by Liljefors and Larssen. Sargent, who has been called the "Velasquez of Today," finished his group in spite of the war, and shipped them from Vienna. Melchers who is professor of art at Weimar University, Germany, shipped a carload of canvases from Holland on the Jason.

Another contribution from Germany will include a famous Rubens from the Munich Gallery. Others of the nations at war that are represented by art treasures are France, which has shipped selected treasures from the Louvre and Luxemburg Galleries; Belgium, England, which has contributed from the National Art Gallery, and Austria, Serbia and Poland. All of the exhibits of the belligerent nations were shipped in the collier Jason. Spain, Italy, Greece, Sweden, Norway, Denmark and Turkey sent exhibits by their own vessels.

Japan will occupy three large galleries, Argentina has sent paintings and statuary to fill another room, and China, with her new and ancient art works, has an entrie room. Norway has three galleries for her 2,000 paintings, and Sweden has three rooms.

Two complete collections intended for foreign exhibition will be splendid features of the fine arts department. These are the collection assembled for the international fine arts exhibits at Venice, which had to be postponed because of the war, and the collection assembled in the galleries of the White City Exposition in Chicago, which was closed and the galleries turned into barracks for the colonial troops.

GO AS OUR GUESTS TO SUNNY CALIFORNIA

Best Music of This Generation for Exposition

How much will the Panama-Pacific Exposition mean to music-lovers? It will such a revelation of the artistic and social potentialities of the art of tone as will seem to many a music-hungry soul the enunciation of a new aesthetic gospel.

California has always been musical from the beginning. Down at Monterey they still sing the old hymn to one Sarlos which was taught the Indian natives by Fra Junipero Serra and his companions, and the Spanish leaven is constructively operative among us to this day. Even the primitive chants of the Redskin are not lost, and men like Carlos Troyer and Charles Wakefield Cadman are following the example of Edward MacDowell to reveal to the world what artistic virtue is implicit in those aboriginal melodies. The Forty-Niners gave us their ballads; the Frenchmen gave us their chansons, the German his impeccable Volkslieder; Muscovite and Hun, Celt and Saxon and Latin all contributed their meed of music to our California treasury of song.

This leaven of the world's music will be mightily active in our Exposition. The Fair will be a musical seething ground, and whether we think in the idiom of the classicist or love simpler music which is good for entertainment's sake, or whether we are eclectics and have an ear for whatever is good in all kinds of music, we shall find what will please in abounding measure.

Are you an exclusive, brought up in the academic fields of the Old World? In that event you can drink your fill at the concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony; do you prefer the sprightlier fare which is dispensed by organizations which come a little closer to human nature in its untrained aspect, then you can listen to the Constabulary Band from the Philippines; you can revel in the marches of John Philip Sousa. Have you Italian musical leanings? Then you can enjoy the concerts to be given by Thuria's Band from Chicago.

If again, your best care is for the proper musical pride of San Francisco, you can attend the performances to be given under the direction of John Cassaza. More pretentious will be the Exposition Orchestra, an organization filled to attention solely for the purpose of the Fair. There will be eighty men, the pick of American instrumentalists, and they will be here from beginning to end of our artistic industrial epic of our great exhibition.

But orchestral and band music will only be part of the musical inspiration which we shall derive from the Exposition. Great choirs like the Apollo Club of Chicago will visit us and give of their best.

But the great burst or choral inspiration which our West is to receive will come through the instrumentality of those Americans from Wales, who have imbibed the art of choral The great Eisteddfod in July will be the supreme choral event of our musical history. song with their mother's milk.

George Street Pavement

Editor Ontario:

There is much interest being manifested by residents of George Street in regard to pavement of its street, and all, apparently, want the new pavement. However, few have estimated the cost which will be burdensome to many, for the storm sewer and the other expenses necessary for its maintenance. Much more do the said residents want the removal of the Eastern sidewalk, between Bridge and Dundas streets, and some regrets that their signature was given to favor the street pavement when the unlooked for expenses, additions, etc., were ascertained. Some other street pavement, less expensive, had better be considered by the city and the said residents, for it appears that in some sections, the condition of the soil does not encourage or warrant a cement or permanent road-bed.

The taxes are burdensome enough as already stated without [illegible] and which will have no limit, when maintenance and repairs are considered.

1915 Edition of McKim's

"Canadian Newspaper Directory" Now Issued

It is now nearly a quarter of a century since Mr. A. McKim, who established the first independent Advertising Agency in this country, completed the rather ambitious task of publishing the first Directory of Canadian publications. The nine successive editions of this valuable work provide the most complete and detailed record available of the growth of Canadian periodicals.

The 1915 Edition, of which we have just received a copy, shows that the great war has not seriously affected the newspapers of Canada. While the birth-rate of new publications has received a check, and the death-rate of the week ones has perhaps increased a trifle, most of the leading papers, particularly the dailies, show very healthy increases in circulation. Three metropolitan dailies have reached or passed the hundred thousand mark.

A census of the papers listed and described in the 1915 Directory shows nearly 150 Dailies, 7 tri-Weeklies, 43 semi-Weeklies, over 1065 Weeklies, about 40 bi-Weeklies or semi-monthlies, 250 Monthlies, 3 bi-Monthlies and 18 Quarterlies—a total of over 1575 publications.

This means approximately one Daily to every 10,000 families, and one Weekly to every 1,500 families. From this one would infer that live a comparatively new country, Canada is well-read.

A. McKim Limited report the usual keen demand for the Canadian Newspaper Directory, which sells at $8.00 Its red-headed, gold-stamped green cover has become a familiar sight on the desks of advertisers, publishers and business men everywhere who are interested in Canada.

Complimentary Words of Sir John French

Sir John French, in a speech to the 80th Infantry Brigade after the second battle of Ypres, said: "The 80th Brigade have had a very hard time, and I want to tell you how much I appreciate what you have done. You held on to the trenches in the most magnificent manner under a more severe artillery bombardment than has ever been known, and in doing so you have been of the greatest assistance to operations which the British army was carrying out at the time. Men who have merely to lie down and wait under fire like that are apt to think that they are undergoing war rather than making war; but I want to tell you that by doing what you did you were really making war or what will be known in the future as a great battle—the second battle of Ypres.

"By holding on to your trenches you prevented the Germans from attaining an object which it was necessary for them to attain. They wanted to take Ypres, and to be able to tell the whole of Europe and America that they had taken Ypres, and if they had done so this would have done us a lot of harm. This might have had th effect of keeping neutral nations out of the war, but I can tell you that Italy will today declare war on behalf of the Allies.

"You prevented them from taking Ypres by your tenacity, and besides that you drove off German forces attacking you, and so considerably helped the Allied advance from the south at Arras. To remain in the trenches under a heavy artillery bombardment, to keep your heads and your discipline, and to be able to use your rifles at the end of it, require far higher qualities of personal bravery than actively to attack the enemy when everybody is on the move and conscious of doing something.

"I see before me famous old regiments who battle honors how that they have upheld the British Empire in all parts of the world in many famous battles, but I tell you that the battle you have just fought will rank higher than any that your regiments have to show on your colors."

Mr R. Smith had the misfortune to have a horse injured in a runaway accident at Everett street this afternoon. The animal had to be shot owing to its injuries.

The trial will be inexpensive and the result will be another customer for this excellent medicine. So effective is their action that many cures can certainly be traced to their use where other pills have proved ineffective.

AN ERROR IN TACTICS.

Exactly a month ago the London Spectator remarked that Russia would not be beaten if the incredible happened and the Germans were to get Moscow. Indeed to do that, the Spectator said, would only make their destruction the more certain. This view of the situation on the Eastern front is borne out by the military correspondents who seem to agree that the Austro-German drive in Galicia was far less successful than many of us believed it to be, and that the enemy is no nearer victory over the Russians now than before the fall of Lemberg. Indeed, it is held by many that, while the German movements in Galicia, regarded as detached operations, may be accepted as considerable military successes, they may be regarded, when the whole story of the war comes to be told, as a cardinal error in tactics. This view is set forth with great lucidity by the military writer of the London Nation. His review of the situation is of particular interest at this time:

"The aim of Germany in the offensive in Galicia, was to produce a decision. She could have no other aim for the sufficient reason that no other aim would profit her. She entered the war with a vastly greater part of her total force immediately available than Russia and Britain have even now a much smaller proportion of their force available than Germany had of hers at the outset. The consequence of this is that so far as Germany has any chance of final victory it grows daily less and less. Relatively, her force must decrease. She is now more and more striving to give it an adventitious preponderance by the use of huge masses of artillery over small areas, by an immense expenditure of ammunition, by the use of asphyxiating gases, and so on. The massed artillery formation in Galicia is the latest device, and, it must be said at once, it has proved extremely formidable. It has carried her armies across Galicia into Przemysl. It enabled her to break the Russian line toward Stryj; but the line was healed and the piercing force annihilated. If she could have kept the gap open and poured in some hypothetical force, she would have had the Russian line from Stryj to the east at her mercy. She could then have rolled this line up—and so forth. Up to the present moment there is no suggestion that Brussiloff or Dimitreff, or the Russian staff suffer from from the status lymphaticus. Indeed, if we could regard the issues with sufficient detachment, it would be pleasurable to show that the Russian tactical movements in the Galician area have again shown more finesse than the German.

"It is not too unduly optimistic to consider that the Germans have put forth their greatest effort against the Galician front. In the immediate future it is difficult to imagine they can strike with any greater violence than they have done in the last month. If, then, they are to secure a decision, it the only sense which means anything to them, either the Russians must be worse prepared for the new outset than they were for the last, or there must be a sudden collapse of Russian fighting power (including generalship), or the Russians must have been driven to positions less defensible than those on which they fought at the end of April. No Russian positions could offer more hostages to fortune than those which she held at the commencement of the new offensive. Her line from the upper Biala ran over the Carpathian crests for some 70 miles or so. Its security depended upon the strength of the Dunajec-Biala line. But this was not a strong line, though the Germans had never contested it for some four months. The Russian line this moment was nowhere so weak. Przemysl was its weakest point, and its abandonment will permit of a stronger front being occupied. The Germans have secured no decision; but they have paid the price. Their advance in Galicia has been made in the most costly fashion. If the Russians lost heavily, the Germans have suffered even more. And it is much the same case as with the navy. If Great Britain and Germany lost equally, Germany would have lost more. Germany cannot afford to lose as heavily as her enemy; but she staked all on securing a decision. She has bought Galician acres at a price never paid before. And if she should now draw off any appreciable force to hold the gate against the new enemy in the south, even if she should draw off an appreciable proportion of her heavy guns, there can be little doubt that the Russian line would soon be in motion again; and if she could hold an entrenched line from the San along the Dniester, she might come to realise that she had merely purchased immunity for Hungary at the expense of Silesia.

"Germany, if she fails to secure a decision is worse off than before. She has depleted her reserves of men and munitions lavishly, and their supply is limited. The Russians are growing in strength, both as to personnel and as to material. The Russian staff within the last few days has shown itself as alert and capable as ever. It is almost impossible to believe the Germans can now obtain a result worth the price already paid. They have captured Przemysl. They may even break the Russian line again; but it is difficult to think the same virile brains which have devised so many expedients will not be able to cope with any new situation. And, as we have suggested before, the sorties of a besieged garrison, unless they secure a decision, but make the final, issue more certain. In the south, fresh forces are in motion. In the west the Allies hold a number of commanding points, the advantage of which will appear when the great offensive begins. For the past month the Russians have had to bear what is probably the fiercest attack of the war. That they have so far robbed Germany of the only result which could justify so ample a preparation, and so unlimited an outpouring of blood should impress us still more with the fighting qualities of our Eastern Allies."

Germany and Austria according to the London Times correspondent have suffered enormous losses, amounting it is estimated, to three quarters of a million men. Russia, on the other hand, all the time continues to increase the area of operations and consequently the German lines of communication. She has been acting mainly no the defensive, fighting rear-guard actions, adn, therefore, she loses fewer men, and will be able to continue the game indefinitely. The Germans, according to the view of the Times correspondent, must continue pouring in fresh troops in order to hold their positions. In other words, the position of the Germanic forces in Galicia, as one writer illustrates, is much that of the man who has a wolf by the ear. He cannot let go; and has nothing to gain by holding on, especially if quite a number of other wolves are in the field against him.

THE SILENT CALL.

There's a call which comes to a British heart;
'Tis the call of the sod and King.
A silent call to the ends of the earth,
Brought along by the same old wing,
The wing of the silent morning ray
Gives a silent message to a steady heart.
No question is asked, no doubt, nor nay;
It's enough that a Briton must do his part.

From the lure of the gold and the Yukon cold,
Come the men of Canada—true.
From the East to the West the call is told;
It travels, where skies are clear and blue.
On the wing of the silent morning ray
Comes the message that Britons must fight again;
Fight to uphold a God-sent way—
Britannia must rule the ocean main.

That silent call brings the men from Gaul,
And the men from Australia, too,
From the deser. sand of many lands; Bengal
Hears the call which cometh through
On the wings of the silent morning ray.
From the Isles of the free, the home of the brave.
To every port—in the same old way,
The same old song, "We shall rule the wave."

'Tis the silent call which ruleth all,
The call of loyal, true heart;
It's the flag we love, both great and small;
A love no foe can sever apart.
It comes on the wings of the morning, too;
Enveloping the Briton wherever he be
He answers the call of the silent true,
"God Save Our King," we shall rule the sea.

"If you want to conquer Germany, do not be German," says Mr. G. K. Chesterton. "Do not let us be hysterical at this crisis, or go mad at the mischief done by these madmen. It is for us to gibt or to do our best for those who are fighting; broadly speaking, the less we do of anything else the better. If the Germans manage to make us nervous and excitable about them, they will have gained what all hysterics desire. But they will have succeeded as they succeed with their green and yellow fumes, not by striking a blow, but by communicating a disease."

RUSSIAN vs. GERMAN STRATEGY.

Lemberg has fallen, and the Germans-Austrian army has the satisfaction of knowing that it has driven the Russian foe before it for two hundred miles, and that the Russians have been compelled to relax their grip upon Galicia. No doubt the moral effect upon the Austrian and German armies will be considerable, and it seems probable that Roumania and Bulgaria will be impressed by this evidence of the German superiority in artillery. But we venture to think that the moral effect has been much over-rated. It is true that the Russians have been driven back, but the German and Austrian armies know well the price that has been paid, which probably reaches nearly half a million men. And after all the possession of Galicia with the huge Russian army still unbroken, and swalling only fresh guns and ammunition to commence another offensive, is but an empty triumph. The truth is, the Germans have failed in their main objective. The German plan was, by tremendous concentration of artillery and men, to drive a wedge through the Russian army and then to deliver a crushing blow northeast the most isolated section of the army and secure a decisive victory, but the Russian commanders-in-chief met the Germans by the most effective weapon at his command—a strategic, orderly retirement—and the German blow which was to have crushed the great Slav army has yet to be delivered. It was freely predicted that the Germans would release 1,000,000 men for use either on the Italian or western fronts, but with the Russian army still intact, and superior in numbers to its foes, and lacking only guns and ammunition, which may be supplied any time, it is hard to see how the Germans can afford to withdraw any very large forces, especially in view of the fact that at any time, without warning, half a million Roumanians may be launched against their right wing. The loss of Galicia may prolong the war, but only until the Allies have secured the preponderance in artillery toward which they are now bending every energy.—Christian Guardian.

USING SCHOOL BUILDINGS.

Boston is learning how to make use of the school buildings during more of the day than the restricted hours when children are in them. Review of the year's activity at the school centres, under the direction of the department for the Extended use of the Schools, shows that more and more adults are coming to enjoy the privileges which they may enjoy at evening meetings, whether of social or educational character, arranged in the schoolrooms. Seven such centres are now maintained in various parts of Greater Boston, and there organizations, ranging from orchestra to classes in manual training, have been formed and successfully maintained. The academic courses are not neglected, and the type of instruction sequested in them has been of significance. The men have been asked to be given next year further knowledge of American Government, of economic problems, of the means to personal efficiency, and the women have expressed interest in courses on pure food, the appreciation of music and other subjects, each of value in its kind. Only a small appropriation is now being given the school centres and hence they have had to be made in large measure self-supporting, but surely the city will not be slow in helping those who show such an eagerness to help themselves.—Boston Transcript.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally. It acts directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

and we battered them like demons. I lost sight of Grant, the red drip of blood over my eyes making all before me a mist. I only knew enough to strike. Yet fight as we would there was no holding them. We were forced to give way. Guns began to spit fire. I saw the wounded Dragoon dragged down under the feet of the mob; hands gripped my legs, and I kicked at the faces in my effort to tear loose. Tom reeled against the wall, his arm shattered to a hulk, and one of the man above came tumbling over me, shot dead. The fall of him cleared the stairs an instant; then the rail broke, and several toppled over with it. I stumbled back almost to the top, sweeping the hair and blood out of my eyes. What—what was the matter? They were running, those fellows down there—struggling, fighting among themselves to get away. Oaths, yells, cries filled the air—fear, made a perfect babel. I could not understand, could not grasp the meaning of the sudden panic. Who were those men surging in through the front door, pouring out through the library? Then a voice reached me.

"Bedad, they're Fagin's hall-hounds, bye—or hell will 'em!"

Where had I heard the voice before? I sank down, too weak to stand, my head hanging over the edge of the stairs. Some hand drew me back, but I had no strength left. Only I could think—and I did think, could see me, Camden militia! Camden militia! By all the gods, Farrell was there! It was the rattle of his Irish mates that I hear the night we captured Delaware's raiders. Then I closed my eyes, and forgot.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

Searching for Claire.

I was unconscious, but not for long. The first touch of water served to revive me, and I became aware that an arm supported my head, although everything was indistinct before my eyes.

"More water, Mike," said a voice close at hand. "Yes, that will do. Where is Farrell? Oh, Dan, this is Major Lee."

"One of the Dragoons said he was in command, fairly badly."

"No, I think not; but utterly exhausted, and weak from loss of blood. They put up a game fight."

"Only three on their feet when we got in. Hullo, Lawrence, getting back to the world?"

"Yes," I managed to answer, feeling strength enough to lift myself, and vaguely noticing his features. "Is that you, Farrell?"

"It certainly is," cheerfully, "Dyea has his arm about you, and the Camden boys are herding those devils down below. Sure, I had some news from the way things look. How many men had you?"

I raised my head, endeavoring to recollect, staring down into the hall. It was filled with dead and wounded men, and at the foot of the stairs was a pile of bodies.

"Twelve, altogether," I replied finally. "They—they were too many for us."

"Three to one, or more, I should judge. We got here just in time."

I was up now, looking into their faces, slowly grasping the situation.

"Yes," I said, feeling the necessity of knowing. "How did it happen? What brought you?"

"All natural enough. Clinton got away night before last with what was left of his army. Left Erie burning, and made a forced march to the ships at Sandy Hook. Left everything, to save his troops. Washington, realizing the uselessness of holding them longer, sent most of his militia home. About six miles out there on the pike read a half-crazy preacher named Demb came up with us. He was badly frightened to tell a straight story, but we got out of him that there was a fight on here, and came over at last as our bosses would travel!" His eyes swept the hall. "Five minutes later would have been too late."

"But Farrell, the girl! Do you know anything about the girl?"

"What girl? Do you mean Claire Mortimer? Is she here?"

"Yes, her father is lying helplessly wounded up stairs, and she was here with him. Eric is somewhere in the hall, either dead or wounded. I saw him fall just as we retreated to the stairs."

Farrell leaned over and called to some one below.

"Not yet, sir," was the answer.

"Well, hunt for him. Now, we'll go up and find Claire. Major, can you climb the rest of the stairs? Help him, Dan."

I experienced no great difficulty, my strength coming back rapidly. There was a wounded Dragoon leaning against the wall, and half-way down the hall lay another body, face down. Without doubt this was the guard Fagin had stationed there. Duval paused to help the wounded man, but Farrell and I moved on across the dead guard to the open door beyond. Colonel Mortimer, unable to move, was propped up on his pillow, one hand grasping a pistol. With shaking arm he levelled it at us.

"Who d'ye you? Quick, now!" he quavered. "I've shot one, and I'm good for more!"

"You know me, Colonel," and Farrell stepped inside. "I am 'Bull' Farrell; this is Major Lawrence. He looked at us with dull eyes, his hand falling weakly.

"Farrell—Farrell—surely, the blacksmith. What Lawrence? The—the officer Claire knows?"

"Yes; he's a rough-looking object I admit, but there has been a fight here, and we've had to take hand in it, shares. We've just cleaned out Red Fagin's gang. We came up here to tell you the good news to you and your daughter."

The Colonel's head sank back upon the pillow wearily.

"My daughter—Claire—she is not here."

"Not here!" I cried, aroused by the admission. "Did she not return to you?"

"No; they came for her to go down stairs—a tall man with a black beard, and two others. They took her away an hour ago, and I have seen nothing of her since. I—heard the shots, the sound of fierce fighting, but could not move from the bed. Tell me, Major, what has become of my little girl?"

"I do not know," I confessed, noting in about in bewilderment. "She came up the stairs, I am sure. It was just as the fight began, and I had no chance for a moment to observe anything before we were at it fiercely. She shot Fagin down, and then—"

"Shot Fagin! Claire!"

"Yes; she was justified. Had she not acted so quickly I would have done so myself. He was forcing her down the table.

"Into marriage! With whom?"

"Captain Grant," I answered passionately. "It was a deliberate plot, although he pretended to be innocent, and a helpless prisoner. Later the man fought with the others against us; after Jones was killed he seven assumed command."

He has been hand and glove with those fellows from the first, Colonel," continued Mr. Farrell hoarsely. "I've known it, and told Lawrence so a month ago. I only hope he was killed down below. But what can have become of Claire?"

"She never passed along here," insisted Mortimer, "I haven't taken my eyes from that door."

"Then she is hiding somewhere in these rooms," I urged, rising on, Lawrence, and we'll search them."

We went out hurriedly, leaving the wounded man lying helpless on the bed, and stepped carelessly across the dead guard lying in the hallway. The memory of Peter recurred to me. He was not the kind to desert his mistress at such a time. Opening the hall, I stepped back to inquire. The Colonel opened his eyes wearily at the sound of voices.

"He is not here," he explained slowly. "Both Fagin and Tompsel were sent away to find a surgeon, and have not returned. We anticipated no danger here with Captain Grant present."

I ground my teeth savagely together, recalling the treachery of the latter, his insults to Claire, his deceiving of Eric, his stealing of papers, hoping thus to ruin his own Colonel, his alliance with Fagin, his selling of British secrets. There was a woman through and through and I hoped he had already paid the penalty, if not. I vowed the man should never escape. But the thought of the missing girl came back, driving all else from my mind. She was in none of those rooms we searched, nor did we discover the slightest evidence of her having been there. As I stood in the door of the deserted music-room staring helplessly about, a sudden possibility occurred to me. Ay! that must be the truth, the fall explanation of her vanishing. She had come flying up the stairs, frightened, desperate—so far as she knew, alone against Fagin's unscrupulous band. She had not returned to her father, or escaped by way of the hall. Where then could she have gone? The secret staircase, down which she had hurried me, and which was known only to herself, Eric and Peter. I gripped Farrell's arm eagerly.

"You know this house well—did you ever hear of secret passages in it?"

"I has heard it," whispered he, "but sh," he answered, "that 'sich were here in the old Indian days. "Why?"

"Because she is gone. The girl 'hid me here from Grant.' And that is where we will find her. The opening is by the fake mantel. Colonel, I have no conception of how it works; she made me turn my back while she opened the mechanism."

He stooped down, and began search along the fireplace, and I joined him. Together our hands fell over every inch of surface. There was no response, not even a crack to guide us. At last he gave good aside, and our eyes met.

"Who knew of this beside Claire?" he asked.

"Eric and the servant Swanson. She told me she ran and her brother discovered it by accident through reading an old memoranda."

"And the colonel is not aware of its existence?"

"I understand not. Do you know if the boy lives?"

He left the room, and I heard his voice calling down the stairs, but did not distinguish the words of reply. I was still on my knees when he returned.

"He is alive, but unconscious, Lawrence. Do you consider it impossible for her to escape from here without providing she took refuge in this place?"

"I could find no opening, except underground, and that is blocked now. I shuddered at the thought. "Besides, Mortimer is under the impression he used all the candles."

"Then we must get axes, and cut our way in. Wait here, and I will bring up some of the men."

I straightened up as he left the room, and my eyes caught sight of a small mirror above the open grate. Good Heavens! Could that be my reflection! Bare-headed, my face streaked with blood and dirt, my coat rags, my shirt ripped to the waist. I scarcely looked human. In sudden burst of anger I reached out and gripped the mirror, jerking it savagely. Then I sprang back. Slowly, with a faint click of the mechanism, the mantelpiece was swinging open.

CHAPTER XXXV.

A Confession of Love.

I could scarcely believe my eyes as the mantel swung slowly outward, revealing the black hole beyond. I glanced about hastily, and started to the door to call back Farrell. He was not in the upper hall, but as my head was thrust out I caught sight of a half-burned candle in the chamber opposite. By the time I returned with it lighted, the mantel had turned on its pivot, leaving the way clear. The narrow stair was vacant, stretching down into the black depths. I listened, my heart throbbing, but no sound came from below. Could she be there? Was there any other secret passage by which she could have disappeared? I shuddered at memory of what it meant to be shut up in that dismal hole, without the companionship of light. Fearful of some accident I paused long enough to wedge a heavy piece of furniture in the opening, and then, shading the bit of candle, began groping my way down. I had reached the lower floor before the first gleam of yellow rays revealed any evidence of her presence. Then I saw a girl lying head down upon the table. My hand touched her arm before she moved, but then she faced me, wild-eyed, the fear still gleaming in the candlelight.

"Claire! Claire!" I exclaimed, startled at her sudden movement. "Surely you know me!"

For the instant she did not, her eyes full of terror.

"No! no!" she cried hysterically. "Oh, it cannot be! It is a dream! You promised me it was not, but you—"

I caught her hand, the pistol falling to the floor, and placed the candlestick upon the table.

"It is no dream, dear. I am Allen Lawrence, and I have come for you. I know I look disreputable enough, but there has been fighting—surely you know me now."

She caught her breath quickly, clinging to me with both hands—her eyes softening as she studied my face.

"Allen—Allen Lawrence!" she repeated softly. "Oh, I can scarcely believe it true. Let me feel of you. I believe I was going insane—the dark, the awful dark, and, and no way to get out."

"Yes, yes, I understand," I whispered, drawing her to me. "I was hidden here once, remember. But it is over with now."

"But—how did you find a way to me? I—I never thought until it was all over that I had shut myself in here to die. I was so frightened. I just ran and hid. Oh, you cannot conceive what I had gone through."

She drew away from me, and again hid her face on the table.

"Oh, but I can, Claire." and I bent over her, my hand fondling her hair. "I was there in the hall below, ready even then to act in your defense. heard all that was said, saw all that was done."

"You—you were there?" sobbing out the words. "You saw me kill him?"

Yes, and had you delayed another instant I should have done it."

"Then—then," she gripped up, tears flowing afresh eye, "you do not blame me, and do not think me a wicked wretch?"

"I think you a brave, noble woman," I said firmly. "How could I feel otherwise? Look up, little girl; I want to see your face. No, don't shrink from me. There is no cause. I know the whole story without your speaking a word. You asked me to come back to help you, and I came."

"Yes," she whispered, "I know. You have been so good."

"Good! I loved you, dear. From the moment I lifted you out of the way of that mob in Philadelphia, I have loved you. I did not understand much that occurred, but I have never doubted you. Now I realize the cause of your masquerade and know you were justified. I can bring you good news—Eric is not a traitor, but was a prisoner, captured by Fagin, and held at Grant's request. We found him bound and under guard out yonder, as we approached the house."

"And he is here now?"

"Yes; he was hurt in the fight, and is still unconscious, but will live."

"His reputation—"

"Is safe. Washington believes he brought him the news of Clinton's route of march, and will never know otherwise."

She arose to her feet, standing before me, slender beauty in the flickering light of the candle on her face.

"Major Lawrence," she began, "I wish to get out of here—it seems like a grave to me—but I must speak first. I am so glad I have accomplished what I endeavored to do for my brother. Captain Grant tried to make me believe he was a deserter, but I would not. When he failed to come back to me as he had promised, I could hardly determine what my duty was. I knew his plans, his orders, and the thought came that I should carry them out myself. We looked sufficiently alike so that this could be done with little danger of discovery. So I put on the uniforms concealed here, and I felt driven to impersonate him. I do not insist that I did right; I do not even know; it seemed right to me. Then—then" her voice faltered, "I met you, again and again, and I—I began to doubt myself. I had no one to confide in, and I was so lonely. I was simply compelled to go ahead, and keep my own secret. The only ones I knew I could honestly trust were our old house servants."

"You doubted me, even?"

"Not at first, but you must not blame me. We met strangely; you were a gentleman and an officer; I felt sure of this, and was given ample opportunities to tell you my story. But before I decided to do so, you—you spoke of other things and—and then I was afraid."

"Afraid of what?" and I caught her hand in mine. "Surely the knowledge of what you were attempting to accomplish would turn me against you?"

Her eyes fell, shaded by the long lashes.

"No; once, do you remember I almost began a confession, when you spoke of your old-fashioned mother, and her conception of womanhood. How could I tell you then that I had dressed as a man, and played the part of a—a fool? I thought you might despise me, and—and I wished so to retain your respect. It was an accident we were with Delaware that night. We were endeavoring to waylay a courier, and rode suddenly into his party. I had to invent a tale on the spur of the moment. Major Lawrence, now that you know, tell me the one thing I must know before we join the others—would you wish your own wife to do as I have done?"

No. 23 THE PROPRIETORS

New System of Towing.

Tests of a new system invented by a German government engineer, Herr Kosse, have been recently made on the Dortmund canal (14 miles in length) of the Dortmund Ems canal. It consists in laid on the bottom of the canal, and the tugboat carries at its bottom four rollers which engage the rail. These rollers are operated from the boat which is thus propelled. A large economy of power is claimed for this method. The experimental tug is worked by electricity, the energy being obtained through a cable from an auxiliary boat equipped with a dynamo. This system is only a temporary arrangement, and in ordinary working a trolley wire would be installed alongside the canal. Self-propulsion can obviously be replaced by the crude oil motors, etc., each barge being fitted with a set of rollers running on the rail.—London Times.

Most men do not care to pay the price of success in labor, perseverance and self-denial.

To Drain a Wet Cellar.

Dig all around the walls to below the foundation, put in the damaged plaster the outside of the walls with good cement plaster, then coat several times with a wash of pure cement and water to fill up all the pores. Put in a drain pipe about a few inches of the top with cement gravel and broken stone and cover the top with sod. Also make good connections from the cellar to the drain outside.

Why do You Say "Sick Room?"

A good many hundred years ago when a Spartan governor invited King Xerxes to betray the Greeks to the Persians they met in a temple room with roses in the window.

Because this historic meeting was held under the rose, "sub rosa" plots and secret plans are said to be carried on "sub rosa" or under the roses.

TWO NEW PASTORS IN CITY PULPITS

First Sunday in Their New Charges—Rev. S. C. Moore and Rev. J. N. Clarry at Tabernacle and West Belleville

The Rev. J. N. Clarry, and the Rev. S. C. Moore, the new pastors of the West Belleville and Tabernacle Methodist churches, respectively, received such a warm welcome to their new charges yesterday and created such favorable impressions that one can predict for them success in their fields of labor. They were greeted by large and enthusiastic congregations, and special music marked the services of the day.

REV. J. N. CLARRY

The new pastor of Holloway Street Church has the reputation of being a most successful and powerful social work. That as a preacher, he is bound to make his mark in this city, is evident to those who heard his first sermons yesterday. His address was extremely practical. Clearness in thought and expression is one of his most admirable characteristics.

He took the story of Nehemiah and the reconstruction of the city of Jerusalem and the world life and applied the lessons in a most lucid manner to the present day. He said, was leadership.

"Nehemiah is a conspicuous instance of the right man in the right place. An official of the Persian government, he still had the welfare of God and of Jerusalem, torn and desolate like Louvain. The king allowed him to return to reconstruct the city and Nehemiah became his duty as well as his privilege.

Men are saved for the sake of their own character and for their career. Choose the right and go ahead, is the only motto for success in life. Nehemiah was right. He did not fail when put in the position to do it. He owed his success to his vision of God as did Esther.

Such a trying time we today are experiencing in the Empire. To be patriotic, it is not merely to love our land, we must take God into our thoughts. A young Englishman said in answer to a remark that his brother by his sacrifice had performed the humility share in the empire's cause: "I cannot satisfy my conscience with what my brother has done."

Those unfortunates who have had to search Canada and Louvain for their property will understand Nehemiah's position. He had to go through rebuilding the walls in quiet and fight no one know his mission until his plans were mature.

He was a man of resources. He did not bring in Persian workmen but inspired his broken spirited countrymen to do the work. The nobles tried to knock his plans, threatened armed force, tried other methods, but undismayed by any pieces where the nobles or men who should be leaders, block the way of progress. He found the right place within most dangerous, but he passed over all the obstacles.

Having rebuilt Jerusalem he saw something was wrong. The life of the people was not right. The desecration of the temple and the Sabbath had to be stopped, marriage customs had to be purified. Nehemiah had power to do all these things. He healed malcontent and he was saved by God to serve his countrymen.

During the service the quartette sang a number and in the anthem Miss E. Hamilton and Dr. G. O. Dupras rendered a duet.

REV. S. C. MOORE

The new Tabernacle pastor, Rev. S. C. Moore has fine rhetorical and oratorical gifts. His discourses are delivered with fluency and he is forcible with the fervor of his thought His efforts seem all aglow with covictions. Last evening he preached on the theme of "Personal Experience and Witness-Bearing." His address was inspiring.

Every great movement is met with two questions—"What do you propose to do and how do you propose to do it? If the enquiries be a wise and worthy one, then some wise and worthy method must be found to set it forth. Many a great reformer has failed for lack of proper method and many a man has an excellent Method but poverty of ideal. Wilberforce, Man, Howard, Oberlin, all had worthy and sound ideals and methods.

Christ's object was the development of manhood—He instilled the active infusion of the heart of God into the lives of sin, transforming and enriching their whole nature and then sending them forth to tell the story of their experience. Christ passed by the actual methods of men—armaments, gold, wealth, and religious systems and for three short years he poured out His life in personal relationship. He brought to pass upon a band of disciples eternal truths. That He sent them out. Crucified at 33, His teachings took wings and in a few years the disciples had spread it to three continents, and now in 19 centuries it has girdled the world. His method was personal contact and testimony. St. Paul, a man of vast talent, was transformed and was contented to be a true witness of Christ. Dedicating all his powers to tell the story to the world. "If you have any experience you owe it to the world. What would you think of a scientist who having made a discovery, sealed it up". The world needs the remedy for sorrow.

"Do the cities of this land need a remedy? God alone can give them. But God cannot save the cities alone. He needs you and me."

During the service Mrs. Grant sang "Angels ever Bright and Fair."

By Auto to Coe Hill

Mr. and Mrs. German I. Bailey and four children of Maple Leaf farm, Huntingdon township, made a trip last week by auto from their home to Coe Hill and return. They went by way of Millbridge and the Hole-in-the-Wall and returned via The Plains and Sandy Lake. They report the roads to be very fair all the way but in some places there were precipitous rocks to climb and at one point they had to cross a swamp where the water was a foot deep. They came through it all without a puncture or a break-down and are ready proof of the performance of their car, a Mitchell 6-40. The route going was 65 miles and the return 70 miles. At Coe Hill they had very pleasant visits with their daughter, Mrs. Fred Nichol.

The Best Medicine She Ever Used

WHAT MRS. SOLLEN SAYS OF DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS.

She Suffered from Kidney Disease for Many Years and Found Relief with the First Box of Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Mulvihill, Man., July 5th. (Special.)—Mrs. John Sollen, wife of a well known farmer living near here, has given astatement for publication in which she declares that Dodd's Kidney Pills are the best medicine she ever used.

"I inherited Kidney disease from my parents," Mrs. Sollen states, 'and for years suffered from it for many years. I was always tired and nervous. My back was often heavy and I had a dragging sensation across the small of my loins. I were stiff and I suffered from backaches. I had heart flutterings and my appetite was fitful. Nothing relieved me until I was told my troubles and I also suffered from Dodd's Kidney Pills.

"I was treated by a doctor and tried many other kinds of medicine but found no benefit to do me any lasting good till I used Dodd's Kidney Pills. I found relief with the first box I used."

Every one of Mrs. Sollen's symptoms is a symptom of Kidney Disease. That's why she found such quick relief in Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Farewell to Departing Missionary

About one hundred of the friends of the Rev. and Mrs. George T. Deyne gathered on the evening of Wednesday last, at the residence of Henry K. Deynes, Esq., Halloway, to bid good by and to wish God-speed to the Reverend gentleman and his esteemed wife on the eve of their departure to their distant field in Northern Alberta in answer to the call of the Missionary authorities of the Methodist church. The evening was spent in a social way, the connection with which refreshments were served and at the close the pastor ,the Rev. A. C. Huffman organized the gathering and after a few well-chosen remarks, addresses were delivered by the Rev. J. A. Chapman of Buffalo, and Percy Wright of Toronto Mill and Mr. H. K. Denyes, in which was expressed the great esteem felt by the entire community toward the honored guests of the evening, and the best wishes of all for their future success and happiness. Choice music at the piano was rendered by Miss Lena Ketchum, Mr. Roy Sills, Mrs. H. K. and Mr. Fred Denyes.

At the conclusion of the program the Rev. Mr. Denyes, on behalf of himself and Mrs. Denyes, replied in tones expressive of his appreciation of the presence of so many of the friends of his early years and the best wishes expressed for their future welfare, and which he most heartily appreciated.

We thank God for your life among us in the last four years, as wise councillors, tender friend, and faithful pastor. 39TH BATTALION C.E.F. ARRIVED AT PLYMOUTH ENGLAND ON SATURDAY

Cable From Major Vanderwater Tells of Safe Transportation of Local Battalion

The 39th Battalion C.E.F. which was organized in Belleville arrived safely at Plymouth on Saturday, July 3rd, according to a cable which Lt.-Col. Ketchenon received on Saturday evening about six o'clock from Major Roscoe Vanderwater. With the 39th on the Missanabie were an overseas company of the 38th Battalion and a dental corps, in all over 1500 men.

The evening of Wednesday, June 23 1915 will long linger in the memory of the citizens of Belleville, and the surrounding district for on that date they bade farewell to the gallant 39th Battalion C.E.F., in command of Lt.-Col. J. A. Pr s on, all of the associations of which have been connected with Belleville, fully five or seven thousand citizens on foot, in carriages, and in automobiles, followed the marching soldiers to the Grand Trunk depot and bade them goodbye.

The few days preceding the removal of the troops to England were memorable ones in our city's history. Every one knew the regiment was soon to take its voyage across, and made preparation against that event. For weeks before, relatives, particularly wives of soldiers and children had come to Belleville to be near their loved ones while such associations were possible. These visitors were made welcome by the public. How they clung to their relatives may best be left to the imagination Wherever the men were off duty, their wives and children were with them. Then on the day before and on the day of the departure there was a large influx of fathers, mothers, sisters, brothers, and friends from all the counties, villages, towns, and cities in the Third Ontario District.

The task of packing up the equipment at the barracks, the striking of the tents at Zwick's Island Camp, the shipment of baggage occupied the hours before entrainment. All afternoon on June 23rd crowds hovered around the armories and at the parade ground at the canning factory barracks. The sad partings were witnessed on all sides. The men in companies were marched off to the armouries about five o'clock and at six they were ready to leave.

A few minutes after that hour two companies marched with their rifles and equipment from the armouries and met the other half of the battalion at the barracks. The color party marched up Front street to the headquarters near the city hall and having secured the colors, returned to the barracks.

About 6.30 the march to the station began. Capt. Ruston of the Salvation Army corps had his band on hand and they led the march up Church street to Bridge and down that street to Front. There the 15th Regiment Band met the parade and led thence to the depot. No one will forget the sight as the khaki colored troops appeared on the top of Bridge street hill. Thousands lined Bridge and Front streets and cheers arose from the great concourse of people. The 6. A. Band was playing that inspiring war song "March of the Men of Harlech"—

"Men of Harlech rouse from slumber
Do ye hear like distant thunder
How the foe is growing number
Threaten this fair land.
'Tis the tramp of armed freemen
Gallant knights and stalwart yeomen
Fear them not for see the omen
Day breaks o'er the land.
See our flag is waving
On the rampart gaily
Against the sky it spreads on high
And bears its signal bravely
Men of Harlech in the hollow
There are leaders brave to follow
Meet the foe like rushing billows
British, home, and right.

The fervor of that mighty song of conflict caught every heart. The 15th band played "The Lass of Gowrie," and the soldiers along the route of march greeted its airs and sang "Tipperary." Rule Britannia" and other patriotic songs. "Are we downhearted? No," they cried and answered. Hurrahs and cheers by citizens rolled along the route of march. Friends ran into the ranks and shook hands with the troops whom they knew and soldiers nodded to friends and relatives by the way. The depot was soon reached and a mass of humanity stretched to two hundred yards on either side of the station platform. Here were the two trains ready, the first of nine coaches and baggage car, the second with eleven coaches. The troops at once entrained. Lt.-Col. Smart, senior major of the 39th was in charge of the soldiers on the first and Lt.-Col. Preston in charge of those in the second. It was not until 7.30 p.m. that the first train pulled out amid cheers. Previous to that, farewells were said, and many eyes were wet with tears. The second left at 8.10. Both trains loads were cheered to the echo and Godspeed was wished to all.

The event was one of the sad events in Belleville's history, for the city had grown attached to the 1100 khaki troops, many of whom were Belleville, Hastings, and Prince Edward boys.

They arrived safe at Montreal at dawn next morning and went aboard the Missanabie, a transport, formerly of the Canadian Pacific line of steamships. How some local officers stole aboard is well known. Between 9.15 and 110 p.m. the big boat pulled up anchor and set sail. She stopped at Quebec for arms and then lay at the mouth of the St. Lawrence.

Belleville has missed the gallant 39th. The past twelve days have been quiet ones in this city.

It is a relief to thousands to know that they are now safe in England

A Letter From the Front

The following is a letter received by Mr. J. B. Carr of Muscliow, formerly of Belleville, from his son Ernest, who left here with the 34th battery and is "doing his bit" with the First Canadian Contingent.

France, May 30th, 1915

Dearest Father and Mother.—I hope these few lines will find you enjoying the best of health, as it leaves me at present. We are having grand weather here at present, and are getting lots to eat. The boys are all well, but we have had a great number wounded. They are in the hospital in England and different places. Some were very bad cases. We have heard from some of them and they are getting along fine. I was wounded myself by a piece of shrapnel from a German shell. I have a good souvenir to carry for years, as it leaves a scar on my head. Well father, we have had a very rough time of it. We have been in some tight corners. Talk about war and hell, but this is where we get hell. I had a letter from a lady friend of mine in Bancroft which I was very much pleased to receive. I will, be glad when my brother Raymond reaches here, as I am longing to see him. The shells are dropping something fierce from the enemy. My horses, which I have had all through it so far, are looking fine. Perhaps you have seen in the paper where we did the good work. I will now close with love to all.

"HONEST DAN"

By Rev. Harold T. Roe, in Halifax Chronicle.

There was recently published in the Toronto Christian Guardian an article on the life and character of the Old Testament prophet Daniel. Among other things the author said:

"Daniel was the Premier and held the portfolio of the Minister of Finance under the reign of King Darius. Here he won a world reputation for integrity. In this twentieth century we should call him Honest Dan. He stood four square to every wind that blew. There was no stealing, no bribery, no corruption. Indeed he was put there, in the words of Scripture, so that "the King should have no damage." It is a potent sentence It ought to be the precaution of statesmen today that in the disposition of our war-supplies, our natural resources, our timber, our Crown lands, the King should have no damage."

It must surely be obvious to everybody that in the public and political life of Canada today there is an earnest need of a man like Honest Dan. Judging from the reports of the press Manitoba is the last word in political corruption. I am here reminded that the Halifax Herald some time ago on occasion to cease writing about politics, until T know something about them, and suggested the Hon. George Rogers as being a competent instructor. I am willing and in fact eager to learn, but really I would prefer an instructor with a higher class of credentials than the one suggested. That, however, by the way. The fact remains that Manitoba is corrupt, and neither party appears to be clear from guilt. The whole problem of political corruption, whether in Manitoba or in Canada generally, is one of the gravest in the country. Nor is it confined to the question of true Christian citizenship.

As professedly Christian citizens we are pledged to high and noble ideals. As patriotic citizens of the British Empire we also stand pledged to lofty principles. But the interests of the Empire men have acted nobly, bravely and willingly. They have gone to war, to fight, to bleed, to die for the sacred principles for which the Empire stands. Do we not realize that as Christian citizens professing allegiance to the Kingdom of God we also are engaged in war? That reverent scholar and preacher, Dr. Speers, said recently:

"Every soldier dying for his country on a European battlefield, every home giving up its blood and tears, is a summons and response to us Christian citizens who have accepted the Christ of the Cross, but not the Cross of the Christ."

"Christ is struggling day by day to win the world for which he died. The Churches must realise that they too are engaged in a great war. They talk about it sometimes. They even sing about it in hymns full of doubtful theology and curious geography. But do they realise that they really are at war—pledged to fight against all the forces of evil, corruption and unrighteousness? The Christian citizenship of Canada must wage war upon the political corruption of Canada. The Church of Christ must do what the English Nation has head to do—the Army is becoming the Nation and the Nation the Army. Methodism was a war machine in days when Wesley and Whitefield travelled the country in the great Evangelical Revival. The message of Jesus Christ to the Christian citizenship of Canada is the military word—MOBILIZE. Our valiant soldier boys have responded splendidly to the call of the Empire in her time of trial. It is up to the Christian citizens to respond with equal eagerness to the call of Canada in this hour of civic need. To grow careless of our duty as voters is to invite political disaster. It opens the door for greedy politicians to "graft" in the game for graft." The only solution, so far as I can see it, that will effectively advertise to all the great problem of political corruption is a true recognition of our duties and responsibilities as Christian citizens. The truths of Christianity are to be the truths for the street. If not they are valueless. The true preacher is always a politician. If not he has no message to his current age. Let parties perish—if only principles survive. Let every Christian citizen who cherishes, or should cherish, the ideals of the Kingdom of God, let him stand out clearly as an "Honest Dan," living, working, voting as that "the King shall have no damage." Loyalty to the Great King will purify the earthly kingdom. It is the only way.

TRENTON.

July 3rd.—There are few men, indeed, who can claim Trenton as their adopted city, their neighbors. We are prompted to write this for the reason that we have a desire to see if we can't peck at trouble before long, for making. We are alleged, slanderous stabbers, mentals. Personally we are not interested in mix-up, but trust that some of those who are, may notice this item and stop talking. We have trouble enough abroad without stirring up any at home.

Everything looks most promising for the big demonstration on Wednesday next, July 7th. Three Toronto visitations are to be present, which will make the contest much more interesting. Everyone in the district who can get away from business should Trentonward on the 7th day. Never has so much been attempted by any town in Canada on one day. The program, in skeleton, is as follows:—Tuesday evening, Band concert; Mr. Smith's Bells and Bells Band morning, Lacrosse match, swimming races, motor boat races; 2nd innings of lacrosse match, swimming races, motor boat races; 2nd innings of lacrosse match, swimming races, motor boat races; 2nd innings of

The Old Blind Fiddler.

Old newspapers give us many instances of men's names fitting their callings. Thus we have Last, a shoemaker of Exeter, and Treadway, who plied the same trade in Hammersmith. There was a Bristol schoolmaster named Bell, a Dorset clergyman, attorneys at law of Liverpool, must have been the butts of their fellow townsmen, while few could have a more appropriate name than the Primitive Methodist preacher River Jordan.—London Chronicle.

The Sun.

It has been stated that no one has ever seen the sun but sparsely; for nocentric shells envelope a nucleus of which we know nothing except that it may be infinitely hotter than the fervent furnace and that it must exert no more than nine-tenths of the solar mass. That nucleus is the real sun, forever hidden from us. The outermost of the enveloping shells is about 5,000 miles thick and is called the "chromosphere." It is a gaseous flood.—Exchange.

The Old Chinese Way.

In its wars with England and France in 1859-60 China was easily conquered and forced to a humiliating peace. The Peking Gazette, the official organ of the government, however, reported the following concerning that treaty of peace:

"As the western barbarians have admitted their wrongs and humbly solicited for peace, the emperor in his infinite goodness has granted their prayer and, moreover, has made them a present of a large sum of money (indemnity of the allies) in order to reimburse them for their losses in the war, so that they may not again be driven to murder and rapine."

It Was Funny.

"Something very funny happened the other day," said O'Beetle to his friend McFoo. "I was in a restaurant and found myself without car fare. Before I had a chance to worry over the thought of walking a long way home I met a man along comes Blinker, who writes jokes. I know him well, and I had the nerve to ask him to loan me a quarter. He told me he was glad to accommodate me and handed over the coin."

"Is that all?" asked McFoo.

"It is."

"Well, what's the joke?"

"Why, the funny part is that a man who writes jokes should have a whole quarter with him at one time."—New York Times.

History of Anatomy.

The way in which man is so "fearfully and wonderfully made" was largely a mystery to the ancients. It may be said that anatomical science was practically unknown prior to Aristotle, 384 B. C. Before that date nearly all that was known of anatomy was derived from the dissection of the lower animals. Aristotle did something in the way of science, but it was not until the time of the famous Alexandrian school, a century before and a century after the birth of Christ, that the anatomy of man began to be fairly understood. The Ptolemies were great patrons of science and were the first who enabled physicians freely to dissect the human body.

The Epiglottis.

A modern surgeon is dependent to a large extent upon automatically working valves for its efficiency, but this perfected valve was invented by nature and applied to the human body long before mankind began to dream of steam or electricity. We clothe this valve by the name of epiglottis, and most of us know something about it. It stands at the back of the mouth just where the air passage and food passage cross. The office of the epiglottis to close the windpipe automatically every time we swallow food, for if it did not every particle of food would choke us. This valve works with more automatic precision than any ever placed on an engine.

He Ate His Own Words.

Not long ago the plaintiff counsel for Sebel in Russia was the requirement that the libeler literally eat his own words. A man who published a small volume reflecting on the unlimited power of the sovereign was seized, tried in a summary way and condemned to consume one objectionable words. In one of the public streets the book was screened from its binding, the margins cut off, the leaves rolled up one by one and fed to the unfortunate author. A surgeon was in attendance to pronounce upon the number possible to give without endangering his life, but he is reported to have set the limit at something like 200.

THE BEAUTIFUL.

Man comes into life to seek and find his ideal—beauty, to search it, to win and increase it, to fight for it, to dare anything for it, counting death as nothing so long as the living eyes still turn to it. And fear, and dullness, and indolence, and appetite, which are no more than fear's four crippled brothers who make ambushes and creep by night, are against him, to delay him, to hold him off and befog and kill him in that quest.—H. G. Wells.

Mr. Snodgrass, Mr. Winkle and Tracy Tupman might toy with shotgun—to the imperilment of the keeper and his boy—but they never touched rod or line, and Mr. Pickwick himself, although represented on the first page of the original parts of the immortal history which bears his name as sliding when in punt, while a hooked fish pulls down the end of his rod, was not, I believe, once betrayed in the varied course of his adventures into a trial of Walton's "genial art."—Willis B. Allen in Scribner's Magazine.

Photographing Bullets.

Moving pictures have unlimited possibilities, particularly for the study of rapidly moving objects. An apparatus capable of making pictures at the rate of 100,000 per second has been made. With it seventy-two pictures of a revolver bullet were taken while the bullet was in the cross. Pictures of a bullet passing through a stick of wood showed a curious condition. The bullet did not completely through the thin stick and was well on its way before the wood gave any signs of distress; then some tiny splinters started out, following the bullet, the stick began to split, and after the bullet had passed through the splinters fell suddenly fell to pieces.—Chicago Herald.

Girls' Banks In Germany.

There is a kind of savings bank for girls in Germany which might well be imitated in this country. On the birth of a girl the parents can insure her in one of these banks for a sum that will be due the child on the completion of her eighteenth year a small capital to start in life with, to follow her profession or finish her studies or to serve as a dower in the event of her marriage. The annual premium is a fixed sum and comparatively light and scarcely proves a burden. It certainly must prove a great help to a girl when she arrives at the age of discretion to find herself mistress of a snug little fund of her own.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

SMALL DUTIES.

True, we can never be at peace till we have performed the highest duty of all till we have arisen and gone to our Father, but the performance of smaller duties—yes, even of the smallest—will do more to give us temporary repose, will act more as healthful anodynes, than the greatest joys that can come to us from any other quarter.—C. Macdonald.

Cabbie's Strategy.

"I," said the business man, "I never give up trying to collect that little $1.51 from Bilkins. You see, he is a petty big fellow, and he used to throw the collectors out every time they called.

"Then why didn't you employ a wrestling collector? He couldn't do that to you."

"That's what I thought, so I got one and sent her around, but she never got back.

"Why not?"

"He married her."—London Tit-Bits.

Planned, but Never Written.

Among those books which great writers have planned, but apparently never set pen to, are some notable "might have been" of literature.

"A writer who planned an article on the subject a few years ago, says the London Chronicle, finds among his papers a list of romances one in the shape of a "Life of Health." Sir Richard Burton contemplated a "History of the War in Flanders;" Disraeli intended "A History of Our Vernacular Literature;" William Makepeace Thackeray not only planned a "Life of Talleyrand," but it was advertised for publication in four bygone years, and Emile Zola contemplated writing a book on Honore de Balzac.

Coal as a Charm.

In bygone England coal played a prominent part in popular superstition. Not it was a very special kind of coal. It was found (or at any rate firmly believed to be found) under the roof of the church on one day of the year—midsummer eve. And to its finder it brought not only immunity from the "pinkeys and burning," but also in the case of a maiden dreams of her future husband. A versatile charm and, with plantains so prolific, yet rare. Sea coal—found occasionally really old, discolored spots, but never the faithful believed in them would have admitted that.—London Globe.

Curiosities of Flat Fish.

Flat fish are very peculiar creatures in many ways, and not only are they flat; they are narrow, and that particularly termed the back of a sole is really the front. The young these fishes are quite symmetrical, but as they grow older one of the eyes performs a migration feat; it begins to travel from one side of the head to the other until it joins its fellow eye. Then it is possible for the fish to lie down on one side at the bottom of the sea for the rest of its life. The fish which does not lose old it is easy to trace the channel along which the eye has passed. Among these curious fishes are the flounder, plaice, sole, turbot and dab.

In Every Drop of Water.

In every drop of water we drink and in every mouthful of air we breathe there is a movement and collision of particles so rapid in every second of time that it can only be expressed by four with nineteen naughts. If the movement of these particles were attended by friction or if the energy of their impact were transmitted into heat we should be scalded to death. But the heat as well as the particle is infinitesimal and is not perceptible.—John Burroughs in Yale Review.

Versatile.

It was at a reception, and the two friends had met.

"Do you know," said Ian, "it was as much as I could do to keep from laughing when Josephine was just telling us about her fiance being so versatile."

"Versatile, eh?" said the puzzled listener, smiling. "Well, dear, he is rather versatile, you know."

"Versatile!" cried Ina. "You know, Kathleen, he is a regular idiot."

"Yes," replied Kathleen, "but he's so many kinds of an idiot."—Detroit Free Press.

A Test of Friendship.

A gentleman tried the following peculiar way of probing the ties of friendship: He sent letters to twenty-four intimate friends asking for a loan of £1. Thirteen of the two dozen friends did not reply at all, five declined to lend the money, two promised to send it on the next day and did not do it, one wrote "lent to allings," and only three sent the full sum asked for. The supplicant and all the "refusers" he had written to are well off.—London Mail.

Held by Etiquette.

When Dom Pedro, former emperor of Brazil, was entertained at the White House he had been told by a confused senator that it would be proper for him to be the emperor, should be the last of the guests to depart.

The gentleman's wife, however, informed her other guests that they would be expected to follow, not precede, the royal party in leaving the house.

The result was that no one dared to go for fear of a breach of etiquette, but at 3 o'clock in the morning a tired woman protested illness, and the deadlock was broken.

Great is etiquette, but common sense is sometimes allowable.

Niagara Falls.

So far as our records go, Knowledge goes, the earliest printed reference to Niagara falls is in the record of a voyage of Jacques Cartier up the river in 1535. Its position was first mentioned by Champlain in a map attached to his voyages, published in 1613. The earliest description of the falls is that of Father Hennepin, who visited them in 1678. His account was published with a sketch giving a full view of the cataract. The name "Niagara" means "thunder of waters" and was given it by the Indians. Opinions differ as to the age of the falls, some placing it at 100,000 years, others as low as 20,000 years.—New York American.

PLEASURE AND PAIN.

How singular is the thing called pain, and how curiously related to pain, which might be thought to be the opposite, for they never come to a man together, and yet he who pursues either of them is generally compelled to take the other. They are two, and yet they grow together out of one head or stem.—Plato.

"Stand Fast in the Liberty Wherewith Christ Hath Made You Free."

Hypocritical Slaves of Mammon and Custom—Ignorant Slaves of Error and Superstition—Helpless Slaves of Sin and Weakness—The Liberty of the Sons of God"—Slaves to Fear—Slaves to Hatred—Slaves to Poverty—Slaves to Sinful Passions and Appetites — Only One Way to Liberty.

New York City, July 4. — Pastor Russell last night at the New York City Temple, W. 23rd St. and Broadway, took for his text, "The creature also shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the sons of God." (Romans 8:21). He declared that his text, one of the greatest promises for humanity, does not relate to mankind in general. True Christians are already set free, so far as their hearts, their minds, are concerned. Ideally Christians be severed, are a charity to-day as they have always been since the Master declared, "Fear not, little flock; it is the Father's good pleasure to give you the Kingdom."—Luke 12:32.

Not until these shall be perfected by the glorious change of the First Resurrection will the time come for delivering the groaning creation from its bondage. In other words, the world's blessing tarries until the completion of the saintly company gathered out of every nation and denomination during the past nineteen centuries, and called in the Bible "The Church of the First-borns," "The Very Elect," "The Bride, the Lamb's Wife," "The Body of Christ," etc.

Jehovah is a God of order. All His good purposes will be fulfilled in a most orderly manner. Six great days of 4,000 years each have already passed over us, according to the Scriptures, and have been periods of darkness under a reign of Sin and Death. During this time God has allowed our race to experience with sin and to note its bitter results—to experience also its endeavors to recover from sin and its penalty, death, with its concomitants of weariness and sorrow. The long schooling of six thousand years is not to be in vain. Even now that "the wages of sin is death" is not to be lost. Mankeind is to be left to destruction, but is to be recovered. Earth's billions, lying as unconscious in death in the brute, are divided into two subjects of Divine interest, sympathy and provision. In the Seventh Thousand-Year Day, earth's great Sabbath, assistance will come to our race.

According to the Divine Program, Christ, who is the great King over all the earth, and who great Mediatorial Priest, to uplift all the willing and obedient. He will be the Antitype of Melchisedec, who was a priest upon his throne. If the Divine Purpose had merely been that the Lord Jesus Christ should do this work alone, there would have been no need of coming into the world nineteen centuries ago to die; for He could have accomplished the entire work at any time. Now, at the beginning of the seventh thousand years, He could have died for mankind's sins, thus redeeming all from the curse that came through Adam; and then, risen from the dead and glorified with the Father's power, He could at once have begun His great work of setting free the prisoners of Sin and Death.

But the Heavenly Father had a better Plan. He had purposed the selecting of a worthy few from amongst men, to be associated with our Lord Jesus in His Kingship and His priestly office. God has laid a broad foundation for a great work for humanity, in providing not only the necessary kings and priests for the Millennial Kingdom, but also valuable experiences for mankind through the reign of Sin and Death and, through human sorrow, to overcome these. By now all should be satisfied that His everlasting must come as a gift from God.

During Messiah's thousand-year Reign the groaning creation will be delivered from bondage into full liberty, proper to sons of God. Behold what terrible bondages are upon mankind! Look at their ignorance, their superstition, their fears, their weaknesses, mental, moral, psychical, and the sum of these unavoidable death. Consider the hundreds of millions asleep in the graves, and the insistance, and the insistance of the tomb. Their awakening from death will not be the fulfilment of this prophecy of resurrection. It will mean much more—the uplifting of mind and body to all that was lost in Adam and redeemed at Calvary.

This does not signify universal salvation, except in that the Bible promises that "as all in Adam die, even so all in Christ shall it made alive, every man in his own order"—class. (1 Corinthians 15:22, 23.) The giving to all mankind the full opportunities of the Millennial-Kingdom will fulfil God's promise, "Those who shall intelligently refuse God's gift of everlasting life, by refusing His reasonable requirements, shall die the Second Death, but it is not at the conclusion of the Millennium that all shall have gone to Calvary. The Master's Kingdom will not destroy God's family and will be greatest on the Mountain of Zion, and the nations of God.—Revelation 21:4; 22:3.

Whatever we should understand about God has promised of Restitution times, it is clear that the groaning creation is groaning, and still more important than Christians recognize the present time when has already come 19 times. (Galatians 5:1.) In not attempting to refer to the great Dark Ages, Catholic and Protestant, noted by the Statistics as 400,000,000 Christians. Alas, sad! That great mass is deceived according to Bible and according and their own confessions, they have neither lot, nor part in the Church which is the body of Christ.

This great mass is well represented by the Papacy of Europe serving for commercialism, the one to obtain, and the other to hold, the terror of power, and access to the world's wealth. Salata there unto Protestantism as all the great sects and their own confessions, they have neither lot, nor part in the Church which is the body of Christ.

This great mass is well represented by the Papacy of Europe serving for commercialism, the one to obtain, and the other to hold, the terror of power, and access to the world's wealth. Salata there unto Protestantism as all the great sects and their own confessions, they have neither lot, nor part in the Church which is the body of Christ.

Where lies the responsibility for present conditions—that the millions are in darkness, that Satan, the devils, each army deceived into thinking that they are serving God, fighting for God and righteousness? We believe that the responsibility rests upon the clergy, the churches of all denominations, and especially close to the Protestant sects, which claim the most knowledge and which by assume great responsibility in calling themselves the light of the world, setting themselves above their fellows, styled the laity.

These ministers of the civilized world, more than a quarter of a million, have taken a position of favored class of humanity. The majority of them have much above the average of education, and have above the average of time for study and reading. How are they using these wonderful opportunities and privileges, and the influence which position and prestige and which is accentuated by the superstition of the masses?

I freely acknowledge that they are not responsible to us, but it is written that "to his own Master each servant stands or falls." It is quite evident, however, that we remember the Master's words, "Out of thine own mouth will I judge thee, thou wicked and slothful servant." (Luke 19:22.) What a fearful responsibility! A wealthy class of professed ministers of God and Christ who, financially and in other respects, opportunities for emancipating the people from the slavery of ignorance, superstition and error, are using them to promote mental bondage!

The clergy neglect their opportunities for educating the people to a proper conception of God and His Plan, and they have fostered the fallacy that the kingdoms of the world are now the Kingdom of God, and that its king is serving the Lord. They have fostered the fallacy of a false patriotism that "the earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof," whereas the fact is that the children of men; and that national barriers and selfishness are national aggressiveness are contrary to the rights of man. The clergy of each country, supported by their governments, have in turn upheld these governments; and that if they not told the people that the voice of the emperor or the king is the voice of God, they constantly not disabused them of that idea, which the clergy of past generations inculcated.

Now that the war has come, and the misinformed people are fighting for their errors and misconceptions, what is the attitude of the clergy? Are they the conviction of the governments, are they not all encouraging the people in the conviction which they receive their pay? Are they not intent upon encouraging the mouthpieces of the governments and stirring up the people to war? Do we not hear the leading clergy of Berlin of the German soldiers, "God with us"? Do we not hear the head of the Archbishop of Canterbury, in England, in encouraging the British soldiers to go forth to the fighting in a holy war for God? The Archbishop of Canterbury is charged with urging the boys and the girls of Great Britain to marry early and have larger families, because, that there may be more such Christian soldiers for the battle-fields of Europe.

Policy and sycophancy are written all over the face of the Christendom falsely called Christendom—Christ's Kingdom. These are not Christ's ambassadors, but they are the ministers, if we avail judge by the Saviour's statements, His servants (ye are to whom ye render service"—whether God or Mammon. Are they not deceived by Satan—not directly involved in the war are praying, God urging the people to pray, to God to stop the war; but we hear no suggestion, from any quarter, of prayer addressed to God, asking to show the people the brotherhood of the human family and the sin of murder, as now or committed by commands of kings, emperors, or otherwise. Where is the courage? Where is the moral stamina? It is lacking. Why? Because they are not Christians.

Christ's true followers are courageous. Jesus refers to them as the overcomers, not sycophants; as lovers of peace, who overcome not with carnal weapons. His followers must necessarily, nevertheless, be true patriots, citizens of their country, not afraid to speak the truth and not afraid to die for their country. What a power a quarter of a million professed ministers of Christ might be if they stirred up the mind of God's people, lifted up their voices, and even now confessed for seriously they

As a result, nearly all ministers will say: "We do not believe in the doctrine of eternal torture. We would not think of consigning our bodies; we do not know any human being so depraved that he would wish to torture his fellow-creatures everlastingly. We do not believe that God would do so." We doubt whether any devil would have the heart to torture "in the flames." Asked why they support creeds which so teach, and why they make such inference to the public, some reply, "It is required of us by our denominations." Others say they prefer to tell the truth about the Love of God and His arrangement for the blessing of the non-elect during the Times of Restitution. (Acts 3:19-21.) But we are bound hand and foot. Our support and our honor amongst men depend upon our adherence to this doctrine. If we could see a way out of the difficulty, we would be glad to be relieved.

Others answer that they give their best instructions, that the public denomination takes the responsibility for its creed and for its teachers. Others answer that the public Higher Critics and Evolutionists, who believe they must not tell the people their heart sentiments; but that they hope that soon public sentiment will grow in the inference of the Bible, and that the day will come when we shall be relieved of it, and, if necessary, a Godless morality.

Such bartering of the honor of the Almighty for honor of men and an idol of gold is very difficult to understand as that of Judas, who sold his Lord for thirty pieces of silver. He seared are the consciences of these educated men that they seem not to realize the blasphemy in their very serious of sins; and that directly or indirectly giving to the people that the God of all grace, the Father of mercies, is roasting 999 out of every 1000 of His children in a fiery blasphemy that could be concocted. How much influenced by the desire to please brotherhoods we know not, but we do know that these terrible slanders of God are the chief stumbling-block which Satan has set in the way of the people.

And does not the new share this responsibility? Has it no meaning in its name? Has it not the claim that they have subscribed to a creed that blasphemes God's holy name, foully misrepresents His character, and throws an utterly false light on the Bible? Has it sufficient that "time should say, "We no longer believe the story to be so," but their names on the rolls, their presence at church and their support of the creed add to the upkeep of these creeds and their clerical, defenders constitute a responsibility for the blood of souls? In the esteem of all honest men and angels? Is it not time that intelligent people halt between creeds of hypocrisy and one of honesty? How long will they bow down before creed idols more horrible than any worshiped by the heathen?

While mankind is celebrating today the birth of this great nation, which stands for liberty, freedom, emancipation from the thralldom of church and state, let us endeavor to make fresh resolutions that we will stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ makes free, and be His servants, loyal, faithful unto death, hoping to receive the Crown of Life, which Jadeth not away.

As a result, nearly all ministers will say: "We do not believe in the doctrine of eternal torture. We would not think of consigning our bodies; we do not know any human being so depraved that he would wish to torture his fellow-creatures everlastingly. We do not believe that God would do so." We doubt whether any devil would have the heart to torture "in the flames." Asked why they support creeds which so teach, and why they make such inference to the public, some reply, "It is required of us by our denominations." Others say they prefer to tell the truth about the Love of God and His arrangement for the blessing of the non-elect during the Times of Restitution. (Acts 3:19-21.) But we are bound hand and foot. Our support and our honor amongst men depend upon our adherence to this doctrine. If we could see a way out of the difficulty, we would be glad to be relieved.

Others answer that they give their best instructions, that the public denomination takes the responsibility for its creed and for its teachers. Others answer that the public Higher Critics and Evolutionists, who believe they must not tell the people their heart sentiments; but that they hope that soon public sentiment will grow in the inference of the Bible, and that the day will come when we shall be relieved of it, and, if necessary, a Godless morality.

Such bartering of the honor of the Almighty for honor of men and an idol of gold is very difficult to understand as that of Judas, who sold his Lord for thirty pieces of silver. He seared are the consciences of these educated men that they seem not to realize the blasphemy in their very serious of sins; and that directly or indirectly giving to the people that the God of all grace, the Father of mercies, is roasting 999 out of every 1000 of His children in a fiery blasphemy that could be concocted. How much influenced by the desire to please brotherhoods we know not, but we do know that these terrible slanders of God are the chief stumbling-block which Satan has set in the way of the people.

And does not the new share this responsibility? Has it no meaning in its name? Has it not the claim that they have subscribed to a creed that blasphemes God's holy name, foully misrepresents His character, and throws an utterly false light on the Bible? Has it sufficient that "time should say, "We no longer believe the story to be so," but their names on the rolls, their presence at church and their support of the creed add to the upkeep of these creeds and their clerical, defenders constitute a responsibility for the blood of souls? In the esteem of all honest men and angels? Is it not time that intelligent people halt between creeds of hypocrisy and one of honesty? How long will they bow down before creed idols more horrible than any worshiped by the heathen?

While mankind is celebrating today the birth of this great nation, which stands for liberty, freedom, emancipation from the thralldom of church and state, let us endeavor to make fresh resolutions that we will stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ makes free, and be His servants, loyal, faithful unto death, hoping to receive the Crown of Life, which Jadeth not away.

L. Wainwright Reported Killed

News has reached Belleville that Leslie Wainwright, formerly employed at the Ontario School for the Deaf here, has been killed in action in France or Belgium. The information came in a letter written on the firing line by one of his friends. Leslie was in the cycle corps.

He had come out to Canada from England three or four years ago, it was only 19 or 20 years of age and was single. He was employed at the O.S.D. for some time, and left about two years ago. He then was engaged in farming in Hillier. Shortly after the outbreak of war he enlisted as a cyclist.

While resident here he was a member of the Y.M.C.A. He had no relatives in Canada but formed many friendships.

The Fifteenth recruits include a number of Grand Trunk men, a chauffeur and mechanics in other lines.

Ernest Geen and Herb. W. Weller who left in the ranks of the 21st battalion, have been granted their lieutenancies in the Fifteenth Regiment. These Belleville boys were so anxious to serve that they went with the 21st Battalion rather than wait for commissions in the third contingent.

All N.C.O's and men visiting this district or any district will be compelled to show their passes which should be properly signed by the O.C. commanding their units. If visiting soldiers have not these passes in their possession they are to be confined and their cases reported to Barriefield.

By special decree of His Imperial Majesty, the Czar of Russia, permission is given to Russian subjects—civil servants and territorials (N.C.O's and men only) to enlist with the Canadian overseas contingent. All recruiting officers are to make sure in every case of the identity of every Russian applicant proposing to enlist by communicating with the Imperial Russian Consulate at Montreal.

Demise of Late R. B. Chadwick Deeply Deplored

From The Edmonton Journal we quote the following references to the late R. B. Chadwick whose untimely demise has occasioned wide-spread grief in the western capital:—

"Alberta has cause to remember for a very long time the work which the late Mr. R. B. Chadwick did for it. Many a boy and girl now on the way to be as fine men and women have him to thank for a good start in life. In a large variety of ways he was an active and valuable citizen of Edmonton; his friends and admirers were legion; his reputation as a student of child problems was not confined to this continent. All too frequently we are called upon to deplore the cutting off of careers that seemed full of immense promise, but it is doubtful if ever in the history of the community at least death has occasioned grief so universal and so poignant as in the case of Mr. Chadwick.

"The body of the late R. B. Chadwick, who died Friday night was taken east Sunday night over the C.N.R. to Belleville, Ont., his old home, where it will be interred. Before being taken on to the depot, a funeral service was held at Connelly & McKinley's establishment, which was attended by several prominent citizens, including His Honor Lieut.-Gov. Bulpre. The Boy Scouts, of which Mr. Chadwick was at one time district commissioner, attended in a body."

It will Cure a Cold.—Colds are the commonest ailments of mankind and if neglected may lead to serious conditions. Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil will relieve the bronchial passages of inflamation speedily and thoroughly and will strengthen them against subsequent attack. And as it eases the inflamation it will stop the cough because it allays all irritation in the throat. Try it and prove it.

COPENHAGEN, July 6.—Five Swedish vessels were seized on Sunday in the Baltic Sea and taken to Swinemunde.

FRENCH PEOPLE TURN OVER GOLD TO THE GOVERNMENT

PARIS, July 6.—The Bank of France has been compelled to designate six receiving tellers to take the gold offered in exchange for notes so heavy is the response to th invitation to the public to turn in its private hoards of gold so as to strengthen the national reserve.

GOOD HOPES THAT WARSAW WILL BE HELD.

LONDON, July 6.—The Petrograd correspondents of the London morning papers are optimistic regarding the situation on the fighting front. The correspondent of the Times says no apprehension is entertained as to the fate of Warsaw in the struggle, for the city bids fair to be protected even if the Germans should reach Ivangorod this would not necessarily involve the surrender of Warsaw.

MORGAN'S ASSAILANT ATTEMPTS SUICIDE.

GLEN COVE, N.Y., July 6.—Frank Holt, J. P. Morgan's assailant, attempted suicide at midnight in his cell in the Nassau County jail by trying to cut open the artery in his left wrist with a lead pencil. The attempt was unsuccessful, though Holt lost a considerable quantity of blood before it was discovered.

TURKISH CASUALTIES 20,000

LONDON, July 6.—The total Turkish casualties in the Dardanelles operations between June 28 and July 2 were 5150 men killed and 15,000 wounded, according to an announcement made last night by the British official press bureau.

ITALIAN FORCES MARCHING IN STRENGTH UPON PLAVA.

GENEVA, Switzerland, July 6.—Severe fighting is in progress on the plateau of Cornico and Doberdo between the Italians and the Austro-Hungarians, according to advices received here today from Innsbruck. The Austrians continue to cast down boulders and to blow up hidden rock galleries on the advancing Italian mountaineers.

A large Italian army is reported to be marching on Plava from western Goritz and to be methodically driving back the Austrians despite severe resistance.

An Austrian aeroplane carrying a pilot and an observer, fell down a precipice on the spur of Monte Nero on Saturday and was smashed. It was many hours before the bodies of the two aviators could be reached.

Orangemen and Music

Although Toronto Orangemen have taken the stand that they will not give music on July 12th at the Queen City Presbyterian but rather play patriotic music the Orangemen who are to celebrate in Belleville will have no such restriction resting upon them.

A Grand Lodge officer of Ontario West when asked as to the attitude of the local Orange men said that the executive had not taken any action in the matter. In the county demonstrations in the past in Ontario East, the officer said, the custom had been not to play "party" music. Of course in instances, some bands or musicians had struck up a party air but this was not general. So that not having had party airs on their official program, the Orangemen of Ontario East do not have to take the stand that Toronto has taken.

WELCOME TO NEW PASTOR

Tabernacle Church Societies Extended Greetings Last Evening

The Rev. S. C. Moore, the new pastor of the Tabernacle Methodist church and Mrs. Moore were welcomed to their charge at a public reception in the church parlors last evening. Seated on the platform were representatives of the various church organizations. In the body of the Sunday school room were a large number of the members and adherents of the church.

Rev. Amos Campbell occupied the chair in a most graceful and satisfactory manner. The musical program consisted of vocal solos by Mrs. Grant and Mrs. Singer and piano selections by Mrs. Duff.

On behalf of the various church societies, a welcome was extended to Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Moore.

Superannuated ministers —Rev. A Campbell

Ladies' Aid—Mrs. James McCurdy W.M.S.—Mrs. A. Campbell

Mothers' Classes—S. E. Haight

Alpha Club—A. W. Rowlands

Mission Band—Miss Lulu Dyer and Miss Laura Bell

Choir—Mrs. James Grant

Sunday School—J. E. Walmsley

The Rev. S. C. Moore in his reply of appreciation of the welcome accorded Mrs. Moore and himself, said that he felt that the church had an active organization. He did not doubt the sincerity of the welcome and it indicated to him a field of wide extent. He hoped to fill the place and was encouraged from the start by the gracious manner of reception.

Ten cents a pound added to the cost of tea means just one twentieth part of a cent per cup. This tiny fraction of a cent means all the difference between a delicious and dissatisfaction Salada tea costs slightly more than ordinary tea but is all clean, fresh leaves in their most perfect form. Ordinary tea contains doubtful constituents and, besides, never has that unique Salada flavour.

...Trial is inexpensive.—To those who suffer from dyspepsia, indigestion, rheumatism or any ailment arising from derangement of the digestive system, a trial of Parmelee's Vegetable Pills is recommended, should the sufferer be unacquainted with them. The trial will be inexpensive and the result will be another customer for this excellent medicine. So effective is their action that many cures can certainly be traced to their use where other pills have proved ineffective.

BELLEVILLE BOYS SAW ENGINEERS WIPE OUT GERMAN COMPANY

Capt. O'Flynn Says Saxons Tired of War--Local Officers Only Two Left of Original Company -French Woman's Sacrifice in Cause of Freedom--Belleville Boys in Good Spirits--Farewell With Old Company Sergeant Major.

Capt. O'Flynn received letters from Captain O'Flynn yesterday in which he among other things made the following references.

"We have been here in the trenches since June 10th and do not know how we will be relieved, it will not be for a couple of days at least. Our trenches are very comfortable here now, having been dried out and if it were not for the fact that our friend "Fritz" occasionally sends over a shell or bullet we would be quite comfortable here. It is disconcerting to say the least however when one of their big ones burst and shakes the earth for some hundreds of yards and throws dirt and pieces of shell for some distance. In a properly constructed trench with a good parapet and traverse, if one keeps his head down the effect of these shells is fairly local and unless they drop one right in the trench you are comparatively safe. It is not a comfortable feeling however to have the big fellows bursting around and wondering where the next one is going to drop.

Thoughts of Belleville.

"The Belleville boys are all well in good spirits, and doing good work and are going to see the game through and yet a very far away look does occasionally come in their eyes, their minds must return to dear old Belleville and there is a general feeling that when the sporter calls, the last stop is Belleville, no one will be sorry.

"It is a great war and although the man who is unable to see it, and play his small part, is unfortunate, yet a little of this goes a long way. It has just turned 5 a.m. and I have been on duty for about an hour. It begins to break here about 2.15, and it remains light until 9 p.m. It is much easier now than it was formerly in the early stages of our life here. It was dark then from 6 p.m. to 6 a.m. while now night is only between five and six hrs. long."

Only Two Officers of Company Left.

In a second letter written on the 19th of June he said—

"We have been out of the trenches now two days and I should have written earlier but have been very busy and when I had a break I would lie down and rest. We had a hard week in the trenches but fortunately I was spared once again. Poor Charlie Ackerman was hit so that Dick and I are the only officers left of the old company. We are both well. The Belleville boys are well except Milton Vandervoort and Charlie Gibson who were wounded, neither of them seriously. They will both likely get a few weeks. I am writing both their parents.

Exploding a Mine.

"Our engineers exploded a mine before the Canadians attacked and I never expect to see such another sight. The earth was thrown up in the air and fell some hundreds of yards away. It was horrible whether it was imagination or not, I swear I could see numerous bodies hurled through the air. I was informed by some German prisoners that there was a complete company 240 strong wiped out by the explosion. After the explosion the first battalion charged across and took the German trench.

Saxon Prisoners Had Enough of War.

"I was detailed to take charge of the prisoners and it was very interesting. The poor fellows were frightened half to death. One poor chap told me (through an interpreter) that they had been told that the English would cut their throats and also told me the Germans had informed him that they had taken three million (3,000,000) prisoners when that Russian fortress with the unpronounceable name (Przemysl) fell. They were Saxons and had quite enough of the war. They said all the soldiers at the front wanted peace.

Woman's Sacrifice In War for Freedom

"We have a fine billet here and are quite comfortable. The poor woman who lives here has had one son killed, one badly wounded and two are prisoners in Germany. She has certainly given her all for her country. I felt very sorry for her when she told me her story but she is only one of thousands of women in France who have given their whole families to fight for freedom.

"I received your parcel and also one I think came from Mrs. C. J. Bowell although there is no card in it. It is very kind of her to remember me in this way.

Parting With Sergeant Major.

"Poor old Flinton, my company sergeant major, broke his ankle yesterday and the poor chap cried when we were separated. We have been together since the start, this is our first separation. He has been a loyal friend and a wonderful help to me. I was glad in a way to see him go. He is no longer a young man, but is 45 yrs old and the strain was telling on him He is a veteran of Egypt, Crete and South Africa and has been in the army 25 years."

The letter contained many personal allusions and greetings to many of the's personal friends in Belleville. He seems in good spirits and throughout his whole letter shows good form and no discouragement.

Message From Capt. R. D. Ponton.

A card was also received from Captain Ponton dated 19th of June addressed to Mr. O'Flynn. In it he said that Captain O'Flynn was looking fine and in the best of health and that Lieut. Hay had just returned from a hard week's fighting, one of the heaviest engagements, excepting Ypres, they had been in. He also said he saw Ed. Gerry every day in the trenches and both were feeling fine. This card was written before Captain Ponton was affected with the gas and his many friends are certainly hoping that he soon will be restored to the splendid health he had when he wrote the card on the 19th of June.

Police on Trail of Soldier

The police of Kingston and Belleville are searching for an alleged deserter from Kingston, Private Foster, and a girl fifteen years of age, from Forest Mills, whom he is said to have run away with. Yesterday two officers from Kingston arrived in Belleville on the trail of the pair. They first traced them to Point Anne and came up to the city to look up the threads. The local police assisted in the search and struck the trail near Bershimer avenue. Then a happy discovery was made. A young delivery man having occasion to go into a field near Bershimer Avenue, there found a uniform of khaki

A letter found in the pocket is believed to have been written by the girl accompanying the soldier.

The officers lost all the traces near the station and it is believed the pair escaped westward.

Foster is said to be about 25 years of age.

If the allegations are true, there may be several charges laid, and abduction brought against the soldier.

TUESDAY, JULY 6, 1915.

AT THE DARDANELLES.

Reports of the operations in the Dardanelles come so infrequently that naturally the public may feel somewhat disturbed over the situation, and be inclined to be impatient on account of the slowness of the progress made. The latest report, which we have seen, from Sir Ian Hamilton, stated that the three days' battle, in the first week of May, showed that the only way of carrying the position was by the slow methods of trench warfare. The gains reported on the Gallipoli Peninsula look very small when compared with the operations in France and Flanders, where the distances would have to be multiplied many times to obtain the same effective results, but they re present a material advance, when the Allied forces are within a comparatively few miles of victory.

There are, however, compelling reasons why the operations in the Dardanelles should not be prolonged. They are costing a large number of men, and as an English writer points out, for the purpose of this war, the loss of ten Turks is not a satisfactory equivalent for the loss of one British, Australian or French soldier. "A war of attrition against the Turks is emphatically what no one wants here for even our success it would weaken us much more than it would injure the Germans."

But there is another reason given by the Manchester Guardian why a long campaign is fraught with danger. The defence has now the assistance of at least two submarines. One, operating at the Black Sea end of the Straits, has recently sunk a Russian armored ship; the other has sunk two British battleships in two days. In other words, the enemy's campaign on sea is making very much faster progress than ours on land.

"It is well," says the Guardian, "that the facts should be faced at once. Time is not on our side in this Dardanelles campaign. The German submarine has presumably entered the Mediterranean through the Straits of Gibraltar, and there is no reason to suppose that where one submarine has come others may not follow. The narrow enclosed waters of the Aegean are ideal for the operations of these craft. They will have no difficulties in obtaining supplies and concealment is easy. Prolonged operations therefore may inflict losses on the fleet for which even the forcing of the Straits would be an unequal compensation. Two conclusions are forced upon us. It is now the first interest of the Allies that the Dardanelles operations should be forced to a satisfactory conclusion, and it is to be hoped that the Italians may be able to spare a stiff expeditionary force to take part in them, or, at any rate, to assist by engaging the Turks elsewhere. Secondly, the protection against the submarine, if there is one, is obviously still in the brain of inventors. It must be got out."

The clearing of the Straits at the Dardanelles becomes more imperative now that Russia requires more munitions if she is to free her position and make any headway against the enemy.

The Rev. L. Maclean Watt, of Edinburgh, the well-known preacher and writer, has been describing some of his experiences at the front. He illustrated the heroism of the men by the story of a sorely wounded Gordon with whom he communicated. "Ah, well," replied the Gordon, "it's all in the day's work, and we are not here on holiday, ye ken." "And do you expect to win?" the Gordon looked at him with astonished eyes, and said—"That's what we are here for." Mr. Watt was struck with the wonderful organization of the Army in all its departments. From the base at Havre 300,000 loaves are despatched to the front every day. Mr. Watt mentioned a Cambridge B.A. whose father was a K.C. in London, and who himself owned a yacht, who was working in the humble capacity of cook. He looked a steak for Mr. Watt, which was "like a razor strop!"

Mr. Watt found a good deal of humor in the letter writing experiences of the soldiers. They were eager to write, but not always fluent. There was one man whom he watched puzzling his brain for an opening, and who did not get beyond the address. His Christian name was William, and Mr. Watt suggested that he should write. "I am quite well, and on my way to have a bang at my namesake, Bill." The soldier said it was the very thing he wanted to say, and other men of the name of Bill took the epistle as a model.

There were other letter writers who were imaginative, like the man who wrote: "I am standing up to my knees in seven feet of mud." The soldiers have apparently a fondness for doleful music, and Mr. Watt said that after a concert of jolly songs a Scotsman rose, and in the most lugubrious tones sang, "Why left I my Hame?"

Do you realize how hard water is when a boat sails through it at full speed? asks Youth's Companion. Water passing at fifty miles an hour is much denser than liquid we are accustomed to bathe in. If you put your arm overboard from a hydroplane, running fifty miles an hour, and strike a wave crest, the probability is that you will break your arm or wrist, because at that speed the water has not time to give, or even to chang shape, and striking it is like striking so much metal.

If a swordsman should enter one of the great hydraulic arris, where a stream of water, under enormous head, is used to wash down hillsides, and attempt to cut into one of these streams, his sword would fly in pieces without being able to penetrate the water. The stream is like a bar of iron.

The Scott Act continues to win the favor of the temperance people of Ontario. Perth is the latest County to vote for the Canada Temperance Act. Huron and Peel both adopted it last year, and the vote in Perth is regarded as "a significant victory for the prohibition forces."

A CANADIAN "SONG OF HATE."

By William Henry Taylor, author of "Canadian Seasons."

The Beaver is an animal pre-eminent for brains;
For industry and patient pluck, above the rest
he reigns.
He is the emblem of our land—the last, the best,
Our God's Own Garden of the West, the School of Liberty;
The Beaver has the artist power, to change, and take a part
In world-wide war, and show the foe he has a lion's heart.
The superbrunt Prussian sneered, when he the Beaver's met,
But less he'll sneer, when more he meets, to his black soul's regret.
When the Beavers build a dam they gnaw the trees until they fall,
Then float them down the stream and build a scientific wall;
So, Beaver Boys at Langemarck built a dam which "saved the day."
They hewed and stayed the foe so well, that heaps on heaps they lay.
Yes, and they gave their thousands, too, to guard that river's shore—
The story of that human dam will live for evermore;
Not Albuera's famous fight, nor Balaclava's charge,
Nor e'en Thermopylæ itself, will read more bold and large.
The polecat is a hated beast, his German name is "skunk,"
Among the other animals his breed has always stunk:
This helicat dines on rotten eggs, a chicken
thief is he:
He robbed the Belgian coasts to show he came from Germany.
This kultured German polecat knows the art of showing hate,
By calling Beaver odious names, most inappropriate;
He calls the Beaver Brand of men the vile Canadian "rats."
But what's a name? He tasted steel when met by Princess Pats.
Not satisfied with submarine, balloon, and bomb, and shell,
These Huns now use a deadly gas, imported straight from hell;
The Devil feared his eldest son, the Kaiser, could not win
By baby-killing tactics, so he taught him how to sin
Against the morals of the worst, the vilest of vile
Assasins of the human race, whose names our tongues defile;
When Germans failed in open filed, on sea, on in the trench,
They gave a teufelfest of gas—their polecat's body stench.
Huns crucify in flesh again, the Man of Calvary,
They nail our wounded to His Cross, with fiendish cruelty;
By God's right hand! Sir Kaiser! you shall taste
a cup of woe;
Canadian blood is boiling o'er, and you its wrath shall know;
Your "Songs of Hate," as well as deeds, your worthless Iron Cross,
Make you of Butcher Pharisees, the Hohenzollern Boss; Forever off the Irish coast will sirens moan with hate,
And from selpulchre caves bewail the Lusitania's fate.

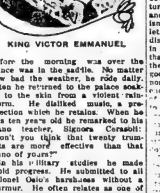
THE ITALIAN KING NO PLEASURE SEEKER

From Childhood King Victor Emanuel Took a Stern View of His Responsibilities as Ruler

The action of King Victor Emanuel of Italy in deciding to share his soldiers' hardships when his country plunged into the war was received with the wildest enthusiasm and the House of Savoy was never more popular than to-day. The king is a gallant horseman and this is a source of gratification to the Italians, for their cavalry is not surpassed anywhere in the world. In person King Victor Emmanuel is thoroughly Italian. His short, powerful figure, sweeping moustachios and cast of countenance are typical of the general, often observed throughout Italy. He is fairer, however, than most of his people, brown, and blue-eyed.

"Certainly King Victor Emmanuel is the right man in the right place," the King Italy needs in this supreme moment," said the poet Gabriele d'Annunzio in an interview with the monarch. "It would be impossible to imagine a better informed man," he continued. "On hearing him speak one might almost receive the impression at one moment that he was in Paris conversing with a statesman thoroughly conversant with the subject from the French viewpoint; at others, in Berlin, talking with a Minister of the German Emperor; or in London, in Vienna or Petrograd. The Italian Sovereign's Eastern Mediterranean are so familiar to him that he might have lived there all his life. His knowledge of Italy is encyclopedic and only surpassed by his unpretentious modesty, which puts one completely at ease."

When the King was a child he suffered so much from rickets that he could not walk upstairs and had to be carried. Rarely has a sovereign crown prince been seen. King Humbert placed him under a stern military discipline, which he put the little prince through a most rigorous course. He slept always in a cold room and took a cold bath at daybreak. Then came a frugal breakfast. Lessons followed, with special emphasis on those he disliked most.



KING VICTOR EMMANUEL

Before the morning was over the prince was in the saddle. No matter how bad the weather, he rode daily. Often he returned from these soaked to the skin from a violent rainstorm. He disliked music, a predilection which he retains. When he was ten years old he remarked to his piano teacher, Signor Sgambati: "Don't you think that twenty trumpets are more effective than that piano of yours?"

In his military studies he made rapid progress. He submitted to old Colonel Osio's harshness without a murmur. He often relates as one of the pleasantest memories of his life, his impressions when King Humbert first entrusted to him the command of a company of foot, at the annual review of the Roman garrison. The excitement interfered so greatly with my power of sight," he once said, "that I could not distinguish the officers in the cheering crowd were my dentist and my professor of mathematics."

Then a few years later he received the command of the army corps at Naples. Hopelessly and light headed Neapolitan society looked forward to a world-of-new prince and rejoiced; but it soon discovered its mistake. The Prince, scorning pleasure, devoted himself exclusively to his profession and left his barracks only to go straight back to the Capodimonte Palace, where he spent his spare time in perfecting himself in the study of military tactics. Then on July 29, 1900, his father was assassinated at Monza by the anarchist Bresci. The son stepped into the gap immediately. When the Prime Minister informed him that it would be should be addressed to the people and gave a copy to the King, Victor Emmanuel told the Minister that he had already written the proclamation himself.

The King and Queen lead a very simple life when they visit the more part. The King does not spend much on his table and the Italians often criticize him for it. He pays his justices to the country. What he does save on his table the King practically spends on charity for he is the leader in every good cause.

As an illustration of his actions in an emergency an incident of the Calabrian earthquake of 1908 may be cited. So freely did he expose himself that someone ventured to remonstrate with him.

"Why run thus...unnecessary risks?" the courtier began.

"It is my trade," answered the King grimly.

Few products in household use to-day have bridged the gap from the primitive things of sixty years ago as has

CONVICTS AT WORK FOR BRITISH ARMY

Under the Stimulus of Patriotism Idleness Has Almost Entirely Disappeared

Patriotism in prison sounds a paradox, but that it is to be found there, in no small degree, is testified from many quarters and is responsible especially in many reports which have been received at the British Home Office.

Far away from the rush and bustle of life, with little or no knowledge of what is happening in the outside world, the criminal, paying the penalty for his crime, might be thought to be the one person in the world not affected by the horrors and excitement of war or by the call to the nation to face the crisis with a spirit of heroism. He has his bodily wants attended to, his regular routine to perform, and anybody who is acquainted with prison life knows that in the vast majority of cases the chief complaint of the authorities is of the deliberate idleness of prisoners. But since the war started all that has been changed. The prisoners are keenly interested in the war and are allowed to hear it once a week, usually from the chaplain after morning service on Sunday, some account of what is being done by the navy and army, in which many of them have relations fighting for their country.

The work in British prisons is almost entirely confined to the manufacture of articles for Government Departments. The labor conditions and the regulations which would inevitably arise, make it impossible to engage men to work which interferes with the occupation of the working classes outside. Since the war began the work of the prisoners has been devoted very largely to the manufacture of articles required for the navy and the army, and there the patriotism of the convicts has found an outlet. Idleness has almost completely disappeared. The men and women in the prisons have worked harder than they have ever done before and they have done so with the greatest will. The output during the short hours of labor has increased enormously, and the convicts in some of the prisons have even volunteered for work overtime. They have been employed upon all kinds of easy work, from making coolsacks for the navy, kit bags for the army, and various other articles of the kind, and they have done it willingly and well.

The pathos of it has appealed to Government officials, who are not usually so hard-hearted as many people are inclined to believe. Mr. G. M. Paton, the British Controller of the Stationery Office Stores Department, stated that "the work of providing the sufficiency of suitable receptacles this year for the parcels and mails for our gallant soldiers in the Expeditionary Force has led to the purchase of a large number of special kit bags, thousands of which had to be produced at short notice. It is here that the value of organized prison labor is illustrated. But for the fact that the Home Office had an abundant reserve of prisoners to make these bags, their supply at the time they were required would have presented a very ugly problem, and there is surely pathos in the fact that the unfortunate fellows for whom this employment had to be found worked with undisguised enthusiasm when informed of the destined object of their labor."

The daily average number of persons in the prisons is about 20,000, and it is hoped that the improvement which has been shown with regard to work will help them when they are discharged.

HEIGHT OF SOLDIERS

Tall Men More Imposing But Not Necessarily Best on Active Service

The maxim that "a good big 'un will always beat a good little 'un" may have its value on the race course or in the prize ring. Physiologists, however, are questioning its application solely to the selection of recruits, and the War Office by sanctioning the formation of "Hindustan" battalions showed a disposition to jettison the own existing height standard.

The idea that tall men make better soldiers than short men has induced a belief that certain regiments which have a distinguished record are composed of tall men. The current notion is that Highlanders are exceptionally tall. Mr. J. M. Bulloch, in a book on "Territorial Soldiering in the North-east of Scotland, 1758-1814," points out that the fact is that the first recruits to the Gordon Highlanders in 1794 had an average stature of 5 feet 5¼ inches.

In opening a discussion on "Tall versus Short Men for the Army," at the Royal Sanitary Institute in London Dr. M. S. Pembrey said the test of the soldier's efficiency is not his height, nor his weight, nor his girth, but his ability to bear the physical and mental stress of active service. A man, short, straight, and to subordinate his own interests to those of the race. If this be granted it will be seen that no man can dogmatize upon the question whether tall or short, men are the better soldiers. During peace height is a recognized standard of recruits, for most men will agree that a tall soldier is more imposing and dignified than a short one. An unjustified bias may thus arise in favor of the tall man.

The essential organs for life are in the head and trunk. These are further better protected by short than by tall men. The difference in height between a tall and a short man is due chiefly to the longer legs of the former. A man 6 feet 4½ inches even in the standing position, 10¾ inches taller than a man 5 feet 6 inches, but compared in the sitting position the difference was only 3¾ inches.

SPEEDY LITTLE MACHINE

New "Tabloid" Biplanes Fly a Hundred Miles an Hour

On several occasions the British Royal Flying Corps penetrated into German territory and succeeded in getting close enough to the Zeppelin sheds, despite the fact that these shelters are protected by numerous anti-aircraft guns. Although the daring raids evoked universal credit for the plucky aviators attached to the British air service, it is doubtful whether they could be made as successfully carried out and not the Flying Corps been recently provided with a new type of aeroplane, which in many points is unique. German machine. This is the tiny British-built biplane known as the "tabloid," owing to its diminutive size, and on machines of this type the British aviators have been able to carry out their hazardous feats. The machine is a very light aeroplane, fitted with an 80-horsepower engine, and its high power forces the frail machine through the air at a normal speed of one hundred miles an hour. Once the engine is fitted a big armored cowl, and the body of the aeroplane tapers almost to a point, so that in appearance it resembles a big bullet piercing the atmosphere.

Owing to the enormous speed at which these machines can be driven, they present most elusive marks to the German gunners, and also the slower Taube monoplanes cannot overtake them in the air.

The Czar's Son and Heir

The Czarevitch, the future ruler of all the Russias, has been described as the most valuable child in the world. When he succeeds to the throne he will inherit all the fortune of the Romanoff family which is estimated at no smaller a sum than two hundred million dollars. In addition to this as ruler of the Russian people, he will enjoy an income of $10,000,000 a year, and have the absolute control of 90 estates covering 30,000 servants. At present the child is the recipient of an allowance of $75,000 a year, a banking account having been opened for him soon after his birth, when, incidentally, his life was insured for $3,500,000.

School Section Dispute

A dispute has been going on for some time between School Sections No. 11 and 11 in the Township of Sidney as to the proper Section in which to place the Seymour Power Company assessment of $40,000.

The taxes on this amount to a considerable sum and the fight has been very keen. The plan dividing the Township of Sidney into School Sections was made in 1871 and for a number of years after this the land on which the power plant now stands was assessed in No. 10 School Section. Since the erection of the plant about three years ago it has been assessed in School Section No. 11 which includes Frankford.

Yesterday the matter came before His Honor Judge Deroche who decided that the plant should remain assessed in Section No. 11. S. Masson, K.C., appeared for the Township; W. C. Mikel, K.C., for School Section No. 11.

Bronze Green Knitting Circle

The grounds of the Court House were in fine yesterday afternoon and evening when the Bronze Green Knitting Circle held a lawn social. Flags decorated the trees and altogether the scene was a beautiful one. The head quarters of the circle was in a Red Cross tent. In this tea room ice cream, strawberries and candy were served. In spite of the high wind and the chill of the atmosphere the attendance and business were gratifying for over $60 was made.

Mrs. J. H. P. Young convenor of the knitting circle, desires to thank Mr. Tom Aylsworth and Mrs. Ketchenson for the use of the grounds and the Fifteenth band which furnished music.

For Belgian Relief

Advices received from the Belgian American Relief Committee, of 15 Broad Street, New York, indicate that the benefit performance to be given under their auspices, and the local auspices of the 15th Regimental band at Belleville will be an exceptionally high order. Metropolitan artists without their season and voluntarily given their services to make possible a splendid and musical bill of quality never seen outside of the great cities.

The will be the first opportunity the people of Belleville have had to see Wing Tabot Wetmore today the greatest exponent of the art of impersonation in America.

The musical feature of the bill will be rendered by soloists of international reputation.

Elizabeth Isaacs, the California virtuoso, whose debut at Carnegie created a sensation in eastern musical circles, will lend the wizardry of her bow to the occasion.

It will Cure a Cold.—Colds are the commonest ailments of mankind and if neglected may lead to serious conditions. Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil will relieve the bronchial passages of inflamation speedily and thoroughly and strengthen them against subsequent attack. And as it eases the inflamation it will stop the cough and loosen the slight irritation in the throat. Try it and prove it.

Institute Social at Playgrounds

In spite of untoward weather, the Ingin social at the West Belleville playgrounds under the auspices of the Women's Institute yesterday, was most successful. In the afternoon the towels were contributed by the ladies of the west side and of Red Cross work. In the evening the Salvation Army band furnished the music. Those in charge from candy, ice cream were sold, enjoyed liberal patronage and many visited the brink of the fat pond and grappled. The industrious ladies of the institute served tea in the pavilion and a fine program was enjoyed. It was composed of instrumental and vocal music. The proceeds of the pavilion went for institute purposes but all the rest was given for the prosecution of Red Cross work.

Spring Wheat 5 Feet Long

Mr. Geo. W. Anderson showed us this morning a stalk of Red Fife spring wheat that measured exactly five feet in length. This Mr. Anderson procured a couple of days ago in a field on the farm of his father-in-law, Mr. John V. Ketchenson, of Hillier township. This particular stalk was not of exceptional length but represented about the average height of the entire crop. The wheat is now in bloom, and Mr. Anderson says it affords the finest promise he has ever seen. Mr. Ketchenson has long been known as one of the most thorough and the fifty farmers in the county. Although now upwards of eighty-three years of age he takes as active an interest in the operations of his fine farm as ever nen Lord Fisher first entered... many there were [illegible] younggsters in the service. The... never was such a plucky little boy [illegible] remarked an old shipmate, referring to those early days. "He was as quick as a monkey, keen as a needle, hard as nails, would do anything, or go anywhere, didn't know what fear was, or that there was such a word in the language as can't."

The Man With Asthma, almost longs for death to end his suffering. He sees ahead only years of endless torment with intervals of rest which are themselves fraught with never ceasing fear of renewed attacks. Let him turn to Dr. J. D. STORIES OF EARON, FISHER

Blunt to a degree, Lord Fisher is somewhat of a Kitchener in his methods. A few years ago "Jacky," as they call him in the navy, wanted a ship under his command to go to a certain place on a certain date. Her captain pleaded that it was impossible to get ready. "Tell —— that if he is not ready to leave for —— on the day named I will have him towed there," was Admiral Fisher's reply. Needless to say, it did not prove necessary to carry out his threat.

He has a satirical way of rebuking naval men who are not as smart as they should be. It is particularly effective. On one occasion, having cause to be dissatisfied with the conduct of a certain ship, he wrote as follows: "I have to advise the efficiency of the —— that they are expected to study navigation occasionally."

The best story told of Lord Fisher is that concerning an occasion when a certain French admiral was about to pay a visit to Portsmouth, when he was Admiral Superintendent at the dockyard. Queen Victoria requested him to be sure and "be very nice" to the visitor. With a face as impassive as a Chinese mandarin, the Admiral replied, "I'll kiss him if you wish it, ma'am."

THOUSANDS OF VOTES BEING POLLED IN THE GREAT PANAMA-PACIFIC CONTEST

Many Names are Mounting Higher in the Memorable Competition That Will Win the Most Magnificent Tours Ever Arranged by a Canadian Publication--All Sections of Belleville, Hastings and Prince Edward Have Their Favorites for Popularity Honors.

The Contest Department of The Ontario Office has been a centre of remarkable activity the past few days. Yesterday was the date when the first lot of coupons expired and thousands upon thousands of these were sent in by the various candidates or by friends earnestly working in their behalf. No previous newspaper competition in eastern Ontario has created one-tithe of the interest already developed by The Ontario's splendid campaign.

Every section, every village, and every neighborhood throughout the Bay of Quinte district have their favorites for popularity honors, and show a disposition to back up their opinions in the most practical way. From Trenton, Deseronto, Stirling, Napanee, Madoc and a hundred other communities have come most encouraging returns for the diligent workers.

District 1 in Belleville has the distinction of leading all the others at present, but some of the others have done almost as well. The country districts are a little slower to respond but watch some of them towards the close. If the bulk of the One Hundred Dollars in gold does not go to the candidates working in the rural communities, we will be greatly surprised

Candidates who are puzzled about any point in the regulations or who wish advice as to methods will have all inquiries courteously answered by calling at or writing The Ontario office.

As we predicted, the contest shows evidence of narrowing down to the real workers. This is particularly true of the city. There are some who are so easily discouraged that they can never expect to win results.

Candidates should remember that there is less than a month in which to work, and no such rewards for so little effort have ever before been given.

Following is the result of the polling to date,—

The Best Medicine She Ever Used

WHAT MRS. SOLLEN SAYS OF DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS.

She Suffered from Kidney Disease for Many Years and Found Relief with the First Box of Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Mulvihill, Man., July 5th. (Special)—Mrs. John Sollen, wife of a well known farmer living near here, has given attestment for publication in which she declares that Dodd's Kidney Pills are the best medicine she ever used.

Her inherited Kidney disease from my parents," Mrs. Sollen states, "and I have suffered from it for many years. I was always tired and nervous, my limbs were heavy and I had a dull aching across the loins. My joints were stiff and I suffered from backache. I had heart flutterings and my appetite was fitful.

"Rheumatism added to my troubles and I also suffered from Neuralgia and Gravel.

"I was treated by a doctor and tried many other kinds of medicine but nothing seemed to do me any lasting good till I used Dodd's Kidney Pills. I found relief with the first box I used.

Every one of Mrs. Sollen's symptoms is a symptom of Kidney Disease. That's why she found such quick relief in Dodd's Kidney Pills.

"These Pills Cure Rheumatism—To the many who suffer from Rheumatism a trial of Parmelee's Vegetable Pills is recommended. They have pronounced action upon the liver and kidneys and by regulating the action of these organs act as an alternative in preventing the admixture of uric acid and blood that causes this painful disorder. They must be taken according to directions and used steadily and they will speedily give evidence of their beneficial effects"

GERMANY FEELS PINCH

Wages Low, Food Scarce—Most of Nation Long for Peace

According to the Berne (Switzerland) papers, Swiss who had just returned from Germany, where he had been spending some time in the country districts, remarked on the untrustworthiness of information gained from German newspapers and German private letters, all of which pass through so strict a censorship that anything really calculated to throw light on the state of the country is invariably eliminated. According to one account of this gentleman's statement wired to London, a correct idea of the situation in Germany cannot be formed from visits to Berlin and the other large German cities. It is pointed out that it is almost always of Berlin that the German speak, and always Berlin that they like to show to any neutral visitor. This Swiss, whose business took him to small towns and the country districts, remarks that in his opinion it is utterly misleading to speak now of the mass of the German people being enthusiastic for the war. All the working classes, all those with relatives at the front, the farmers, business men, and most of the highly-educated classes, speak of the war as of a vast misfortune, which they hope will end as speedily as possible. Even invalid soldiers, of whom great numbers are now to be seen home from the front on account of sickness, and of the Landsturm men, guarding powder stores, railways, and bridges, all adopt the same tone. "The German people are becoming more and more convinced that Germany has nothing more to gain from the war, and that her situation is becoming daily worse, while that of her enemies is more favorable. He explained that the people are kept in the dark as to the true state of affairs, and that they are being directly lied to and deceived." Mistrust of the government is increasing, and the present reign of terror makes it worse still.

This applies more especially to the poorer classes of the population—those who travel fourth class, who are crowded together in the cramped dwellings, and who are now being underpaid and underfed owing to the lowness of wages and the high prices of necessaries. The bread rations are much too small, at any rate for this class of people, and for those with large families. The poorer people cannot afford meat, and often cannot procure potatoes either, and frequently have consumed their allotted portion of bread in two-thirds of the time allowed for its consumption. Consequently for days a poor family has often no bread. In many industries not only have wages been reduced but also hours of work. The "great German patriots" have not failed to exploit the present situation. For instance, a large Stuttgart textile firm, which has been fully occupied working for the army and navy for months and must have cleared quite $125,000 profits, has been paying its women workers 5 marks weekly. Apparently only the skilled workmen can now command good wages, and owing to the scarcity of such men they can always insist on being well paid.

CHARMED LIVES

The hairbreadth escapes from death which many soldiers have had in the great war must be making those fortunate "immune" firm believers in the saying that "it is better to be born lucky than to be born rich."

Hardly a day passed but we hear of some one whose a soldier owed his life to something which he had on his body at the time, and which was the means of deflecting the bullet from its intended billet.

A German bullet, for instance, struck a Connaught Ranger on the breast, but it fortunately came in contact with a plug of tobacco, and he got off scathless. Another lucky escape from what might have been a mortal wound happened to a Royal Scots Fusilier. During a severe fight he suddenly felt the shock of a bullet. "I am hit," he said to his chum. Looking down, however, he saw that the bullet had struck a clip of cartridges in his left-hand pouch, but had done no other damage. The first cartridge must have been a little loose, as it twisted round when it was struck the bullet was turned off instead of going straight through the soldier's body, as it would have done had all the cartridges been firm.

BLISSFUL IGNORANCE

German Sailors Had "No Truth" Notion of How the War Was Going

The Liverpool papers publish some interesting interviews with the members of the crews of the ships destroyed by the German cruiser "Kronprinz Wilhelm," before her internment. An incident described by the chief steward of the "Coleby" was that the German officers, on boarding a ship, made a thorough search for newspapers of every description, of which they took possession. "As they were supposed," said the steward, "to be in constant wireless communication with a station in Brazil, I could not understand the meaning of it, but I found later that it was to prevent their own crew getting hold of the news. The crew told us that we were better off as passengers than if we had continued our own voyage. Our ship, they said, would have certainly been sunk by German submarines, which had been successful in stopping all British shipping. The German sailors were also under the impression that their army had effected a landing in England, and their ignorance of the state of affairs was astounding, until we remembered they had been at sea eight months and their officers, who would not so much as mention the war, kept news back from them. We could have enlightened them, but we probably would not have listened to our stories, which would have been so unpleasant to them, we refrained."

KINDNESS REWARDED

Waifs Couple Found Little Belgian Refugees were Close Relatives

A correspondent of the London Morning Post vouches for the truth of the following story:—A Welshman and his wife, anxious to adopt a child from among the Belgian refugees, journeyed from Aberayron to Swansea to make their selection. On their arrival they found that there were two young children—brother and sister—who particularly appealed to them and who might be adopted so that one could not be taken without the other. In the circumstances they decided to take both. As the children were being undressed to be put to bed after reaching home a locket was discovered hanging round the little girl's neck. Inside the locket was a photograph which the lady recognized as that of her own sister who had gone to Belgium as a governess many years before, had married and settled down in that country, and who now turned out to be the mother of the little refugees. She had therefore unknowingly adopted her own motherless nephew and niece.

The Recoil of Big Guns

Most people know that when an ordinary rifle is fired it "kicks," and, indeed, will knock a man down unless he holds the rifle butt close into his shoulder. It can be imagined, therefore, what a gigantic "kick" one of the big field guns can give!

It has always been one of the problems to solve in firing these big guns, how to control the recoil. If it were not controlled the gun would jump back anything up to fifty yards, not only probably smashing itself up, but killing the gunners as well.

Springs and air chambers of course, have been used, but it was found that they quickly got out of order. We owe to the Germans, indeed, the finding of the best method of overcoming the recoil.

Early in the war one of the big German guns was captured and taken to Woolwich Arsenal for a thorough examination. It was found that instead of using compressed air the special recoil chambers were filled with a compound of which glycerine was the chief ingredient.

Now many of Britain's big guns are fitted with these recoil chambers, and are fired with every little "kick"—thanks to that captured German gun!

How Italy is Governed

The Italian Parliament consists of two Chambers—an upper one, the Senate, and a lower one, called the "Camera dei Deputati." The Senate is composed of the Princes of the Royal house who are twenty-one years of age (with the right to vote when twenty-five years of age) and of an unlimited number of members above forty years old, who are nominated by the King for life. The duration of a Parliament is five years, and it must meet annually, but the King has the power to dissolve the lower House at any time, being bound only to order new selections and convoke a new meeting within four months.

Rome became the capital of Italy in 1870. Of the provinces, the largest is the Vatican, the residence of the Pope, and the Quirinal, the residence of King Emmanuel.

Wood Pulp in War Bread

War bread has been followed by bread made from straw and flax, by ground wood pulp invented by Professors Friedländer and Taberlandt. Professor Haberlandt in a recent article in the "Kreuzzeitung," stated that many people who had become used to it declared it not only highly nutritious but even delicious.

The Haberlandt bread is made from a dough containing fifty per cent. flax sawdust. The professor's theory is that during winter trees store up a great quantity of sugar, oils, fat and a small percentage of albumen, and the young branches and twigs are eminently fit for human consumption.

Doctoring Dreadnoughts.

After the conflict, Jack Tars have several methods of stopping the incoming water when a battleship has been hit below the water-line. For instance, if a small hole has been made in the vessel's side, an apparatus like an umbrella is used. This is thrust through the hole, point first, and then drawn back so that it will open like an umbrella, leaving the canvas outside.

Of course, the pressure of the water effectually forces the canvas against the ships' side, thus stopping the leak; but to make it more secure the handle of the umbrella, which is formed like a screw, is fastened by a nut inside.

Preserving Soldiers' Graves

When after the battle of the Marne the fields and forests were filled with dead heroes, thousands of willing hands, young or old, dug graves on which girls and women planted little wooden crosses with the name of the fallen soldier in ink or pencil. As there was danger that agricultural labor should destroy these graves and the weather efface the inscriptions, the municipal and village authorities everywhere have issued instructions that all these graves are to be left intact and suitable measures taken to preserve the inscriptions. School children regularly visit the graves and cover them with flowers.

Hardy Italian Soldiers

The Italian soldier undergoes a more severe training in some respects than any friend or enemy in the circles of Europe. His day begins at 4.30 a.m., and drill and routine continue, with a two-hours' break of "compulsory repose," until 6 p.m. After that he has four hours' freedom, but must be back in barracks by 9 o'clock, or 8.30 in winter, and is supposed to be abed when, half an hour later, the bugles sound the "silence." He is extremely well cared for by the authorities, but long marches are reckoned among the essentials of his training, and some regiments can cover sixty miles at five miles an hour, and consider it nothing remarkable.

A SECOND BALACLAVA

Unflinching Heroism Displayed by British in Going to Aid Canadians

The following letter signed "A. Gunner" and dated from the Red Cross Hospital, Harlow, Essex, appeared in the London Morning Post: "The following is an extract from your report of Lord Kitchener's statement in the House of Lords:

"The Canadians, however, were soon supported by British Brigades pushed up, as the enemy's advance was thereby checked."

"I want to tell you that the 'pushing up' of these British Brigades was one of the most glorious episodes of the war. They went up in broad daylight, in skirmishing order, in face of the most awful shell fire, it seemed impossible that any of them would reach the trenches. Their exploit will bear comparison with Balaclava, and I hope the day will come when a more suitable pen than mine will tell the world of the deeds performed by our incomparable infantry in front of Ypres. I am thankful for the privilege of having been a witness of their heroism and offer them my undying admiration."

GARROS' LAST FLIGHT

Famous Airman was Trying to Bomb a Railway Train and had Mishap

The war bulletin of the Fourth German army gave the details of the capture of Roland Garros, the famous French aviator. He was making his Langelede, Belgium, when a railway train passed along from the north. When Garros saw it he made a dizzy voplane of 2,000 yards at an angle of 60 degrees, and came down right over the train, describing small circles above it. He then threw a bomb at it, but the missile fell on to the railway, making a hole a yard in depth by two yards in diameter. Sentries opened fire on the aviator at a distance of 100 yards. Garros threw a second bomb and ascended to a height of 700 yards. Suddenly his motor stopped, the machine vibrated and came down again in a volplane in the direction of Iniste. On reaching ground Garros set fire to his machine and took refuge in a peasant's hut. The soldiers formed him and to search a long time, finally discovered him crouching down in a deep ditch under a thick hedge.

ARMY CAMP WATER

Suitable drinking water is of vital importance to an army, and this is only one of a multitude of problems that must be studied carefully by those who conduct a successful campaign. The water of a camp is a matter of great importance. Only running water is used.

In the German army the upstream water is used for drinking purposes and the downstream water for watering horses and for bathing. Suitable signs mark the men which water is safe to drink and which may be used only for bathing. In shallow or narrow streams basins are dug, or small dams built so as to form a reservoir of ample dimensions.

Stepping-stones are provided to keep the water clean, as well as some protection to prevent the banks from crumbling. Basins are dug for watering horses, troughs are provided only in case of necessity and are then propped on posts and filled by means of pumps. Pipes may be driven in water lies at a reasonable depth—in other words, not more than twenty feet. Depending upon their size, these pipes will deliver from four to twenty-five gallons of water per minute.

If water lies very near the surface a hole is dug and a cask, the bottom of which has been knocked out, is placed in the hole to form a basin. If the water lies at a greater depth the basin may be formed of box sections driven in one on top of the other.

GALLANT FRENCH BOY

One Lad of Eleven Years Was Awarded the Cross of the Legion of Honor.

How keen the boys of France are to join in the war is shown by letters which they send to the military authorities begging for permission to go to the front. The lads would be content to be drummer boys who has attained the age of 13.

wrote to General Plagnol, commanding the 21st District, informing him that ever since the war began he has wanted to enlist. Realizing that his age precluded him from offering himself as a volunteer, he begged to be accepted as a soldier's boy in the regiment in which his father has served. The lad added that he has a cousin, Lucien Miserat, who was a lieutenant and had been wounded by the Germans. He wanted to avenge his cousin. "My mind is fully made up," he concluded. "Since the beginning of the war I have learned to shoot, and I promise you that my shots will not fail."

The general was requested to send his reply addressed to Andre Plagnol care of Jack Pierrot (the boy's grandmother) at Thivet. General Plagnol replied that the boy's letter had greatly touched him. "You are only eleven years of age. You are quite small; nevertheless your heart is in the right place. Continue to assist your grandmother. Your present sentiments are a guarantee that later on you will be a valiant soldier and a good citizen. I press your little hand affectionately."

Turcos Not Flatterers

An amusing story is told of a Turco and the wife of a well known Paris banker. She had opened a hospital for 50 wounded soldiers at her house. The Turcos had received them and though both his arms were mangled by shells he was the life of the establishment after he was first bandaged, and kept everybody amused. One day he remarked that his fair country men bought their wives. A nurse jokingly asked him what the nurses of the hospital would bring if they were placed in the market. "How much, for instance, would Mlle. M— be worth?" "Oh, Mlle. M— who is big and fair would be worth at least 4,000 francs," replied the Turco. "And Mlle. X—?" "Mademoiselle X— who is not so big and shorter would bring about 1,500 francs."

"And how much would I fetch?" asked the banker's wife recklessly.

"You, madame? Oh, you are more pretty, die soon, you would be worth 10 francs."

Escaped from Germany

Lieut. LISSANT BEARDMORE

This young Canadian, whose home is in Toronto, was a member of a big opera company in Berlin when the war started. His liberty was considerably restricted at first, but when the order came to intern all colonial aliens he made his escape, finally reaching England, where he enlisted. Later he was given leave of absence to visit his friends in Canada.

GIRL'S HEROIC WORK

Tilled Young Woman Drives Right to Firing Line to get Wounded Man

"Her work in tending the Belgian wounded has won for her the affection of the whole Belgian army," said an English officer of Lady Dorothie Feilding, the pretty young daughter of the Earl of Denbigh, to whose unselfish bravery a heroic incident bears witness.

Lady Dorothie is attached to an ambulance party in Belgium, whose duty consists of driving motor-cars up to the firing-line to pick up the wounded. Perilous journeys have to be made along motor roads rendered veritable death-traps by gaping craters torn in the surface by shells. On occasions pieces of metal discharged by projectiles bursting overhead have smashed the wood-work of Lady Dorothies 'car, and once whilst she was driving in pitch-darkness a motor-cycle crashed into a hole as big as a room, and forty soldiers were required to lift it out.

The Belgian soldiers worship the young English aristocrat, who for their sakes has set aside the comforts of a ducal home to face the dangers of the battlefield, and King Albert expressed the gratitude of his countrymen by decorating Lady Dorothie with the Order of Leopold. This is the highest military decoration in Belgium.

Lady Dorothie's first exciting task among the ruins of Perwyze have become famous, and the English officers greatly appreciated this little touch of civilisation amidst the ravages of war. She holds her reception within range of the enemys' artillery nearly every day, for her ladyship possesses astonishing nerves, and her coolness never deserts her. As is well known, the Germans have little respect for the sign of the Red Cross, and when moving their way to and from the trenches the motor ambulances are subjected to heavy shell fire, whilst at times Taubes endeavor to annihilate the vehicles and their occupants with bombs. Yet for months Lady Dorothie has withstood this terrible nerve strain, though daily she moves amidst the worst horrors of war, and frequently escapes death by a hair's breadth. The plucky young Englishwoman proudly has the fighting blood of her race in her veins. Lieut.-Colonel the Earl of Denbigh is a renowned soldier who served in the Egyptian campaign and in India, and is commanding the Honorable Artillery Company.

FINDING THE RANGE

A remarkable story of a French artillery officer whose bravery is rewarded the forces under his command comes from northern France. He was in charge of a battery of the famous 75's. The enemy found the range of the French gun and subjected them to severe bombardment. The fire was so accurate that the French position became untenable. The French, on the contrary, had been unable to find the range of the enemy's battery, and the order was given to withdraw the guns to a more sheltered position. At that moment, one of the German shells fell in front of the battery. It did not explode, and the lieutenant in charge, ordering his men not to move, calmly walked out in front of the line under a hail of fire and examined the shell. It was set to explode at 5,600 metres. Returning to his battery he ordered the men to fire at a range of 4,000 metres, and in a short time the enemy's guns were reduced to silence.

Fighting Barbed Wire

How to enable soldiers to overcome barbed wire obstacles is a problem of which an English company sought the solution.

The result is the "Barbed Wire Traverse," an invention in appearance more like a khaki-colored waterproof bed quilt, 6 feet square, than anything else. Thrown over a fence, the sheet transforms the barbed wire into a sort of wall, on the side of which supported without risk of a scratch.

The Traverse was tested by twenty soldiers across a barbed wire entanglement in a camp near London. The soldiers, all being athletic men, were over the fence and away long before in the ordinary way they would have started cutting the wires. Not one of them received the slightest hurt. They were mainly concerned as to any increase in the weight of their equipment if the invention was adopted by the War Office.

TURKISH TREASURES

Constantinople Probably Hides Wonderful Libraries Centuries Unseen

Frederic Harrison, the veteran writer and philosopher, believes that in Constantinople treasures of the past will be brought to light whose very existence is at present unknown. The treasures which he and others believe to be buried away in the Turkish capital were seized by the Turks when they captured the city from the Greeks under Constantine XI. on May 29, 1453. At that time Constantinople was the very centre of the civilisation of the world. It is true that to a certain extent schools had declined, but, there were plenty of Greeks who read the old languages and kept alive traditions of learning that even survived the fall of the city, and later blossomed forth in the Italian Renaissance.

When these scholars fled before the Turks how much did they leave behind? Certainly what they took to Italy was but a small portion of the treasures that the city was known to contain, and not since that day have the Turks made any accounting of what fell into their hands. After the war, however, when learning had become fashionable in Italy, there were many expeditions financed by wealthy Italians for the recovery of treasures concealed in Constantinople. Most of them were richly rewarded by gems, art objects, and valuable manuscripts. But what they recovered, too, was insignificant when compared with the original treasures of Byzantium. Brutal and cruel as were the Turks when they entered the city after their long siege, they were not Vandals. Indeed, it is improbable that they destroyed many manuscripts, for in their ignorance of the Greek languages they feared that they might destroy something containing the name of God, which in their eyes would have been an almost unforgivable sin. Some years ago Mr. Roberts Bell, at that time engaged in the Levant tobacco Regie and later on the manager of the London Times, was given a large glimpse at some of the huge vaults under the Mosque of St. Sophia. He saw there great piles of manuscript covered with the dust of centuries. He was not permitted by the Turks to make a close examination, but he was convinced that he was in the presence of wonderful treasure.

In 1907 Prof. Helberg, of Copenhagen, came across a manuscript written by Archimedes A.D. 800. He was permitted to copy this by the Turks, but they would not let him have the manuscript. Among the buildings in Constantinople that Frederic Harrison was thoroughly explored is the Imperial Seraglio. He believes that it will be found to contain Greek, Roman, and Byzantine treasures of extraordinary value.

INSULT AFTER INJURY

Belgians Were Told Their Country Was at Peace—Funds Taken

From Paris comes the story of how General von Bissing, who was made military dictator of Belgium by the Kaiser, deprived the Belgian Red Cross of its funds, which he ordered should no longer be used to assist wounded. Belgian soldiers back to health. The governor did not act openly on a dark night armed with a jimmy and burglarious tools the other paraphernalia of the ordinary cracksman to burst open the safe of the society and appropriated a less risky and more efficient way.

The Belgian Red Cross Society was formed in 1892 and its by-laws say that in time of war it must devote all its funds to the assistance of Belgian soldiers and must in every way co-operate with the Belgian military authorities. This charter would be forfeited if the funds were used for any other purposes.

Governor von Bissing sent a letter to the administrative committee of the Red Cross Society in which he announced that as Belgium was occupied by German troops it was in a state of peace, and consequently the society, according to its by-laws, must not use the funds in question for Belgian soldiers, but must use them as he saw fit. Immediately afterwards he ordered the society to turn over its money to a German organization for the aim of which is to fight consumption. When the committee refused to do this the governor ordered it to assist the poor and needy of the country, but the answer was that the law being done through the regular channels and that the Red Cross could not use its fund for this purpose. The committee was then ordered to appear before the governor and when the members of the committee refused to be bullied by him, he gave them ten minutes to make up their minds. The committee men did not deign him an answer and immediately after they left his presence the German governor forcibly seized their money and declared it German property.

Spraying Liquid Fire

The liquid fire used by the Huns has been chiefly employed to repel the attacks on their trenches. It is really burning petrol or oil, containing a certain amount of phosphorus to make it flare more fiercely, and many of the French invalided home were so severely burned by this barbarous method of making war as to be incapable of taking any further part in the fighting.

The implement used to spray the burning oil is very similar to the blow pipe used by plumbers, though of course it is very larger and heavier. The pressure of the air, which can be increased to as great an amount as wished by a special air pump, forces the liquid out in a fine spray. It automatically catches fire in the air on account of the mixture of phosphorus.

Caught Soldier and his Friend

Private Thos. W. Foster the 25 year old soldier wanted at Napanee for attempted desertion and for taking away a young girl of 15 years, was arrested by his companion yesterday afternoon at Trenton by Chief Graham of Napanee. The Belleville police believed that the pair came to Trenton and sent word there. Chief Graham came up at noon on Tuesday and boarded the train in a few minutes later.

They told him they had walked from Napanee on Sunday to Point Anne and then to Belleville and hence to Trenton.

Presentation and Address at St. Ola

On Sunday evening July 4th, at the close of the service in the Methodist Church, Mr. G. Barragar, rec-steward was requested by the Pastor to occupy the chair. After a few preliminary remarks Mr. and Mrs. P. P. Clark were called to the front when an address was read by the pastor and Mr. E. Ellis presented Mr. Clark with a cane and Miss E. Embery handed Mrs. Clark a Bible as a gift from their friends of St. Ola and Greenhurst appointment. Mr. Clark made a feeling reply. The address which follows is self-explanatory.

To Mr. and Mrs. P. P. Clark, St. Ola July 4th, 1915.

Dear Friends:

With the passing of the years many changes come into our lives. Among them is the removal of friends from communities where they have long resided and in which they have rendered valuable service. It is with regret we realize that the ties which have bound you to St. Ola are about to be severed by your removal to Belleville and in consequence the transfer of your membership from St. Ola Mission in the city. You have been so long associated with St. Ola that we shall miss you very much. It will always be remembered by us that it largely owing to your energy, enterprise and liberality that the mission has in this village a church and parsonage of which it may well be proud. You, Mr. Clark, have held various offices in the church and the duties pertaining thereto have always been faithfully performed. You have also nobly represented the mission both at District Meeting and in Conference. In the Municipality of Limerick you have given years of efficient service. In your various labors you have had the sympathy and cooperation of Mrs. Clark who has taught in the Sabbath School, sung in the choir, and been helpful in every good work. We could not think of allowing you to leave us without expressing our feelings of goodwill towards you and we herewith beg you Mr. Clark, to accept this cane and you, Mrs. Clark, this Bible as mementoes of our friendship and love. Permit us to indulge the hope that you may find in your new surroundings warm friends, pleasant church and social relationships, opportunities for service and that in all your environment from business you may enjoy the evening of life amid the privileges of the County seat of Hastings, beautiful Belleville.

From your friends of St. Ola and Greenhurst appointments.

In New Charge

Rev. Benj. Greatrix, formerly of Holloway street church, commenced his pastorate at St. James' Methodist church, Peterboro, on Sunday. In addition to conducting the morning and evening services, he visited the Sunday School classes and generally made a fine impression upon the congregation.

In his opening sermon, Rev. Mr. Greatrix said he had come to work with the people; but he needed their help and co-operation, and especially their prayers. He remarked that General French and General Joffre were great leaders and generals, but they did not do the fighting. It was the rank and file that bore the brunt and the heat of battle. In the same way the pastor needs the assistance and support of the people.

Chief Graham of Napanee is in the city today.

RECRUITING BY POSTER.

We have been wondering why the Canadian Government has not made use of the admirable series of posters that have done such wonderful work in Great Britain in the promotion of recruiting.

Through the kindness of Lt.-Col. Ponton, the citizens of Belleville have had opportunity to see a magnificent display of the series in the windows of the Ritchie's Company's store, and later in the office building below the Belleville Club rooms. The posters had been forwarded to Col. Ponton by his son, Captain R. D. Ponton, from England. The series shown here was supplemented by another most effective line immediately after the sinking of the Lusitania.

Mr. Charles E. Lauriat, jr., a member of the well known Boston firm of book publishers, who has recently returned from England, has given to the Boston Trancript an interesting interview in which he gives some details of this truly wonderful system of appeal, which has given England, as the Transcript says, "a German army and German tyranny;" that is to say, Great Britain has enrolled since the outbreak of war, an army of three million men, entirely by voluntary offering.

When we remember that at the outbreak of the war England had available for dispatch to the Continent considerably less than 100,000 men we must realize what a magnificent result she has achieved in recruiting and training "Kitchener's New Armies," totalling in the neighborhood of three million men. How were these enormous numbers of men recruited? Mr. Lauriat thinks that, next to the powerful speeches of Mr. Asquith, Mr. Lloyd George and other British leaders, the most potent influence was the recruiting poster. People on this side of the Atlantic scarcely appreciate the extent of the poster recruiting campaign. Shortly after the outbreak of war, when the violation of Belgium's neutrality and the retreat from Mons, brought home to the British people the menace to the very of their own Island home, the British Government realised that the recruiting sergeant needed an efficient and inspiring assistant Hence the Parliamentary Recruiting Committee, working in conjunction with the War Office, inaugurated its poster campaign. Mr. Lauriat gives very illuminating account of the work of the Committee.

The purpose of these recruiting posters from the standpoint of the Government was to seize the imagination of the people, which through its own workings would incite towards enlistment. The Government had to be very careful not to offend the people in seeking them for the army. The British people, consciously clinging to their ideal of individual freedom, even in this time of necessity, were not to be bullied or driven. There was to be no implication that it was even possible for an Englishman to show the "white feather." England appealed to the individual judgment and personal responsibility of her people to save or lose the Empire. The Parliamentary Recruiting Committee had a task of extreme delicacy and firmness to perform. These posters demanded something more than a literary exhortation both in design and text.

STAGGERING LOSSES.

At the present rate of losses how long can the Great Conflict last? A French military expert, who has made a specialty of the losses in the present war, says that up to April 1st the Teutonic Allies had lost almost 7,000,000 men, 4,000,000 Germans and 3,000,000 Austrians. Considering the terrific fighting that has been the daily rule at both fronts since April 1st, figuring as the same rate as the French expert, 9,000,000 is a conservative estimate of the German and Austrian losses up to date.

The French casualties are placed at close to 2,000,000 men, and those of the British, at all points where they are engaged, and in the naval warfare, should be well over 800,000. Estimates of the Russian casualties put the grand total at 3,000,000; Belgium at 200,000; Serbia 200,000, and Turkey 300,000. Roughly this puts the Teuton losses at 9,000,000, and the Allies at 6,000,000. This makes the casualties for the both sides about 15,000,000, and of this number, according to Hillaire Belloc, the greatest of all war critics, at least 6,000,000 are dead or out of the fighting for good by reason of their wounds.

LEAD US AGAIN.

Father, our hopes are bivouacked in our hearts,
Our fears and prayers are all a-wing to Thee!
Stretch out Thy holy hand, we humbly ask,
And lead us with Thy clear, all solving light
Out of the desolate darkness of our time.
As Thou didst in the bleak, black ages gone.
Give us again the sight that we may see;
Once more set spinning all the looms of Peace;
Rekindle reason, faith, good-will on earth,
Lord, Thy almighty arm alone can quench
The fire that girdles all the world with woe,
Drench Thou the pyre of flesh and bone and blood
Whose glare reflects the stubborn pride of kings
And shows the fellowship of man at end!
The flow'r of sturdy nations withers fast,
And fruits of mellowed genius rot apace
In shell swept trench of many battlefields;
Babes sleep unmothered in their cradle nests,
While orphaned children weep in wakeful dreams,
And women robbed of father, husband, son,
Trudge troubled through the dust clouds of the plow.
Christ did not die upon the cross for this!
—George W. Seymour, in New York Evening Sun.

"We believe that the great majority of our countrymen agree with the admirable letter of the Archbishop of Canterbury, and see in the rioting of the last fortnight a very real disgrace to our good name and a very grave menace to our power in this great struggle." says the London Nation. "You cannot preach mob-law one day and discipline the next; you cannot say that a German hunt is innocent, and a hunt of millers, well merchants, farmers, landlords, and other rich people guilty. And what will happen, if food reaches famine prices, will be that the very people who welcome and encourage these riots will want to weaken the army in order that the police force may be made strong enough to defend their castles and villas."

General regret will attend the retirement in a few months of Sir George Reid, the popular High Commissioner of the Commonwealth of Australia in London. It has been announced in the Commonwealth Parliament, at his own request, that he will not retain office at the expiry of the twelve months' extension granted last year. He was appointed first High Commissioner in 1910, and it is natural that Sir George, who is in his 71st year, should now wish to relinquish duties which in these days of war are doubly onerous.

A correspondent of the London Morning Post, it is said, had discovered that Lissauer's "Hymn of Hate" is not original. According to the Post's correspondent, George Herwegh, a Prussian Liberal expelled in the 1840's from his country, wrote the original of the "Hymn of Hate" against Prussia, declaring that "We all have only one common foe—Prussia." The principle change made by Lissauer in Herwegh's song was to substitute the word England for Prussia!

A chief petty officer of the Armored Car Squadron with the Mediterranean Expeditionary Force, in a letter to his parents at Lincoln, says: "The Turks are born fighters and have got hold of some very efficient German officers. Many men who are here and have also been in France say that of the two this is the toughest proposition."

The River Bug offers advantages for a strong defence. It rises near Seloczow, in Galicia, runs almost north, forms a great part of the eastern frontier of Russian Poland and joins the Vistula eighteen miles northwest of Warsaw. It is along its Galician course that the Russian army is believed to have taken up strong positions.

Pessimists say that as soon as the Germans have disposed of the Russian armies they will get back huge bodies of troops for another drive on Calais or Paris. We may take it for granted that such a probable event has been considered by the French and British commanders, and that they will not omit the necessary precautions.—Mail and Empire.

The Boston Transcript makes the stinging retort that "Germany never mentions the fact that, while we charge the Allies for their munitions, we feed, free of charge, the stricken Belgians, who, under Prussian guards, turn out the shells with which their husbands, fathers and brothers are to be slaughtered."

More than 37,000 women have offered themselves for war service in the United Kingdom, and 2,382 have been given employment by the Government. No conscription needed for the women.

Rather disquieting news comes from India regarding the unrest of the native population. Any considerable disturbance ther would make it very awkward for Britain at the present time.

MAKING HISTORY IN THE DARK.

Almost unnoticed, while our eyes have been fixed on Europe, a struggle is going on which will take a place in history only with the contest of the French and English for the possession of the North American Continent in the eighteenth century; and the place of General Botha among the world's famous men may be beside that of James Wolfe. That which engrosses the attention of contemporaries is not always that which interests the historian most. In the seven Years' War no one talked, and only statesmen thought, of what was going on in the forests of America; even the statesmen did not know that some day a great nation would think of it, not as the Seven Years' War, but as the French and Indian War, and that the clashes of such Generals as Braddock with small commands on little missions in far-off wilderneses would have a place in history. Still less could they imagine that colonial militiamen whose names they did not know, such as Major Washington of Virginia, would become objects of interest through the future centuries.

But some day great nations that now are colonies will trace through the history of to-day the seeds of great battles in Africa and Europe and America will find interest in them, too. Historians will search through the publications of today for comment on these battles and, record their inability to find it with the same amusement as that with which now they hunt for European comment on the American contests that decided the future of another continent. Botha's capture of Windhoek the other day may rank as one of the world's great events

Africa is the last of the continents to be Europeanised, and her significant modern history began in our own times. Her partition was accomplished in a quarter of a century; it began about 1875. Prior to that time Britain, France, and Portugal alone had many large interests there; but when Germany entered on an expansion policy, South America being barred her by the Monroe Doctrine, she turned her attention to this last continent. Leopold of Belgium precipitated the struggle by creating the Belgian Congo in 1878 and the France-British agreements of 1895 and 1906 marked its end as a peaceful contest. Today, excepting Egypt, Great Britain's African possessions amount to 2,101,411 square miles; France's, 3,866,950; Germany's, 910,150; Italy including Tripoli, 696,000; Portugal's 787,500; Belgium's 900,000; Spain's, 79,800. There are only three separate States left, Liberia, Abyssinia, and Morocco, and the total independent area is only 613,000 square miles.

The development of Africa as a site for future nations and civilizations has been going on rapidly. The war is to decide its future; and that future is being decided with great speed. Germady is being excluded. The war is continental is size. British soldiers are fighting in Nigeria and Cameroon, far up on the west coast, British and German East Africa are locked in a struggle to the death on the east coast, and down in the south Botha is making the continent his own to the southern border of Angola the Portuguese province. This is why Portugal made that declaration, early in the war, that her old alliance with England was still in force. It was commented on with tolerent amusement; what did Portugal expect to do? What Portugal expected to do was to keep the last remnant of her old empire; it is perhaps not doing her an injustice to suspect that she decided in her own mind which side was likely to be the winner and declared herself on that side. Windhoek the capital of German South-west Africa, which will change its name when the Germans are swept out of the continent and Africa becomes English and French.

In a letter from a soldier about a bloody struggle in which he had taken part in some unknown and desolate region in Nigeria there was a complaint that he and his comrades were dying unsung and unheard; that there was not even glory for the very names of the battlefields would never get to Europe. Some day, however, when the new nations of Africa are grown to full size, those battlefields will be searched out, and the descendants of the participants will wear their names as proudly as our Colonial Dames wear the names of theirs. When the war is over, unless all signs fail, the German dream of expansion will be ended, and France and Great Britain will face the question whether there is to be another Anglo-Saxon continent.—New York Times

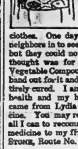
IN SUCH PAIN WOMAN TORE HER CLOTHES

Testifies She Was Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.



Malone, N. Y.—"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has certainly done me a lot of good. I first heard of it when I was a girl and always said that if ever had female trouble I would take it.

"I suffered from organic inflammation and would have spells when I would be in such pain that I would tear my clothes. One day my husband got the neighbors in to see what the matter was but they could not help me. My first thought was for Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I sent my husband out for it and took it until I was entirely cured. I am a woman of perfect health and my home and happiness came from Lydia E. Pinkham's medicine. You may rest assured that I do all I can to recommend your wonderful medicine to my friends."—Mrs. FRED STONE, Route No. 3, Malone, N. Y.

The success of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, is unparalleled. It may be used with perfect confidence by women who suffer from displacements, inflammation, ulceration, tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, bearing-down feeling, flatulency, indigestion, dizziness, or nervous prostration. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the standard remedy for female ills.

Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured
There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

A WITTY BELGIAN

When the Germans finally entered Belgium a native of Liege made himself obnoxious to one troop by his constant loud talk about the brave deeds of his countrymen.

"Now, you've boasted about enough," he said. "We can't listen to you any longer. I'm going to give you your choice: you will be shot or you will swear allegiance to the German Emperor."

Considerably subdued, the offender wondered. "Well," he decided, "I don't want to die, so I guess I'll swear allegiance."

"All right," said the commander, "now you are one of us. You can come and go as you like."

The man walked toward the door and was passing out when suddenly he turned. "Say," he exclaimed, "didn't those Belgians give us a dose of a fight!"

BRITAIN RULES WAVES

Swept Seas of German Vessels and Ruined the Shipping Concerns

The "Naval and Military Record" recently published the following:

"The magnitude of the task which the navies of the Allied Powers have performed since the outbreak of the war is in a measure indicated by the fact that before the war the actual tonnage of Germany's merchant shipping stood second in the world, and its eight months the German flag was swept off the seas. This means that the enemy's mercantile marine, which consisted of 2,388 steam and sailing vessels, with a total tonnage of nearly 5,500,000 tons, has been captured, that, apart from the fact that the enemy's food supply has been jeopardized, the income of the holders of shares in many of the shipping companies has been depleted almost to vanishing point. This has already been shown by the reports of some German steamship companies for 1911, and now the report of the Nederal Aktiengesellschaft of Hamburg, pertains of a considerable loss of the sailing ship trade, and formerly had a wide connection, mainly in South American ports. The outbreak of hostilities brought the earning power of this company to a complete end, and eleven vessels were captured or detained by the Allies, while all those on outward voyages are now lying idle in neutral harbors. The gross receipts slumped from 1,823,900 to 458,000 marks, and the net revenue, after reducing the depreciation allowance from 614,500 to 110,900 marks, came out at 161,200 as compared with 407,600 marks. The dividend is seined down from 12 to 6 per cent.

BARON FISHER'S CAREER

Idol of the Navy Prepared Britain For War, He Long Foresaw

No shifting in the personnel of those chiefly responsible for the prosecution of the war will be so generally regretted as the retirement of Lord Fisher as First Sea Lord. His successor, Sir Henry Bradwardin Jackson, is a comparative stranger to the general public, while Fisher is as well known as Kitchener. Fisher has accomplished great things. The main strategy of the British navy is his. It was Fisher who, in the face of great opposition, insisted that the proper post for the British Grand Fleet was not in the Mediterranean or scattered elsewhere about the world, but in the North Sea. Under Fisher the first Dreadnought was built, and because Britain adopted the Dreadnought Germany was forced to follow suit. Germany was thereby obliged to enlarge and practically reconstruct the Kiel Canal, which he began to do in 1905. The work was not completed until about a month before the war. But Fisher's policy may be said to have given Great Britain nine ships in which to prepare for the struggle which he long ago saw to be inevitable.

Undoubtedly Lord Fisher made many enemies while in the Admiralty, but he is almost worshipped by the fleet. One reason for the resentment felt in many quarters against Fisher is the ruthlessness with which he promoted younger men over the heads of others who felt themselves entitled by seniority to advancement. Sir John Jellicoe owes his command to Fisher. In 1909 Jellicoe was merely a junior rear-admiral far down on the list, and was filling the office of Comptroller at the Admiralty when he was designated by Fisher as Commander-in-Chief of the British naval force in the North Sea and the Baltic in the event of a war with Germany.

Of Fisher's own skill and daring as a seaman a naval writer recalls an interesting incident. With only a small force under his command he was lying off Lisbon at the time of the Kaiser's famous telegram to King Carlos. One morning a German fleet of twice the size appeared in the Tagus with the idea, probably, of impressing the Portuguese. Fisher did not waste time exchanging salutes with the German admiral, but, with the dawn, he ran his little fleet directly through the middle of the German lines, leaving only about twenty yards clear on either side. It was a manoeuvre that might have wrecked a dozen ships, but Fisher had trained his squadron well, and not a vessel swerved a yard from the wake of the flagship. It is said that the German admiral was so amazed at the daring feat that they cheered the British ships as they passed. To the citizens of Lisbon who lined the shore saw something else to impress them. Though Lord Fisher retires, the nation cannot be deprived of the results of his ceaseless labor to make the British navy absolutely efficient, and equal to its great task of saving the Empire.

TOWN FOR WAR WORKERS

Homes to Accommodate Men Working at Woolwich Arsenal

Other housing problems, besides that of housing vast armies, arose during the war, and not the least of these was that connected with the workers at Woolwich Arsenal.

Since the war started the authorities at Arsenal have been engaging men "numbers never known before, with the result that men have come from all parts of London and the country to work there, and as a consequence, some of the workmen have to travel nearly across the city in order to get to work, the journey taking in some cases as much as an hour and a half.

So hard are the men working now that after the working hours and the time spent in eating and travelling are deducted, some of them can only manage to snatch about five or six hours' rest. The only remedy, of course, was to build a sufficient number of houses in Woolwich to allow all the extra workers at the Arsenal to live near their work.

Builders, however, did not come forward, apparently being scared by the idea that when the war is over half the houses will not be wanted. So the Government is taking the work in hand itself. In order to get over the difficulty a little, fifty houses are being built with all speed on a vacant space near the Arsenal, and have already been snapped up by eager men. In addition to this, the Office of Works is proceeding apace with another plan. On a large tract of agricultural land barely one mile and a half from the Arsenal, 1,000 houses are being rushed up.

RALLY TO THE COLORS! WHO WILL FOLLOW?

Editor Ontario.

Among the many individual and [illegible] which we have received in connection with the [illegible] announcing the safe arrival of friends and relatives with the 83rd Battalion, Canadian Expeditionary Force, now in England, one of us stop to think of how many from this city and the County of Ontario sailed on the Missanabie, how to their lot with the boys who have gone before, for King and Country, at the centre of decisive action, should be a stimulus and incentive for more to follow, for more are urgently needed. Nothing but live, clean manhood, properly trained, equipped and efficient, can now save the Empire for Canada, and Canada for the Empire.

Among the non-commissioned officers and men, the list of whose names I have not completed, but who are entitled to all the "service bonour" equally with the officers, the following officers from this old county of the Bay of Quinte sailed on the C.P.R. steamship and were conveyed by Britain's navy safe to the historic sailing-place at Plymouth,—

Lieut. D. H. Wilson.
Lieut. Harry Alford
Lieut. H. Thompson
Lieut. Arth. Powell
Lieut. R. Elliott.
Lieut. W. H. F. Ketcheson
Lieut. J. E. McCorkell
Lieut. R. E. Allen
Capt. D. Green
Capt. W. H. Hudson
Major A. E. Bywater
Major F. L. Vandervoort
—good showing of good men and true.

From a letter received by me from Colonel Preston, Commanding Officer of the 39th Battalion, C.E.F., he says, "the men have behaved splendidly throughout and we got away without trouble or confusion of any kind. There is a total of about 1650 officers and men of whom I am in military command. That was a splendid sendoff which Belleville gave us. We shall remember it as long as we live. Kindly convey our thanks to all our Belleville friends and sincere thanks for all their good wishes and many, many kindnesses."

The 39th is our Belleville Battalion mobilized and centered here. Let us follow their career and keep in constant touch with them. Confidence and good-cheer are reciprocal and helpful. No men realize this more than do the gallant boys, who, still living, represent us at the front after five months' constant fighting, in the 2nd Battalion, 1st Brigade, in France and Belgium. We are identified with them, and with the 21st and the Batteries, in both service and kinship.

To those who have the physical manhood of youth and vigour and who can be spared from great local responsibilities, let us say in all earnestness,—why are you too not serving?—You are the King's men, why not in the King's uniform? Why not even organize an effective Home defence? Why not even qualify in drill and at the targets? We know what you think of the lads at the front! Then, how can you look them in the eyes? And daughters of Belleville and the Bay of Quinte! Your mothers were splendid in sacrifice and service. What were YOU doing to stir to action those who have apparently not as realized the need or heard the call.

No once or twice in our great Empire's story
The path of duty was the way to glory.

Young men, strong and independent, for you there is but one duty in this crisis in Canada's history, do not shirk it. Live up to the standard of a man—rally to the Standard. Quit you like men, be strong.

Yours,
W. N. Poston, Lt.-Col.

Union Picnic Yesterday

Fully three hundred people were on the grounds of Twelve o'clock Point yesterday at the union picnic of the Victoria Avenue Baptist Church, Emmanuel Reformed Episcopal Church and Bethel Hall Sunday Schools. The Brockville maid of misfortune of trips to the park during the day and in the evening in spite of the cloudy weather, the moonlight trip was fairly well attended.

The coolness does not affect the park atmosphere, and the time spent in the afternoon and evening in a series of games was run off for the children of the Baptist Sunday School and Bethel. The events were very closely contested.

In the afternoon the Brockville took out a party out into Brighton bay. The voyage was not as pleasant owing to the heavy west wind.

The commencement of Red Cross Hospital supplies will be exhibited at the Parish Room, Dundas Street, on Friday, July 9th, afternoon and evening. Admission 10c. 17-19

Quinte Summer School Conference

Opening Session at Albert College—Public Invited to Evening Sessions Addresses

Albert College, around which building many happy memories cling for many pastors and former students in Bay of Quinte and other conferences, has again opened its doors in accordiality to the delegates of the Summer School. Because of its spacious accommodation, its many conveniences, and splendid situation, it is a most suitable place for the gathering together of this assembly of young people. The officers—Rev. Wm. Higgs, Millbrook, president; and Rev. W. W. Jones, Janetville, secretary—have qualified assiduously to present an attractive program, and one which would result in most practical benefit to those in attendance.

The result has been highly satisfactory, as was evidenced by the gratifying attendance at the opening session on Monday evening. The President was in the chair and conducted a very hearty song service preceding the session proper. Rev. E. W. Morgan leading in prayer. In a few brief remarks Rev. Higgs outlined the work as planned and expressed willingness to be of service in any way that would advance the interests of the school.

The genial Principal of the college, Rev. Dr. E. Baker, was most enthusiastic in his words of welcome to the hall of old Albert,—stating that the purpose in conducting the school, and the high ideals and aims it stands for and the inspiring helpful atmosphere these created, were sufficient inducements to secure a hearty greeting; but Dr. Baker included a personal welcome as well and extended to the best the college affords for the use of the visitors.

A foretaste of the good things in store for the intellectual nature was not withheld at this opening service. Rev. W. E. Morgan, who labored in China for many years previous to a prolonged furlough on account of illness, gave an excellent address, remarking that he felt very much at home in this neighborhood which recalled so many pleasant memories of former days and his associations here. The speaker said there were no geographical boundaries in work of the Kingdom of Christ—it was one great field of opportunity. The question has often been asked of the speaker, "Are you the work carried on in China?" We are anxious to know the progress our forces are making, whether it is in advance at the present time or in the Mission Field. There are ten to fourteen millions of people in China entrusted to the Canadians and there is one goal to reach—to bear witness to the truth that is gathered up in name of Christ, and to interpret Christ in such a way to those who know Him not. To accomplish this purpose, several departments of work have been organized: (1). The medical work in the Mission department. It has been said that China has been made open to the Gospel "at the point of a lancet." It affords opportunities to come into touch with the people and break down prejudice, each one receiving benefit of the doctor's skill in a certain degree of confidence implanted within him. The doctors and nurses meet a real need, the healing-doctors learn skill in practice or nothing about the science of medicine. (2) The dentist is also a necessity and his work is found among both natives and missionaries. (3) The printing press plays no small part among the labors in the mission field. Tracts, periodicals, tracts, magazines, etc., are printed, put into the hands of bookseller who are the distributing agents. (4) Educational —It is the policy of the Mission Board to establish a primary school where there is a mission or out-station, thereby affording opportunity of reaching the non-Christian parents then the children. The middle schools, which corresponds to our high schools are usually held at the Central Station; where they reside at the school. At the Union University a higher education may be obtained. These colleges are sending out men equipped not only mentally but spiritually, who will act as leaders in their own church and as leaven to the whole nation. (5) Evangelistic Sunday Schools, Epworth Leagues, Prayer Meetings, Catechism classes, all attord openings for the evangelist to teach the "Jesus doctrine." Rev. Mr. Morgan gave his address with a brief, earnest prayer.

Mr. F. E. O'Flynn, Belleville following with an address, report of which will appear later.

A cough is often the forerunner of serious pulmonary affections, yet there is a simple cure within the reach of all in Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, an old-time and widely recognized remedy, which if resorted to at the inception of a cold, will invariably give relief, and by overcoming the trouble, guard the system from any serious consequence. New York Artists in Belgian Benefit

On Wednesday evening, July 14th the people of Belleville will have an opportunity of hearing the famous artists sent out by the Belgian American Relief Fund of New York. The Hon. Hegbert Samuel has undertaken to bring this organization to Belleville, in order to give the citizens the pleasure of hearing such world famous artists as Wing Tabor Weimer—America's foremost character actor and humorist; Elisabeth Bassy, violinist and Cecile Bassy, soprano. The press reports speak in the highest terms of their work, and the cause in which they are working should appeal to everyone who has any charity in his heart.

These artists have volunteered their services to aid the Belgian Relief Fund at the end of their season, and each week, through their efforts thousands of dollars is turned into the fund, which has been the means of keeping alive thousands of suffering Belgians who are undergoing their martyrdom in order to preserve for us our freedom.

Every citizen of Belleville should attend this concert as they will have the pleasure of hearing a metropolitan entertainment which at any other time would cost $5.00 and at the same time they are giving to charity

Weed Question a Burning Issue

The weed question in Belleville is becoming such a burning question that some members of the Wharf St., debating club are getting hot under the collar. Others are said to have formed the happy idea of making collections of weeds from Belleville's streets to send to Toronto Exhibition, their intention being to advertise in the best possible manner to the province the products of vacant lots and streets, which unhampered and uncut grow to maturity. That is only one of the wards where the issue is so vacant. The sidewalks are festooned with tall avenues of lordly weeds covered with dust, to brush against, which sends a shower of road dust and dirt over the clothing of the pedestrian.

The Wharf Street club takes delight in welcoming visitors to town, particularly the soft-heeled yachtsmen and water tourists. One of Belleville's features they never point to with pride, however, that is the dust on South Front street. The pleasure in welcoming the visitors is broken by untold curses to get at the paltry works departments. "The banner and the strange device" which they are carrying contains the words—"Oil for South Front Street."

The silent slumbers of the old Sebastopol canon at Victoria Park are still unbroken. No hand, that of clergy or patriot has yet been raised to vitalize the old gun. It is safe and sound on the ground. There is no danger of it falling.

Strange to relate, contrary to all usage in fast moving Belleville, 12 signs warning people against destruction of public property on Victoria Park, are still conspicuous by their absence, although council authorized their production some time ago.

EXHIBIT OF LOCAL SHELLS

Finished Products of Marsh and Southorn Foundry For War Office.

Eighteen pound lyddite shells manufactured in Belleville for use against the Huns are now on exhibition in the show window of the Trenton Electric Company, Bridge Street. These products of the Marsh and Southorn Foundry are attracting much notice from the passing public. Steps in the process of manufacture are explained by the exhibits. First there is a bar of steel sawed off at the proper length for the shell. By its side is a piece of steel which has been bored. Another exhibit illustrates the turning at the top of the shell, the turning at the base for the insertion of the copper lead to engage in the groove of the rifling in the cannon's bore. There is also a finished shell.

The shell's interior is painted to prevent escape of the explosive and a cap is put in place of the fuse. The shells are not filled here.

World-Wide Popularity of Tea

"The tea trade the a much talk of enormous increase in the drinking of tea everywhere since the war began. Russia, already a large consumer of tea, is taking more and more to the beverage, now that vodka is banned. In France, tea is beginning to threaten the supremacy of coffee. The greater demand means higher prices in our households, especially as there is said to be no corresponding increase in the supply. Dealers are naturally uneasy as to the position."—London, Eng., "Times," 24th April.

WEDDING BELLS

KING—LITTLE.

A very pretty wedding took place at half past three o'clock, June 16th, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John R. Little, when their second daughter, Louisa, was married to Mr. Manson G. King. The Rev. James G. Robinson officiating. The bride was given away by her father, she looked charming in a gown of net and shadow lace over a foundation of Jap silk, and carried a bouquet of white carnations and ferns. Her sister, Miss Lena, was bridesmaid, and wore a dress of embroidered voile, she carried a bouquet of pink carnations and fern. The groom's brother, Mr. Allen King performed the duties of groomsman; while Miss Sarah, the bride's sister played the bridal chorus, and little Miss Florence, niece of the bride made a charming little flower girl.

The wedding took place on the lawn under an evergreen arch draped in white. After the ceremony and congratulations the bridal party repaired to the house, where an elaborate wedding supper was served. The tables were decorated with pink and white.

The bride was the recipient of many useful presents, the best wishes of a host of friends follow them for a long and happy wedded life.

Mr. and Mrs. King went west for a trip to the lake and summer resorts and many other places.—On their return they will reside at Enterprise where the groom has already taken up a prosperous farm.

Military Notes

Colonel Hemming has received order to start recruiting the new battalion, and the 253rd Battalion has at last been numbered or designated. Recruiting will begin at once throughout the Division. Recruits will be taken at Barriefield and from time to time will be sent to the mobilizing center.

The 39th Battalion now has 923 men. The Battalion is still short of 110 men, besides its base company, and there are some excellent chances for young men who are willing to enlist, and who want to find their way to good positions in the Kingston battalion.

Mr. C. E. Morgan, of Belleville, who led the singing at the Y.M.C.A. on Sunday night, left the camp for home yesterday, after spending a few days with his old college classmate, Lt. A. Watson.—Kingston Standard.

A number of soldiers are in town today from the artillery and infantry units at Barriefield.

Private Harry Wi...tin, a Belleville boy is visiting in town. He belongs to the 59th battalion.

Sergeant-Major Taylor of Kingston was in town yesterday.

Orders have been received from headquarters of the 3rd divisional area by the officers commanding units here to urge recruiting as much as possible for the new battalion. There will be no change in the recruiting and the work of enlistment has been carried on with much enthusiasm by the recruiting officers.

It is just possible that Belleville may within a short time be the mobilizing centre for another body of troops.

The dogs, which were mascots of the men of the 39th Battalion, have taken up with the few soldiers now boarding at the hotels in town. The khaki is the only color for them.

It will Cure a Cold.—Colds are the commonest ailments of mankind and if neglected may lead to serious conditions. Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil will relieve the bronchial passages of inflamation speedily and thoroughly and will strengthen them against subsequent attack. And as it eases the inflamation it will stop the cough because it allays all irritation in the throat. Try it and prove it.

Suppose you are a young lady and happen to be out of employment for the present.

Suppose that a business concern should send for you and offer you $8 a week for the next four weeks. You would thus earn $32. The amount of business training that you would get out of the employment would depend wholly upon the work given you to do. The salary would be pretty fair—in fact more than the average beginner receives. You would be expected to devote from eight to nine hours a day to the routine work.

Suppose on the other hand you were anxious to make more than $8 a week and felt confident of your ability to make yourself worth more.

In that case suppose that you entered The Daily Ontario Panama-Pacific Contest and won a trip to California you would have earned the equivalent of $87.50 a week for four weeks taking into account the value of the trip, or you would have earned $400.00 if you won the first cash prize of $50 in addition to the trip.

When you take into consideration and add to this the educational advantages you would have earned far more than any cash recompense could possibly mean to you.

In addition to this your work would not be over a few hours a day, and would largely be in the open, with no confinement.

Add to this the splendid training in executive business that you would receive and the benefits of the contest loom far ahead of any hum-drum business position.

If you sit down quietly and work out the proposition in a business-like way you will realize to some extent what an inviting offer a daily newspaper makes when it throws open the field to a group of ladies and gentlemen to take advantage of a contest plan such as The Ontario has outlined.

We invite serious consideration of our remarkable offer and suggest that if you are still hesitating, still undecided about the matter, that you call at The Ontario office or write for full particulars, or that if already enrolled as a candidate, you enter upon the work with the utmost earnestness. We believe that we have shown it to be worth while.

This article will strike the eyes of many citizens who cannot take advantage of the offer. But all know of some ambitious young lady or gentleman who might share in its rewards, and we suggest to them that they will confer a lasting favor on some deserving person by nominating or properly supporting her or him as a candidate.

The Daily Ontario Contest will provide the competitors with an opportunity to prove their business and executive capacity, and the winners will have proven themselves persons of ability, resourcefulness and courage. They will be proud of their achievement, but far more so will their friends be proud of their talents and capacity for business.

The work is just the kind that would appeal to any person who is determined not to be a dawdler or a stick-in-the-mud.

Think of the contest in the city and outlying districts are already enrolled, and new ones are still coming in.

There is nothing ungenteel, nothing immodest about it. It does not savor of charity, but is a straight business proposition, in which the rewards to the real workers are uncommonly high, but where no worker goes unpaid. It is a clean, fair, straight honest competition in which no one can lose.

Think the matter over thoroughly. Open a ledger account and reckon it up yourself.

LEDGER.

DR.	CR.
My time for part of a day for four weeks.	The trip, if I win it, the educational advantages of which cannot be estimated in dollars or cents.
	The business training in any event, whether I win the trip or the cash commission, also incalculable in more money value.
	The friendships that I will make of themselves far above price. The enlarged outlook in life, from making friends, winning success and acquiring the habit of making good.

The trial balance will show that the assets in such an undertaking are bound to far outnumber the liabilities, no matter what the results of the contest.

Then clinch the matter by making use of a little of your spare time for the next four weeks. The more candidates in the race the easier to win, as the vote will be that much more divided.

Fighting the Hidden Death.

Many a splendid story of heroism is being told of the mine-sweepers, those gallant men who, carrying their lives in their hands, scour the seas for the deadly hidden mines which are such a menace to our navy. One of these heroes has experienced on two separate occasions the sensation of being blown up in the trawler he happened to be in command of. This is Lieutenant Boothby. On December 19th he was serving on the Orienda when it was blown up. Only one man of the crew was killed, and Lieutenant Boothby managed to get the remaining members into safety, while on January 6th, while with the Banyers, he was again blown up.

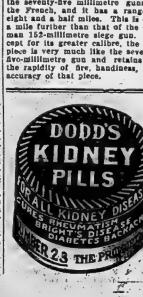
The second action, which resulted in the saving of his vessel, was that of Lieutenant Crossley. A couple of explosions occurred beneath the stern of his trawler, the Star of Britain. Directing the crew to their stations, the lieutenant himself crawled aft to the place near the screw shaft and ascertained the extent of the damage. Then he took measures which temporarily stopped the leak and enabled the pumps to be operated.

An M.P. Captured.

The first British M.P. to be captured by the Germans is Major Morrison-Bell, who is in the unusual position of being one of two twin brothers who both sit in the House of Commons. His brother, Captain Morrison-Bell, is so extraordinarily like him that even M.P.'s and other habitues of Westminster occasionally experience difficulties in knowing which is which. Instances have been known where speeches or questions by the wrong brother have been attributed in the press to the other, with the natural enough in the circumstances.

A Powerful Weapon.

Reports from the seat of war speak of the effective work done by the new French 1-kilo. field-gun. The gun is much more powerful than the seventy-five millimetre guns of the French, and it has a range of eight and a half miles. This is over a mile further than that of the German 152-millimetre siege gun. Except for its greater calibre, the new piece is very much like the seventy-five millimetre gun and retains all the rapidity of fire, handiness, and accuracy of that piece.



There Is Little Inspiration For War Artists in the Trenches.

A British war correspondent makes this comment on the effect of trench warfare on art:

At the Cantine Russe most of what remains of Bohemian Paris assembles every night to dine frugally, to dance gaily, and to discuss the war. Even the artist has abandoned talk of art. There is to be no Salon this year, and the world of art in Paris is very void of life. Out in the field there are one or two men who are doing their service with the pencil. They are the painters to the armies.

I met one of them in Montmiral, the scene of a terrific fight during the March offensive. War had passed well to the north, and the town was peaceful in aspect except for the occasional passing of a motor-ambulance on its way to the hospital installed in the Lycee. The artist lamented the changes that had come over war, changes which had robbed it of its beauty. The trench is the enemy of military art, he said in effect, and there is nothing whatever to be seen and studied by the artist in the great line. The whole movement of men and of horses is in the rear. Here is the rear, after having taken part in the retreat from the Belgian frontier, the artist, attired in the uniform of the artillery, had installed his studio and was busy studying the terrified exodus made in the field when there was still movement.

Georges Scott, the successor of Meissonier and Detaille as the artist of the French Army, has been busy with his pencil, but he too seems to have failed to find in the trench any inspiration for his art. His sketches and canvases deal with incidents behind the trench line, with moral rather than with actual facts of war. He has some touching pictures of the women of France and their dead, of the farewells and the rejoicings of the civilian population under their sufferings. But there is an almost complete lack of actual war pictures.

It is the print which is the art feature of the war in France. There have been hundreds of prints and engravings issued since the war began dealing with nearly every phase of the struggle, and its political aspects, with its anecdotes.

At the other end of the list come the cartoons by such masters as Forain, Veber, Leandre, and Ostoya. Veber's greatest success has been to depict "La Jirute est laches." It was one of the first to appear, and represents a German soldier with lips opened over cruel molars. Under his arms he carries bundles of shell-vomiting guns. The countryside underneath his gigantic strides is flaming and desolate. Another cartoon of his which has a special appeal to the British public represents Napoleon shouting "Vive l'Angleterre" from the top of his tomb in the Invalides.

The incident of the small boy in Alsace, who was shot and murdered with a toy gun and was shot down for his action has been seized upon by the war artist, and it has been illustrated in half a dozen prints. There is a curious unanimity about the popular idea of the fate which awaits the Emperor William and Francis Joseph. On the cheap prints they are almost invariably represented pushing themselves painfully along in a low, sledgelike vehicle by their hands, their legs having been amputated almost at the thigh.

SYNOPSIS.

In our apartment at the Ashleigh, Lenora, and Ashleigh diamond necklace stolen. The Hon. Ashleigh Lester is found in the hands of Sanford Quest, known and feared as the greatest criminologist in the world. He takes Lenora Ellis's maid, in the confusion and through bribery, between them and the use of electro-telepathic hypnotism, procures the impression of the key print, secures the diamonds and arrests the murderer, Macdougal, Lenora's husband, who nearly escaped his death in a tough tenement house while engaged in the interests of Quest.

SECOND INSTALLMENT.

"THE HIDDEN HAND."

CHAPTER VI.

Sanford Quest and Lenora stood side by side upon the steps of the courthouse, waiting for the automobile, which had become momentarily entangled in a string of vehicles. A little crowd of people were showing their way out on to the sidewalk. The faces of most of them were still shadowed by the three hours' spell of tense drama from which they had just emerged. Quest, who had lit a cigar, watched them curiously.

"No need to go into court," he remarked, "I could have told you, from the look of those people, that the scoundrel had escaped the death sentence. They have said their moral say—or rather their time, and they have been cheated of the one supreme thrill."

"Impossible, but his seems terrible enough," Lenora whispered, shuddering.

"Can't see the sense of keeping such a man alive myself," Quest declared, with purposeful brutality. "It was a cruel murder, fiendishly committed."

They were on the point of crossing the pavement toward the automobile when Quest felt a touch upon his shoulder. He turned and found Lord Ashleigh standing by his side. Quest glanced upward at Lenora.

"Run and get in the car," he whispered. "I will be there in a moment."

"I would not have stopped you just now, Mr. Quest," said Lord Ashleigh. "But my time is short, and anxious to renew his acquaintance with you. I think you must yet years ago."

Sanford Quest held out his hand to the man who had been standing a little in the background. Lord Ashleigh turned upon him.

"This is Mr. Quest, Edgar. You may remember my brother—Professor Ashleigh—a man of science, Quest! He has just returned from South America."

The two shook hands, curiously diverse in type, in expression, in all the appurtenances of manhood.

"I am very proud to make your acquaintance again, professor," Quest said. "Glad to know, too, that you hadn't forgotten me."

"My dear sir," the professor declared, as he released the other's hand with seeming reluctance, "I have thought about you many times. Your doings have always been of interest to me."

"I am sorry," Quest remarked, "that our first meeting here should be under such distressing circumstances."

The professor nodded gravely.

"It grieves me, professor," said Quest, "I think I must be getting along. We shall meet again, I trust."

"One moment," the professor begged, eagerly. "Tell me, Mr. Quest—I want your honest opinion. What do you think of my ape?"

"Of your what?" Quest inquired dubiously.

"Of my anthropoid ape which I have just sent to the museum. You know my claim? But perhaps you would prefer to postpone your final decision until after you have examined the skeleton itself."

A light broke in upon the criminologist.

"Of course!" he exclaimed. "For the moment, professor, I couldn't follow you. You are talking about the skeleton of the ape which you brought home from South America, and which you have presented to the museum here?"

"Naturally," the professor asserted, with mild surprise. "To what else? I am stating my case, Mr. Quest, in the North American Review next month; I may tell you, however, as a fellow-scientist, the great and absolute truth. My claim is incontestible. My skeleton will prove to the world, without a doubt, the absolute truth of Darwin's great theory."

"That so?"

"You must go and see it," the professor insisted. "You shall be permitted a special examination."

"Very kind of you," Quest murmured.

"We shall meet again soon, I hope," the professor concluded cordially. "Good-morning, Mr. Quest!"

The two men shook hands and Quest turned away.

His brother was waiting for him in the automobile. The professor rejoined his brother.

"They entered the taxicab and were driven almost in silence to the professor's home—a large, rambling old house, situated in somewhat extensive but ill-kept grounds on the outskirts of New York. The Englishman glanced around him, as they passed up the drive, with an expression of disapproval.

"A more untidy looking place than yours, Edgar, I never saw," he declared. "Your grounds have become a jungle. Don't you keep any gardeners?"

"I keep other things," he said serenely. "There is something in the air which would terrify your nice Scotch gardeners into fits if they found their way here to do a little digging up. Come into the library and I'll give you one of my choice cigars. Harris Cook is waiting to let us in. Any news, Craig?"

"Nothing has happened, sir," he replied. "The telephone is ringing in the study now, though."

"It will answer it myself," the professor declared, bustling off.

The professor took up the receiver from the telephone with a "Hello!" was mild and inquiring. He had no doubt that the call was from some admiring disciple. His change in his face as he listened, however, was amazing.

"George," he gasped, "the greatest tragedy in the world has happened! My ape is stolen!"

His brother looked at him blankly.

"Your ape is stolen?" he repeated.

"The skeleton of my anthropoid ape," the professor continued, his voice growing alike in sadness and firmness. "It is the curator of the museum who is speaking. They have just opened their doors. It has lain for two days in an anteroom. It is empty!"

Lord Ashleigh muttered something a little vague. The theft of a skeleton scarcely appeared to his unscientific mind to be a realisable thing. The professor turned back to the telephone.

"Mr. Francis," he said, "I cannot talk to you. I can say nothing. I shall come to you at once. I am on the point of starting. Your news has overwhelmed me."

He laid down the receiver. He looked around him like a man in a nightmare.

"The taxicab is waiting, sir," Craig reminded him.

"That is most fortunate," the professor pronounced. "I perceive now that I had no change with which to pay him. I must go back. Look after my brother, Jarvis. Craig, telephone at once to Mr. Sanford Quest. Ask him to meet me at the museum in twenty minutes. Tell him that nothing must stand in the way. Do you hear?"

The taxicab man drove off, glad enough to have a return fare, in about half an hour's time the professor stepped out of the cab in a hurry and hurried into the office There was a little crowd of officials there, whom the curator at once dismissed He rose slowly to his feet His manner was grave and mystified.

"Professor," he said, "we will waste no time in words. Look here!"

He threw open the door of an anteroom behind his office. The apartment was unfurnished except for one

CHAPTER VII.

The windows of Mrs. Rheinhold's town house were already wide with May. A crimson drugget stretched down the steps to the curbstone. A long row of automobiles stood waiting. Through the wide-flung door was visible a pleasant impression of flowers and light and luxury. In the nearer of the two large reception rooms Mrs. Rheinhold herself, a woman dark, handsome and in the prime of life, was standing to receive her guests. By her side was her son, whose twenty-first birthday was being celebrated.

"I wonder whether that professor of yours will come?" she remarked, as the stream of incoming guests slackened for a moment.

His face reconstructed, the boy replied, "but he promised he'd come. I never thought, when he used to drill facts into us at the lectures, that he was going to be a tremendous big pot."

Mrs. Rheinhold's plump finger toyed for a moment complacently with the diamonds which sparkled from her neck. "We can never tell in a world like this," she murmured.

"Here he is, mother!" the young man exclaimed suddenly. "Good old boy! I thought he'd keep his word."

Mrs. Rheinhold assumed the most encouraging and condescending smile as she held out both hands to the professor.

"It is perfectly sweet of you, professor," Mrs. Rheinhold declared.

Mrs. Rheinhold breathed a sigh of relief as she greeted her new arrivals.

The professor made himself universally agreeable in a mild way, and his presence created even more than the ordinary sensation which Mrs. Rheinhold had hoped for in her desire to show him ample honor she seldom left his side.

"I am going to take you into my husband's study," she suggested, later on in the evening. "He has some specimens of beetles—"

"Beetles," the professor declared, with some excitement, "occupied precisely two months of my time while abroad. By all means, Mrs. Rheinhold!"

"We shall have to go quite to the back of the house," she explained, as she led him along the darkened passages.

The professor smiled acquiescently. His eyes rested for a moment upon her necklace.

"You must really permit me, Mrs. Rheinhold," he exclaimed, "to admire your wonderful stones. I am a judge of diamonds, and those three or four in the center are, I should judge, unique."

She held them out to him. The professor laid the end of the necklace gently in the palm of his hand and examined them through a horn-rimmed eyeglass.

"They are wonderful," he murmured. "Wonderful! Why—"

He turned away a little abruptly. They had reached the back of the house and a door from outside had just been opened. A man had crossed the threshold with a coat over his arm and was standing now looking at them.

"How extraordinary!" the professor (To be continued)

SEVENTEEN PICNICKERS DEAD EIGHTY INJURED WHEN CAR LEFT TRACK AT QUEENSTON

Members of Woodgreen Methodist and St. John's Presbyterian Sunday Schools Were Returning After Happy Holiday When Motorman Lost Control of Loaded Trolley--Injured Rushed to Hospital.

Thirteen Toronto picnickers were killed and about 80 more injured, 20 of them seriously, when an International Railway trolley car, crowded with about 175 excursionists from Woodgreen Methodist and St. John's Presbyterian Churches, jumped the rails about 7 o'clock last evening on the last of three curves between Brock's monument and the radial station at Queenston.

The car was within a few hundred yards of its destination when the tragedy occurred. J. Gibson, a deck hand on the Chippewa, from the wharf saw the car leap the rails, and his version is that it swept round the curve with one side completely off the rails, seemed to buckle in the middle from the tremendous weight of passengers, then crashed over on its side and slid down a twenty foot embankment. The car did not turn over, but caught and held against the trunk of a tree. He said the following scenes were frightful.

Eight persons were dead when extricated from the debris of the trolley, and of a batch of about twenty-five seriously injured who were left at the Falls, two died on the way to the hospital. Three women died on the steamer Chippewa on the return trip from Niagara Falls to Toronto.

Within an hour after the accident nearly all Toronto knew a terrible tragedy had happened somewhere, but the wild rumors circulating said that three cars went over and the dead totalled two score. Thousands braved the downpour of rain and went to the Yonge Street wharf to meet the steamer Chippewa with her cargo of dead and wounded.

Westmoreland Avenue Church held a picnic at Queenston and one excited member of this church pushed his way through the cordon of police and asked if it were true that the Chippewa had sunk with everybody on board.

The pitiable scenes as waiting friends greeted the incomers for whose safety they feared, cannot be described. Still more tragic was the breaking of the sad news to many of the throng whose friends or relatives were either killed or injured.

The women's cabin of the steamer was turned into a hospital, on the return trip, with Lt.-Col. Marlow, director of military supplies for the Niagara Camp in charge. According to the ship's officers there was no lack of willing helpers; the difficulty was to select those who knew what should be done.

The story of the return trip reflects great credit on George Harkins, superintendent of St. Lawrence Market; ship's officers say he was the one who organized the work of separating the seriously wounded from those with lesser injuries, and consequently when the steamer drew into Yonge Street wharf with its cargo of wounded and dead, the ones whose lives were at low ebb were the first to be rushed away in the score of waiting ambulances.

LATER

TURKS' BIG ATTACK COMPLETE FAILURE.

PARIS, July 8.—The French war department this afternoon gave out the following statement on recent operations in the Dardanelles:

"In the Dardanelles on July 6, the Turks delivered a general attack, the most important they have undertaken since their efforts in the early days of May. Their purpose was to drive us into the sea.

"At 4 o'clock in the morning a very intense artillery fire was opened on our first lines, as well as on the zone behind these lines occupied by French and British troops. The enemy subsequently endeavored to deliver several infantry attacks, but not one was successful in coming as far as our trenches. Decimated by our artillery fire and mowed down by our rifles and our machine guns, most of our assailants never left the field of battle. During this action batteries of the enemy on the Asiatic coast fired without interruption. A Turkish cruiser, steaming between Maidos and Chanak, also took part in the engagement.

THE GALLIPOLI TASK.

Sir Ian Hamilton has lifted the veil of silence over the operations in the Dardanelles, concerning which there has been much anxiety, to give us a very encouraging account of the progress achieved on June 28, when the British soldiers, aided by the French artillery and the guns of the ships, captured seven lines of the enemy's trenches. No mention is made of the British losses, but from the nature of the fighting, and the experience of the operations to date it is to be feared that the casualty list will be long and the losses very heavy. The fighting on Gallipoli appears to be the trench work varied by occasional night attacks and bayonet charges with which the reports from Flanders have made us familiar, and the casualty lists have shown us how frightful the waste this kind of warfare can be.

A correspondent in the Dardanelles of the Manchester Guardian, gives a most forbidding description of the Turkish position at Achi Baba. The summit of Achi Baba, which is about 600 feet high, was a mile and a half distant from our nearest trenches on June 3. Up to that time the British had progressed a quarter of a mile, which brought the distance to not much more than a mile. It is a mile of natural glacis galleried right up to the redoubt on the top of the hill. There are hills on either side of Achi Baba, one ridge runs down to the Straits and is protected by one of those deep, long cloughs which are characteristic of the Gallipoli Peninsula. The Kereveadere, as the stream at the bottom of the clough is called, is the boundary between the Turkish and French lines, and, so far as we know, the French have never yet succeeded in crossing it. On the other side of the peninsula there is a similar clough which breaks the ground in front of Krithia and runs diagonally to the sea.

The British troops were in front of Krithia upon after the landing, but they have never crossed the clough at this point, though the seaward end is in their possession. This, then, is the nature of the position in front of them. Its centre is the huge glacis of Achi Baba. On either side are hills and cloughs extending outwards like horns. A peculiarity of the situation is that we have a fairly strong force—the Australians at Gaba Tepe—away round to the back of Achi Baba, which has maintained its position in spite of all efforts to dislodge it, although it is not apparently in touch except by sea with our main body.

It is possible that this may be one of the weaknesses of the Turkish position, though the hills opposite Gaba Tepe are doubtless entrenched in the same manner as Achi Baba itself. "A position so strong," says the Manchester Guardian, "can no more be carried by storm than Gibraltar, and if we could increase our rate of progress from 400 yards a month to 800 we should be accomplishing what no other army in the world could accomplish. The only short way would be an attack on the Turkish rear by Bulgaria or by Greece on Smyrna. As it is, the whole military force of Turkey except what she has in the Caucasus and Mesopotamia is available for the defence of Gallipoli."

But the Guardian philosophically says that it sees no help for it. The rewards of success will not be less for the delay. "An immediate victory," it says, "would probably not greatly help Russia in Galicia, and its main result would be to gain time for the Italians and prevent the Austrians from transferring very large numbers to the Italian frontier. If this be a correct view it may be hoped that the Italians may be able to spare a strong contingent for operations against Turkey. The triumph of M. Venizelos at the Greek elections is also very encouraging, for even if Greece could not see her way to fight in the Dardanelles she could be extremely useful in keeping Turkish forces occupied in Smyrna and in occupying the shores of Asia Minor. But the most valuable assistance, now as at any time since Turkey joined in the war, would be that of Bulgaria, and if M. Venizelos can heal the feud with Bulgaria and re-establish the old Balkan League it will be an even greater service to the Allies than the division that was to have been sent before the King of Greece intervened. Provided Turkey can be kept busy elsewhere in Europe and in Asia Minor, the problem before the Allies in the Dardanelles, though enormous, can be surmounted. But if Turkey is always to be free, as she is now, to dribble her enormous reserves through the isthmus as she requires them, the task becomes grave indeed."

Because the distance from other sources of supply makes the process an economical one, salt is now being extracted in large quantities from sea water at San Diego, Cal., says Popular Mechanics. During the very high tides that occur about twice a month the sea water flows into a large storage pond from which it is pumped into a succession of smaller and shallower ponds until the evaporation by the sun's heat has reduced it to a brine consisting of about sixty per cent. salt and forty per cent. water. In this process the gypsum, magnesium, and other foreign substances are deposited, so that when the brine is drawn off into the crystallizing vats it is rid of most of its impurities. In the crystallizing vats the salt is allowed to settle, the water being drawn off and fresh brine let in until there is a deposit about ten inches thick. The salt is then broken up and passed through a series of washers which convert it into "commercial" salt, good for such uses as tanning and pickling, but not fit for table use. To convert it into table salt, it must be dissolved in absolutely pure water and crystallized repeatedly until all trace of impurities has been removed.

The New York Sun describes a remarkable occurrence at Healdsburg, California, when large quantities of what is called meteoric floss fell from the sky. The shower, which began between seven and eight o'clock in the morning, and reached its maximum about ten, was seen by all the inhabitants of the town.

According to an eyewitness, the floss first appeared high up, in a perfectly clear sky, as a mass of stars, lustrous metallic sheets, and silvery ropes. It reached the earth in various shapes and sizes, ranging from minute particles to sheets twenty feet square. It fell in such quantities that long ropes and masses of it hung from the telephone and telegraph wires.

When the substance reached the warm earth it began at once to contract into fibrous masses, resembling asbestos, although tests proved that it was not that mineral. Most of it soon disappeared, although samples of it were saved and sent to the Lick Observatory, and to the observatory at Urbana, Italy.

If there is anything left within the range of Government administration that the Borden Government has not handed over to a Royal Commission, will somebody please name it, so that another job may be provided for the hungry followers.

The Archangel route has been open now for more than a month and there is no doubt that war munitions have been pouring in for the use of the Grand Duke's armies. When they reach the front Russia will "come back."

The 72nd Seaforth Highlanders of Vancouver has sent to the front 1,500 men. It now wants to go out as a battalion 1,100 strong—making in all 2,600 men. The Montreal Royal Scots have done a little better, some 400 men better.

Three more French-Canadian battalions are being formed for service in France and Flanders. The French-Canadian is responding to the call nobly.

LOVE AND WAR.

(From a Soldier at the Front.)

My love that uncommanded flies
To bring me thoughts of thee,
Or paints sweet pictures of thine eyes
To show them forth to me;
How can I bid her go away?
Yet why desire her longer stay?

For when beneath the cannon's blaze
Naught but despair I see,
And sigh the uncompleted days
That I have spent with thee.
How can I dam the tears that flow?
How can I do as others do?

For though impassioned hearts may beat
And loving souls may pine,
Yet never love was half so sweet
As that which makes thee mine;
If others' hearts are like to break,
Then needs must mine for thy dear sake.

Haply upon the field some day
Sore stricken I may lie,
Or death perhaps at last may pay
The price of victory,
But death itself can never be
So cruel as the loss of thee.

HOW TO GET THE MEN.

Up to the present time Canada has raised a force of about one-tenth of what she could raise if every man of military age were to be drafted. Though all the men who have been called for by the Government have come forward, except the last 25,000 now being mustered, and in many quarters Canada has received high praise for the alacrity with which she sprang to the assistance of the Mother Country, such a showing as we have made we should consider contemptible if made by Greece, Roumania or Bulgaria. We are fighting Germany with only about one-tenth of our strength, and Germany is not to be beaten by foes that fight her in that way. If, as we say and believe, this is our war as much as it is the war of England, France or Belgium, we shall have to get into it, and not leave the fighting to be done by one out of every ten men capable of doing it. Hon. Arthur Meighen said a few days ago that it might yet be necessary for every able-bodied Canadian to go to the front or to discharge some other equally necessary duty connected with the war.

It is said that recruiting for the draft of 35,000 men recently called for has been slow. If this be true, there are two conditions that would seem to explain it: First, Canadians have not realized as the Belgians and the French have realized what the war means, that they have from the first assumed the inevitable triumph of the Allies, and that we were not greatly needed; the second condition, which is partly connected with the first, is that such a small number as 35,000 was called for. The way to get 35,000 men speedily is to call for 100,000. If a demand were made for half a million men it would bring home to Canadians as nothing yet has done the extreme gravity of the situation, and the necessity for the greatest sacrifices. When only 35,000 men are called for the notion that Canada does not need to exert herself greatly is strengthened, and this notion makes it all the more difficult to enroll the men desired. If a call were to be put out for half a million men they would come forward, and the 35,000 immediately required could be selected from them. The names of the remainder would be taken, and they could be given some preliminary drill, so that when another batch of 35,000 was required it could be despatched without delay. Military authorities know better than laymen how many men are needed. They do not necessarily know better than laymen how the men are to be induced to volunteer—Toronto Mail.

MR. ROGERS INVOLVED.

There is little doubt in the minds of the public that Mr. Rogers is implicated in the Parliament Buildings scandal.

He hurried here from Ottawa in April, in reply to urgent calls for help and used all the influences at his command to stop the appointment of the Royal Commission. In this he failed.

It is now a matter of record that important telegrams passed between members of the Manitoba Government and Mr. Rogers having to do with the investigation and the means by which it could be stopped.

These telegrams have been destroyed by the G.N.W. Telegraph Company for the purpose—it is a reasonable assumption—of saving Mr. Rogers from exposure.

The Fullerton invention is merely a Rogers manoeuvre—an attempt to introduce a diversion for the distraction of the public mind.

As part of the manoeuvre, Mr. Rogers' newspaper in Winnipeg raises the cry that now that charges have been made against both parties in Manitoba the only thing to do is to abandon the investigation by courts of inquiry under the Provincial jurisdiction and let Bob do the work in a commission which he will himself appoint.

We may expect the Rogers press throughout Canada to echo this view. Their opinions will be republished here as evidence of a great wave of public opinion operating throughout the Dominion.

The game is so simple that a child could see through it. If this is the best that Bob and his high-priced legal advisers can do, their reputations for cleverness and resourcefulness are pitched much too high.

This investigation is bound to involve Mr. Roger's political ruin; but this inevitable end will be expedited if Mr. Rogers is guilty of the folly of an attempt at Dominion interference in the investigation now going forward in Manitoba.—Winnipeg Free Press.

Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

GALLANT FRENCHME. OBEDIENT UNTO DEATH

Three Officers in Turn Sacrificed Themselves to Carry Out Their Superior's Command

An account of the gallantry displayed by French officers and men, preparing the ground for an attack in Champagne is given by Georges Grisco.

"The scene was somewhere between Souain and Beausejour. It had been known that the order for an assault on the enemy's position was about to be given, and the general command had moved his quarters so that he might be among the men.

"The attack was fixed for six in the morning, and on the previous afternoon the Generalissimo for Captain X— as engineer officer, and instructed him that during the night the barbed wire entanglements before the parapet must be cut. At dawn he went to see that the work had been done, and noticed at the extreme right of the lines two or eight slashes still standing. Captain Z—, when questioned, said this particular point was swept from front and flank by the enemy's mitrailleuses, that the work was difficult, and that he had not considered it likely that a few inches of obstacles would hamper the assault. The General told him that it was there that the right hand communicated, trench emerged, and it was the way the reserve company would come to their support in case of need. That point it would be daylight in half an hour.

The Captain assured the General that in half an hour the wires would be removed. Captain Z— picked out four of his sappers, and told them what was required of them. The place was already beginning to speed, the first big shells came screaming through the air. Presently the General saw Captain Z— making his way slowly towards him. All he could say in a weak voice was, "Order,—not carried out."

The General sharply asked him what he meant. There was no reply, but the Captain, opening his dolman, showed a shirt all spotted with red. At the same moment blood burst from his mouth, and he fell dead at the superior's feet.

Lieutenant T——, next in command, was sent for. It was reported that as soon as he heard the captain had been killed he set out with three men—all of them crawling—to try and cut the wire. The minutes dragged by and the bombardment became infernal. The General, fretting at the delay, sent for news.

"Lieutenant T— has not come back," the sergeant told him. "He was struck as he reached the wire, but crawled on with his hands and knees. However, he kept well down in a dip of the ground, and behind a lump of earth his cap could be seen. Then it moved a little. Then he moved no more. The men returned—two of them wounded. Second Lieutenant V— took command and left the trench at once. He must be dead by this time now."

The General was preparing to telephone to the batteries telling them to delay their fire for a little when he saw Lieutenant V—— coming back, clinging to the shoulders of two soldiers, he between them, his head terribly limp, for the officer had had both knees shattered. General X— ran to him and aided him encouraging his wound, but the lieutenant, struggling into a military frame-work, cried: "The order has been executed."

A TITLED PRIVATE

Lord Crawford Set Fine Example by Enlisting as Stretcher-bearer

Those acquainted with the sporting qualities, enthusiasm, and energy of Lord Crawford were scarcely surprised at the splendid example he is setting to the Front as a stretcher-bearer with the Royal Army Medical Corps.

His lordship greatly distinguished himself in many directions. He is a Knight of the Thistle, Lord-in-Waiting, having inherited from his father that love of pictures which has made him the moving spirit of the National Art Collectors' Fund. One of his lordship's notable characteristics is his rapid walk.

No one enjoyed the joke more than Lord Crawford himself when, after he had warned the government for weeks about the danger of submarines on the East Coast and the inadequate precautions which had been taken to guard against them, he himself one night was routed out of his house by a military guard, who, on demanding to see what there was a light burning in one of the rooms, met Lord Crawford, which commanded an extremely wide view over oth shores of the Firth of Forth.

Perhaps one of the best stories told of Lord Crawford is that concerning a theory he once held that pickpockets always manoeuvred from the opposite side to that of the pocket which is intended to "pick." But a friend, walking with him one day in the East-end, showed him that his contention was wrong. He slyly inserted his hand into his friendship's pocket on the same side as he was walking—the right. But Lord Crawford felt the intrusion, and, promptly turning to the man who happened to be on the left, he punched him in the chest, with the exclamation, "Ah! would you!" A fight was averted only by the confession of the offender and the placid temper of the rather large person who had been insulted.

MAJOR HAMILTON GAULT

Montreal Man For Many Years Took Serious View of Military Work

Major A. Hamilton Gault, the Montrealer who equipped and raised at his own expense the Princess Patricia Canadian infantry long before they dreamed of his time to military wor. and always trained seriously. He saw service in the South African campa gn in the Second Canadian Mounted Rifles in Cape Colony and the Transvaal, and was awarded the Queen's medal with three clasps.

Since his return to Canada he resumed his business interests and his military work as an officer of the Fifth Royal Highlanders. When the present war commenced he was not long getting ready or the fi'rost. He raised the Princess Patricia's, a regiment recognized as one of the finest ever to leave the Dominion's shores, composed, for the most part, of men who had seen service in the Imperial army. Major Gault was given a commission with the rank of lieutenant-colonel, and before leaving for the front Princess Patricia, after whom the regiment was named, himself presented the regimental colors.

The battalion, headed by their band, marched through the streets of London Times. "The last is as follow:

"In a civil court an officer or soldier will remove his head-dress while the judge or magistrate is present, except when the officer or soldier is on duty under arms with a party or escort, inside the court.'

A HIGHLAND FUNERAL IN FRANCE

The following is an extract from a letter describing the funeral of Lieut. A. F. Paterson of Beauty of the Camerons, which took place at Rouen on June 7th.

The funeral took place yesterday in a cemetery just on the outskirts of the town. He was accorded a full military funeral. The funeral party consisted of men of his own Battalion, Gordons, Seaforths, Black Watch, and London Scottish. Pipers of the Seaforths played The Flowers of the Forest and "The Land of the Leal," while a party of French soldiers fired the last salute over the open grave. Myself and Charlie Hercher (a Beauty boy) were two of the pall-bearers. The coffin was of plain oak, and there were several wreaths. The Rev. Mr. Campbell, Presbyterian chaplain attached to No. 6 General Hospital, Rouen, officiated. The grave has been marked by a cross and has been given a number."

Lieut. Paterson was in the thick of Neuve Chapelle battle and came out unscathed, but was dangerously wounded at Festubert and died from the effects of his wounds.—Northern Chronicle, Inverness, June 22.

Letter From Corp. F. Slater

Mrs. McLean, 35 John Street, has received from Corporal F. Edgar Slater, the following letter—

June 20, 1915.

Dear Mrs. McLean,—

Your very welcome letter to hand some time ago but since receiving it we have been busy in the trenches again and have come across the worst of experienced by us, so it has taken me a few days to rest up and get my nerves settled down. The shells of the wounded were terrific again and the bombardment was awful, you can hardly imagine what it is like when the big shells start blowing the trenches to pieces and knocking over your head. Those big shells seem to shake one's nerves since as much as doing harm otherwise. When they burst there is a terrific concussion and the pieces of steel casing fly in all directions and I pity any one near it. My wounds are all healed now and I came back to my battalion nearly a month ago and have received another stripe since. I am a full corporal now. You people at home can read full descriptions of all these fights in the papers, so I won't attempt to describe any of them.

And now I am more than pleased to be honored by yourself and class in the unique way which you have done it. And I wish you would accept my sincere thanks for your kindly interest in me both now and in years past. I am sure it has always helped me greatly and will always continue to do so. Also I ask your class and yourself to accept my thanks for their honoring me, or my name picture. I only hope that I may be spared to return, so I can visit the Sunday School at some time and personally thank you all. We have at present a Capt. Gordon acting as Presbyterian Chaplain, our regular chaplain being in the hospital. I was not able to get to Divine Service this morning as I am corporal of the guard today and have to look after things at the billet. We are billeted in an orchard, the men sleeping on the ground. I am a little fortunate as one of us are sleeping in a big farmer's wagon with straw and newspapers to keep us warm. It is surprising how happy the boys are, under all conditions, but most of us are rather tired and could stand a month or two of rest up, but then the poor English troops are worse off than we are, and they have been at it since last August. And now I must call this a letter although I know it is a poor production, but please believe me to always carry a kindly feeling towards the Old Sunday School and its work. With best regards for everyone, I am always,

Yours sincerely,
F. E. Slater.

Returns From Front.

Sergeant W. H. Bailey has returned from the front suffering from gas poisoning. The Toronto Star Last evening published a photograph of him and stated that he was a Belleville man.

The sergeant's name does not appear on the list of N.C.O's who left Belleville with the first contingent, and no one knows him here.

An Ideal Summer Place

Two hundred and twenty seven miles from Montreal, nestling in a charming valley amongst the New England hills, is Bethel, Maine, one of the prettiest and healthiest New England villages on the main line of the Grand Trunk Railway. Owing to its high altitude (800 feet), the air is pure and bracing. The principal attractions are mountain climbing, motoring, riding, driving, boating and fishing. The "Bethel Inn" offers the best of accommodation. Fuller particulars with illustrated descriptive matter may be had on application to Mr. C. E. Horning, District Passenger Agent, Union Station, Toronto.

Trenton Hotel to Secure New Tenant

Grave Charges Made—Three "Blind Pigs" Said to be in Operation Nearby.

The decision of the Ontario License Board in the Trenton Hotel case yesterday was that the hotel would be given until August 1 to get a new tenant, and that Mr. H. A. Cook, the present proprietor, must relinquish his post.

The final hearing before the Ontario License Board on the Trenton Hotel case was heard yesterday in Toronto. Mr. A. Abbott appeared for Mr. H. A. Cook, the proprietor, to sum up the case for the renewal of the license. Mr. Abbott claimed that the opposition to Mr. Cook was due to animosity on the part of the inspectors and the private citizens who had written to the Board.

"There are three 'blind pigs' being operated in one block near the hotel," said Mr. Abbott, "and the men who are running these are behind the agitation. Men have been seen coming out of these under the influence of liquor, week-days, Sundays and holidays. Some of these men are on the Indian list, and could not get a drink in any hotel in town."

Mr. Abbott made other charges of a serious character against a clergyman of Trenton and a member of the Town Council.

Mr. Eudo Saunders, Provincial License Officer, criticised Mr. Abbott, who had been a member of the old local license board, for not acting to it that the "blind pigs" were put out of business. "It is a perfect outrage," declared Mr. Saunders, "that this condition should exist and the local people who are aware of it do nothing to remedy it. Why should you throw on this Board the burden of enforcing the law throughout the whole Province. What was the local police doing? It would seem that they were not doing their duty."

"We are unable to secure convictions unless the case is brought by this board," said Mr. Abbott.

"You mean to say that you cannot get a conviction even on indisputable evidence?" asked Mr. Flavelle.

"The Magistrate won't convict! That is what I thought," said Mr. Saunders.

"If the Magistrate refuses to convict," declared the chairman, "and is not only doing his duty on the Bench as he should it is up to the people of Trenton to ask that a new Magistrate be appointed."

Mr. Saunders stated that the police court records showed seven or eight cases against Cook and that he had been convicted over three times. "It is intimated," he declared, "that there should have been a larger number of convictions if Cook had not had influential friends."

There are two Kitcheners, who is the other one?. Ask your Daddy.

Distance Walker Reaches Town

On Way From Frisco to Montreal, Six Weeks Ahead of Time.

Percy Arnold of West Hartlepool, England, arrived in Belleville at 5 o'clock last evening on a wager tour from San Francisco to Montreal. Mr. Arnold is staying at the Y.M.C.A. and will leave tomorrow morning at 9.30 He expects to finish his tour in five days, being about six weeks ahead of time.

His left Oakland, San Francisco on March 4th to walk to Montreal on a wager of $2,000 against another man who is now 925 miles behind at St. Louis. The trip was to be completed by September 1st.

Mr. Arnold visited Mayor Panter this morning and secured from him a certificate that he arrived in Belleville on foot.

The champion pedestrian covered 47 miles yesterday. He is a very rapid walker. He always puts up at the Y.M.C.A. wherever he stops. He will, he says, even walk an extra ten miles to reach an association building. He gave the Ontario this morning the following appreciation of the Y.M.C.A.

"I make it my place to stay at the Y.M.C.A. in every town I strike. I have always found it the most homelike place all through the country."

He has been a Y member for four or five years and says, "All members are always welcome in a Y in every city."

His tour comprises about 3,600 miles. It was arranged by an English newspaper. Mr. Arnold sells pictures on his travels.

Who Will be the First to Record 10,000 Votes?

In the Ontario's Great Popularity Campaign--District I. Still in the Lead, but District V. is Running a Close Second--Watch for the Voting Coupons in Each Night's Paper.

Who will be the first candidate to record ten thousand votes in the great Popularity Contest? Already one live candidate in District I. has almost 6,000 votes to her credit, and a large number of others are well over the 4,000 mark.

Judging by the returns up to date there will be an enormous vote cast for the interest is so general. Each community is strongly supporting its favorite candidate and the rivalry will be exceedingly keen and spirited.

A number of coupons have been received during the past few days for which the date of expiration was July 5th, and these all had to be consigned to the w.p.b. We must ask candidates and all others who are saving coupons for candidates to observe the date of expiration. These now running in the paper will be out and valueless after July 12.

The regular ballots for subscriptions however are good at any time up to the close of the contest.

Candidates in their personal letters to the Ontario report that the work of soliciting subscriptions and coupons is a real pleasure—it is so easy. The Ontario bears no excellent a reputation as a local news medium that candidates have not the slightest difficulty in securing renewals and new subscriptions.

We welcome several new candidates into today's list. There is still plenty of time for anyone to enter and to win out. One five-year subscription will count more votes than any candidate now has to his or her credit.

Candidates should turn in the money for new subscriptions as quickly as possible to the office. The votes in exchange may be deposited at the time or retained until a later date by the candidate, but if the paper is started at once you will not only have the benefit of the votes for the subscription but in addition, the votes contained in the coupons amounting to 50 votes a week, that cost nothing except the effort of filling them out.

We have asked the Post Office Department at Ottawa about postage on coupons when filled out as required, and have been informed that letter rate is required. That is to say three cents for the first ounce outside the city and two cents inside the city.

The next date of expiration however will be made for a much later period—July 26th, so that the work of collecting and the bill for postage will both be reduced.

Our Soldiers Letters

As Printed in the Belleville Papers

Across the world they're fighting,
The boys, fair Canada's pride,
And here at home we are reading,
The accounts of those who died.

Upholding the nation's honour,
There in the thick of the fight,
And Spafford writing at night-time,
By the flickering, flaring light.

To tell of our heroes struggling,
'Gainst odds, and battling well,
And Leo Rose—brave laddie
Who smiling, dauntless fell.

Buried in that far garden,
Where the flowers, fair bloom,
While his hero-soul is ushered,
To a mansion of many rooms.

For our God is the God of battles,
(You know, for you know His words),
And quelled shall be the evil,
For Right must not be blurred.

Clever, indeed, are the letters,
Of the boys from our Belleville Schools,
They reflect our teacher's training;
With wise discipline of rules.

Teddy and Pat have written,
And others, we read them all,
Of the Germans' cruelties now Power,
If we, each name, recall.

But again we re-read Spafford's,
Like him quote—"God's will be done,"
In his cares many souls be waiting;
The verdict be—you've won.

And meanwhile, write your letters,
They are kept at your mother's side,
We are proud of our heroes fighting,
For, our soldiers, are Canada's pride.

And our dead shall be in remembrance,
The spirit of the hero shall live,
It remains in the National honour,
In its warp and woof doth weave.

An original poem by Alice Pyne McDavitt, Foxboro, Ont.

Frankford Soldier Writes From France

Mrs James Murney of Frankford has received the following interesting letter from Ler son, Sergt. Murney, who enlisted from the 49th regiment for the First Overseas contingent.

France, June 18th, '15

My Dear Mother,—

I was glad to receive your two letters yesterday evening the last one dated June 2 and to hear you had received mine and was contented to know that I am still alive. You also stated you had seen in the papers that I was wounded, well I never was wounded yet, and it is too bad that such reports will be published to cause people to worry. I haven't been sick a day and I was in the trenches for four days under heavy shelling and five this last week. Some of our company happened to get it. I tell you it isn't all sunshine to be in the trenches not knowing when a shell might happen to drop and blow a few of us to pieces. I have had good luck so far and I hope it will be the same until this war is over. I have all friends at home are well. I suppose Jim thought he provided and was gone but far from it. I am able to do quite a bit yet. I was surprised to get so many letters last night from Frankford, Edith and Katie wrote to me. I tell you it cheers a man up at this game to get a letter from home. You tell Scout that I will not apply for home even if I was wounded. I intend to stay right here as long as health permits and do my duty. Well I have quite a few letters to write and I know as long as you have a word from me it is sufficient to ease your mind. If after an engagement at any time I haven't time to write I will drop you a card. Goodbye for the present, God bless you and keep you till we meet again With best love to all.

I remain your loving son,
Albert.

This is the time of year when a man wants to wear as little as possible. If you wear one of our cool Two-Piece Suits, it's certain you won't "wear a worried look."
But there are two considera'ions in a Two-Piece Suit which call for the most competent tailoring. In the first place, the coat must be so tailored as to obviate the need of a vest. In the second place, as the fabrics are extremely light in weight, the tailoring must be done with the greatest skill.
Fabrics of cerefully selected Sun-Proof Serges, Worsteds, Homespuns, etc., etc.
It you'll step in and try on one of these cool Suits and then take a look in the mirror, you'll be surprised to see what a swell and comfortable looking fellow you are.

"Stolen!" Mrs. Rheinholdt shrieked. remarked. "In that you, Craig."

"Yes, sir," he replied. "There is a Palastorm, so I ventured to bring your mackintosh."

"Very thoughtful," the professor murmured approvingly, "I have a weakness," he went on, turning to his hostess, "for always walking home after an evening like this. In the daytime I am content to ride. At night I have the fancy always to walk."

"We don't walk half enough," Mrs. Rheinholdt sighed, glancing for an her somewhat portly figure. "Dixon," she added, turning to the footman who had admitted Craig, "take Professor Ashleigh's servant into the kitchen and see that he has something before he leaves for home. Now, professor, if you will come this way."

They reached a little room in the far corner of the house. Mrs. Rheinholdt apologized as she switched on the electric lights.

"It is a cosy little place to bring you to,' she said, "but my husband used to spend many hours here, and he would never hear of anything to be moved. You see, the specimens are in these cases."

The professor nodded. His general attitude toward the forthcoming exhibition was that of a politeness. As the first case opened, however, his manner completely changed. Without taking the slightest further notice of his hostess, he adjusted a pair of horn rimmed spectacles and commenced to immerse himself in his work. Mrs. Rheinholdt, who did not understand a word, strolled around the apartment, yawned and finally interrupted a little stream of eulogies, not a word of which she understood, concerning a rare beetle with yellow spots.

"I am so glad you are interested, professor," she said. "If you don't mind, I will rejoin my guests. You will find a shorter way back if you keep along the passage straight ahead and come through the conservatory."

"Certainly! With pleasure!" the professor agreed, without glancing up.

Mrs. Rheinholdt's reception, not withstanding the temporary absence of its presiding spirit, was without doubt an unqualified success. In one of the distant rooms the younger people were dancing. Philip Rheinholdt, with a pretty young debutante upon his arm, came out from the dancing room and looked around amongst the little knots of people.

"I wonder where mother is?" he remarked. "She told me—"

The young man broke off in the middle of his sentence. He, too, like many others in the room, felt a sudden thrill almost of horror at the sound which rang without warning upon their ears—a woman's cry, a cry of fear and horror. Mrs. Rheinholdt, hardly knowing how or why her splendid composure a thing of the past, a panic-stricken, terrified woman, stumbled into the room. She seemed on the point of collapse. Somebody—her sister, they got her into an easy chair.

"My jewels!" she cried. "My diamonds!"

"What do you mean, mother?" Philip Rheinholdt asked quickly. "Have you lost them?"

"Stolen!" Mrs. Rheinholdt shrieked. "Stolen there in the conservatory!"

They gazed at her open-mouthed, incredulous. Then a still, quiet voice from the outside of the little circle interposed.

"Instruct your servants, Mr. Rheinholdt, to lock and bar all the doors of the house," the professor suggested. "No one must leave it until we have heard your mother's story."

He had just taken the professor into the little room my husband used to call the museum," Mrs. Rheinholdt explained, her voice still shaking with agitation. "I left him there to examine some specimens of beetles. Then I felt that I would come back through the conservatory, which is the quickest way. I was about half way across it when suddenly I heard the switch go behind me and all the electric lights were turned off. I couldn't imagine what had happened. While I hesitated I saw—"

She broke down again. There was no doubt about the genuineness of her terror.

"I saw a pair of hands—just hands—no arms—nothing but hands—coming out of the darkness! They gripped my diamonds. I suppose it was just for a second. I think—I lost consciousness for a moment, although I was still standing up. The next thing I remember is that I found myself shrieking and running here—and the jewels are gone!"

"You saw no one?" her son asked incredulously. "You heard nothing?"

"I heard no footsteps, I saw no one," Mrs. Rheinholdt repeated. The professor turned away.

"If you will allow me," he begged, "I am going to telephone to my friend Sir Sanford Lenora. He is a criminologist. An affair so unusual as this might attract him. You will excuse me—"

The professor met the great criminologist and his assistant in the hall upon their arrival. He took the former at once by the arm.

"Mr. Quest," he began, "in a sense I must apologize for my peremptory message. I am well aware that as to ordinary jewel robbery does not interest you, but in this case the circumstances are extraordinary. I ventured therefore, to summon your aid."

Sanford Quest nodded shortly.

"As a rule," he said, "I do not care to take up one affair until I have a clean slate. There's your skeleton still bottled up, professor. How ever, where's the lady who was robbed?"

"I will take you to her," the professor replied.

Mrs. Rheinholdt's story, by frequent repetition, had become a little more coherent, a trifle more circumstantial, the perfection of simplicity and utterly incomprehensible. Quest listened to it without remark and finally made his way to the conservatory. He requested Mrs. Rheinholdt to walk with him through the door by which she had entered and stop at the precise spot where the assault had been made upon her. Then one or two more plants knocked down from the tiers on the right-hand side, and some disturbance in the mould where some large palms were growing. Quest and Lenore together made a close investigation of the spot. Afterwards, Quest walked several times to each of the doors leading into the gardens.

"There are four entrances altogether," he remarked, as he lit a cigar and glanced around the place. "Two least into the gardens—one is locked and the other fast—one connects with the back of the house—the one through which you came, Mrs. Rheinholdt, and the other leads into your reception room, into which you passed after the assault. I think now," he said to you will permit me to examine the gardens outside for a few minutes, alone with my assistant, if you please."

For almost a quarter of an hour Quest and Lenore disappeared. They all looked eagerly at the criminologist on his return.

"It seems to me," he remarked, "that from the back part of the house the quickest way to reach Mayton avenue would be through the conservatory and out of that door. This is a path leading from that outside straight to a gate in the wall. Does anyone that you know of use this means of exit?"

Mrs. Rheinholdt shook her head.

"The servants might occasionally," she remarked doubtfully, "but not on nights when I am receiving."

The butler stepped forward. He was looking a little grave.

"I ought, perhaps, to inform you, madam, and Mr. Quest," he said, "that I did, only a short time ago, suggest to the professor's servant—the man who brought your mackintosh, sir," he added, turning to the professor—"that he could, if he chose, make use of this means of leaving the house. Mr. Craig is a personal friend of mine, and a member of a very select little club we have for social purposes."

"Did he follow your suggestion?" Sanford Quest asked.

"Of that I am not aware, sir," the butler replied. "I left Mr. Craig with some refreshment, expecting that he would remain until my return, but a few minutes later I discovered that he had left. I will inquire in the kitchen if anything is known as to his movements."

He hurried off. Quest turned to the professor.

"Now that we both are young, this man Craig, professor?" he asked.

The professor's smile was illuminating, his manner quite but convincing.

"Craig," he asserted, "is the best servant, the most devoted man I have ever breathed. He would go any distance out of his way to avoid harming a fly. I cannot even train him to procure for me the simplest specimens of insect life. Apart from this, he is a man of some property, which he has no idea what to do with. He is, I think I may say, too devoted to me to dream of ever leaving my service.

"You think it would be out of the question, then," Quest asked, "to associate him with the crime?"

The professor's confidence was sublime.

"I could more readily associate you, myself or young Mr. Rheinholdt here with the affair," he declared.

His words carried weight. The little breath of suspicion against the professor's servant faded away. In a moment or two the latter returned.

"It appears, madam," he announced, "that Mr. Craig left when there was only one person in the kitchen. He said good-night and closed the door behind him. It is impossible to say, therefore, by what exit he left the house, but personally I am convinced that, knowing of the reception here to-night, he would not think of using the conservatory."

"Most unlikely, I should say," the professor murmured. "Craig is a very shy man. He is at all times at your disposal, Mr. Quest, if you should desire to question him."

Quest nodded absently.

"My assistant and I," he announced, "would be glad to make a further examination of the conservatory, if you will kindly leave us alone."

They obeyed without demur. Quest took a seat and smoked calmly, with his eyes fixed upon the roof. Lenore went back to her examination of the overturned plants, the mold and the whole ground within the immediate environs of the assault. She abandoned the search at last, however, and came back to Quest's side. He threw away his cigar and rose.

"Nothing there?" he asked, laconically.

"Not a thing," Lenore admitted.

Quest led the way toward the door.

"Then, sir," he decided, "we'll up against something big. There's a new hand at work somewhere."

"But there's no trace yet, Mr. Quest!" she asked, smiling.

"Not the ghost of one," he admitted gloomily.

* * * * *

Along the railroad causeway of Lupton, streets keeping close to the skelter of the house, his mackintosh turned up to his ears, his hands buried in his pockets, a man walked swiftly along. At every block he hesitated and looked around him. His manner was cautious, almost furtive. Once the glare of an electric light fell upon his face, a pallid with fear, and his most hopeless with despair. He walked quickly, yet he seemed to have no idea as to direction. Suddenly he paused. He was passing a great building, brilliantly lit. For a moment he thought that it was some place of entertainment. The thought of entering seemed to occur to him. Then his left arm touch upon his arm, a man in uniform spoke to him.

"Step inside, brother," he invited earnestly, almost eagerly, notwithstanding his monotonous nasal twang. "Step inside and find peace. Christ is the Lord who will help you. Throw your burden away on the threshold."

The man's first impulse at being addressed had seemed to be one of terror. Then he recognized the uniform and hesitated. The man took him by the arm and led him in. There were the best part of a hundred people taking their places after the singing of the hymn. A girl was standing up before them on a platform. She was commencing to speak, but suddenly broke off. She had caught sight of the face of the professor's confidential servant stood, hesitating.

"Come and tell us your sins," she called out. "Come and have them forgiven. Come and start a new life in Christ. Come, my friend, you, in your own words, 'Throw it, sir,' on the threshold."

For a moment the waif from the rain-swept world hesitated. The light of an infinite desire flashed in his eyes. Then he dropped his head. These things might be for others. For him there was no hope. He shook his head to the girl, but sank into the nearest seat and on to his knees.

"He repents!" the girl called out. "Some day he will come! Brothers and sisters, we will pray for him."

The rain dashed against the windows. The only other sound from outside was the clanging of the cars. The girl's voice, frenzied, exhorting, almost hysterical, pealed out to the roof. At every pause the little gathering of men and women groaned in sympathy. The man's frame was shaken with sobs.

Lasher Escapes From Jail.

Walter Lasher, a young man who has been in jail on remand from the police court awaiting trial on a charge of stealing a bicycle belonging to Mr. C. H. Sanctuary, made his escape from the county jail this morning.

Lasher was in the main corridor in Sheriff Ponton's office about seven o'clock some food was brought in to him by the cook and the officials who left the heavy iron door open for a moment or so while he handed the food to one of the cells. Apparently Lasher was in hiding behind a turn in the corridor and as he had rubber heels on his boots it is thought he quickly went out of the door. No body saw him nor has there been any one seen him since. But it is known that he was in the corridor early this morning. The escape is believed to be the manner of his escape.

When the food had been handed to the prisoner, the officer locked the door and went out. The fact that Lasher was not in jail was not discovered for some time.

Every effort is being made by county and city constables and police to locate him.

Military Notes

Lieut. Harry S. Clapp, V.S., of the 34th Battery, C.F.A., has been appointed veterinary officer of the 6th Canadian Mounted Rifles and will report at Kingston for a few days. Lieut. Clapp was one of the original members of the 34th which has done much gallant service at the front.

Certainly inspiring is the sacrifice made by eight boys who have their all married with an average of three children each and a number of them 12row up high paid jobs in order to fully recruit the ontore. These men are surely going from the most patriotic motives for they are not the class of men to be stampeded by unworthy cry, nor would they sacrifice the ties with home and loved ones for the mere experience of fighting. Their noble action in enlisting in a ringing challenge to the unfettered youth with fewer ties and little responsibilities to throw off their enlisting and by becoming recruits to do something to better humanity or than a lifetime of lounging around and standing on street corners.

Complaint of Smoke.

Some person complained to the police yesterday of a smoke nuisance on Front street. Some body was using soft coal for cooking in a restaurant. No action can be taken as Belleville has no smoke bylaw.

Girl Guides Active.

New companies of the Girl Guides have lately been formed in Queen Madoc and Morrisburg. Toronto has thirty companies and everywhere the members are assisting in Red Cross work.

Unsatisfactory Crossing.

Belleville, July 7th

Editor Ontario—

Dear Sir,—I wish to draw attention to the disgraceful condition of two railway crossings on Pinnacle St., one leading to St. J. Graham's cooperator and the other a little south. The party who is responsible for this public imposition would not submit to it for a single week if he had to bear the cost and risk of the heavy traffic that daily passes over those unprotected rails. But the public has meekly suffered this wretched condition of affairs for years.

If the device is successful, then henceforth British submarines will be able to run down and fight German undersea craft.

Midnight Blaze

Fire which broke out about 11.30 last night did considerable damage to the brick residence at 221 George street, occupied by Mr. John Shea. The blaze started in the attic and made good headway before the discovery was made by Mrs. H. S. Morden, who resides next door at 219 George St. The occupants of the house had retired early and were roused by the neighbors. The alarm was given and in a few minutes the firemen had reached the scene and it was not long before the blaze was extinguished. A considerable portion of the house was burned, particularly in the upstairs.

The residence is owned by the Bull estate. Mr. Shea had $500 insurance on his household furnishings. This will cover his loss, a large portion of which was caused by smoke and water

MIND AS AN ASSET.

Standard economists account for wealth as the creation of combinations of land, labor and capital. Some representatives of labor claim that labor produces all, and demand all its reward. Labor extremists and social reformers of various sorts would allow nothing for capital's share or for land. Many capitalists demand and take to themselves a grossly unjust share of the joint production.

None of these representatives of conflicting interests make due allowance for mind as a fourth element in production and profit.

The 2400 per cent. dividend declared by the Ford Motor Company strikingly raises the question of the place of mind in all economics.

In the balance-sheet of the Ford company there appears no entry of the item "Henry Ford." Among the assets—plant, real estate, investments, current accounts, cash—there is no entry of mind. Nowhere in the statement, supposed to be complete, is there even any hint of one man's mind as source of this 2400 per cent. profit.

Is the creation of the Ford company due more largely to land, or labor, or capital, or mind?

It was not created by capital, for it provided its own capital as it went along. Land was used, but it was paid for out of the operation of the concern. The labor also was paid generously, even extravagantly, on any basis of economic computation. Thus land, labor and capital, all provided out of the concern's own processes, are eliminated from the search for what has been called the "miracle" of the Ford success.

Is it not necessary to believe that the mind of Henry Ford was the chief factor in the creation of this success?

The case is worth this much attention, because it is typical of hundreds and thousands of other cases. Capital often denies it and labor generally disputes it, but the fact remains that the elusive, immeasurable element in any enterprise is the mind which conceives, creates and manages.

...TOO BIG FOR FICTION.

"I doubt if this war can ever be put into a novel," says Gouverneur Morris. "It's too big."

It is a curious and wide-spread delusion that big things lend themselves to literature.

It is not about great events that great novels are written. The same is true of great poems. Waterloo was considered to be the greatest battle of modern times, but the lines Byron inserted in Childe Harold constitute the only memorable poem ever written about it.

Not the fifteen decisive battles of the world, but such relatively unimportant ones as Balaklava, Ivry and Hohenlinden inspire the poet.

As for novels, nobody would read Dumas' attempts to deal with the great French Revolution if he had not dealt chiefly with such comparatively insignificant events as the seige of Rochelle. Charles Reade was able to come near to a great novel in telling of the birth of Erasmus than any one else has ever been able to do with the whole vast subject of the Reformation. Hugo's description of Waterloo was an interpolated essay which might as well, or better, have been published separately.

The side lights and side issues and little events make literature. The one ballad of the American Civil War which became fixed forever in people's minds related to no great battle, but to Stonewall Jackson's march through the little town of Frederick.

CENTRED CIVIC PRIDE.

One of the large factors in the full development of the right kind of a commercial organization is summed up in the term "civic pride." Full loyalty to one's self involves loyalty to others—to the community. Civic pride is wholesome personal pride grown big.

Patriotism is a word invented to designate the inspiring power engendered by unstinted co-operation.

Public spirit is the spirit of men united and working for the public good. It is the spirit which is making community work effective and which appeals to the better side of the men engaged in welfare work.

It was revealed by Dr. Chervin of Paris to the Society of Statistics last week that 60,000 families in that city were living without the regularity of marriage when the war broke out. Now they are possessed by the fear of God and are clamoring for the government to pass some measure of relief for them; such, for instance, as marriage by proxy.

A doctor from Brooklyn went all the way to San Francisco to a gathering of medical practitioners to voice his woe. He said that the great philanthropic foundations such as the Rockefeller and Carnegie are an ever increasing menace to the system of medicine of his brotherhood of practitioners. That view of things as they are would seem to take the wind out of the claim of medical men that their mission is to prevent rather than cure disease, which would mean that the opportunities for fees would be greatly lessened.

Your Uncle Sam has collected more than $4,000,000 in tolls for the use of the Panama Canal since it was opened to commerce in May last year. The figures for April last show that the Canal paid for its maintenance and operation and turned over a profit of $34,113 for that month. The advance estimate of the May receipts indicate that the operating deficit now existing will be entirely wiped out. If the big ditch is turning over a profit now, what will she do when the world's commerce gets to moving across the seas again as it did before Europe staged her big conflict?

How would this do as a creed for every citizen,—

"Believille is my city—my home—and as such demands the best I have to offer in loyalty and in service. I cannot be truly loyal to my city, or to myself, unless I do my full share towards placing it where it will deserve my unqualified loyalty. I owe my city a debt—perhaps larger than I can realize. Here I find my one best chance to pay a part, at least. I owe it to myself, to my children and to my friends to leave this city better than I found it when I became a part of it. The more I help Belleville the greater will be the opportunities for me while I am here and for those who are to follow after."

Premier Asquith asks for another appropriation of $1,500,000,000 to carry on the war, says Goodwin's Weekly. This is his second call. When the war broke out Great Britain owed $3,655,000,000. With this last call added the increase has been 113 per cent. When to that is added the increased indebtedness of Russia, France, Germany, Austria, Italy and Turkey, the mighty total aggregates a sum which is really incomprehensible to the ordinary person, but the individual can comprehend that if the attempt is made, as it must be, to pay the interest on those debts, everything will have to be taxed from the cradle the babe is rocked in to the casket that the pauper is buried in. Then the working strength of Europe and Great Britain will have been reduced by probably five millions of men and there will be quite two millions of cripples that will have to be taken care of. Again of the productive property of those countries that will have been destroyed no possible estimate can be made.

JUST AWAY.

I cannot say, and I will not say
That he is dead. He is just away.

With a cheery smile and a wave of the hand
He has wandered into an unknown land.

And left us dreaming how very fair
It needs must be, since he lingers there.

And you, oh, you, who the wildest yearn
For the old-time stay and the glad return.

Think of him faring on, as dear
In the love of there as the love here;

And loyal still, as he gave the blows
Of his warrior strength to his country's foes;

Mild and gentle as he was brave—
When the sweetest love of his life he gave

To simple things: Where the violets grew
Pure as the eyes they were likened to.

The touches of his hand have stayed
As reverently as his lips have prayed.

Where the little brown thrush that harshly chirred
Was dear to him, as the mocking bird.

And he pitied as much as a man in pain
A writhing honey bee wet with rain.

Think of him as the same, I say,
He is not dead; he is just away!

—James Whitcomb Riley.

Other Editors' Opinions

EXAMINATIONS.

There has been a good deal of uncomplimentary comment upon the character of the arithmetic paper at the recent Midsummer Examinations. Without entering into detail of the characteristics of the paper that made it objectionable, it is enough to say that the majority of those who have pronounced it unfair and unpractical, something of an arithmetical puzzle instead of being composed of questions that would be a fair test of the candidates, a sort of arithmetical ambuscade. A paper that is tricky, and in this and other respects does not provide a fair test of the candidate's knowledge, is not a desirable thing. Nor in fact is it alone in its class; for it is perhaps problematical whether any examination paper among the multitudes that are set for pupils or students, provide a fair test of knowledge. The element of luck may easily be a determining factor in a student's success at an examination. If the questions happen to come within the range of a candidate's greater knowledge of some facts or features of a subject, the questions are well answered, and a high standing achieved. But if a set of questions happens to largely deal with parts of the subject outside examination, with which the student may not be familiar, though the student, who by this reason fails, may easily have a far better general and more useful knowledge of the subject than the candidate who passed with flying colours simply because luck favoured him. In another, among many other ways, examinations are not always a fair and adequate test of useful knowledge of a subject, or range of subjects at examinations.

The object of education is to develop the mind, and in the process store it with useful knowledge, so effectively that it will be a life possession, a permanent asset of equipment, for the duties of life. One of the evils of the examinations system is the encouragement to "cramming" involved. A brilliant baby or girl may have the faculty of learning easily. Such a student can in a short time cram for an examination, in a way to pass creditably—on paper. But there is no thorough mastery of the subject or subjects, only a superficial and temporary smattering that may fade away before the vacations are over. The advantages of examinations, especially in our public and high schools, consist in the meeting an emergency. The pupils must be pushed forward to make room for others coming behind, and this condition is so urgent, that it necessarily comes to be the teachers' chief ambition to have his pupils pass, and by his success in this is his teaching efficiency gauged.

It comes to this that the examination evil seems to have become a necessary evil—an evil, since it necessarily ignores the benefit of thorough mastery of any subject, only demanding knowledge enough of it to pass. This seems to be inevitable, with the multitudinous subjects with which the curriculum is overloaded. Enough subjects to require almost a life time for practical mastery, are crowded into the short space of "school age." The result is that few, if any, subjects are sufficiently mastered to be of use in the world of action that follows the period of school-training, without some special supplementary training in subjects which a particular vocation requires should be thoroughly learned.

The subject is one on which one may not degenerate; but the man who thinks the situation over thoroughly, the suggestion comes whether greater, if not exclusive attention should not be given to the three R's; that is the rudiments of a sound English education. Thorough equipment with these, to the exclusion of a smattering of minor subjects, would send forth the child into the world equipped to continue his education upon the lines which in his place in life shall be most useful. The house of knowledge has so many rooms, that a key to each, if its provision were possible, would be a burden. A master key that opens every room would be useful. If we could provide such a master way through the teachings of our schools, educationalists would rejoice, and the rising generation would be better prepared for the actual duties of life.—Peterboro Examiner.

KITCHENER'S WAY.

A fussy old party managed to buttonhole Lord Kitchener the other day in one of the British war lord's less busy moments. "And what would you do, sir," he inquired, "if the Germans should manage to land 65,000 men upon some, ah—comparatively—ah, unprotected part of our coast?"

"Bury 'em," replied Kitchener.—London Star.

Murder Which Led to War

ONE year ago was fired the shot heard round the world with more terrible reverberations than the shot that announced in the American Revolution, for it was upon that date that a youth named Gavrio Prinsip shot and killed the Archduke Francis Ferdinand of Austria and his wife. To-day, in consequence of that act, Prinsip is in an Austrian prison under sentence of twenty years' confinement, for, according to the Austrian law, he was too young to be executed. Future historians will not fail to record that June 28 as one of the great dates in history, although they will know that the act of Prinsip, an eighteen-year-old student at the time, had really not more to do with the great war which is to alter the map of the world than any act committed upon that day by any other Bosnian. Whether Prinsip or any of his associates was accessful in the task determined upon, there can be no doubt that the present war would have occurred. It nearly occurred two years ago. It nearly occurred in 1908. In the latter year it was prevented by the fact that the allied powers were absolutely unready. In 1913 it was averted because the Teutonic powers were not as well prepared then as they were a year later.

Austria Defies Europe.

In October, 1908, Austria tore up the Treaty of Berlin and announced the annexation of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Russia protested, but Germany was ready to back up Austria, and because Russia then was already she yielded, and the crisis passed. In 1911, again, Germany and Agadir practically defied Russia and France, and again they submitted. In 1913 Austria notified Italy that she intended to proceed against Serbia, and said that as her action was defensive she counted upon the assistance of Italy, accordingly, in terms of the Triple Alliance. Italy replied that she would not support her ally, since no one was threatening her, and it would be absurd to call her proposed attack upon Serbia a defensive measure. Austria and Germany, therefore, waited for a better provocation, but it came just one year ago.

Warned by Serbia.

When Austria annexed Bosnia and Herzegovina she mad Austrian subjects of a population that hated Austria, and that never reconciled itself to the annexation. Consequently when the Archduke Francis Ferdinand and his wife announced that they intended to visit Bosnia, he was advised by the Serbian Minister to Austria that he took grave risks on account of the feeling of the people. The Archduke declared that no harm would come to him, and that the Serbian Minister urged that at least he should leave his wife at home; but she insisted that if her husband was in danger her place was by his side, and despite warnings they set out. When they reached Sarajevo, the capital of Bosnia, they had many signs that they were entering a den's den, the most conspicuous of them being the Serbian flag which was everywhere displayed, instead of the Austrian flag.

One Attempt Failed.

On Sunday, June 28, the heir to the Austrian throne and his wife set forth in an automobile to visit the Town Hall, where they were to be formally received. On the way they passed a spot where Nedelko Gabrinovic, a nineteen-year-old typesetter, was stationed. He hurled a bomb at the carriage. The Archduke saw it coming and warded it off with his arm, so that it fell behind him and exploded, wounding a couple of soldiers and a half-dozen spectators. The would-be assassin was arrested, and at high speed the Archduke proceeded to the Town Hall. When he met the Burgomaster, who, unaware of what had happened, was about to present him with an official address, the Archduke exclaimed: "Herr Burgomaster, it is outrageous! We have come to Sarajevo on a visit, and have a bomb thrown at us!" He did not wait for the address, but, reentering the car at full speed in the direction of the temporary residence of the royal couple.

The Doomed Archduke.

It is not to be denied that in Sarajevo that day were quite one hundred men, armed with revolvers or bombs, who had sworn to take the life of the Archduke. If one failed the other would succeed, and when Gabrinovic's efforts miscarried he duly was simply transferred to some of his comrades, who were for the most part young students like he was themselves. Prinsip, who knew what was going on, had taken up a position stationed himself at a point where it would have to slow down. Armed with an automatic pistol, he waited for his prey, and when the car drew abreast of him he emptied the contents of his revolver. One bullet struck the Archduke in the throat, another entered the abdomen of his wife. Both wounds were fatal. Several of his fellow-would-be assassinators were arrested. At their trials they were found guilty, and were condemned to death. All were punished to the limit of the law, a couple of the men who happened to be more than twenty-one being executed, and the others sentenced to terms of imprisonment. When Prinsip was sentenced he could read in the eyes of the judge from the courtroom where he faced he judge, the probability of his being executed before many months are passed is no doubt explained by his lonely cell today, a year after his crime.

Lieutenant's Daring.

For sustained pluck, the feat of Lieutenant Davidson, of the Royal Field Battery, would be hard to beat. Discovering that the only way to locate certain German guns was from the steeple of the church at Neuve Chapelle, Lieut. Davidson, in spite of the fact that the Germans, recognizing that the steeple was the only point of vantage, were pitching lyddite shells into the church, coolly climbed to the tottering tower and, seated at the top, proceeded to telegraph information to his battery. For seven hours he stuck to his post, with the result that our gunners were able to hold in check a shelling force of the enemy. At dark the successful task was done, but not until then did he come down to join his battery.

Revere, Bristow!

For cool daring it would be difficult to beat the heroism of Private W. J. Bristow, of the 3rd Field Brigade, at Armentieres on the night of February 3rd. In company with another man he crept across to the German trenches to ascertain their exact position. Returning to his lines he obtained a hand-grenade, went back, and threw it amongst the General, scattering them in all directions. "To achieve his object," says the official report, "it was necessary to crawl through the German wire entanglements, and the risk was very great."

Tricking the Enemy.

There was a touch of coaxedy in the deed of daring for which Corporal Sanderson, 14th London Regiment, the D.C.M. at Givenchy on February 21st. Placing upon his fingers, at a range of twenty yards, from the enemy, a pair of wire nippers, which they took to be a revolver, and made threatening gestures, intimating that he was quite unarmed—an audacious act which is the joke of the army.

How the Gurkhas Fight.

Well might the Germans allude to the Gurkhas as "the fighting breed imps." Here is one of the many gallant exploits of these little devils. The attention of the Germans in a certain trench was distracted by a British biplane which circled over them, and they filled the air with lead in the hope of bringing the machine down. Then, while the majority of them were gazing skywards, out crept the little brown men. The distance between the two lines was short, and before the skygazers had realized it a dusky wave of sinewy bodies was on them—on them, through them, and driving them out nearly and expeditiously. It is said, somewhat grimly, that they say, all war is good, but this war is the best of all.

Reason For Removal Of Gen. Sukhomlinof Remains a Mystery

THE Emperor of Russia presided at an important council of Ministers a few days ago in the imperial tent at army headquarters, says the Petrograd correspondent of Reuter's Telegram Co. The correspondent adds that those present included Grand Duke Nicholas, commander-in-chief of the Russian forces, brother of the Czar, other leading military men and several Ministers.

Nothing seems to be known as yet in Petrograd regarding the reason for the retirement of Gen. Vladimir

GEN. RUZSKY.

Sukhomlinof, the Russian Minister of War, who was regarded as being largely responsible for the creation of the modern Muscovite army. During his tenure of office he reorganized and unified the imperial forces, introducing a radical change in the system of educating and training officers.

The efficiency to which he had brought the army was considered to have been proved at the opening of the war by its rapid mobilization and the initial successes in Galicia. Besides making the greatest improvement in the cavalry branch, on which he has written books which have become classics, he also has done much for the aeroplane service and the artillery.

By his achievements as a cavalryman he won a gold sword at Plevna.

General Polivanoff, who has been designated as Minister for War, was assistant Minister of War during the reorganization of the army following the Russo-Japanese war. He has the reputation of being an excellent soldier and organizer, and enjoys considerable popularity on account of his liberal views.

There seems to be an impression in Petrograd that Gen. Ruzsky, who played a prominent part in the Russian conquest of Galicia, but gave up his command because of poor health is the eventual successor to Minister of War, as he now has entirely recovered and is regarded as one of the greatest strategists in Russia. He was in command of the force which captured Lemberg in September, 1914.

New Aeroplane Planned?

There are rumors that the Germans are now making a big multiple-engine aeroplane. This is said to be an Avialik, driven by four motors each of 225 horse-power capable of carrying four persons and petrol for ten hours, and 2,000 pounds of explosives. The acquisition of a good big bi-scale machine would give a tremendous advantage to the air, but entirely new designs in aeroplanes are not completed and put through the necessary trials in a hurry. So, even if the Germans have a good thing, it is not likely to be seen in any numbers for some months to come.

Alpini and Bersaglieri.

There are two special forces in the Italian army—the Alpini and the Bersaglieri. The Alpini are troops particularly recruited and organized to defend the northern frontier of the country and to fight in the mountains. They are made up of infantry battalions and of mountain artillery batteries. The Bersaglieri, which are composed of light infantry and cyclist battalions, are recruited from picked men, who are specially trained to march long distances and to fight on rough ground. The number of regiments which used to be twelve, is believed to have been increased.

SUMMER SCHOOL AT ALBERT COLLEGE

Rev. R. B. Kenny, President of Bay of Quinte Conference Addresses a Home Meeting in Chapel Tonight at 7.45 p.m.—Public Invited. —Collection.

Wednesday morning the school was divided into small groups at seven o'clock for morning watch. A Song service in the Chapel preceded the class for Bible Study by Prof. McLaughlin. He showed that Israel had always considered she had a mission to humanity, and some thought that service was to give the story of their national life and God's care throughout the ages, and by this story lead other nations to believe in their God, thereby rendering a great service to humanity, and that Canada should render a service to humanity by building up a new society in Canada, free of the evils of the older lands, profiting by their mistake making a pure nation of high ideals, so that the famine of the barth shall be blessed in future generations.

Following the Mission Study class a splendid address on "Scientific Temperance was given by Rev. W. J. Smith B.A. He considered it from the moral, economical and physical standpoints, and impressed the fact that the church must hit the liquor traffic to every way possible, at all times and it is hard.

From 11.15 to 12, the school divided into four classes to continue the Teachers' Training Studies.

Wednesday afternoon the Summer School were very pleased to give a hearty welcome to Dr. F. C. Stephenson, who well known to the young people of Methodism, and also to Dr. Beech, Chancellor of Union University, West China. The delegates felt highly honored to receive these visits and at 3 p.m. all gathered in the Chapel when Dr. Beech very kindly considered any questions that were asked concerning the work in China, and of the University in particular, because of his wide experience and broad outlook, he is an authority on the subject and his replies to all inquiries were most satisfactory and comprehensive.

In the evening he addressed a mass meeting, when he spoke of Christ's power, as the world—to bring the nations together in the great relation of brotherhood. He referred to the great possibilities in China, and the various periods through which the missionaries have to pass on their arrival and in the first stages of their acquaintance of approach, preparation, conquest.

In each mission station a staff of busy workers at least is placed, preacher, teacher, doctor.. postmaster. The University is the school of preparation for these leaders—the actual building plant occupied 125 acres, has a staff of 30 man having the same great aim—building up the Kingdom of Christ in this great land of China.

Dr. Stephenson paid a sincere tribute to the splendid achievements of Dr. Beech, and appealed to the delegates to make the most of the privileges of the school, that the knowledge and inspiration received may result in a forward movement in the home church on their return—God cannot get more out of us than we have got in us.

It was moved by Rev. W. J. Smith, seconded by Rev. H. W. Foley and Dr. Baker, and heartily endorsed by the audience that the appreciation of the school be extended to Dr. Beech for the excellent service he has rendered, and th enthusiasm he had aroused in the hearts of all present. In his reply Dr. Beech said it was an small satisfaction to know that what he had accomplished in league with his Master, had now approval. In addition that those on the foreign field may accomplish the most for the Kingdom it is necessary that the forces behind him are an inspiration rather than a hindrance as a result of its difference. President Riggs presided.

Prominent Barrister Volunteers

Among the officers who accompanied the 39th regiment from this city was Arthur B. Colville, vice-president and general counsel of the Electric Power Company, better known here the Trenton or Seymour Electric Company. Mr. Colville, like a number of other prominent Canadians, did not permit the importance of his business or professional interests to interfere with the Great Call. He subordinated everything to the summons of duty in behalf of the Empire and has gone overseas to do his share in the defence of the common liberty and honor.

Mr. Colville and Mr. J. G. G. A summer resident at Fernbank just escaped being heavily fined at Morristown recently when his motor boat was inspected there by Dr. Day, inspector at Ogdensburg. Inspector Day gave the owner, who pleaded ignorance of the regulations, another chance. If he cannot had decided to impose a fine of $200 on the owner. Motor boat owners should remember that they must equip their boats with life preservers for each occupant, carry four lights, two white lights, one red and one green, and must be equipped with a fire extinguisher and a pail.—Brockville Times.

DENIS DALY PASSED AWAY

Was the Founder of the Well Known Firm of Tea Dealers of Napanee.

The Napanee Express gives the following particulars in regard to the late Denis Daly, head of the well known firm of tea-dealers of that town,—

The funeral took place on Sunday last, of Denis Henry Aldworth Daly, one of Napanee's oldest and most distinctive citizens. He was the youngest of a family of ten, the eldest of the family being his sister, Eliza, (the late Mrs. Neil McIntyre, of Kingston). He was named after his father, Denis Daly, and his mother, Maria Aldworth His father, Denis Daly, had been a cotton manufacturer in Dublin, Ireland, but with the introduction of machinery, which superceded the old hand looms, the business, in common with other similar firms in Ireland, was a failure exception, became bankrupt, and in 1840 he came out to this country with a part of his family, including Miss. Edward, George and Denis, all familiar figures through this part of Ontario. They settled in Kingston Some years after the family rented a farm on the High Shore of the Bay of Quinte. The market for their produce was in Kingston, and also on the front of years the late Mr. Daly was a familiar figure on the Kingston Market. They took back with them dry goods, groceries and teas which they sold in the surrounding country, but finally they specialized in teas to the exclusion of the other commodities. The family then moved to the Deseronto Road where they purchased a farm, and a little later Denis and George bought another farm in the neighborhood, and also branched out in the tea business for themselves. These two branches finally resulted in the business of Edward Daly, centered in London and of Denis Daly around Napanee.

..Finally some years after the death of George Daly, which occurred in 1876, the farm was given up and Denis Daly moved into Napanee with the family of the late George Daly, and they made their home at Riverview, the Rogers residence on Piety Hill. In 1883 the late Mr. Daly married Mary Francis Bennett, daughter of the late William Lewis Bennett and of Mary Smaile Bennett.

Two of their children died, Harry Aldworth in 1906, and Donald Aldworth in 1908. Mr. Daly is survived by Mrs. Daly and three children, Miss Mary Daly, Roland Oliver and Kathleen Frances.

Auto Turned Turtle

Three popular young ladies are confined in their beds, one seriously and the other two slightly injured, as the result of an auto turning turtle near Odessa on Monday night, owned by a prominent Kingstonian and was driven by his chauffer, who was uninjured. It was badly wrecked and will require considerable repairs before being fit for use again. The chauffer and his three lady friends were the only persons in the car at the time. While proceeding along the road near Odessa the machine skidded, with slight embankment and before the chauffeur could apply the brakes or save the car it had turned turtle. One of the young ladies was pinned beneath the wreckage, while the other two were able to release themselves. Assistance was immediately summoned, and after some difficult work the auto was shifted and the young lady who was pinned beneath was released. Medical assistance was procured from Odessa and first aid rendered, after which the party were brought back to the city in an auto sent out from a local garage. Inquiries at the home of one of the girls showed that all three were out of danger, and that that the their relatives refused to discuss the details at all.—Kingston Standard.

Dog Registration

Up to last evening there have been 243 dogs registered in Belleville. This is a better record than last year, when by July 8th, only 146 had been registered. Still there are over 400 dogs in the town,the taxes on perhaps 200 yet remaining unpaid. Last year the total registration was 395 dogs.

Most infants ar intester by worms, which cause great suffering, and if not promptly dealt with may cause constitutional weaknesses difficult to remedy. Miller's Worm Powders will clear the stomach and bowels of worms and will so act upon the system that there will be no recurrence of the trouble. And not only this, but they will repair the injuries to the organs that worms cause and restore them to soundness.

Cherrywood Farmer

Mystery Surrounding Death of Geo. Hollinger, No Nearer Solution.

The estate of the late George Hollinger, the Cherrywood farmer, which was taken over by the Crown is being rapidly settled. The three parcels of land, which composed the principal part of the estate have been sold for about $2,300, and the various claims practically all settled.

The Crown have discovered that there is a shortage of over $400, and as result of the evidence taken at the opening of the inquest shortly after his death, which showed that Hollinger carried large sums on his person in currency, it is thought that he may have been robbed of this amount. When the body was found $73 was discovered in a wallet. Crown Attorney Farewell is now endeavoring to trace the $400, and will resume the inquest as soon as he can satisfy himself as to where the missing money went.

Hollinger was found is a well last November with a stone attached to his body.

Wake Up the "Slackers"

A Havelock man who went to the front with the 21st Battalion has sent the close viewpoint of the war and has sent a strong letter home referring to the need of men. He says:—For God's sake wake up some of the Havelock "Slackers." Things are not going our way yet. Britain is straining every nerve. Her women are making awful sacrifices. Canada must pay the price of her past independence and her future security. This is true, Time will tell.

Sale of Gosoline on the Sabath

At last night's council session Ald. W. E. Baker referred to the orders given local garage owners and others regarding the sale of gasoline on Sunday. He referred to the fact that in other centres it was possible to secure the fluid on that day, and the local edict not only worked a hardship, but would also have a tendency towards its evasion. Ald. Baker wished the council to take action to have the edict called in.

Chief Police Committee will confer with Chief Short regarding the matter —Lindsay Post.

Italian Accidentally Shot While Hunting

Francesco Dipasquale, an Italian, who has been employed on the canal construction a few miles south of the town, was accidently shot and killed on Friday of last week. In company with a friend he started out on Friday afternoon for a hunt through the woods on Conway's farm. Later in the evening when his friend, who had gone in a different direction, could not find him, a search was started resulting in the discovery of the unfortunate man's dead body, the next morning. The gun, which was lying close to the body, had exploded, the charge entering his stomach, with fatal result.

Coroner Loucks, with the aid of an interpreter, interviewed a number of fellow countrymen of the deceased and decided that an inquest was unnecessary.

The funeral took plade on Saturday, interment being made in St. Mary's cemetery.—News.

One Year With Twenty Lashes

Peterboro, July 9.—For the first time in the regime of His Honor Judge Hurcke, the lash was included in a sentence he pronounced this morning upon William Ross, convicted of assault upon a little cripple girl. Ross was sentenced to one year at the Industrial Farm and twenty lashes, ten upon entering it and the remainder during the last month of his confinement. He took the sentence cooly, although a few minutes before, when his counsel was pleading with the judge on his behalf, he wiped his eyes with his sleeve.

Norwood Lady Makes Record Catch of Fish

Mrs. A. B. Greenbank, while visiting friends at Bewdley last week, made a record catch of maskallonge one day at Rice Lake, capturing on the trawl two beauties, weighing 23 and 18 pounds each. Mrs. Greenbank brought the larger fish home with her on Saturday and it was the admiration of all who saw it. The catch is certainly one to be proud of and we think, will stand considerable competition before it is beaten.—Norwood Register.

Busy on War Order

Ames, Holden, McCready, Limited, report that their factories are busy on war orders for the Canadian soldiers. These orders are a portion of those recently placed with various Canadian manufacturers by the War Purchasing Commission at Ottawa for Canadian troops now being outfitted.

The company have submitted a new pattern of Army boot to the Government, which has been approved, and adopted as being the most suitable in point of fitting, comfort, and wearing qualities for the requirements of our Canadian soldiers. The boot in question is made of Tan Calf-skin with double soles and Goodyear Welt sewn, and a steel plate on the heel.

It is expected that further orders will be placed at an early date, not only for the soldiers now being trained in Canada, but also for Canadians at the front who are requiring more boots and who, it is understood, much prefer the Canadian boot for comfort and service. Such action on the part of the authorities will be much appreciated by Canadian labor.

The Wickedest Woman in London

A fortnight ago, walking through Hyde Park, I noticed a quaint body in antique dress driving a fine pair of horses and evidently out to attract attention for herself. I did not know at the time that she was Mme. Bertha Trost, a very notorious character. My lady was quietly arrested by the police this last week, and she quickly put in a steamer en route for Germany, her own land. The papers this week have been full of stories of Bertha Trost, her beauty establishment and antique shop in Clifford street, and her house of mystery at Marlborough Gate. Mme. Trost lived in great style with a large staff of servants. She has abundant means, and her home was furnished in the most costly and extraordinary fashion, including even a coffin with her own name on it. She had abundant money, she lived on the weaknesses of the idle rich. Much that she did cannot be told and cannot be hinted at. But, enough is known to enable one to say that when she went we lost the wickedest woman in London. Her criminless and old-world dress, her affected airs, and elaborate poses were all part of the clever scheme for bettering on the degradation and the vices of his worst section of society. They say that Mme. Bertha Trost was so clever that, while the police well knew the nature of her business, they were never able to touch her. It is good that the war has given the authorities an excuse to bundle her out of the country.—London (Eng.) Daily Mail.

Shooting Accident in Court Ops

A serious shooting accident took place on Monday, at the residence of Mr. C. Wagstaff, Pottery Corners, when Lincoln, the niece, Miss Vera Wagstaff, of Toronto, aged seventeen years, was shot by her little cousin, Norman Wagstaff.

It would appear that the young folks were talking about the war (Miss Vera having a brother at the front) when Norman lifted a rifle, and with the remark, "Is this how they shoot in the war?" pulled the trigger. The weapon was immediately discharged, the bullet tearing the girl's cheek badly and also taking off a portion of her ear. The bullet then lodged in the wall.

The report of the rifle brought the members of the family to her aid. Dr. Blanchard was immediately sent for and the unfortunate girl was removed to the hospital, where she is reported to be resting comfortably today. Little Norman, as might be expected, was greatly alarmed as a result of the accident, and his alarm was shared in by the other members of the family.

Whiz-Bangs Described by a Lakefield Boy

A Lakefield boy in France writing home on June 21st says:—

Some of the boys of the 32nd Batt. have come over to reinforce our old No. 3 and they look like a good-hardy bunch. Their baptism of fire was not one to impress the fact on the mind that the trench is a perfectly safe place; it looked really comical to see them ducking their heads, or if out back of the trenches taking a header toward the breastwork, when the German toned over a few high explosive shells or sent a shower of whizbangs. The whiz-bang is a shell which gives no warning but just bursts. Most of the shells may be heard coming but the whiz-bang—well, they are well named. The like of those rather gets one's goat, but I suppose one gets hardened to it or else everyone would be a nervous wreck.

Fake Cripple Gets Thirty Days Rest

Clarence St. Clair, who was working the country with a bad arm stunt, got drunk at the G.T.R. station in Cobourg last Thursday and was nearly killed by falling under a passenger train. When arrested he smashed all the windows in the coop, and on Friday he was given thirty days in gaol for being a vagrant and fined $3.50 for breaking the windows.

German Band Story a Fake

The story that has been afloat around town that a German band, which accompanied the excursion here from Rochester on Friday, was not allowed to land, is incorrect. There were six men in the orchestra. Three of them got off when the Ontario docked. The others, who were older men, said that they preferred to remain on the boat when asked by Inspector Ewing what they wished to do before the gang plank was removed.

On Tuesday a German organization in Rochester, or chiefly German residents in that city, was to have run an excursion here, but of their own accord they enjoyed a cruise on the City of Kingston and did not land at any Canadian port.—Cobourg World.

A cough is often the forerunner of serious pulmonary afflictions, yet there is a simple cure within the reach of all in Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, an old-time and widely recognized remedy, which if resorted to at the inception of a cold, will invariably give relief, and by overcoming the trouble, guard the system from any serious consequences. Price 25c.

Retail Trade Active in Eastern Ontario

Trade in wholesale lines in Toronto has been quiet the past week, says Dunn's report. Weather conditions have been unfavorable for summer lines of merchandise, there having been but few warm days. The outlook for the grain crops, however, is satisfactory. A very large yield of winter wheat is expected. A large crop of this grain is now being harvested in the States; hence the lower prices. Banks continue to hold a conservative course and there is practically no speculation in commodities. These institutions have very large liquid assets and some of them are likely to participate in the new British loan. Quite a good retail business is reported in many country districts in Ontario, where the farmers are in a prosperous state. Prices as a rule, for leading staples, are firm. Wool is very high, the washed combing bringing about 32c per lb. It is thought that this is only a temporary condition, as Australian wools can be laid down here much cheaper. The prices of canned goods are unsettled and lower, owing to the anticipated plentiful supply of new fruits and vegetables. Seven district failures are reported for the past week.

Piece of Sock in Wound

Sergt.-Major Grant, who is in a hospital at Edinburgh, is now, we are pleased to say, improving nicely. Major Grant went to the front with the 48th Highlanders, of which he is one of the most popular officers. He was wounded and removed to Edinburgh to a hospital. The one wound healed up all right, but in the other blood poisoning developed. It was opened up, when it was found that a piece of the Major's sock was still there. The operation and removal of this brought relief at last, according to what he was doing well.—Port Hope Guide.

Sold Horse and Rig

Worth Two Hundred Dollars for Twenty.

A young man, who is engaged as a farm hand at Mrs. Wm. Bellamy's, Rice Lake, came to town on Dominion Day to enjoy the sports. He drove into town in very fine outfit, horse and covered buggy, belonging to Mrs. Bellamy. During the afternoon the young man decided to dispose of the outfit and sold it to a man residing near Newtonville for twenty dollars. The matter was reported to the police and at the time of going to press the case is in progress.—Port Hope Guide

War One of Exhaustion

Capt. Jas. Stewart, of the Gannanoque Battery, writing from France to his parents in Kingston, says:—

"There is the usual amount of scrap going on around here, but nothing to write home about. We slay their faces and they slap ours. I am afraid it is going to be a long war and one of exhaustion, and not one of smash through as the smashing is so costly work both in men and money. The Germans are far from being licked yet and it will mean every man in the British Empire coming forward or being forced forward before the show is brought to a successful ending."

In his letter Capt. Stewart states that a few of the second contingent are coming over now and also the Canadian Cavalry, who are used as infantry.

"You spoke of sending cables, etc. It is very nearly impossible as most of the time the cable officers are at rail head and one has a devil of a time getting near rail head. Major Britton, however, got his message through, sent them to friends in England and had them send them through. But don't worry about me, I can take good care of myself."

"At present I am living in a forest attached to an old Chateau. It is quite like home. I have a tent made out of a tarpaulin and some canvas I rustled somewhere near Ypres.

It will Cure a Cold.—Colds are the commonest ailments of mankind and if neglected may lead to serious conditions. Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil will relieve the bronchial passages of inflamation speedily and thoroughly and will strengthen them against subsequent attack. And as it eases the inflamation it will stop the cough because it allays all irritation in the throat. Try it and prove it.

Each Saved the Other's Life

Mr. Frank Watson spent last week the guest of Mr. Matt. White at Round Lake. We understand from Mr. Watson that he saved Mr. White's life when the canoe they were fishing in capsized at Gull Rock but Mr. White earnestly states that it was the reverse way and that he also saved the canoe. No spectators being on hand to witness the incident we are forced to accept both versions and to suggest that they tie their tackle to the boat on the next occasion they visit the lake.—Havelock Standard.

Chicken Thieves Made Big Haul

Mr. John Hendren, who resides at the east end of the village, had twenty-two birds of the Rhode Island Red variety stolen from his hen house sometime Saturday night. The tracks of the marauders were visible to the boundary, where they evidently loaded their booty into a rig and made off.—Norwood Register.

Two Horses Killed

Mr. Thomas Taylor of Belmont lost two valuable horses on Saturday afternoon, when the afternoon express killed the animals, which had strayed on the track.—Havelock Standard.

Is This True?

It has been reported to us that one young lad who had been given a dollar to enjoy the sports on the holiday, was persuaded by one of the tag girls to purchase a tag. He expressed his willingness to buy and handed over his only dollar, which to him looked like a hundred, receiving the tag to coat ten cents. Instead, however, the young lady kept the green-back and informed the youngster that that was on account. This may only be an idle rumor, but should it happen to be true we would respectfully suggest that the Young Men Empire Tea Room investigate and have the money refunded to the boy. He no doubt worried all day over the loss of his money and minded the enjoyment he had been looking forward to for weeks.—Port Hope Guide.

Dastardly Act

Some mean, contemptible person visited the farm of Mr. Wm. Benson, Hewdley, the other night and shaved the hair from the tails of two of his valuable horses. The poor beasts will now be obliged to go through the summer with protection from flies. Mr. Benson has strong suspicions as to the guilty parties and every effort will be made to locate them.—Port Hope Guide.

GIRL WON COMMISSION

Russia Honors Young Woman of Unsupply Adventurous Type

A Russian girl of 18, Alexandra Rukhmova Lazarevitch by name, has received a commission in one of the regiments of Don Cossacks. Her promotion from the ranks was a reward of special services. During one of the battles in the Shukhli Government, the detachment to which she belonged was surrounded by superior numbers and captured. From certain remarks which the Germans let fall, and from the way in which they treated at first, it was evident they had guessed the secret of her sex. Perhaps this was the reason that the officer and other prisoners were divested of their property, she was allowed to retain her watch and compass. The prisoners were locked up in a church, outside which a sentry patrolled.

During the evening the party was visited by several German officers, who seemed to take a lively interest in Alexandra, and laughed a good deal among themselves. When all was quiet the prisoners broke a window and clambered out, and Alexandra killed the sentry with a stone. The rescuers succeeded in recovering their horses, and picked up one or two straggliers, who increased their number to seven. The force attacked a German patrol of 18 Uhlans, and captured them all.

The lieutenant in command of the patrol, on discovering the number of its captors, flung off his hat and tore his hair with rage.

He was found to be carrying documents of importance, and they were brought to the Russian Commander of Alexandra, who assured her that the virtual leader in the whole affair.

She is of medium height, slender and graceful, all-talks of her experiences of war very much as an ordinary girl of her years might speak of a tea party.

"ROGER" THE FATAL GAS

Alkali Workers Long Familiar With Poison Clouds Used by Germans

The deadly chlorine gas that is being used by the Germans is utilized for more useful ends by the alkali workers at Widnes and St. Helens, England.

The chlorine is the gas which, pumped on to slaked lime, transforms this into bleaching powder. The workmen nicknamed it "Roger"; why, nobody seems to know. But the term is universally employed and readily understood, for at the cry "Roger's coming!" "Gear" is so frequently heard in the alkali works, there the lower immediately a wild rush of men away from the danger zone.

But "Roger," in the shape of a green, perceptible, and palpable poison, foetors along on the wind, follows hard on their heels; and woe betide the poor wretch who stumbles and is overtaken by it. Such a one is said to be "gassed," and the alkali workers affirm that no one who has once undergone the experience is ever again quite the same man. There is always something wrong with his breathing.

This, however, only applies to men slightly gassed. What the workers call a "feed" of chlorine kills a man outright inside of an hour or so. Of course, the workers take every possible precaution, such as, for instance, working with goggles on their eyes, and bulky muzzles over their mouths made of twenty thicknesses of flannel, but despite everything accidents frequently happen.

Nevertheless, constant familiarity with this particular danger breeds a certain amount of contempt for it, as for most others, and the regular alkali workers often speak slightingly, and even jestingly, of "Roger," and make use of him for their own ends upon occasion. For instance, the factory yards are sometimes infested by stray, prowling cats, who steal the men's dinners. A favorite dodge is to decoy pussy to where the green fog is, when, of course, that cat becomes a dead cat without more ado.

Another incident that shows the deadly nature of chlorine gas used in Widnes some time back. A hawker from a distance came with a donkey cart, and drew up in a yard attached to some chemical works where bleaching powder was being made. Suddenly there rose the familiar cry of "Roger's here!" followed by the usual rush for safety on the part of the workers. Only the hawker, ignorant of the terrible danger, stood quite open-mouthed at the flying figures, and wondering what all the commotion was about. He would have been fully caught by the green gas, without doubt, had not a burly workman paused for a moment to pick him up in his arms and bear him, kicking and struggling, to safety. He did not even get a taste of the chlorine, but when he returned a few minutes later he found his donkey stone-dead—poisoned by "Roger."

A VERSATILE LABORITE

Hon. Arthur Henderson Worked Hard to Win High Position

The Rt. Hon. Arthur Henderson, M.P., whose knowledge of labor questions gained from a place in the coalition government, has had a romantic career. He was born in Glasgow in 1863 and started life as an ironmoulder in a Newcastle factory. His schooling was but scanty, and he was obliged to educate himself in his spare time. His ability and perseverance soon made an impression on his fellow workers, and after many years' work as a Trade Unionist leader he entered Parliament as labor member for the Barnard Castle division of Durham in 1903. He is now Chairman of the Labor party, and is a Peterborough Councillor, a Wesleyan, and a popular lay preacher.

WAR WILL UNLOCK VAST OIL SUPPLIES

Important Economic Results of Opening Sea Route from Russia and Roumania

Sydney H. North, of London, Eng., founder and editor of the Petroleum Year Book, and other trade publications, has written the following article on the unlocking of oil supplies as the result of the war:

One of the most important operations in which the Allied fleets have engaged is that of opening up the sea route from the coasts of Russia and Roumania to the highways of the world. The military effects of this action may be of vital significance, but its economic effects are still more vital, influencing, as they do, the welfare of millions within and without these two countries.

It is a matter of common knowledge, that the principal sources from which we draw our oil for lighting, heating for fuel, and for motor-cars, are the United States, Russia, the Dutch Indies, Roumania and Mexico. Soon after the war broke out part of these sources was closed to us; and the figures representing the shipments to this country from America are eloquent of the wonderful response of that new made from that quarter.

During these past few months the oil wells of Russia and Roumania continued to produce oil, and had to continue to do so where labor was available, for the closing down of producing well is a costly, and often a ruinous resort. The oil must sink, like everything else, under water, some hundreds of feet down, may perhaps flood into the well and destroy it beyond redemption.

A few figures will show clearly what the position of Russia's export trade has done to the oil industry.

Russian Stores

The output of oil from Russian oil wells amounts approximately to eighty million tons a year, of which, after refining, a large quantity goes into the interior, and the balance is exported. In the year 1912 the total quantity of different oil products exported amounted to about five million tons, in 1914 this had fallen to about three and-a-half million tons.

But this is not the worst of the case, for, in consequence of the stoppage of exports through the Dardanelles, the stocks have accumulated to the extent of one-and-a-half million tons, or half the year's production, which is a huge sum.

Fortunately, or unfortunately, several of the newer districts, such as the Ural-Caspian and Emba-Caspian districts, are increasing their production rapidly, and the storage accommodation for all this ever-growing quantity of oil is not sufficient. In the year 1913 we relieved Russia of thirty-six million gallons of different descriptions of oil, more than a third of which was benzine or petrol; last year, owing to the war, we could only get twenty-one million gallons.

This year we have taken nothing from her of any description, so that it needs little imagination to conjure up the vast stores of liquid and solid wealth which are waiting to flow through the Dardanelles.

Roumania is in similar plight, but rather worse, inasmuch as her organization and facilities are not so ample. Her lot is, indeed, a hard one. For years past her climate, backed by the government, have striven energetically to build up a prosperous industry. Her ambitions lay in the direction of securing some portion of that most profitable section of the trade, the manufacture and sale of benzine or petrol. And her success was considerable.

Roumania and Galicia

The total output from Roumanian wells in 1913 amounted to 1,858,000 tons; in 1914 to 1,777,000 tons, not so much a decline, considering the adverse conditions. But, unfortunately, she is also one of the losers by the war, and only the opening of the sea route again and the resumption of her export trade can save her from disaster. Compared with Russia her oil industry is small, yet at the end of last year the accumulated stocks of oil amounted, according to the "Petroleum Review," to 600,000 tons.

AND THIS IS CULTURE!

Vaddili Vodianoy, a victim of German savagery, was visited in Mitau Hospital in Russia, by a well known Lett author, who asked him to describe his experiences. As the man was unable to speak with his mutilated tongue, paper and a pen were given him, and he wrote the following: "This torture was practised on me by the Germans in the forest near Shavli. I was scouting.

Suddenly I met three Germans. One of them was a senior non-commissioned officer, and the other two were common soldiers. The non-commissioned officer asked me in Russian where our chief leaders were and how large our forces were. I answered with absolute silence. He shouted at me: 'We will soon make you speak, you Russian pig.'

"Then he drew a dagger, and cut off first, my right and then left ear. I stood and was silent. The question was repeated, with the same result. Then in a fury of hatred, he seized me by the throat, and cut off my tongue. While he was doing this I lost consciousness, and I did not come to my senses till this morning, when I found myself lying in a pool of blood."

Dartmoor Convict Prison was originally built to receive prisoners of war during England's struggles with Napoleon.

It is claimed that half an hour of the goose-step does as much for the muscles of the leg as half a day's route marching.

Germany Has Eyes On South America, Says Sir Gilbert Parker, M.P.

MANY books and more pamphlets have been written within the last few months concerning the causes, immediate and remote, which have brought about the present war. Europe unquestionably is in the melting pot, as Sir Gilbert Parker, M.P., says in "The World in the Crucible."

Sir Gilbert's personal knowledge of British imperial independencies, of the United States and of the half developed and undeveloped politics of South and Central America makes him the best informed and most farsighted guide where light in regard to the maritime aspect of Germany's ambitious ambitions, remarks the London Morning Post in reviewing Sir Gilbert's latest book. It says:

"Chapter VI. (German Colonial Policy, the United States and the Monroe Doctrine) is full of invaluable information. The author begins his observations on this neglected branch of his subject by quoting what was said to him in 1901 by the late W. C. Whitney, formerly Secretary of the Navy in the Cleveland administration.

"'You think that Germany has designs on the British position, that she wants and will strike for Great

SIR GILBERT PARKER, M.P.

Britain's colonies as soon as she has a navy? Do not fash yourself about that. Germany has designs on South America, but not on the colonies. We will be among Germany on before that time comes. Little as we shall like it we will have to do your work for you. She isn't cured yet of her designs on South America. She will try it on ar' try it on, and she will try it on once too often.'

"That the Dual Continent is Germany's promised land was seen by the late Admiral Mahan, and the warning he addressed to his countrymen last August, shortly before his death, as to the disastrous effects of the collapse of any theory of how Britain's control of the seas should be borne in mind by, President Wilson and his Cabinet, if, indeed, he is taking any advice.

"Admiral Mahan's words, as Sir Gilbert Parker shows, can be justified by the ominous verbs of many German publicists. Reventlow, for example, who's book entitled 'The Policy of Conquest and Power,' is well known, thought that Germany must create at any cost a land of from twenty to thirty millions of Germans in southern Brazil, and also secure the whole trade of Bolivia and other sparsely populated Latin American polities. The whole chapter throws a flood of light on the methods of peaceful penetration whereby Germany has mapped the foundations of the Monroe Doctrine and laid mines of her explosive nationality, so to speak, in many regions of Latin America, as well as in the United States itself."

France Has Too Many Men;

So many young Frenchmen of the contingent of 1917 have volunteered for the duration of the war that a great many of the artillery and cavalry regiments already have been filled. A great many principally students waiting to pass examinations for degrees, are thus liable to be excluded from the privilege of enlisting before July 15 and from choosing their regiments. According to the Ministerial decree relative to the eventual incorporation in this contingent. A delay has been asked for future graduates to enable them to enlist now, choose their regiments and join the colors after they have passed their examination.

Splendid Gallantry.

Not once, but many times has Sergeant D. B. Dalley, of the R.G.A., proved that the blood of heroes runs through his veins. For his great feats, however, was at Ypres on November 1st, when he continued to work his gun after being wounded in the head by a shrapnel bullet, and thus saved a critical situation. On the previous day, too, he had worked his gun after receiving concussion, in spite of the fact that the breech mechanism of the gun being overheated, the result was a premature firing which caused the carriage to recoil on the gun, so as to knock him down on several occasions.

All minerals belong by law to the Serbian State. Coal and iron are found in large quantities, as well as gold, silver, lead, manganese, and copper. The chief manufactures, now that there are woollen goods, cotton, card and cigarettes.

Upwards of 11,000 women have been enrolled under the Serbian authorized by the Home Secretary for organizing women police. The new force I largely recruited in and near the great cities, and is represented at Colchester, Chelmsford, Canterbury, Dover, Winchester, Exeter, and similar garrison centres. No Welsh Cavalry.

Come to California

A Wonderful Exposition in a wonderful land—The Panama-Pacific International Exposition in California. The imagination thrills and sparkles at such conjunction of sight-seeing opportunities as will be afforded to The Daily Ontario's Special Party of Tourists. A trip to California in itself has proved and always will prove most fascinating; the great exposition in itself will prove a most liberal education; the opportunity of enjoying both in 1915 has attracted interest and attention throughout the world.

Whatever our love for Canada, it may be granted that the most of us wish to see California and test its claims for beauty, diversity, climate and opportunities. The thousands who have sought California's sunlit valleys, snow-capped mountains, golden beaches and enjoyed its wonderful climate have spread the story and now a trip in this western State is the one desire held in common by every man, woman and child of the North American continent.

The site of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition is described as wonderfully well chosen, for its natural beauty, accessibility and suitability for the purpose.

Imagine an amphitheatre some two miles long and about one-half mile wide, backed by the low hills and fronting for its entire length on the blue waters of the famous bay. Across a mile or more of smiling blue water rise the picturesque Marin County hills, topped by cloud-capped Mount Tamalpais. Beyond, to the west, is the famous Golden Gate. Beyond that, the broad Pacific

On this site the greatest architects of America, with unlimited funds, assisted by the most prominent artists, sculptors and landscape gardeners of the world have built an Exposition City which will live in the memory of those who see it as long as memory itself exists.

The products of every clime, the triumphs of every industry and the best in every handicraft will be placed in selective display to be viewed by the peoples of all nations. In its amusement district some three hundred of the country's most famous purveyors of fun will prepare their latest novelties for your recreation.

Representative Men and Women from the Bay of Quinte District will be The Ontario's Guests on a Thirty-day Tour to this Greatest and most wonderful of Expositions and the journey home will be by way of Canada's own Wonderland—British Columbia.

The eight Candidates who work earnestly for the next Four Weeks will win this Tour. Do you wish to be one?

VISIONS OF SOLDIERS

Ghost Led Serbian Troops Against Turks—Unstrung Nerves the Cause.

That soldiers suffer from torture; nightmares as a result of the terrible strain of being continually under fire is well known. But few people are aware that troops in the field often have astonishing visions. The late Lord Roberts on several occasions stated in his despatches during the Afghanistan campaign that seasoned soldiers would at times declare that they could distinguish hordes of natives approaching. It often happened that a coming recruits would swear that they could discern an army in the distance, whereas they were merely victims of nerves.

Experienced soldiers on occasions have extraordinary visions during the heat of battle, which are astonishing, inasmuch as they affect whole battalions and not solitary individuals. During the Balkan War the Serbian army on one occasion won a brilliant victory which the men swore was given to them by a ghost who led them into battle. The Serbian infantry were stationed on the foot of the Mount of Pritip, on which stands the castle of the Royal Prince Marko. A mountainous warrior, who was a national Serbian hero. The troops had to attack a Turkish force who held the pass, but they were hesitating against storming the fortress until artillery had broken down the defence. Before the order to charge was given, however, the bugle blast, shouting wildly, dashed forward, and after a desperate struggle completely routed the Turks. When questioned by their leader for disobeying orders, the victorious soldiers shouted in a body, "Kralyevitch Marko commanded us forward! Did you not see him on his Sharger? the latter being the great soldier's horse, famous in legend. "It was clear," said the officer who related the story, "that the tradition of Kralyevitch Marko was so deeply engraved on the hearts of those heroic men that in their vivid ecstasy they had seen the incarnation of their hero."

General Sir Alfred Turner tells the following story: Whilst at a school one semi-child, a man the famous soldier knew well suddenly rose from the table, saying, "I cannot stand noise of this," and he left the room. Sir Alfred afterwards discovered that the man had seen a figure in khaki with a wound under his jaw standing beside him. From this vision that of a soldier who had been killed by his side in South Africa.

Napoleon, when inspecting on Elba, is said to have been tortured by visions of his army retreating from the ruins of Moscow; whilst Dr. Bryden, the sole survivor of the Kabul massacre, was never wholly free from distressing nightmares, in which the frightful scenes he had witnessed were conveyed up to his mind. There have been cases in which soldiers have been convinced that the shout of a dead commander haunted their regiment, as in the "strike a post" leader of the London Rifle Brigade was said to haunt his old corps in spirit form.

Clergyman "Doing His Bit"

"Deliver the goods," asked the British Government with the request impressed itself so much on the mind of the Rev. J. Warwick Adams, vicar of Wall, near Lichfield, that he doffed his clerical garb, and in the evenings of an ordinary mechanic commenced work in a big ammunition factory at Birmingham.

Previous experience in his father's engineering works enabled Mr. Adams to take his place at the lathe, and he is now turning his knowledge of planing, machine drilling, boring, turning, filing and chipping to good account.

TRIBUTE TO CANADIANS.

Hungarian Correspondent Describes a Visit to the Prisoners.

A Hungarian correspondent, describing a visit to a German base hospital, says that he was introduced to a number of Canadian wounded and prisoners of war with whom he chatted in the following manner: "Where were you wounded?" asked the Hungarian.

"At Ypres," replied the Canadian.

"Why did you come from Canada?"

"To fight, of course. What did you think I came over for?"

"Of course, I know you came to fight, but don't you see it is of no use? You didn't help Britain's cause. All you got is a bullet in the chest!"

"We are mistaken even in the bullets," said the Canadian, good humoredly. "As for helping Britain, I will be available still more. I killed at least a dozen of your people before they had got to and I am still alive."

"Do you feel sorry for them?"

"No doubt, I do now, but I didn't then."

The correspondent pays a splendid tribute to the Canadians, whom he describes as "fine, handsome, healthy soldiers and nice, clean, manly fellows who suffer silently and are very grateful for help." He quotes a doctor as saying that "if you tell a Canadian to take a certain medicine a week he will obey—a German soldier would sneak out and empty the bottle in some hidden place—and they fight like real heroes. When they get caught they suffer, but take it cheerfully. Their wounded bear pain and suffering like heroes, with never a word of complaint."

Another Canadian questioned about his wound said it was only a bayonet, nothing serious.

"Why did you come over?" the correspondent asked.

"I wanted to drive you Germans out of France, that's all."

"But you see you could not."

"Never you mind, we will do it yet."

"What is your opinion of the German soldiers?"

"Good soldiers," he answered; an' about the Kaiser, he's a fine chap away," he answered with a confusion characteristic.

"Toronto is very far away," added the journalist, "and your girl will surely forget you by the time you return."

He smiled sadly, but had no answer to this remark. When I left he shook my hand with his left hand, and they all nodded, smiling, to the doctor. Very nice and very grateful fellows they are. Each time he murmured as we passed into the next room to say "Auf wiedersehen."

Decorated King Albert's Admiration.

It was with expressions of deepest admiration for our heroic Englishmen, that King Albert of Belgium recently pinned on the uniforms of King Mariet Thompson, Sir Herbert White, and Miss Margaret Waite, three nurses of the First Aid Nursing Yeomanry Corps, the Order of Leopold II., for their bravery in the advanced trenches at Nieuport-Bains. Although heavy firing was going on at the time, the three nurses advanced from trench to trench another, often crawling to escape bullets and shells.

In a little while they reached an outpost, which consisted of a few cottages huddled close together, and as soon as they reached those, however, the Germans started shelling that place vigorously, several men being killed and wounded. But the three nurses refused to leave until they had attended some of the wounded who were near them. They then found a stretcher, and with the aid of a man carried the wounded to safety under heavy fire, attended their wounds, and took them to a temporary hospital. In such actions are women adding lustre to their name in this great war.

The Last Rooster.

When Monmouth was lost Monmouth at the court of Louis XIV. discovered at the same that his watch had been stolen, jewellery to the value of 20,000 crs. he finished dressing hastily and, addressing them all, said: "Gentlemen, the wars are over. Let us separate as quickly as we can." What a tact and finish were here!

The spirit of Monmouth was admirably caught by the French gentleman of the time who, attacked by robbers at 5 o'clock in the afternoon, simply observed, "Sir, you have chosen very early hours."—Cornhill Magazine.

"KNUTS" IN KHAKI

An Officer's Valet Tells of Some the Extravagant British Heroes.

It is a bit difficult for the wealthy "knut" to qualify his taste in dress as the "knuts" do, nevertheless, he manages to do so to a certain extent, and to spend a very fair sum of money in doing so, says a writer in London "Answers."

For example, there is a young officer in one of the crack cavalry regiments who was certainly one of the most dressed-up young men in the pre-war days. When he went out to the front he carried with him no less than twenty uniforms, and a thing of beauty was his valet when he got a khaki eye that ran into about 27.50 spleces, and hundreds of pairs of silk socks of all the hues and tones of the rainbow. Besides this valet he took out to the front with him a wardrobe that must have cost him something like £500.

When the time came to spell out of the trenches at the rear, he would fling away every article of clothes he had on, and every bit of his dainty kit-bag, and march back again to face death, a couple of days later, as spick-and-span as if he was going on parade in Knightsbridge Barracks. He was a Knut Made Good Fighter.

He was a good officer, too, and won the D.S.O. before he had been two months at the front. There is a story that is worth repeating told of one young officer in the Guards who habitually spends about £5,000 per annum on his dress. He was invalided to the front rather unexpectedly, and at very short notice. He reached his first billet and ordered a dinner until his valet arrived with the luggage. "Impossible," was the answer; "impossible to get anything to eat; but the tailor managed to get two dozen in the time and sent the others on."

The uniforms did not fit as well as the young officer desired, and he proceeded to a brother officer and borrowed a few things to be filled in a badly-fitting tunic." However, he had to put up with this tunic that "dragged terribly under the arms" for a shoulder. Three days later he was bayoneted in an attack the Germans made on the trench he was in. His tunic was ripped from the shoulder to the waist by the bayonet, and as he was borne on a stretcher to the field hospital, he exclaimed, "Don't wonder that dress in my trunks cannot be used by them; they have cut it out, any way!"

One well known and very popular young officer, the son of an enormously wealthy peer, was for many years compelled to go about in rags. The consignme.t of uniforms he ordered from London was not delivered until he had reached him. He went with only one, and it was nearly a month before he was able to get a change.

Some In the Ranks.

All the knuts are not officers, of course; many may be found among the rank and file. Lord Cowley's son, for example, who enlisted at the outbreak of the war, and was killed after he got out to the front, was a notable knut; his uniforms were made of fine material—a mixture of cotton and silk—that must have cost him a pretty penny. He was a brave and dashing young soldier, and was popular as he was courageous.

There was another wealthy young knut who enlisted, and took out a big stock of uniforms with him. He got about twenty of them sent to a peasant's cottage a few miles or so behind the rear of the British advanced trenches, so that he could get a change when he went off duty for some of his pals in the trenches discovered the whereabouts of these spare uniforms, and when they were off duty [illegible] for the cottage, and had a quick change.

When the knut arrived at the cottage there wasn't a uniform left for him, but he took the joke in quite good part.

Exports of War Supplies

The war in Europe is said to be costing belligerent nations an average of 50 million dollars a day. A careful examination of United States exports of war material (not including foodstuffs, but including clothing, rubber goods and motor vehicles) shows that in the past few months they have averaged about two-thirds million dollars a day.

The comparison suggests that there is a large measure of exaggeration in the oft repeated statement that the United States could bring the war to a summary conclusion by refusing to furnish army supplies and munitions of war to the belligerents. The figures seem to indicate that the allies are buying in United States only a small proportion of the war supplies that their armies are using, and that they would not be seriously handicapped if shipments from the United States should cease.

Rev. H. B. Kenny's Good Work Appreciated

"The preaching of the greatest sermon in the world is the preaching of the gospel of Jesus Christ" said Rev. H. B. Kenny Sunday morning. Very large congregations were present at each service in the Methodist church last Sunday, it being the closing day of his four year pastorate. His morning theme was from the words "Finally my brethren, be strong in the Lord and in the power of His might" and his parting message to his people was a real heart-to-heart talk. He was to be referred to in the future not learned what was done with them. A horse shoe to be held by the division was causing considerable interest. Prizes were to be given in all classes and also for grooms. The lowest prize is $5. He also tells of two old shepherds who grasp their flock of 1900 sheep in that vicinity. The shepherds told him that the landlord who owned the land on which the camp is located owned 1500 acres there. That I would rather have our back yard than have to live here." is Charlie's comment—Picton Times.

WAR DEVELOPS MANY FORMS OF NERVOUS DISEASE

Ontario College of Physicians and Surgeons Recommended the Government to Make Generous Provision for Treatment of Soldiers Disabled in This Way.

At the meeting of the Ontario College of Physicians and Surgeons, held in Toronto last week, the following resolution was carried amidst much enthusiasm: "Whereas it has been known to members of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Ontario that many of our soldiers in Europe are suffering in special ways from various forms of nervous and mental trouble, due to the terrible shock of war. Whereas these various forms of nervous and mental diseases require special treatment, and that efforts are being put forth by those in authority to give this special treatment so far as the circumstances and conditions of war permit. Therefore these circumstances and conditions are such as to render adequate treatment impossible and in consequence many of our brave young men are not receiving the care and attention for life and health which properly specialized and experienced medical treatment and nursing might give them.

"Therefore, be it resolved that this Council respectfully but urgently request the Government of this Province to at once equip and organize a special and specially trained staff of physicians and nurses from its public institutions and from specially qualified for such work, and despatch them without delay with proper and full equipment to minister to those afflicted and restore them to convalescence and health; or, where this is impossible or likely to be unduly prolonged, to request the War Office to send them home to Canada, when arrangements could be made that they soon available at Whitby be prepared for their reception, and that this special treatment and nursing be then continued so long as may be required under the favorable conditions that such location, surroundings, and accommodation afford; and that a copy of the resolution be sent to Hon. W. H. Hearst, Premier of Ontario." It is certainly to be hoped the Government will give serious attention to the strong recommendation of the Medical Council. The Council has touched upon a subject that has not received the attention it should. It differs from any incident of its character in the history of mankind. The huge mass of men engaged in the war arena, the power and strength of projectiles, the frozen warfare, the aeroplane, the poisonous gases, the searchlights, all these are entirely out of proportion to any other war, it is the first time gases have been used. It marks the entrance of the search light on the field of battle, and it introduces the submarine and the aerial method of warfare.

"The result of all these the soldier is subjected to danger, both persistent and continuous. There is no relaxation, no relief. By land and sea, day and night, from shells and mines and air, danger is ever present, and ever threatening. Thus it is that in this war we have a new type of ailment or of disability, or, it is not altogether new, they are in number and variety far and away beyond anything heretofore recorded in the annals of war. The character of these disorders is nervous and mental. We find loss of memory, wandering and speech without apparent reason therefor. We find various forms of paralysis of single limbs, of parts of the body in large or small areas. There is loss of function of nervous organs, always distressing and often quite obscure. Standing out prominently we find many forms of mental disease, loss of memory, extreme depression. Among such vast armies as are engaged in this war we might well look for many cases of nervous and mental affections. But the strain and horrors to which the soldier is exposed by day and night have resulted in an increase in insanity beyond anything yet recorded how prevalent should be made to meet this lamentable incident of modern warfare. To meet it properly we must provide physicians and nurses, whose trained in nervous and mental work, and we must place at their disposal hospitals and equipment necessary for the proper nursing and treatment of these various diseases. It is agreed by this resolution that the Government of Ontario select from the Hospitals in charge of the Province an hospital unit of physicians and nurses who would proceed at once to the front to take charge of this work. The wisdom of this proposition of no debate. The physicians and nurses so selected would know what to do and how to do it. The afflicted we have mentioned would receive immediately the scientific treatment necessary for their disease; not time would be wasted; no mistakes made.

In addition, the resolution suggests that if there is a threatening in the mind, then those cases should as early as possible be sent home under scientific observation, and that the hospital at Whitby be set aside for their further treatment at or the Government house.see. No one will grainsay the humanity and wisdom of this course. Whitby is an ideal institution for such a purpose. Its location, on the beautiful north shore of Lake Ontario, is most charming and attractive. It has ground sufficient to afford recreation and employment so necessary in the treatment of nervous and mental sickness. In architectural design and finish it is the last word; in hospital life there is no finer. In this connection, we may affirm, there is not in the world today an institution that in design and finish can measure up with this last contribution of Ontario to the world of science. What sober conception of duty can there be than that we should dedicate the institution in all its virgin life and beauty to the service of those whose down on the field of battle, giving their lives for the ideals of our life and our civilization, and whose sacrifice and devotion merit in return from us the best that we can bestow on these Canadian heroes.

There is another and a valuable factor of the case that we should not be lost to view. So far as we are able to learn, the cases of nervous and mental, caused by the war, and from which our soldiers are suffering, are not recorded in medical science. Ontario should see to it that this be lagged in the scientific world and she should have in the war arena men whose time has been devoted to this work and whose experience would be invaluable, both in the scientific and in the clinical aspect of this new field of medicine.

In the care of our soldiers demand this step should be taken. Our people in the world of science, and our schools and colleges call to us to step forth to take our place. The future welfare of the people depends largely measure on our knowledge of these things that affect the health and well-being of our people. In this moment we should do our part and do it well.

Throughout the Province the auxiliary boards of the Medical Council have been received with universal acclaim. In following this resolution the Government would receive in full measure the support of the people of this Province.

Civic Committees Make Recommendations

At the civic committee meetings last evening, a number of recommendations were passed. The public works committee seemed the more active for they made as less than five recommendations to council as follows:

"That Front Street be oiled from the end of the present pavement to the Ferry House and also that the sidewalks be oiled.

"That the city engineer be advised to arrange to have the sidewalk across the G.T.R. tracks at the junction of Pinnacle and Front streets put in proper shape.

"That the petitions asking for tarmacadam-tarvia and tarmac layer macadam be granted providing the engineer's report is favorable and that the petition is favorably reported on by the city solicitor as to its legality, also providing the contractors purchase the debentures at par, said debentures to bear interest at 5½ per cent. The following letter was read—

"The committee in charge of the Orange Celebration on July 12th, request that your committee will arrange to have the arrears on sidewalk on the market square cleared and the market square. Pinnacle street to the Bay, Church street, from Dundas street to Brown's foundry, and Bridge street from the end of the lower bridge to the west gate of the fair grounds cleared and watered. We understand Dundas street is moved on behalf of the Orange Celebration committee. A. R. Walker, chairman; J. W. Davison, secretary."

The public works committee recommended that the request in the above communication be granted."

A Serious Accident

Master Clifford Ostliver, son of Mr. and Mrs. Horace Ostliver, Queen St., was seriously injured by falling through a trap door while playing on the upper floor of the drive shed at their home a few days ago. The little lad fell about nine feet, striking on his head on the concrete floor below. His escape from death was miraculous as Dr. Currie who is in attendance, says the skull was fractured. The little lad is now able to be about the house, with every indication of a speedy recovery.—Picton Times.

AMERICAN SHIPS PROMISED IMMUNITY FROM ATTACKS WHEN IN LEGITIMATE TRADE

Assurance is Being Given That Lives of Americans on Neutral Ships Will Not be Endangered--Submarines to Respect U. S. Passenger Ships.

BERLIN, July 9, via London July 10.—Germany's offer, embodied in the reply to the American Note regarding the sinking of the Lusitania and submarine warfare, which was delivered to James W. Gerard, the American ambassador, last night, is:

First—Reiterated assurance that American ships engaged in legitimate trade will not be interfered with, nor the lives of Americans upon neutral ships be endangered.

Second—That German submarines will be instructed to allow American passenger ships to pass freely and safely. Germany entertaining in return the confident hope that the American Government will see that these ships do not carry contraband. Such ships are to be provided with distinguishing marks and their arrival announced a reasonable time in advance. The same privilege is extended to a reasonable number of neutral passenger ships under the American flag, and should the number of ships thus available for passenger service prove inadequate, Germany is willing to permit America to place four hostile passenger steamers under the American flag to ply between North America and Europe under the same conditions.

WAR'S TIDE HAS TURNED, BELIEF HELD IN LONDON.

LONDON, July 10.—The complete surrender of the German forces in German Southwest Africa to General Botha, commander of the forces of the Union of South Africa; the French success in the Vosges, where they made on advance of 700 yards on a front of 600 yards and captured upwards of 800 unwounded Germans, and the splendid stand being made by theRussians in southern Poland against the Austro-German forces, give the British military critics subject for comment on what they term "the turn of the tide" in the war which is now approaching its first anniversary.

SHELL PRODUCTION IN CANADA HALTED.

OTTAWA, July 10.—The following statement is issued by the shells committee:

"Dissatisfaction expressed by manufacturers at not receiving orders for shells makes it very evident that they have not become seized of the situation which has arisen in the production of shells. There are no further orders for shells to be allotted nor likely to be for the present.

"At the outset of shell production in Canada it was confined purely to the empty shells and not the completed article, which is known as fixed ammunition, and includes the brass cartridge case, the cordite primer and fuse.

"The manufacture of fixed ammunition is restricted to the production of the component parts of the cartridge case in this country and the supply of material for these parts. The speeding up of British shell production has left only a market for fixed ammunition.

"There is now a surplus of one million shells in Canada awaiting the brass cartridge case and its component parts. The production of brass cartridge has been speeded up and it is hoped shortly it will overtake the shell production. Until this is accomplished there will be no further shell orders."

Today's Market

The market this morning was fairly large and some new lines were offerred for sale.

Raspberries brought 20c per box, strawberries in fairly plentiful numbers sold at 10c in some case and two boxes for a quarter in others. Red currants were quoted at 10c by some and at four boxes for 25c by other farmers.

The same variation in hay prices was manifested. Hay is naturally firm and high prices are expected. Today's sales were many, all the way from $17 to $20 per ton.

New potatoes loomed large, selling by the peck or bushel. By the peck they sold at 30c to 40c by the bushel from $1.15 to $1.50.

Old potatoes were weaker at 65c per bag.

Pork is about the same in price $2.50 dressed and $9 live weight.

Dainty spring lamb quotes from 22c to 25c retail. One butcher on the market square sold out eight carcasses of lambs before 11 o'clock this morning.

Beef is down in price a little, hind quarters bringing about $12.50 per cwt.

Eggs brought 21c and 22c today and butter 32c.

Fowls are a little lower $1.25 buying a fine brace of birds. Chickens sold around the dollar mark.

Green peas are down to 15c per quart. Cucumbers sell from 5c to 10c as do cabbage heads.

Wool is weaker 37c for washed and 27 to 28c for unwashed being the top prices.

Hides are firm as the condition of hides is improving, the hair being shorter and the grubby season having passed. Deakins and veal skins are about out of the market. Hides sell at 13c to 14c.

Some weaknesses are manfested in the price of grains. Wheat $1.10, buckwheat 75c to 80c; oats 60c.

Splendid Attraction Coming

The artists who will appear at Griffin's opera house, Wednesday evening next, under the auspices of the 15th Regt. Band are "doing their bit" in a unique way. At the completion of their regular theatrical season these artists, instead of spending the summer in their usual way at the seaside or summer home, have volunteered in the ranks of the great army of charity workers to fight the effects of the desolation brought on the martyred Belgians by the common enemy of humanity, brutal Germany. For the first season since their initial performance in Carnegie Hall, New York, they have turned in to the Belgian Relief Fund thousands of dollars. They receive no salary whatever. The returns being handled entirely by the 15th Regt. Band who send the cheque to the Belgian Relief Fund, who pay the expenses of the artists. It is expected that the people of Belleville will turn out a crowded house for this most worthy cause.

THE CALL FOR MEN.

Lord Derby, who has been showing a splendid spirit in his recruiting work, said at one of his meetings the other night that many people were asking what was the use of calling for more men seeing that Mr. Lloyd George had said that there were already more than could be equipped. Mr. Lloyd George, he said, was perfectly right; but it was also true that rifles and ammunition would soon be coming in more quickly than men could be trained. Therefore, it was essential that men should come in now so that they might have those rudiments of training which were necessary before they could be trusted with rifles.

There seemed to be a disposition to think that a soldier, and especially an officer, could be made in the twinkling of an eye. Lord Derby added that many men wrote asking him to obtain them commissions, when in 99 cases out of a hundred they had had no military training. Their zeal went down when they were asked to join the ranks and learn the work first. There was only one thing that entitled a man to have the lives of others in his keeping—knowledge and not social position. Men of all ranks were now sinking their social distinctions and fighting side by side. That was a great asset which, he believed, would stand the nation in good stead for social regeneration when the war was over.

THE TIPPING NUISANCE.

Many attempts have been made to abolish the "tip," but it remains and flourishes.

The fact is that people who give tips like to give them. They think the tip gets them better service, or at least impresses upon the tipped servitor the tipper's superiority. Many hotel guests could not feel superior to the waiters who serve them but for the tip. And even the tip does not always make them really superior.

The Illinois legislature has attacked the evil with a bill providing that any organization for the purpose of gleaning tips shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $10,000 for each and every offense and that a jail sentence of from 10 days to a year shall be added.

It is not a law against tipping in itself; indeed, there can be no law against that. The Illinois bill is designed to prohibit the leasing of cloak rooms, shoe-shining stands, wash rooms and other public places for the obtaining of graft.

It is the custom for concerns to lease these privileges in leading hotels, put salaried attendants in charge in uniforms without pockets or other place of secreting coins, and while the attendants get nothing but their meagre salary, the lessee goes about from place to place in his automobile, gathering up bushels of tips. It is this leasing privilege which the Illinois law attacks.

CLEVELAND'S NEW PLAN.

Back in the days when New England was burning witches, the scarlet letter, a glowing "A" was branded on the forehead or breast of the woman who made a misstep. After that she was a marked woman for all time, an outcast of society and woman kind.

Cleveland, in these modern days, is going about one better, for under the Cleveland plan the woman of the streets is branded in a manner that wherever she may go, whatever she may do her identity as a creature of the slums will never desert her.

Some time ago the order was given to close Cleveland's segregated district. All women arrested were measured by the Bertillon system, according to the standards used in permanently identifying criminals. Their measurements, even to the infinitesimal fraction of an inch, are on file. No matter what they may do in the future these records will always confront them.

Maybe this drastic action will have a tendency to keep such undesirables away from the Ohio city and that may be its purpose, but there is little chance of reformation on the part of women who realize that they have been thus branded for life.

The United States government health service has issued a circular in which there is the statement that ten thousand consumptives annually go West to die. It estimates the consumptive population of Western Texas and New Mexico at fifty thousand. The circular gives warning against consumptives in advanced stages going to that section of the country, the altitude and dust and the long journey being against the chances for prolonging life. The means for taking care of consumptives are greater than ever before in the older sections of the country where sanitariums have been established and the outdoor cure is administered. Much is being done to stamp out the disease which has sent so many to the far West and Southwest to endure hardships of travel and change, the lack of funds, only to have death hastened. It is a timely warning and it ought to be heeded.

The merchant marine is winning its share of honors in this war. Captain Parslow, of the British freighter Anglo-Californian, sacrificed his life rather than surrender his ship to the enemy. His conduct may have been rash in the extreme, but we cannot withhold admiration for his courage and masterly seamanship. His heroism in sticking to the bridge under a rain of shells is worthy of all praise. The merchant marine will cherish the memory of a brave and daring captain and "a very gallant gentleman."

Sir Ian Hamilton's report from the Dardanelles gives us some idea of the desperate character of the fighting on the Gallipoli Peninsula. It also furnishes cheering evidence that the ascendency of the British forces is now established. The reports from the Dardanelles have been far from encouraging but the progress, slow as it has been, may be far more important than appears on the surface.

ENGLAND'S HYMN OF CONTEMPT.

The souls of our foes are foul with shame,
Their hands with murder red;
May they riot in hell, where the lost souls dwell,
For the sake of our innocent dead.
Our sweet-faced women and lisping babes
Were shambled in foul despite
By the craven foe, who had learned to know
How our Sons of the Sea could fight.
They dare not stay in the windswept bay
To measure the might of our men,
So they butchered babes at the mother's breast
And ran for their homes again.

Kaiser and Junker, Lord and Lout,
What is bred in the bone must surely come out;
Bred from the wolf, ye show the earth
The bloody fangs that were yours at birth;
Beware of the hour when the lion springs,
Ye who stab at the breast where the baby clings.
We waste no hate on a foe so base;
We throw a nation's contempt in your face.
God of the World, at Thy Judgment Bar,
We ask Thee to judge us for what we are—
A sinful breed, full of stubborn pride,
But we call the witnessing world to our side;
We slaughter no women, we butcher no child—
It is Germany's sons that stand defiled.
We waste no hate on a foe so base;
We throw a nation's contempt in their face.
Butchers of babes, your hands are red
With the blood of our beautiful dainty dead.
Our women lie deep in the whispering sea
Damn you through time and eternity,
As long as history lives, your race
Have a world's contempt tossed into its face.

Sons of the Wolf, ye hid your fangs
And lulled a world to sleep;
Now your fangs are bare, ye only dare
To mangle the lambs and the sheep,
The women of Belgium, the daughters of France,
Know well what your honor is worth;
If their men were there ye would not dare
To become the scourge of the earth.
Ye creep through the seas on your hands and knees,

To harry our own East Coast;
Our women's blood and the blood of our babes
Is all that your valor can boast.

Kaiser and Junker, Lord and Lout,
What is bred in the bone must surely come out;
Spawned in slaughter, in lust and shame,
Wolves to the bone, though men in name—
Beware the hour when the lion springs,
Ye who stab at the breast where the baby clings.
We waste no hate an a foe so base;
We throw a nation's contempt in your face.
God of all brave and true manly men,
We approach Thy Judgment Bar again—
We ask Thee to judge us and hold us clean
Of the foulest crime that the world has seen.
We shamble no women, we butcher no child—
It is Germany's sons that stand defiled.
Britons waste no hate on a foe so base,
We hurl contempt in each coward's face.
Butchers of babes, your hands are red
With the blood of our beautiful, dainty dead.
Our children who sleep by the moaning sea
Damn you through time and eternity.
As long as the earth breeds manly men,
No German can hold up his head again—
Bereft of honor, by God's good grace
The World will spew its contempt in his face.
—"Australasia" in John Bull.

THE LURKING TERROR.

Only since the sinking of the Lusitania have we become aware of the potentialities of the new submarine as a hideous evil. It was the engine of destruction that filled the imagination of H. G. Wells when he wrote the article printed in yesterday's issue of The Times, on the thesis that man's mechanical genius if applied continuously to the instruments of war will engulf and ruin him altogether. He had written amazing fiction about what modern war would be like. What it began to happen he can hardly believe what is taking place.

The submarine is a lurking monster. It can sight its prey, deliver the crushing blow or two, and make away without ever being seen itself. The one that sank the Lusitania revealed itself, and the German Government openly accepted its grisly work, but it would be quite within the range of possibility that a similar deed should be done by an unseen submarine, leaving the responsibility to be placed by weight of circumstantial evidence. Indeed, the commander of the submarine, if he so elected, might be the only person who could testify to knowing of the achievements of his craft. His crew would know that a torpedo had been fired; they need not know at what target nor whether a hit was made. And a commander, blood mad, might run amuck with a submarine and simply by denying its atrocities place upon the world the difficult if not impossible task of proving his guilt.

There is the other side of it. Many a submarine, sent far against the enemy on the reckless chance that it will be able to accomplish such destruction before it finds its own, has probably perished in a way to leave no trace or record. Such craft, so formidable in offense, is itself extremely fragile. One small shot against its periscope puts it out of mischief. Some must have struck mines and gone down without ever coming to the surface at all for a farewell look at the world. There would be only an explosion, a column of water rising suddenly, and one submarine less. It would not be missed for a time, not until it failed to return to its base, and if it were one of those that are assigned to a kind of lone wolf duty its loss might not become known in its own country for a considerable time. Apparently German submarines are lurking about in English waters, as far from any native base of supplies as to suggest that places of bidding and means of replenishment may have been established from the open sea on a hostile coast, surreptitiously, and maintained there without co-operation of any sort on land.

The psychological effect of submarine warfare upon the individuals who conduct it offers a field of fascinating study. What human being other than the commander of a submarine, prowling the deep unseen, conscious at once of his own diabolic power of destruction and the helplessness of the vehicle—what other kind of being in what other situation could have fleeted the minutes to give the signal that doomed the Lusitania?—New York Times.

SIZE OF CITIES.

Los Angeles has found something else to brag about. It issues a bulletin to proclaim: "The report of J. D. Burks, efficiency director, made public today, places Los Angeles as second city in the United States in point of area. This followed the announcation of San Fernando and Palms territory as a recent acquisition." The total area of Los Angeles now is 279 square miles, New York, with 286 miles, being the only city with a larger expanse of territory. The ten cities of the United States having the largest areas are: New York, 286 square miles; Los Angeles, 279; New Orleans, 196; Chicago, 184; Philadelphia, 139; Cincinnati, 66; Saint Louis, 61; Washington, 60; Kansas City, 58; Boston, 48. This excludes the water areas, which are sometimes included in the statements of territorial size. If water be included, New Orleans would have 270 square miles, San Francisco 137 and Seattle 91.

Buffalo's area is but 42.161 square miles, of which one tenth is under water. Buffalo has not extended her geographical limits since the year 1854. Cities grow as much by annexation as immigration. There are several thriving communities on the outskirts of Buffalo that would like to be taken in. There are others that never should have been allowed to reach their present size independently. They should have been parts of Buffalo long ago.—Buffalo Express.

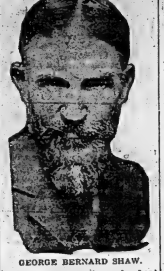
George Bernard Shaw Is Seen in Another of His Protean Changes



GEORGE BERNARD SHAW.

GEORGE BERNARD SHAW has broken out in a new place. This time he goes after Lord Northcliffe. A few months ago he was under fire from English editors for saying things that looked as though they might be of more comfort to the enemy than useful to Britain. The other day he wrote a letter to the wife of a man who had been given six months because he made an anti-recruiting speech. In doing so, he remarked that in this man got six months for a few words heard by less than a thousand people, Lord Northcliffe, who had refused to take recruiting ads in his papers and had condemned the volunteer movement because he favored conscription, should have got sixty years. It is now Northcliffe's opportunity to observe that Shaw should have been put into a detention camp six months ago for saying things unhelpful to Britain. But G. B. S. may be regarded on to have the last word with anybody; and when he does it is likely to be something that nobody is able to answer.

COSSACKS FIGHT MUCH LIKE COWBOYS

Superb Horsemen Made a Magnificent Showing as They Beat Back Superior Austrian Force

Mr. D. Thomas Curtin describes below how he watched by the side of a Cossack in the failure of the huge Austrian advance from Czernowitz against the small Russian forces which had just withdrawn from that corner of Austria near the Rumanian border. Mr. Curtin states that the Russians left behind not so much as a wounded man or a rifle.

The artillery, with caissons of ammunition, rattled over the road, while Cossacks on horseback beside it lash the horses up the hill towards Sadagora. The infantry was coming up, choking the road as far as one could see.

The first battalion stepped smartly to the fray. A field priest clad in rich robes of satin and velvet, rode in majesty at his cob-black steed, and then, striding along beside those big men was a mite of a boy who could hardly be 13, and who wore a complete uniform. Lengthening his stride to keep pace with the men, and with head erect and eyes that never swerved, he swung along in unmerged tread, the embodiment of martial pride. Rough stretchers and a battered Red Cross wagon bore testimony of the grim work about to begin.

In a field directly opposite a battalion was still waiting for orders. It had been there since early morning, and had evidently marched during the night, for the men lay stretched out fast asleep. The call to assemble brought them to their feet, and the companies formed before one could realize that the men had been awakened. They moved across the field and hit the highway in column of fours, an old veteran with a medley of 1904 bowing lazily into a mouth-organ while the dull brown column went into battle to the strains of some soldier song.

At last I succeeded in reaching the top of the highest hill, from where I could watch the shrapnel bursting in the valley. The Austrians who had crossed, numbering 3,000 men, I was told, were battered back across the Dniester bridge, to which a body of Russian infantry advanced along the open road. "This position could have been wiped out while advancing," an officer told me later, "if the Austrian artillery had only devoted its attention to it instead of trying to find ours."

Preparing for Stand

A clatter of hoofs coming up the hill caused me to turn to see a troop of Cossacks, their lances glinting in the dazzling sun, a red-eyed Hussar at their head. "Stay right here," he exclaimed, "if you wish to see the big excitement. We are going to set up a machine-gun by that building; the Austrians know that their main forces lay back to Sadagora. It is of vital necessity that we prevent them from crossing."

We took up our position near the partly-completed building, which looked like a blockhouse. The Cossacks gathered fondly about their arms, captured from the Austrians, and looked to their ammunition. "We will not fire until they cross," said the chief. "If the enemy throw a bridge and attack in force he can wedge us in from two sides. If we fire prematurely by bluffing until our reserve infantry come up from Novosielica we can save the day. Now you will see what my Cossacks can do!"

A whirlwind of cavalry was launched from the base of the hill across the plain towards the river. A rattle of Austrian rifles from the opposite bank, but not a horse swerved, not a rider fell. Then near the bank the avalanche broke up into flying fragments, which whirled in every direction in wild confusion. Erect in their saddles, to which they stuck as if by glue, the Cossacks were away like the American Indian of pioneer days.

Magnificent Soldiers

On the mound by the machine gun stood the Cossack chief, gazing down in admiration upon his men. "Are they not magnificent—admirable? Seven continents have I seen searching to pick off any enemy who may appear. My men have no equipment, chosen from everywhere. They are the greatest Cossacks of the world!"

I was thrilled by the scene of this fight. Cossacks of the old type. Not a motor-car or a motor-cycle every officer rode a horse.

We sank behind the hills when a great body of cavalry—the finest spectacle since the days when Novosielica. Even in the distance they did not appear quite like any Cossacks I had ever seen. Every papakha was jet black, and every flowing robe was of camel's hair, splashed with white. The handles of their deadly yataghans were all of ivory and bone, while that of their leader was inlaid with precious stones. Not the faintest tinker of change in the broad Mongolian features of these proud fighting men as they passed by on their steeds black as midnight, but a lip seemed to move as they chanted some soft, weird melody of a far-off Eastern land. Not a word could the Cossacks whose coming had been so long expected.

"The Austrians have lost their opportunity," the chief cried jovially, as his sat down to eat their supper.

Corporal's Charmed Life

The Gainsborough News printed the charmed experience of Corporal Bowyer. The corporal told the following story: "In a rush I was struck by a bullet, which hit my ammunition pouch. Instead of entering my body, it glanced away off the ammunition, exploding fifteen rounds of it, and tearing my equipment all to pieces on that side."

"NEWS FROM HOME" FOR OUR SOLDIERS

The Women's Canadian Club Asks for Your Help in Sending it to Them.

To the Editor of The Ontario.—

Sir—We all know how, when we are far away in distant lands, we are thrilled by the words "News from Home." How greatly intensified this desire must be among the Canadian soldiers fighting so bravely, in Belgium and in France, so far from home and loved ones!

Realizing how great must be this longing among our troops at the front, pupils of the schools of Belleville joined in the "News from Home" plan introduced into the Province by the Leagues of Empire and carried it out most effectively under the direction of the inspector and the teachers. This is the plan—clipped from the local newspapers, little items giving home news of people, events and sports; short bright sayings and pictures that provoke a smile, pasted in to scrap books made of strong manilla paper and then sent off weekly to the men at the front. A few sentences quoted from a letter received in April last in Toronto and written by Col. E. W. Morrison, commander of the 1st Canadian Artillery Brigade, testify to the feeling of the soldiers.

"I am sitting in a trench on the embankment of the Ypres Canal in Belgium. The German shells are howling and smashing around my guns, but we are "standing fast" awaiting orders to open fire. Half an hour ago a bundle of the scrapbooks prepared by the children of the Toronto Public Schools reached us, and I had them served out to the gunners. They are reading them as they wait. A big shell has just landed and flung clods of earth over my lookout post. It is a time of strain on the men's nerves, meantime it is greatly diverts our minds to read the scrapbooks and look at the pictures."

It just occurred to me that the children at home would like to know that their painstaking work had been appreciated in this hideous turmoil and that they are helping to keep the "fit" to help the men behind the guns"

The schools are now closed until the Autumn and concerted work on the part of the school children is in abeyance. If the soldiers are to get their budgets, some one must continue the work.

A letter has been received from the Secretary of the League of Empire in Toronto asking the Women's Canadian Club of Belleville to carry it on here. At a meeting of the Executive it was decided that the Club would undertake to produce a certain number of scrapbooks weekly and they ask for the hearty co-operation not only of all the members of the Club but also of the citizens generally.

The following is a list of the convenors:

July 13-17, Mrs. A. I. Bird, 190 Bridge St.

July 19-24, Mrs. Arthur McGinnis, 369 George St.

July 26-31, Mrs. Van Buskirk, 276 Charles St.,

Aug. 2-7, Mrs. Curtis Bogart, 217 Bridge St.

Aug. 9-14, Mrs. Wm. McGie, 38 Forin St.

Aug. 16-21, Mrs. J. F. Wills, 38 Queen

Aug. 23-28, Mrs. Jas. Balls, 73 Commercial

Aug. 30-Sept. 4, Mrs. F. P. Thompson, 127 Bridge St. W.

Please cut out the list and keep it for future reference.

If you desire to assist in the work you may do so by sending to the convener of the week, clippings, items of news, not over two weeks old, of interest to the men from Lindsay, Peterboro, Picton, Belleville and surrounding districts; no war news please; or if you wish to make a book as it is desirable to have them of uniform size and construction, you can obtain proper paper and information from the convener who will also post the budget to the right address.

Sample copies may be seen either at the home of the convener or in prominent windows on Front Street.

LIEUT. WALLACE SAW MANY RELICS

While Entertained at Brantford—Great Accounts of Captains O'Flynn and Pentos

Mrs. Robert Wallace, 132 South John street, recently received a letter from her son Lieut. K. D. Wallace, late of the 2nd Battalion, C.E.F., now adjutant of the 1st Canadian Automobile Machine Gun Brigade. The letter was written on the roadside at Braemeretz, about three miles from South-ampton about three hours previous to their departure for France.

He stated that the officers of the Brigade had been entertained in good old English style in a beautiful English home and it happened in a real antique way.

The Brigade had travelled 150 miles during the day and the officers commanding decided to bivouac at Braemeretz for the night, and Lieut. Wallace and several other officers went to a house nearby and asked for permission to wash themselves and they found out that it was the home of Mr. A. Aylesworth, who is a great grandchild of the Wolfe's, and of course when he found out the boys were Canadians there was nothing too good for them. He showed them several interesting relics, one of them being part of the red sash worn by General Wolfe, another was General Wolfe's will in which she cut off a girl with a shilling because she pricked her when she was knitting and put a spot of blood on the Bible. These relics, Lieut. Wallace writes, are the most interesting he has seen in England.

He states that he has heard great things about Captains O'Flynn and Fenton. He says "one night, Dick saved the whole situation by moving without orders, and Eddie O'Flynn had another close shave."

Bay of Quinte Conference Summer School

During his lecture on Bible Study, Prof. McLaughlin, when discussing the trails of the Israelites and their faith in God, wondered if Canadians would for fifty years retain faith in God if visited with defeat in battle, bondage and even slavery to a strong military power.

Rev. W. J. Smith B.A., chose as his subject, "Li Conservation of Child Life," and from his wide experience and knowledge of social conditions dealt with the subject so forcefully that the interest and sympathy of everyone was enlisted in his work for better Canada. One striking fact was that during the last 75 years the population of the world has increased more than in 1000 years previous. Many interesting facts of the social problems of today. Children of the slum districts, with some of the reasons for their poverty and the results morally, physically and spiritually were discussed and how to fight to eliminate those conditions of the helpless little children caught in the terrible web of environment and poverty.

At 7 p.m. the young people assembled on the lawn when Dr. Baker, Principal of the college, talked for several minutes on the possibility and necessity of a firm conviction in the Christian religion, as the saving regenerating power of Christ. These spoil talks afford opportunity for searching and are a splendid preparation for the closing service of praise and inspiration. Mr. Claude Ives conducted a song service in which all joined heartily. After a few opening remarks by the chairman, Rev. B. T. Tucker, Rev. H. B. Leonard George has enabled them to write about munitions without being intimidated by Press Censors. It is not permissable to state half of what is known, but it is permissable to state what is necessary.

The reverses of the Russians seem likely to cost a million of the best while German troops free to act on the offensive in the west. This is the cardinal fact.

These forces will be turned against the French and against the congested area now occupied by British troops. They will be powerfully supported by munitions of every kind. No moral barrier will prevent the most cruel and reckless employment of every weapon. It is very likely that we shall have to meet almost daily raids. Burning liquids will be freely used. The Germans put much faith in gas, and they will apply it on the great scale. They are almost certain to attempt an invasion. In short, whichever may be imagined about the ferocity of their attack will in all probability come true.

All these things will happen while we are yet lamentably short of munitions.—London Daily Mail.

Captured an Eagle

On Saturday morning Jas. McKenzie of Colborne brought down an eagle with a shot gun on the lake shore near Mr. A. Branscomb's farm. The bird measured 7 ft. from one tip of the wing to the other and was evidently only wounded as it appears to be doing quite well under Mr. McKenzie's care. Mr. Fred Shells shot a bald headed eagle near the same locality last autumn.—Warkworth Journal.

Nonconformist's Warning

One of the most remarkable articles on the war appears in last week's issue of the British Weekly, from the pen of Sir William Robertson Nicoll. Sir William, a leader of the Nonconformists, one of the ablest, coolest, and shrewdest of writers, has exceptional means of knowing what he is writing of.

He deals with the probable effect of the Russian reverses, the danger of the British shortage of munitions, and the position of Mr. Lloyd George. He hints that the new Minister of Munitions will insist on a perfectly free hand or will otherwise resign. He states that it is not only possible but also probable that the Coalition Government will seek a national mandate in a general election. Sir William wrote:

"We may say with certainty that the next three months of the war will be extremely critical for the Allies. Journalists are now free to indicate the possibilities of the situation. Mr. Lloyd George has enabled them to write about munitions without being intimidated by Press Censors. It is not permissable to state half of what is known, but it is permissable to state what is necessary.

The reverses of the Russians seem likely to cost a million of the best while German troops free to act on the offensive in the west. This is the cardinal fact.

These forces will be turned against the French and against the congested area now occupied by British troops. They will be powerfully supported by munitions of every kind. No moral barrier will prevent the most cruel and reckless employment of every weapon. It is very likely that we shall have to meet almost daily raids. Burning liquids will be freely used. The Germans put much faith in gas, and they will apply it on the great scale. They are almost certain to attempt an invasion. In short, whichever may be imagined about the ferocity of their attack will in all probability come true.

All these things will happen while we are yet lamentably short of munitions.—London Daily Mail.

Grafton Landmark Destroyed by Fire

The Drake homestead, Grafton, one of the landmarks of Haldimand township, was partly consumed by fire on Tuesday night which started from some unknown cause in the outbuildings. These were burned and the fire spread to the east of the large brick residence. The firemen were soon on the scene, and succeeded in partly saving the building. This was the first time the new fire engine recently purchased by the village was used, and they are well satisfied with the results. The loss is partly covered by insurance.

These Pills Cure Rheumatism.—To the many who suffer from rheumatism a trial of Dr. Hamilton's Pain-lessa Pills is recommended. They have pronounced action upon the liver and kidneys and by regulating the action of these organs act as an alterative in preventing the admixture of uric acid and blood that causes the painful disorder. They must be taken according to directions and used steadily and they will speedily give evidence of their beneficial effects.

Arrested for Taking Horse

A week ago last Saturday a man named Harry Isaac, who is employed by Mr. Chas. Roberts, Picknville, was accused of taking a horse and rig from the Balmoral Hotel, the property of Mr. Albert Dodge, Hamilton Tp., and also of purloining a raincoat from Mr. W. H. Johnston, Grafton, and a hat belonging to Mr. Cyrus Field. Isaac equipped he started forth presumably for the place where he was employed. Chief Ruse was told of the theft of the horse, rig, etc., and started out in search. He found Isaac and the horse and rig at Mr. McBride's, Gores Landing while the coat had been left at Mr. Chas. Roberts', Picknville. It is stated that the horse was driven until it dropped on the road. The man was taken into custody by Chief Ruse and came up before Judge Ward on Tuesday. A large number of witnesses were called.

Mr. Cyrus Field was called to identify the hat, and Mr. Johnston to identify the coat. Mr. McCurdy of the Balmoral Hotel gave evidence as to his condition, and also identified the horse, who saw the prisoner with a coat on his arm. Capt. McCullough, Chief Ruse and Albert Dodge also gave of the horse, were also called. It is presumed that the man was under the influence of liquor when he took the rig and other things.

However, he was allowed to go on condition that he took the pledge for one year. We understand that he has returned to his place of employment.

On the same day he also came before Magistrate Davidson on a charge of cruelty to animals.—Cobourg World.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

Different and Better Clothes

The Two Piece Suit

This is the time of year when a man wants to wear as little as possible. If you wear one of our cool Two-Piece Suits, it's certain you won't "wear a worried look."

But there are two considerations in a Two-Piece Suit which call for the most competent tailoring. In the first place, the coat must be so tailored as to obviate the need of a vest. In the second place, as the fabrics are extremely light in weight, the tailoring must be done with the greatest skill.

Fabrics of carefully selected Sun-Proof Serges, Worsteds, Homespuns, etc., etc.

It you'll step in and try on one of these cool Suits and then take a look in the mirror, you'll be surprised to see what a swell and comfortable looking fellow you are.

We've everything in wearables for a man's summer comfort.

THE WHOLE LIFE OF AMERICA MAY BE SUMMED UP IN THE WORD "HUMBUG"

The Opinion of Herr von Bogdanovic, an Austrian Officer.

Under the title of "Fortschritt und Humbug" (Progress and Humbug) there appears in the May number of the Suddeutsche Monatshefte, Berlin, an article which is entirely devoted to England and America. The writer Herr Milan von Bogdanovic, a former Austrian officer, communicates his impression during what he called "der Winter meines Missvergnugens," a certain winter of his discontent, which he spent evidently not many years ago in the United States.

"The American type, Herr von Bogdanovic assures us, is not that of George Washington, who was far too much of an English gentleman, but that of Benjamin Franklin, compact of platitudes, of diligence, of smug prosaicness, and the keenest of keen eyes to the main chance. Washington was no Yankee, and Mr. Roosevelt could say without any self-conceit that he himself represents the unadulterated American type much better than Washington. Washington, however, was really a Republican, but not of that sort which sees in the import duty of threepence on a pound of tea an ethical reason for breaking away from the motherland and setting up a Republic. This famous threpence on the pound of tea it is suggested, should be put up on the Capitol in Rome, both having been the cause of the foundation of their respective States. Franklin, if we are to believe this Austrian writer, showed himself possessed of true American "humbug" (a word which he does not always rightly use), because while refusing to print defamatory articles in his own newspaper, he would always print them off specially, in as many copies as were desirous, for anyone who choose to pay him for so doing, and to justify his proceeding he found, better than any Tartuffe, "des accomodents avec le ciel."

"There is certainly no American language, no American race either, but there are Americans. Even those Americans in whom the English blood has remained purest are nevertheless merely a vulgarised edition (verpoebelte Ausgabe) of their English cousins. The English humour of a Dickens has become converted into the grimace of a Mark Twain." This general vulgarisation is largely attributable to so many of the English who emigrated to America having belonged to a class which happens to be peculiarly obnoxious to Herr von Bogdanovic—the race of Weltverbesserer, or those excellent individuals who would fain regenerate to the world, "shrieking, singing, preaching Puritans and Quakers, people who preaches the Kingdom of Heaven seeking thereby to gain an earthly Kingdom."

"Anyone can become an American" we are assured, provided he be sufficiently inferior, sufficiently commonplace, commonplace, and money grubbing. The American is born, not made. Many who emigrate to the United States bring with them the ready so much that is American in their mean natures that all they have to do to become admirable American citizens is to learn American English. There is more than enough cheap material for the production of Americans, and room for them to spread over the whole continent. The so-called Americanisation of Europe is not to be ascribed to an intellectual influence of America; it means the success of the vulgar, unintellectual masses victoriously advancing with the aid of modern means of communication.

"The Americans, their Austrian critic insists, have kept the practical side of their Anglo-Saxon ancestry, but have lost the spiritual. It is only necessary to consult an Encyclopaedia to see how few scientific discoveries are really to American, that is to say, the first idea of which took shape in an American brain. "Neither the Railway, nor the telegraph, nor matches, nor the quick printing press, nor motor cars, nor flying machines, nor radio activity, nor electric railways, nor gas for lighting, nor electric light are of American origin." Somewhat grudgingly Fulton is allowed the credit of the steamboat, but he was "an altogether exceptional American inventor."

Referring to Tammany and police scandals, he says:—"It is unknown that in America not a soul believes in an administration or a justice whose representatives would not make business out of their office? The true American is utie incapable of thinking otherwise, and he does not take it amiss with public functionaries—indeed, he is inclined to consider as a fool a man in a prominent position who does not seize an opportunity of enriching himself."

The whole life of America may be summed up in the word humbug, so this Austrian critic would have us believe—humbug from the bestowal of names such as Rome and Memphis on insignificant villages and small towns, to Benjamin Franklin's modesty, the Republican Party, which has no monarchy to fight, and the Democrats, which have no aristocracy to combat, and finally, the very name of America itself. "It is no pleasing prospect which is opened up to us in view of the increasing Americanisation of the world, a prospect of the most prosaic business mind being dominant one hand in hand with snobishness and cant." One good point, however, even this Austrian argues his German public, the Americans possess, and that is the virtue of kindness and consideration to the weak, to women and children, which is "an inheritance from their English ancestors."

From Carrara, Italy, there has reached London and been published a circular issued there while the question of war was undecided by German agents which throws a lurid light on Teutonic methods and misrepresentations. The circular reads as follows:

ITALIANS!

Peace or War: To whom have you entrusted this imminent decision? Beware of the war-at-any-cost instruments of English corruption, who would laugh at a disaster to your nation so long as they remained in the pay of the interested States. They are anxiously working to upset your Government in order to enrich themselves; therefore beware and decide for yourselves the destiny of your Fatherland. None of you are aware of the great progress you have made in these forty-five years of German alliance. Consider those States who maintain a strict neutrality,s what enormous advantages they enjoy; look instead at the fighting nations: Russia with her ally France, and rarest from the dreadful agony that has struck those Powers. Look at England, already completely isolated from her world communications by the good work of the German submarines, and propagate imperturbably the will of the Italian people to maintain its neutrality before you have to deplore a million killed.

Do not be misled by the ridiculous lies of the united agencies of Reuter, Havas, and all the other liars!

England, in flesh and bone "The European Guide," has finally been recognized by all the world as the instigator of this formidable war; and she is getting the punishment she merits, whilst innumerable surprises are awaiting for her after the war. The Colonies she posses with questionable right are already in part lost by her. Nor will she ever be able to regain them. Her stolen possessions in the Mediterranean—Gibraltar, for example, and many others—will be returned to their rightful possessors.

Here you not noticed with what diabolical perfidy England enticed upon her auxiliary cruiser the Lusitania evel ignorant women and children although she knew that the steamer was threatened by German submarines? It is palpably evident that she wishes to bring them in contact to excite fresh conflicts against Germany?

Have you not observed with what overbearing the English now wish to rob even their unfortunate Allies the French, and with what anxiety they are trying to make themselves masters of Calais and the French coast, foreseeing that the French forces will shortly be so exhausted as to render impossible all resistance?

Soon, however, be sure of it, the German armies will sweep that coast clear of this arrogant English.

And now this "Generous England" is making every effort to conquer you Italians, so that you may consolidate her position, more-less-lost, in Egypt, and is making promises which will never be kept.

Believe me, what is the value of an English promise? Everyone knows what a mixture it is of lies and intrigues of every sort.

Compare this instead with a German promise! THE GERMAN WORD IS TRUE. History proves that truth and honesty have always been bound with the souls of the Germans, either in regard to the concessions of territory desired byb you, or the numerous other advantages, will be all scrupulously maintained, so that you have the most ample guarantees for the continual prosperity of your country.

Send therefore the War-at-any-cost party to the deuce. They are the most dangerous enemies of your country. Let them go into the trenches of their friends, where they will find plenty of scope to show their courage and cool their blood. Remain Neutral.

ASPHODEL TOWNSHIP LOSES IN DAMAGE SUIT

Judge Huycke Awarded Plaintiff's, W. J. Sampson and Daughter $350.

William J. Sampson and Miss Jennie Sampson were awarded $350 damages against the Township of Asphodel, according to a judgement given out by Judge Huycke at Peterborough in the case of Sampson vs. Asphodel. The action followed an accident to Miss Jennie Sampson, in June 1914. Accompanied by her sister, Miss Lottie Sampson, plaintiff, was driving along the Hastings road near Norwood, and when they were passing a stone crusher operated for the township, the horse became frightened and Miss Jennie Sampson was thrown out and injured. She and her father entered action against the township for $500.

Mr. F. D. Kerr appeared for the defence, and L. A. Humphries of Campbellford, for the plaintiff, who is a Percy Township farmer.

In delivering judgement, His Honour Judge Huycke congratulated both learned counsel for the able and gentlemanly manner in which the case was conducted. His Honour found that the stone crusher constituted a machine likely to frighten horses, and that the defendants knew of this. His Honour also charged defendants with negligence in that when the two girls approached the crusher, which was operating on the side of the road, not one of the four men who were working around the machine, offered to resist. No request was made for assistance, but inasmuch as the men knew the nature of the machine they should have volunteered some assistance. By not doing so they made the municipality liable.

Continuing His Honour said; "It is true that the defendants have a perfect right to operate the machine on the highway, although it might have been placed in a field or on a side road. This might have increased the cost of operation. It is the same old story of the manager of a mine or factory endevouring to cut down expenses without proper regard for life and limb. I find no contributary negligence on the part of the plaintiff."

The father was allowed fifty dollars and the daughter three hundred dollars for both financial and personal damages.

A Popular Move

Dr. A. W. Stinson's numerous friends throughout the County of Northumberland will be highly pleased at the commendable action of the County Council at its June session in passing a resolution petitioning the Ontario Legislature to restore Dr. Stinson's name to the roll of Ontario College of physicians and surgeons. The resolution was moved by Mr. R. J. Ross, reeve of Brighton, and seconded by Mr. Geo. Gummer, reeve of Cramahe. The resolution was carried unanimously. The action of the County Council in urging that Dr. Stinson get British fair play will no doubt be endorsed by the electors in general. The community needs the services of Dr. Stinson whose open heartedness is well known.—Warkworth Journal, Liberal.

WINDSOR, ONTARIO, MRS. M. SUMMERS, Box 87, —

THE BAD OLD DAYS OF THE BRITISH NAVY

Jack Tar of Seventy Years Ago Brutally Treated and Poorly Fed—Law breakers Sentenced to Warships

Less than 70 years ago the British navy was practically maintained by strength by recourse to expedients so extraordinary that it spoke volumes for the thoroughness of discipline and the sound grasp of affairs possessed by petty officers that they remained right in the proper position of top Executive. Smugglers and poachers, whenever their individual short-coming appeared as a chief of crews, and probably there was nothing very reprehensible in giving chase men when convicted the choice of doing six months in prison or 36 months in the navy. Sometimes, however Jack Tar, though marrying but this skilened, would regard as feel that a blow had been aimed at the dignity of his calling were he asked to fraternize with men who had chosen the navy only because it promised to be a degree more tolerable than prison.

Took Crippled Recruits

Sixty years ago, when the Crimean campaign was commencing, an almost unparalleled difficulty was encountered in getting men to man the fleet. Recruits the naval authorities would not look sideways at nowadays were seen down to newly-commissioned ships with the breath of the recruiting official and the best hopes of non-commissioned officer. Many of these would-be tars, however, were promptly rejected by the ship's doctors, who, tars, were over-civil by the worried admiral responsible for getting complement quickly completed. It is actually on record that about th tim a man with a wooden leg was strictly passed and rejected, on one occasion securing a place on a ship-wrecked, only be quickly-thinking when his infirmity was officially known. As neither side would allow parents over itself beaten, the lowest-level way to impasse was found by giving the afflicted party a rating of cook.

It is less than half a century ago that Jack Tar was shod in a way which for sheer impracticability reached the sublime. It was not so much a boot as a slip-shod slipper, with a low heel stuck on so slovenly that it tumbled off the first wet day. No uncommon thing was it for the sailor when on marching duty to lose the inferior things over the first convenient hedge and finish up the journey on his bare feet.

Armed to the Teeth!

In those days Jack Tar, when ashore on any other quest but his own individual pleasure, possessed what might be termed a natural resemblance to a South Sea buccaneer, relieved in measure by a straw hat of picnic dimensions. Encircling his manly person was a belt studded with cartridges, and, in addition, he carried the ever-failing cutlass, in close proximity to which was sure to be found a pistol at least one pistol, while a butt heavy enough to fell an ox.

It may possibly be—perhaps can that the messing in the navy to-day could be improved without the sailor getting a word about his dog, but within the past two generations the quality of the food has taken a very pronounced turn for the better. In former days, when Jack went on one of his periodical long voyages, day after day the lower deck diet alternated between salt beef and salt pork, and, as both were hard and tough and almost virulently salting, the change at least was only out of the frying pan fire order. A man required a digestion of pre-historic days to thrive on such fare.

Instruments of Torture

As might naturally be expected from the very strenuous duties of naval personnel of those days, punishment was a busy institution, and was prone to take severe shapes. Indeed, in many instances it descended to the depths of brutality and degradation. Every big warship had its instruments of torture, the most prominent among which was, no doubt, the cat, only a degree less terrible than the bloodthirsty knout. But the frequency of its use depended not a little upon the humanity of the captain, and, even in the days of Drake and Nelson, there were officers who set their face against the use of it. Many a fine tar has been permanently incapacitated by a brutal dose of the cat, yet the torture was but child's play to that of keel hauling, which cut short the life of the victim with hadn't the constitution of an ox. Fortunately, this particular punishment, if it ever was officially recognized, dates back to a period when sea life at best was very little to be preferred to death. A most common punishment which held sway in the navy till the year 1836, when it was abolished, was marrieding a defaulter.

New Fighting Methods

But perhaps the greatest change of all concerns the method of fighting. As recently as half a century ago a pistol, was a particularly useful weapon to the sailor in a sea battle. Ships were near enough each other for the very blast of the broadside to almost literally turn the scale between decks—sometimes. Indeed, close enough for some daring fellows with cutlass between teeth and pistol in hand to dart out of the lavoring smoke and drop down among the shrouds of the enemy. To-day sea battles are usually fought at ranges in which cutlass and pistol figure not at all, and even guns of small calibre are rapidly being found to be of little use on a warship.

ONLY SIXTEEN, GIRL VERY SICK

Tells How She Was Made Well by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

New Orleans, La.—"I take pleasure in writing these few lines to you to let you know what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me. I was sixteen years old and was very sick. I was pale to look at, and feeling a thousand times worse than I looked. I had backache, headache, and bearing-down pains. I was so weak that I could not stand on my feet. I was under the doctor's care, but he did not help me any. I was so sick that I could not go to school. I had been sick about a year when I began to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and before I had taken one bottle I felt better. I have taken six bottles and am now well and strong. I am glad to recommend your medicine to all girls and have recommended your medicine to many of them."—Miss Ethel Hamilton, 410 Thwing St., St. Clair, Pa.

There is nothing that teaches more than experience. Therefore, such letters as this girl's, who suffered and were restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, are a lesson to others. The same remedy is within reach of all.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

THE GERMANS' POISON GAS

Exactly what chemicals are used by the Germans to poison their asphyxiating shells is not quite clear. Sir James Dewar, President of the Royal Institution, is convinced, however, that the explosive fall of shells of liquid chlorine. Sir James points out that for many years German factories have been manufacturing chlorine in a concentrated condition—practically liquefying it, at high pressure, in steel bottles. Under several tons of the liquid are allowed to evaporate into the atmosphere—often immediately evaporates and forms the yellow gas referred to in official reports," says Sir James, "it is the easiest thing in the world for the Germans to manufacture the country with the poison gas bombs, followed by an attack. Men arrayed in a dress resembling the uniform of a diver and armed with a powerful gun-action shoot liquid chlorine with ordinary hose pipe are employed to turn the bombs."

PLUCK THAT WON

First Deserts Used Knapsacks in Place of Trenches in Turnip Field

The bravery with which the 1st Dorset Regiment fought against tremendous odds for three days and three nights at La Bassee is told by Private Cornelius O'Leary, who returned to his home at Reading, wounded. He said:

"We encountered the Germans when they were making one of their fiercest attacks in their efforts to get through to Calais. There were eight companies of the German artillery officers and men apiece, and the fight took place in a very large turnip field. The German artillery was in front of us and the Maxim fire was on the right and left. It was impossible to make trenches, so we had to scrape holes in front of us as best we could do best we could. We were often outnumbered by ten to one, as the Germans were almost continually being reinforced. But we defended those holes well, for all those got. Two walls and well fenced Many times

How the French Water the Roads

A Lakefield private writing home describes street watering he has seen in France. He says:—"It is not necessary to think that Canada is the only live country in the world, as only this morning I saw the Frenchmen watering the road, but the old-time method was laughable. I just imagine a small wooden scoop at the end of a pole six feet in length, that being the instrument used to dip up the water from the ditch and cast it over the road."

ODDFELLOWS SUCCESSFUL FIELD DAY AT TRENTON

Though weather conditions early on Wednesday morning did not look promising, the Oddfellows and their friends were not to be deterred from coming to the first district field day of District No. 16. At an early hour in the morning the town announced to assume a holiday appearance, and before the noon hour it was difficult to meet one's way comfortably along the main streets. The proceedings proved, moreover, the most successful ever held in connection with the district, according to their manager, was highly appreciated.

The working members of the field day committee had a heavy contract on their hands, which for three months has fully occupied their time and taxed their ability. The results of Wednesday's events show how unselfishly they applied themselves to the work in hand.

The sports at the grounds, Boy Scout events, water sports, lacrosse match, baseball match and parade, were all carried out to the letter, and in no case were they again that Trenton is unable to put on a real good athletic day.

The Toronto contingent won the first prize of $150, and the handsome Senator Derby cup, while the Picton contingent, won the second prize of $100. The judges, Major Parks, Ross and Foster, gave entire satisfaction. Major Ross placed the committee greatly in his debt by kindly judging the Boy Scout manoeuvres.

Fraser Lodge also came the District Deputy W.G. of Granite Lodge and a number of members to show their interest in the heavy task undertaken by the Trenton brethren. A number of Rochester brethren were also present, but owing to untoward circumstances the turn-out from that city was a disappointment.

The baseball match between the I.O.O.F. team of Frankford lodge, of Frankford, N.Y. and the Kingston I. O.O.F. team, was well contested, and resulted in the Canadian boys winning and carrying off one of the hard earned cups ever put up in this district.

Mr. Richard White won the "quick hitch up" race, the special prize for which was given by Mr. W. C. Mikel, K.C. Mr. Mikel was present in the judges' stand and presented the prize himself.

The parade, including Trenton Cadets, Brighton Girl Guides, Trenton Girl Guides, Napanee Boy Scouts, the Brighton Boy Scouts, Trenton Boy Scouts, Toronto Canton No. 7, Belleville canton, Picton canton and many subordinate lodges, was the best ever seen here. The beauty of the scene was greatly enhanced by the procession of beautifully decorated automobiles which had been, all morning carrying the Daughters of the Empire members wherever their charms could be displayed to get the coin from the unwary male visitor. We are glad to note here that the ladies were most successful in their efforts and realized over $400. The Girl Guides looked charming and marched with precision while the cadets, of whom Trenton and district are so proud, looked as though they had just returned from a foreign camp. The Boy Scouts, particularly those from Brighton and Napanee, were much admired by the large concourse of people who lined the route. Our own Scouts were in the swim too, but being Lents were not out to trim the other boys, though they shared in the prize winning.

Pat Jennings put up his fine and instructive swimming stunt, which kept a large number of people interested during the morning, while Canada Armstrong and Mr. R. F. Webber provided the visitors with a well managed boat swarm and motor boat and swimming contest.

The Daughters of Rebekah served at invaluable assistance at the grounds and the financial results of their efforts proved very satisfactory. The dramatic club members of the order played "When a Man's Single" in a most charming and creditable manner, the Waller opera house, almost every seat being occupied.

As the space allotted to us is limited we are not able to give the list of successful competitors, but we think that all went home satisfied with the generous treatment out by the Oddfellows of Trenton. We are not at all inclined to be modest in regard to the success of the day. It took 3 months for the committees to do work for which six months should have been assigned, and we have the satisfaction of knowing that, though it was rushed, it was well done. The only kickers we have heard of are a few who did not subscribe toward the expense, and as this is usually the way of such people, we are not causing the committees no worry. Two years hence they can be sure kickers in connection with the failure of Luckey, the aeroplane flyer, to get up as advertised, were those who would not pay for admittance to the grounds. Every town has a duplicate bunch of them.

We noticed on the judges' stand, Sir Mackenzie Bowell, W. C. Mikel, K.C., W. D. M. Shorey, W. Carsew, K. C., Hon. N. W. Rowell, K. C., Herbert Masson, K.C., H. Weddell, J. W. Johnson, M.P., and several others from out of town.

The bands accompanying out of town lodges were Frankford Citizens' Belleville I.O.O.F. band and 15th Regimental band, Brighton band, Napanee band, Frankford band and Smith's Falls band. All took part in the parade.

Former District Committee Chairman Wilson, Belleville, who, we believe, is more or less responsible for the field day suggestion, was present, he having motored up from Napanee. We were glad to see that he was looking quite well after a serious illness. The committee is deeply indebted to Bro. Wilson for his help and all join in wishing that he may soon regain his former good health.

The Committee is also indebted to Col. Cooper of Belleville, the present Grand Master of the Order, and to Col. Carbolt, of Picton, for valuable advice.

The decoration provided by Bro. Thomson of Belleville were profuse and well distributed.

Altogether the day was the most successful large gathering ever held in Trenton, and best of a n a financial success.

BABY'S GREAT DANGER DURING HOT WEATHER

More little ones die during the hot weather than any other time of the year. Diarrhoea, dysentery, summer complaint, stomach troubles and infantum and stomach troubles come without warning, and when a medicine is not at hand to give prompt relief the short delay too frequently means that the child has passed beyond aid. Baby's Own Tablets should always be kept in homes where there are young children. An occasional dose of the powders will prevent stomach and bowel troubles or if the trouble comes suddenly the prompt use of the Tablets will cure the baby. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

25 p.c. discount allowed off water rates for prompt payment.

The members of L.O.L. No. 274 and 2519 are requested to meet at the Orange Hall, Front street on Sunday, July 11th at 10 a.m. for the purpose of attending Divine Service at Christ Church. Visiting brethren and members of the L.T.B.A., P.A.P.B., and S.O.E. are cordially invited.

Germany is Now Employing a Deadlier Gas Against Russians

Turkey Said to Desirious of Concluding Separate Peace--Vatican to Issue Significent Documents--Russian Troops May be Brought to the Dardenelles From the East--Turkey Carrying on Warfare Against Resident Christians.

FRENCH NOW HOLD THE KEY POSITION.

On the Heights of Notre Dame de Lorette, near Arras, France July 12.—After battling 120 days for the hill country between Bethune and Arras, the French forces are in possession of all the eminences looking out upon the plain of Flanders. Lille, Douai and Cambrai all are visible from here.

The attack of last night was made under parachute rocket lights, the French burning bluish-white and the German greenish white, covering the scene of the desperate conflict with a ghastly glow.

The most desperate fighting has been along the short ten-mile front from Arras to Aix-Noulette, which began March 9 with the taking of a few hundred yards of trenches on the water-shell of Notre Dame de Lorette, where there are the ruins of an old Merovingian military road. Every day since then some section of the German trenches has been taken, lost or re-taken.

Each side has been employing formidable artillery, both of small and heavy calibre, the French guns being somewhat the more numerous and served with unlimited quantities of high explosive shells.

A correspondent of the Associated Press today went through five or six miles of the trenches formerly held by the Germans and reconstructed by the French, who now have abandoned them to move forward. Upwards of 100,000 Germans have fallen or been captured in these trenches, according to the French official count, since the second week of March. The French losses, the correspondent was confidentially informed, while serious, have been much smaller than those of the Germans. There are thickets of little crosses made of twigs tied together, marking the graves between the trenches. Some of these graves have been torn up by the shellfire.

TWO STEAMERS WARNED TO LOOK OUT FOR BOMBS.

WASHINGTON, July 12.—Warning to look out for bombs concealed in their holds was flashed last night from the naval wireless towers at Arlington to two ships at sea which sailed from New Orleans July 9.

Both the vessels, the British steamships Howth Head and Baron Napier, cleared with cargoes of mules for the British army July 8 and sailed the next day, the former for Dublin and Belfast, via Norfolk, and the latter direct for Avonmouth.

Sending of the warning was ordered by Secretary of the Navy Daniels upon receiving a telegram from a New Orleans newspaper saying a letter to that paper signed "Pearce" indicated that explosives had been placed aboard those vessels.

SUBS, SOMETIMES FIGHT SUBS.

TURIN, July 12.—Divers operating for the recovery of the Italian submarine Medusa in the Adriatic have discovered another submarine, evidently Austrian, nearby on the bottom. It is evident that both were sunk in a submarine duel.

U. S. WILL NOT FORCE ISSUE ON GERMANY.

WASHINGTON, July 12.—Formal study of the official text of Germany's reply to the American note on submarine warfare as it affects neutral rights strengthens the conviction of high officials that a most critical point in the relations between the two

Not only do they feel the United States must refuse to accept the German proposals for the future conduct of American citizens on the high seas, but the failure of Germany to disavow the sinking of the Lusitania, with the loss of more than 100 Americans, in their view has brought on a crisis, the outcome of which it is difficult at present clearly to foresee.

That there will be no action by the United States for at least another week was indicated today.

Secretary Lansing will go to Cornish, N.H., within a day or two to confer with President Wilson. He said he would study the note carefully and then confer with the President.

Count von Bernstorff, the German ambassador, intends to call on Secretary Lansing during the week to learn informally where he can be of any service in the situation.

What the action of the American government will be is doubtful, largely in the sense that the means of expressing the ideas and purposes of the United States have not yet been decided.

TURKEY DESIRES SEPARATE PEACE.

ROME, July 12.—Reports from Constantinople state that conditions in that city are reaching a crisis, many are now openly advocating a separate peace. Hatred of German officers has increased to such an extent that over one hundred have been murdered during the past month.

GERMAN REFUGEE STEAMERS LEAVE.

LONDON, July 12.—A Christiania despatch to the Daily Mail says 24 German steamers which took refuge in Norwegian ports since the beginning of the war have left these ports the past few days for an unknown destination.

RUSSIAN TROOPS FOR THE DARDANELLES

MANILLA, July 12.—Persons arriving here from Saigon, capital of French Cochin China report that all vessels belonging to the Messageries Maritimes which have been engaged in far eastern trafic are being transferred into transports to carry Russian troops to the Dardanelles.

CIGARETTES FOR THE ALLIES.

NORPOLK, July 12.—The allies have ordered 300,000,000 cigarettes from American makers for July for use in the trenches.

FOREST FIRES RAZING IN SILICIA

AMSTERDAM, July 12.—Tremendous forest and moor fires are raging in various parts of Silecia. Around the district of Wittchnau some villages have been evacuated and war prisoners are engaged in throwing up trenches to assist the fire brigades in localizing the fires.

WARRING AGAINST CHRISTIANS.

LONDON, July 12.—The Morning Post's Athens correspondent says the Christians in Turkey and Armenians and Greeks are being systematically uprooted from their homes by the thousand and driven into distant provinces where they are scattered in small groups among Turkish villages. The correspondent adds that the able bodied men are drafted into the army.

GUARDING AGAINST THE PLACING OF BOMBS.

NEW YORK, July 12.—An investigation of the alleged conspiracy to place bombs on board steamships leaving here loaded with war munitions for the allies was began today. meantime police officials, agents of the Federal Government and private detectives employed by the steamship companies are co-operating to guard against the placing of any more bombs on board steamships.

RECRUITING FOR THE BRITISH ARMY.

LOS ANGELES, July 12.—Kenneth Croft, whoclaims to be a Lieutenant of the British Mounted Infantry was placed under arrest here today on a charge of recruiting soldiers for the British Army.

TRAWLER GETS AWAY FROM SUBMARINE.

LONDON, July 12.—The Grimsby trawler Fleetwood reached her home port today, battered by a German submarine. One ofthe crew was killed and several were badly injured. The submarine without warning fired nine shells at the trawler.

ALLIES ATTACKED BY ANATOLIAN BATTERIES.

CONSTANTIPLE, July 12.—The following official communication was issued today at the Turkish War Office:

"Our Anatolian batteries, which had moved forward, successfully bombarded enemy camps at Teke Burun, on the front near Seddul Bahr, and an infantry division which was advancing. A great fire broke out in the environs of Teke Burun."

ITALY IS NOT PRESSED FOR REINFORCEMENTS.

OTTAWA, July 12.—The Italian Consular Agent at Ottawa has just received an answer to his inquiries about the probable date of departure of Italians who enlist for active service against the Austrians. He is advised that all Italians who desire to enlist should continue in their present avocation or secure employment till called to arms. Apparently Italy is not in pressing need of reinforcements from abroad at the present time.

DALMATIANS DESERT TO ITALIAN FORCES.

UNDINE, Italy, via Paris, July 12.—According to the report here a detachment of sixty-five Dalmatians broke away from the Austrian lines on the Isonzo front two days ago and endeavored to reach the Italian outpost. They were fired upon by their own troops and tweny-eight were killed, but the remainder escaped and were received by the Italians.

KING'S CONFIDENCE HIGH AFTER REVISITING FLEET.

LONDON, July 12.—Th belief that the British navy will win fresh laurels, "whenever the day of battle comes," is expressed by King George in a message to Admiral Jellico after a visit to the grand fleet.

"I have had the pleasure of seeing the greater portion of the officers and men of the fleet," said His Majesty. "I realize the patient and determined spirit with which you have faced long months of waiting and hoping. I know how strong is the comradeship that links all ranks together. Such a happy state of things convinces me that whenever the day of battle comes my navy will add fresh triumphs to its old and glorious traditions."

THE REAL PIRATE.

Mr. Fred T. Jane, the naval writer, thoroughly approves of Mr. Balfour's decision to reverse the policy adopted by Mr. Winston Churchill with reference to the treatment of captured submarine crews. Mr. Churchill's policy was to the effect that all submarine crews were pirates and as such were to be segregated and treated as ordinary criminals, which meant, of course, that they might be duly tried in a civil court, after the war was over. The inevitable happened. The Germans had no British naval prisoners, but they had prisoners belonging to the army, and the first thing they thought of was retaliation. Hence Mr. Balfour has reverted to the old policy and has announced that German submarine prisoners will be treated as ordinary prisoners of war.

Mr. Jane commends this decision as exactly the right and common-sense policy. When it is said and done, whatever German submarines may be doing, piracy and all the rest of it, they are, after all, as he says, acting under orders, and it is absolutely useless to penalize them for obeying orders. Mr. Jane says:

"The German army officers have proved themselves savages—as was anticipated. But take them all in all the German naval officers have generally striven (with one or two exceptions) to act as gentlemen so far as in them lay. We knew them before the war; we know them pretty well for what they were. We knew them as men who would do any single thing once it was put before them as 'duty.' So not let us blame them over-much. Rather us fix our eyes on the driving power behind em—von Tirpitz and his satellites. If need is the Kaiser himself.

"Of course, we have not got them; and there no immediate prospect of our getting them. the other hand, there are only two conceivable ends to this war. Either the Kaiser, von rpitz and Co. fall into our clutches or we fall to theirs. We hope for the first eventuality, d the more we hope for it the more likely are to attain it. Germany did not make this r for fun. She resorted to force when other thods failed. As we beat her one way, we y reckon sooner or later we shall beat her in other. If and when we do, von Tirpitz and his kidney will be in our power. We do not want ir instruments—we want them. To tell Germany officially that once we have got him we intend to hang von Tirpitz for common or garden rder may sound a little sensational nowadays. t personally I am convinced that it is the right rse—and not only that, but the only course."

Mr. Jane believes as we do and as we have re than once stated that it is the men higher who must be held responsible for these brutal and atrocious acts of barbarity. It matters thing to von Tirpitz, says Mr. Jane, what happens to his instruments. "But from what I ow of von Tirpitz his own neck matters a y great deal to him if he is going to be held ponsible for his subordinates. We have own out hints to that effect; but mere hints useless. What we need is the verdict of one two coroner's juries 'Wilful murder' against Tirpitz. Then he will understand; but he not understand over anything less. Meanile, Mr. Balfour is to be heartily congratulated on having done the right thing at the right ment. When all it said and done the verdict the British Navy on 'the pirates' is that 'they e told to do it, and they did it.' Von Tirpitz the man who needs a rope around his neck. well that we have given up 'special treat' for his instruments. But we must be careto remember von Tirpitz."

SERBIA'S TRIUMPH.

It is a curious fact that with the exception Japan, the only Power which may be said to e won a definite victory in this war is the allest and weakest of all the belligerent nations. The immediate occasion of the war was murder of the Archduke Franz Ferdinand, Serbian fanatic on June 28th, of last year, the avowed determination of Austria to ek vengeance on Serbia. Of course, as is known, this was merely a pretext, and was the real cause of the war.

What has happened? Serbia, it is true, has undergone terrible suffering and privation, but three times the Austrian invaders have been hurled back from Serbia, after they had seized the Serbian capital, and for months Serbian soil has been as free from the touch of the Austrian invader as it was a year ago. The hated Austrians, in short, were fairly beaten out of Serbia. In every action in which there was an approximate equality of numbers, the Serbians proved themselves the better fighters, and the armies of the "ramshackle Empire" have been thrown back across their frontier by the pluckly little nation, and no new invasion has been attempted.

Doubtless, Russia's attack upon Hungary has partly accounted for the immunity Serbia has enjoyed from Austrian attack, and the story goes that the Italian diplomatists, trained Austria, while negotiations about Trentino were going on, into a suspension of operations against Serbia. However this may be, Serbia's power of resistance undoubtedly was the chief factor, and although she has suffered terribly she is today in a splendid position of having repulsed and humiliated a country immeasurably stronger in men and resources than herself.

Austria made war on Serbia for vengeance sake, and as the New York Times cleverly puts it, she has taken her vengeance by having her armies driven back in utter rout time and again, and by seeing her enemy, at the end of a year, crowing triumphant to her across the boundary.

Reviewing the Austro-German drive into Galicia, the well-informed Petrograd correspondent of the London Morning Post says that the Russian armies are recoiling like a spring upon itself. At every stand they make they inflict demoralizing losses upon the enemy, who are compelled to keep moving over a continually-increasing, steadily-weakening line of communications which dribble away the strength of armies. To whole area now forming the battlefield has been swept by the tide of war twice already, and in the Grand Duke's bulletins we read names which were familiar already nine months ago as the scenes of early fighting, which resulted in the Russian conquest of Galicia. "Russia has suffered a series of reverses, but she has not been defeated anywhere."

In 1912, Great Britain had 13,005 vessels of all kinds engaged in the foreign and coastwise trade. As the German submarines have been sinking British vessels at the rate of one and one-sixth vessels per day, it will take them nearly thirty-one years to wipe out the British merchant marine. And this is not making allowance for the thousands of new ships that will be constructed meanwhile.

THE BOY WHO DIDN'T PASS.

A sad-faced little fellow sits alone in deep disgrace,
There's a lump arising in his throat, tears streaming down his face;
He wandered from his playmates, for he doesn't want to hear
Their shouts of merry laughter, since the world has lost its cheer;
He has slipped the cup of sorrow, he has drained the bitter glass,
And his heart is fairly breaking; he's the boy who didn't pass.

In the apple tree the robin sings a cheery little song,
But he doesn't seem to hear it, showing plainly something's wrong;
Comes his faithful little spaniel for a romp and bit of play,
But the troubled little fellow sternly bids him go away.
All alone he sits in sorrow, with his hair a tangled mass,
And his eyes are red with weeping; he's the boy who didn't pass.

How he hates himself for failing, he can hear his playmates jeer,
For they've left him with the dullards—gone ahead a half a year.
And he tried so hard to conquer, oh, he tried to do his best,
But now he knows he's weaker, yes, and duller than the rest.
He's ashamed to tell his mother, for he thinks she'll hate him, too—
The little boy who didn't pass, who failed of getting through.

Oh, you who boast a laughing son, and speak of him as bright,
And you who love a little girl who comes to you at night
With smiling eyes, with dancing feet, with honors from her school,
Turn to that lonely little boy who thinks he is a fool
And take him kindly by the hand, the dullest in his class,
He is the one who most needs love, the boy who didn't pass.

IS THE OTTAWA GOVERNMENT ALIVE?

Everywhere people are discussing the grave position of affairs of this country. The situation is serious, primarily, because of the crisis in Great Britain and partly because of conditions purely Canadian. The gravest feature of this grave situation is the oppressive silence and apparent inaction at Ottawa.

It may be that this silence and inaction are more apparent than real. It may be that the government is doing its best to meet the extraordinary conditions which the war has created. It may be that the Borden cabinet is doing everything in its power to equip recruiting, the making of war supplies, the shipping of goods and foodstuffs to Great Britain, France and Russia.

Sir Robert Borden is silent. He has made no move to enlist the service of Canada's biggest industrial, commercial and financial leaders as Mr. Asquith has done in Britain. Sir George Foster is absent and if he is taking active steps to promote Canada's trade and commerce, he is not taking the public into his confidence. Hon. Mr. Cochrane is busily engaged in trying to organize the National Transcontinental, and is the one minister who is dealing constructively and definitely with one phase of our acute commercial situation. Hon. Sam Hughes is in military department has done better work in recent months, and, while we have been critical in certain respects, has accomplished a great deal. Hon. Mr. Kemp is attempting to bring order out of chaos in the purchasing departments, but it is questionable whether he is the radical enough to make the necessary improvement. Sir Thomas Shaughnessy and his lieutenants are apparently lolling in their arm-chairs and allowing national affairs to drift.

That appears to be the situation. There is a lack of leadership, a lack of discussion of public affairs of great moment, a lack of spectacular action, and a lack of impressive appeal to the people to help the government meet the national and imperial crisis.

Canada will have a great crop this year, and there will be a demand in England for our apples, wheat and flour. What is the government doing to provide the shipping necessary to transport this produce cheaply and quickly across the Atlantic? Will the apples rot on the trees and the wheat glut the elevators when September comes, because there is a lack of ships in the harbors of Montreal and Quebec and St. John and Halifax? Will the few ships available charge such high freight rates that the farmers will get a small fraction of their apples and wheat and cheese? These are questions to which the people would like answers.

Hon. Lloyd George has called in some of the best men of the empire to help organize the industries of Great Britain. France is doing the same. Why is there not a ministers of munitions in Canada? Lord Curzon says Canadian deliveries of munitions of war have been slow. Rumor has it that the transport motor cars and wagons for the second contingent which are said to have arrived in England weeks ago, are still stored on this side of the Atlantic. Manufacturers complain that they cannot get orders in such quantities to give them steady work, but that these come only in fits and starts. There is an apparent lack of national organization such as the new coalition government of Britain is assembly creating.

Great Britain needs munitions of war in vast quantities, and Canada has the means to supply them. Because the Canadian Government and the Canadian manufacturers have failed to organize for the work, Lloyd George is taking our mechanics over to Great Britain to put them to work. The first batch sailed last week, and a party will go forward every week from now on. This is a disgrace to Canada, a biting, bitter condemnation of our slackness in national organization.

The fault must lie at Ottawa. Lord Curzon says that offers have been received from Canadian manufacturers and these offers were referred to the Ottawa authorities. The manufacturers would respond to appeals if such were made to them. They are patriotic. They are anxious to help. All they need is someone to organize them, and this is where the government should have come in some time ago. Apparently the cabinet has not realized the vital importance and gravity of the industrial and commercial situation. The manufacturers have appealed to the government when the government should have been appealing to the manufacturers.

Let us be fair and admit that no government in Canada ever before faced such a difficult and unusual situation. No political forecast could possibly have foretold what has happened. Nevertheless, extraordinary circumstances demand extraordinary action. The men in the government are asked to be more courageous and more resourceful than any of their predecessors. They are asked to do almost the impossible. But they have behind them a nation which realises the gravity of the time, the supreme importance to the empire and to mankind of this struggle against the military despotism of Prussia. Any appeal for help to leaders in banking commerce, industry, agriculture will bring to their service a thousand patriotic and capable citizens willing to work without hope of pay or reward. The powder is ready, but the government must apply the match.

This war will not be over this year. It may not end next year. England stood alone in the world against Napoleon, and England won because she had a Pitt and a Nelson and a Wellington, who had faith in England. Napoleon tried to crush her carrying blade and army worldcampaigns. From 1796 to 1815, England fought and fought and fought, Campaigns, 1801, Trafalgar 1805, Jena, 1806, Eylau 1807, Corunna 1809, Torres Vedras 1810-11, Badajoz 1812, Moscow 1812-13, Vittoria 1813, Waterloo 1815—these are the chief campaigns which mark the nineteen year struggle against Napoleon. In the British Empire less virile, less imaginative than it was a hundred years ago? Are we willing to make sacrifices our fathers did? Then let us be up and doing.

The supreme struggle of our age is proceeding. The last great war for behalf of liberty and against military autocracy is being fought. Canadians must rise to the full height of their responsibility and Canada must be organized as literally and as efficiently as any other part of that empire on which the sun never sets.—Canadian Courier.

ITALY'S SOLDIERS

Italy has some of the most efficient and most picturesque soldiers in the world. They are divided into four classes: the Bersaglieri, the Alpini, the Carabinieri, and the cavalry.

The Bersaglieri are light infantry of great mobility. They are always seen on the run, and their picturesque costume, with low-crowned plumed hat, is a feature of almost every Italian landscape.

The Alpini are specially trained to manoeuvre among the northern mountains, and their target practice consists in sharpshooting across the vast open spaces, where the atmospheric conditions would confine the soldier of the lowlands. As to the cavalry, experts have said that that of Italy is the finest in the world.

Besides these unique corps, there are the famous Carabinieri or national police, who are recruited from the army, and then usually return to it as non-commissioned officers after seven years' service. This corps is considered the finest school of noncommissioned officers in the world. Its training and administration are also unique.

Civil Lord of the Admiralty

Duke of Devonshire

In the last Conservative Government in England, His Grace, then Mr. Victor Christian William Cavendish, was Treasurer of His Majesty's household, and later Financial Secretary of the Treasury. In 1911 he succeeded his uncle, the late Duke of Devonshire, who, as Marquis of Hartington, led those opposed to Home Rule out of the Liberal Party. He was made Civil Lord of the Admiralty in the Coalition Cabinet.

FRUIT, THE GREAT PHYSICIAN

Healing Powers of Fruit Proved by "Fruit-a-tives"

The simple juices of apples, oranges, figs and prunes, when transformed into "Fruit-a-tives" will relieve diseases of the Stomach, Liver, Kidneys and Skin.

The truth of this statement has been proved in thousands of cases of Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Torpid Liver, Constipation, Kidney and Bladder Troubles, Skin Diseases, Rheumatism, Neuralgia and Chronic Headaches.

The enormous sales of "Fruit-a-tives," are the best proofs of the value of this fruit medicine.

50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size 25c. At dealers or sent postpaid on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

An Old English Custom.

"Gavelkind" was a usage universal in England before the conquest, by which, if a man died intestate, all his lands passed equally to all his sons, or, failing issue, to all his brothers. The custom still survives in Kent, where, unless property has been "disgaveled" by special act of parliament, the law concerning "gavelkind" holds good.

In the Canary Islands.

Produce in the Canary Islands is never brought to market by cart or wagon load, but only in such quantities as a woman can carry on her head for eight or nine miles. Household servants in the Canary Islands are paid $3.50 to $7 per month with food and lodging. They are difficult to get, the women preferring work in the fields or factories.

A Spelling Test.

Long ago some university professor, said to be President Eliot, produced a test sentence that would serve as an examination in spelling for old Noah Webster himself. It is amusing to view the unparalleled embarrassment of a harassed pedlar or peddler, sitting on the counter's wall and viewing the symmetry of a peeled potato, pomegranate or persimmon."

Indian Corn Griddlecakes.

For Indian griddle cakes scald one pint of yellow cornmeal with enough boiling water to moisten. Do not stow the mixture to get soft. When cold add one cupful of wheat flour, one pint of milk, best and stir in three well beaten eggs, add one teaspoonful of salt and two teaspoonfuls of baking powder and bake on a hot griddle.—Delineator.

His Own Appraisal.

"Willie," said his mother to her return from a shopping expedition, "I told you if you were good while I was out you might have a piece of candy, and now I find you've taken all there was in the box."

"Yes, mumma," replied Willie, "but you're no how now very good Pe-ruvs."—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Deduction.

"Are you certain Mrs. Piroufy's ancestors fought in the war of the revolution?"

"Yes," replied Miss Cayenne. "I have heard her boast of it. Judging by any of their traits of character there is no doubt that they fought in any battle that offered an opportunity."—Washington Star.

Don'ts For Novelists.

Don't make your heroine "drop her eyes." The public has grown tired of that trick.

Don't make your hero "heave a sigh." It is more modern to make him heave a brick.

Don't let the heroine "swept him with her eyes." All modern homes have vacuum sweepers nowadays.—Indianapolis Star.

Looks After Him.

"My old wife certainly looks after me good," said an old wag. "She even takes off my shoes for me."

"That's when you come home from some saloon, I suppose," said another old wag.

"No," said the first one; "it's when I start to go there."—Detroit Free Press.

DODD'S KIDNEY DISEASES RHEUMATISM BACKACHE DROPSY DIABETES 23

THE PROOF

Died by Order.

After the battle of Gheluvelt a soldier supposed to have been killed was entered on the books of his company:

"Died on the 24th of June, 1830," etc. A few days afterward it turned out that he was still alive, and the honest sergeant made the following entry:

"Died by mistake."

At length there came a letter from the ministry of war announcing the death of the man on the books, and in due course our sergeant received it as follows:

"Bedford (prior of the ministry."—London Answers.

Novelists Now and Old.

W. B. Trites said at a dinner in Bermuda:

"It appears that the novelist of the present is paid better than the novelist of the past. The novelist of the past lived in a garret and 'walked in early sheet,' the novelist of the present lives in a studio apartment overlooking Central park and rides in an auto.

"The novelist of the past died, and his works live; the novelist of the present lives, and his works die."—Detroit Free Press.

Amateur Actors.

"Let the amateur drive this fact into his head—metropolitan theater managers and promoters do not want him," writes George M. Cohan in the Green Book Magazine. "They haven't the time or the patience or the money. So don't come to New York looking for a job. You may have to walk boom. You may have all the ability in the world, good looks and stage presence, but the metropolitan producer has not the time to teach you the technic and mechanics of the stage—the calls and entrances, the getting of effects, indication, carriage, ease, convention and sentiment. The amateurs all say they will work seriously, but they don't do it. They can't."

Turks and Animals.

In the matter of kindness to animals it is said that the Turk cannot be surpassed. Thus at Stamboul the wandering dogs are treated with great gentleness, and when pigeons come into the world they are lodged with their mother at the side of the street in improvised kennels made out of old boxes filled with straw, and also of carpet, and frequently when a young Turk happens to be flush of money he goes to the nearest baker's shop and buys a quantity of bread, which he distributes among the dogs of the quarter, who testify their gratitude by jumping up at him with muddy paws and smiling maniacs.

A Wave of Water.

There is no necessary connection between the advance of a wave and the forward movement of the water composing it, as may be seen by running the fingers among the keys of a piano. An inverted wave travels along, but the keys merely move up and down. Similarly a wave may often be observed running along the ripe ears of golden grain, while the stalks are firm by rooted in the soil. The onward progress of a sea wave is easily perceptible, and by watching some light substance on the surface of the ocean the fact, is revealed that the water is not moving with the same velocity.—Chambers' Journal.

Clear Waste.

"He has a quick temper, you know," was the excuse given by a friend for a boy's rude act.

"Is he quick at his lessons?" was the question.

"No," was the reply.

"Is he quick at sports?" the questioner went on.

Again the answer was "No."

"Is he quick in obedience?"

"No."

"Well," the questioner added, with a twinkle in his eye, "if he has so little quickness he'd better use it where it will do him some good. It's just clear waste to put it on his temper."—Exchange.

The Beauty Spot Patch.

The custom of wearing black patches to make the skin more white first came from the habit of applying in the sixteenth century pieces of black velvet or other material to the temples for the headache. A fashionable coquette discovered that these were becoming, and brought them into use in France, whence the custom spread into Europe. They were worn not only by women, but by exquisites, though their use was not general among men. They were variously named and were made round, square, oval and in the shape of stars, hearts, crescents and animals of all sorts, so that a judge's fare sometimes had the appearance of a menagerie.

DANGERS OF FLATTERY.

In order that all men may be taught to speak truth it is necessary that all should learn how to bear it, for no species of falsehood is more frequent than flattery, to which the coward is betrayed by fear, the dependent by interest, the friend by tenderness. Those neither servile nor timorous are yet desirous to be somewhat pleased, and while jealous demands of praise continue to be made there will always be some whom hope, fear or kindness will dispose to pay them.—Johnson.

Hard and soft corns both yield to Holloway's Corn Cure, which is entirely safe to use, and certain and satisfactory in its action.

INTERESTING SERMON TO ORANGEMAN AND KINDRED SOCIETIES

Able Discourse the Orangemen, 'Prentice Boys, True Blues and S. O. E. at Christ Church.

The Orangemen, True Blues and 'Prentice Boys, of Belleville and many others from the district, on Sunday attended Divine service in Christ Church, where the Rev. Bro. B. C. Sprague addressed them on a timely subject. Monday was the day of the annual demonstration, enthusiasm among Orangemen and the brethren of kindred societies was manifested in the large attendance. The parade was one of the best seen in the city for many years. The 15th Band headed the procession and played marching music.

The interior of the church was decorated with flags and other tokens of the Tercentenary and the choir rendered special music for the occasion.

"The course of this world has been the course of struggle and strife" said the preacher, who used as his text the words of St. Paul to the Galatians V 11: "Stand fast, therefore, in the liberty, wherewith Christ hath made you free" The whole history of human life and development shows all too plainly the sorry story of human perversity. Every stage-height of the long journey of the human family is marked by monuments over which the dark veil of despair and death has been drawn and at the foot of which bleeding hearts have laid down the burden of earth's bitterness and sorrow. The bitterness of the age-long conflict is only relieved by the glorious ray of gold that runs through it, which tells of the nobility and heroism with which myriads of the earth's bravest and truest have courageously met and willingly offered all they had to give in the defence of those things which seemed to them holy and just and good.

In this dark world conflict there are two principles which have ever been in irreconcilable opposition and it is really between these two principles, both of which are in some degree present in every one of us, that the long drawn out battle rages.

1. On the one side there is the desire and determination to rule and govern. One community or tribe or state or nation becomes obsessed with the desire to control the life and destiny of another community, tribe, state or nation. This will to govern may seek its object through civil, political and religious channels as well. This one school of thought, one political creed, or one religious method may seek to impose itself upon another and to destroy it, from one of many motives."

Is the case of political or religious ambition the struggle to conquer and control may be free but often is not. From violence of blood but when ambition breaks its bounds, it becomes inevitably in war and bloodshed. This national ambition may be due to a need of more territory. Then again a country or people may feel themselves entrusted with a great purpose in world progress, and endowed with institutions which it is the Divine Will others should possess by fair or foul means. So they set themselves to impose their life, ideals, and institutions upon others, which are inferior and not destined to endure. It is possible for a nation of fanatics to be self-deceived in this way. Again ambition may be simply the desire for power highly developed by training and dis-cipline. Although in the instance brought to control and govern and direct the largest force.

The other principle to that of domination is rather that of the defensive, the principles of liberty in the individual human being or in the state or empire. It stands for the belief that every nation with independent existence has a genius of its own and has a right to shape its course as to please so long as it is not a menace to the well-being of society. Such a state is justified in repudiating any attempt to interfere with that freedom.

The burden of the Old Testament is the constant fear of Israel that through treachery and disloyalty of the people they should surrender their national freedom and institutions. Their glory was that they were long able to withstand with the help of Jehovah, the attacks of their enemies. The preacher referred to the importance of the national sentiment in the successful defence of Greece against Persia. Roman conquest was the logical outcome of the principle of dominion. The struggle in England from the time of the Magna Charta to that of William Prince of Orange was the same immortal conflict. Some times it was more predominantly religious, sometimes political, sometimes intermediate. The power that sought to dominate was the Roman Ecclesiastical power which was exercised mainly through political and diplomatic channels, but sometimes even through war and blood-shed as when the Spanish Armada sought to destroy the liberty of England, the civil struggle in England which culminated in the great victory of the Boyne, which you will celebrate tomorrow was the agony of Britain's real soul in seeking to secure for herself for all time the inalienable religious and moral right to express herself without interference political or otherwise from without.

Today we are confronted with a great conflict on so large a scale as to lead to the hope that at last the principle of dominion shall be forever disarmed, vanquished and buried and the rights of states and empires in their independence be vindicated and established. "We are standing behind and supporting the principle of free institutions and democratic government."

What is every man's and particularly every Orangeman's plain duty? First, it is loyalty. "Is your king and your country dear? That is what strikes you first, but it is more than that; it is the principle to which your country is committed, a principle that has been threatened since the commencement of time and that will still be a principle when nations and empires are no more. You will recall the battle cry of the Greeks at Marathon: "O, sons of the Greeks! strike for the freedom of your ancestors! strike for the freedom of your children and your wives—for the shrines of your fathers' gods—for the sepulchres of your sires. All, all, are now staked upon the strife." All this now calls to Britain's sons and even more, because it is a world war, to be worthy the cause of civilization and God's Kingdom, all of which are threatened.

Your duty in the second place is rightly to interpret your liberty. Freedom which we have hitherto enjoyed and which we are now called upon to defend must not be abused, as it has been abused. Liberty is not license, it is not the absence of legitimate restraints, it is not designed to lead to irreligion and licentious indulgence. On the contrary there is no freedom that is not self-possessed and squarely balanced in the Word of God and strengthened in the power of His grace. A free people can only be truly free and truly saved in the possession of Divine truth. That liberty whereby Christ doth quake is free.

To this "ideal freedom St. Peter refers when he says, "For so is the will of God, that in well doing, you should put to silence the ignorance of foolish men: as free and not using your liberty for a cloak of maliciousness but as the servants of God. Honour all men, Love the brotherhood, Fear God, Honor the King.

HOW A MAN DIES

The following inspiring letter from the son of Colonel Violand, of Bordeaux, France, is reproduced here. It breathes so magnificent a spirit of patriotism that it seems to deserve world-wide publicity:

"My Dear Father—If this letter reaches you you will have had the honor of having your son killed by the enemy. I was yesterday proposed for promotion and for the Cross of the Legion of Honor. I do not think I have done anything to cause such honor, but I shall do my duty.

If I die, know that I shall die happy, without regret, proud of having shed my blood with that which so many heroes before me have shed that France may be more beautiful and more respected. I shall die, if God wills, a good Christian and a good Frenchman.

My last thought will be of mother, whom I shall have rejoined; of you, my dear father, who are so brave; of my poor little sweetheart; but I wish my last breath to whisper 'Vive la France!'—Your son.

CAMILLE VIOLAND.

Lieutenant Violand, who was twenty-three years old, was killed some days later before Massiges-Mortmare.

MAJOR ALLAN BRUCE POWLEY
7th Battalion, Victoria, B.C., who was wounded in battle near Ypres. He was born in Drayton, Ontario, and is well known in Kingston, Brandon, Edmonton and Victoria.

GERMANY'S "DEVIL SHIPS"

Filled with Explosives to be set off by Clock-Work

A short time ago it was reported that the Germans were using "devil ships," letting them float down the River Aisne. These "devil ships" are another of those ancient ways of fighting of which so many, like mortars and hand grenades, have been revived in the fighting on the Continent.

A "devil ship" is a ship that has been filled with explosives which discharge either by means of a fuse, or clockwork, or when the ship hits another ship or obstacle. They were employed as long ago as 1585, by the Dutch, when the Prince of Parma besieged Antwerp. In those days they were sent down river in order to explode against a wooden bridge built by the defenders of Belgium's most important city. The "devil ships" used by the Germans were exploded by means of clockwork.

They mustn't be mixed up with fire ships, also used by the German soldiers. Fire ships are usually filled with dry wood smothered in pitch, oil, and other inflammable material, and when fired are sent drifting against any defence work or ships of the enemy.

WOMEN OFFER TO WORK

Thousands in Great Britain Ready to Release Men For Fighting

Over 40,000 women registered for war service in the labor exchanges throughout the British Isles. Of these, 11,000 asked for armament work, 9,000 for clerical, and 7,000 for agricultural employment. About 2,000 offered to work as shop assistants, 1,300 as tailors and dressmakers, including those prepared to work power machines and 1,300 as ordinary needle-workers.

The women offering to do armament work are, for the most part, women who have not undertaken work before; those offering themselves as shop assistants, on the other hand, have done other kinds of work, but feel that large numbers of young men are employed in the distributing trades. The greatest immediate need for women deputies might be expected from this quarter.

LONG FEARED ITALY

Austria Erected Wonderful Fortifications Against Her One-time Ally

The Austrian defences along the northeastern frontier of Italy are of great strength. Austria, although united, until the commencement of the great international conflagration by the bonds of the Triple Alliance, to Italy, has devoted colossal sums of money during the last quarter of a century to fortifying her boundaries against that power, especially that mighty rampart, the Alps extending from Verona to Botzen.

Every accessible line of approach which Austria has in barrier form, usually an armored work in a commanding position for long-range fighting, and an auxiliary barrier in the valleys below, armed with quick-firing and machine guns. Armored observatories, powerful searchlights, underground cables, and signal stations all in the defence. Besides these exterior works, the Tyrol, which juts out like a bastion into the Lombardo-Venetian plain, has a group of forts at Riva, another at Franzensfeste, to protect the railroad junction, and, finally, an immensely strong fortress at Trent, which may be described as the keep of the Tyrol, and is surrounded by a girdle of batteries and armored forts.

HELPFUL AND INSPIRING SERVICES AT THE BAPTIST CHURCH YESTERDAY

Eloquent and Impressive Sermons by Rev. A. E. Richmond of Sidney.

The services at the Victoria Ave. Bapt st church were conducted yesterday by Rev. A. E. Richmond, of Sidney, and were of a most helpful and inspiring character. The subject chosen for consideration in the morning was "The Heroes of Faith," and the text was selected from Heb. 11th, 36 and 38—"And others, of whom the world was not worthy." The eleventh chapter of Hebrews has been termed the roll-call of the heroes of faith, or the Bible portrait gallery of saints. And what a masterly dissertation it is on the history of Old Testament saints, what glorious illustrations of faith; living, enduring faith; faith that subdued kingdoms, and wrought righteousness. The names mentioned herein are for the most part familiar, figures conspicuous in Bible history. Some names mentioned however, condition a considerable amount of surprise. Rahab, for instance. Perhaps none of us so expected her mention when such characters as David and Samuel are dismissed in one line. And how blind we are to note the name of one, after such pathetic and disappointing history recorded in the Old Testament. Most striking too in the history of Moses given here; and how refreshing to read that it was the reproach of Christ that he esteemed rather than the pleasures of Egypt. But the names recorded are only a few of the heroes of faith, there were others, countless others, of whom it was said that "the world was not worthy." These others were the obscurer ones, whose names were not recorded in Bible history, or upon any earthly roll of honor; but who nevertheless, have through faith wrought righteousness, and whose names are engraved in the Lamb's Book of Life, and not one of them is forgotten. Hebrews 11th and here relates. They did not desire earthly fame. No monuments mark their graves. No biographies survive them. They were content to be merely "others." I wonder what would be our attitude in the face of cruel mockings and scourgings, such as Christ's and David? Our circumstances today are such as have hardly any peril at all, and yet what unfaithfulness. But I believe there are some of those "others" around us today; unpopular, obscure, who are patiently bearing the cross of suffering and self-denial. Dear it is that "Mock souls . . . There are who little Their earthly lot an angel's theme; Or that the rod they bear so calm, Shall prove in Heaven a martyr's palm."

Isn't it a pity that even in the religious world of today, there is so much love of the world for popularity, and power? But if we only knew it, there is infinite joy in faithfulness wrapped in obscurity.

In the evening Mr. Richmond dealt with "the Fate of His," selecting 1st tim. 1-15 for his text—"This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners." The fact of sin needs no support, it is a self patent. It is the grim tragedy of earthly experience; the deep, the dark problem of life. The whole world groans to be delivered from its threatened end to be rid of its terrific consequence. Sin today, is regarded far too lightly. We talk of defects, imperfections, wild oats, high living as mere nothings, permissable almost in every man; but the Bible calls them sin. We need a keener sense of sin, and its enormity. The sense of sin in literature is very great. Eminent writers have dealt with it in an interesting, realistic, fashion. Hold Hall Cain's "Shadow of a Crime." What a vivid picture of sin. How the sense of sinful fear of its consequences haunted the poor fellow who had part in that secret murder. Read Thomas Hardy's "Tess of the D'Urbervilles," and the portrayal is given there of the suffering, agony and sorrow, attendant upon wrong doing. Read Nathaniel Hawthorne's "Scarlet Letter," and see there how Dimmesdale, although shielded from the exposure of his sin, absolutely refused free the awful weight of its secrecy. Then there is the personal sense of sin, common to all, for all have sinned. Erskine, the Saint of God was a robber being led to execution and said—"But for restraining grace, I had been brought to that same condition." John Bradford once witnessed a man being led to the scaffold and exclaimed "But for the grace of God, there goes John Bradford." It was once reported to Samuel Marsden that he had been slandered; to which he replied "If I should walk the streets with my heart uncovered, the very boys would pelt me." And so it is, that "They who fain would serve Him best, Are conscious most of wrong within."

And sin's consequences are terrific The most awful thing about sin is not the punishment it brings, but the guilt it entails. We may secure God's forgiveness, but even then, the guilt is horrible. Sin robs a man of everything worth while. It incurs the displeasure and wrath of God. The wages of sin is death." But Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners. Faithful indeed is this saying, and worthy of all acceptation."

History.

History is no museum of antiquities; it is a storehouse of patterns and models for him who will take the trouble to understand. Every boy and girl who has reached a fair degree of maturity can be trained to interpret the past in terms of the present in the light of the past. And unless history shall come to serve this important purpose in the schools, it will find itself with the less reason for pedagogical tradition in the educational institution.—Lynn Barnard.

Days in a Year.

At the examination of the pupils in a primary school a short time ago the inspector put questions in a humorous vein to the scholars. Among the latter was a red headed lad, who, on being asked how many days there are in a year, answered "seven." When the tittering of the rest of the class subsided the inspector remarked:

"I said a year, not a week. Now try again. How many days are there in a year?"

The lad scrapped scrapbaned and waited for a moment and then answered confidently "Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, Saturday, Sunday—first seven. If there's others I never heard of 'em."—London Globe.

Our Neighbor, the Hollend.

Our Holland is end and not the career of the Holland, the first modern submarine owned by this country. Professor John P. Holland's craft is a vessel was sold to the government a number of years ago. The craft was fifty-three feet in length, with a displacement of seventy-five tons, completed with the modern submersible of 1,000 tons which the government now has afloat in bulk. One of the features of the boat was the aerial gun in the bow, which could throw a shell of high explosives nearly a mile. All that remains of the Holland lies filled with sand and water in the Delaware River.—Argonaut.

Gastle Persuasion.

Shortly after our Spanish war a lady in New York asked her colored cook to get her husband to come over and have more comfortable. She noticed that the negro man had several bad scars on his head.

"Have your husband in the war, Dinah?" she asked.

"No, mah man."

"How did he get all those scars on his head?" she asked.

"Oh, dat's whar he's had words."

"How could you, Dinah? He seems like a nice man," said the mistress reproachfully, "he's a good sensible man, but it took a lot of work wid de tater spaade to persuade him to be good!"—Chicago News.

Uses Animals Make of Their Tails.

Horses, cows and other creatures use their tails as fly flappers. Cats, squirrels and many other varied them for balancing their necks for comforters. The rat has raised the use of the tail to a high art, for by its means it gathers food. Oiled and steam jetty, oil and cream out of jars and bottles. The mouse plays in merrily with its tail as a kit ten does, and the marmoset while it sleeps uses its tail as a sort of quilt. The racoon catches crabs with its tail. Every one knows how the monkey journeys through northern forests by swinging from tree to tree, while the fishes steer their way through the water by their tail fins. The ant enters into the big bushy tail as an umbrella.

The Turkey in England.

How did the turkey come to displace the old boar's head in English Christmas fare? Scottish influence and nearness to do with the change, I fancy. It will be succeeded to the English throne, brought with him an intense dislike of pork. His proposed "supper to the devil." It may be remembered, included "a loin of pork and a pipe of tobacco." So English courtiers who wished to stand well with their sovereign, had to abandon their favorite boar's head and found a substitute in the turkey, which had become a fashionable dish for other festive occasions during Elizabeth's reign.—London Express.

The Riches of Poverty.

A man without a penny in his pocket can stand on the top of a hill overlooking estates; he can lift his eyes to the blue sky and count the birds that skim athwart the azure; he can fill his lungs with the purest ozone and drink spare ling water from the spring; he is high enough he can pluck the hardy flowers that seek the rocks. And as he stands there, full of health and vigor, he can say, "All this is mine—this hill and yonder meadows and forest, the blue sky and the topaz, the coolest spring and the flowers; all this is mine to enjoy while I live. If I will, and the wealth of earth could not buy it for any deal!"—Richmond Times-Dispatch.

THE LAST DEBT

You must pay at last your own debt. If you are wise you will dread a prosperity which only loads you with more. Needs is the end of nature. But for every boon for which you receive a tax is levied. He is great who confers the most needs. He is base—and that is the one base thing in the universe—to receive favors and render none.—Emerson.

DAINTY FOOD

Turns Pale Cheeks to Pink.

Our best physicians of the present day seek to cure patients by the use of food and right living, rather than heavy drugs, and this is the true method, for only from food can the body be rebuilt.

Many people, after living on poorly selected or badly cooked food for a long time, and when their ailments become chronic, expect the doctor, with some magic potency, to instantly rebuild them.

This is not possible. The only true method is to turn as quickly as can be from poor food to good. A young lady says:

"I was variously treated for my nerves, stomach, lungs, etc., but none of the treatment gave me relief.

"About a year ago when my appetite failed completely and I began to have sinking spells similar to fainting, I took all manner of tonics and stimulants, but they were of no effect. I had been brought to quit drinking coffee and was using Postum in its place and gradually began to get a little better.

Someone suggested that if I found Postum so beneficial I had better use it for solid food, as they were both the children of one brain. I commenced on Grape-Nuts food for breakfast, having Postum with it. I found the food so dainty, delicious and appetising that I always looked forward to breakfast with pleasure.

"Shortly after commencing this diet, the wretched pain, in my side was greatly relieved, and now, a year later, it has gone entirely, also the sinking spells. In fact, my whole body has changed to pink. I have gained back more than the twenty pounds I lost, and am thoroughly well in every way."

Name given by Canadian Postum Co., Windsor, Ont. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

That Proof.

Some years ago a well known London solicitor, recently deceased, unsuccessfully defended a man charged with burglary, and a few days later there came by post a valuable gold hunter watch, with an inscription to the effect that it was a gift from a certain London society, presumably of doubtful practices. Years afterward the solicitor had the watch stolen from his waistcoat pocket, but it came back to him by post with a letter of apology, stating that "we never rob one of our pals."—London Answers.

Corp. Chas Gibson Wounded by Shrapnel

France,
June 21st, 1916.

Dear Mother,—Just a few lines to let you know I am well, hoping you are the same. We have just come out of the trenches after being in for seven days, so we will have a rest now. Charlie Gibson was wounded on the top of the head with shrapnel. He walked out of the trench himself, so you know it wasn't a bad wound.

He came around and bade us goodbye before he left.

A man is lucky to get a nice wound and get away with it, for every time we go into the trenches it is hell.

A shell dropped about ten feet behind me where I was on sentry and killed four and wounded six. Our corporal whose name was Gunn, all we found of him was his boots, and A. M. Davidson from Kingston had his head blown off, so you see it is not all cream out here. They are talking of the 2nd Contingent relieving us on the 17th of June, and I hope they do for I have been in the firing line nearly five months and that is long enough without having a trip to London. Well, there is not much to write of so I think I will ring off for this time.

A FREE TRIP to San Francisco 1915 and Return

The "Ontario" Gives you the Opportunity

Will you join the special party being sent upon an all-expense-paid tour of over 7000 miles by The Ontario to the great World's Expositions at San Francisco and San Diego? A little work in your spare time for one month and the trip is yours. Are you willing to try to win it?

THE Panama-Pacific International Exposition to be held in San Francisco in 1915 is a national undertaking, and authorized by the Congress of the United States. It will exhibit the resources and achievements of all the peoples of the earth, and will represent an outlay of over fifty million dollars.

The Panama-Pacific International Exposition will be the "last word" in expositions. It celebrates an event of world importance—the completion of the Panama Canal, the greatest physical accomplishment in history—one that will affect the commerce of all the world and the relations of all peoples. No celebration of this event would be adequate unless it surpassed in dignity, grandeur and importance any previous affair of its kind.

It is with this fact in mind that this wonderful Panama-Pacific International Exposition has been planned and will be carried out.

Many circumstances and conditions combine to give this Panama-Pacific International Exposition fundamental differences and advantages—to increase its educational and its commercial importance—to make it more than ever before an exposition demanding the attention of manufacturer, consumer, student, artlover, nature-lover and sight-seer—in short, to make it above all others in history one that should be seen.

It is the first international exposition to be held on the shores of the Pacific. It is the first to be held in a seaport. It is the first that has celebrated a contemporaneous event. It is the first that has celebrated an event of world-wide importance. It is the first that has been held in a spot where the climate permits its being open for ten months and where flowers grow the year around. These factors, and many more, have been considered in the plans of this exposition and will be found reflected in the beauty, dignity, attraction and brilliancy of the finished result.

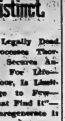
THE NEW BIRTH OF CHURCH AND WORLD

Regeneration of Church and World Distinct.

Adam and His Race Legally Dead. —The Dying Processes Thro'—Redemption Becomes An—other Opportunity For Life—Truth, the Only Door, Is Limited by Knowledge to Pro—"Few Chosen Now"—Millennial Hope For the Unregenerate In Messiah's Kingdom.



July 11.—Pastor Tolstoi, Ohio. Russell, who is here introduced for his text in the words, "Ye which have followed me, in the regeneration when the Son of Man shall sit in the Throne of His glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones."—Matthew 19:28.

The speaker's opening sentence "Jubilee year" struck a note in many of the hearers. He declared that none are members of the Church of Christ except the regenerate, and that this fact was emphasized by our Lord Jesus, saying, "Ye must be born again. If ye would be My disciples. This teaching has practically disappeared from the pulpit, for the reason that the hearts of Christian people seem to be more under than were those of their fathers; they cannot bear to think of the awful doom of their relatives, friends and neighbors and of the heathen unregenerate as such. Special moral torment at the hands of the Devil. Hence they ignore the Scriptural doctrine of regeneration, and endeavor to convince themselves that it cannot be necessary; for they know many not regenerated, who are deserving of a better fate.

The difficulty met with in considering this question is the same which we so often meet with on other questions; namely, an error firmly held so blinds the mind as to make Bible truths seem impossible. Now, however, Bible students begin to see that there is a regeneration promised in the Bible for the world in the Millennium, quite separate and distinct from the regeneration now possible to the saintly Church. When we get the Bible focus upon this question, it is clear and see that they are unconscious, or, as the Bible says, sleeping, waiting for the Resurrection Morn, when the world in general will be awakened to opportunities of regeneration, we see that the regeneration of the present time, that of the Little Flock, will not hinder the masses from regeneration by and by. On the contrary, the regenerated Church of the present time will be associated with Messiah in the regeneration of the world.

This puts a new aspect upon the whole matter. We now being regenerated are as elect, or select class. They have by a special love for righteousness and a special hatred for iniquity, but additionally, they exercised a special faith in God and His promises. By means of these promises and the trials and disciplines of life, these elect regenerates become specially qualified for God's service now and hereafter.

Another item to be noticed is that the regenerating processes of all present time are with a view to bringing the Church class, the Elect of God, to a new nature. Their regeneration began when God imparted to them the Holy Spirit, following their full consecration to His service in the name and merit of the Redeemer. This regenerative process continues during their lifetime, as they grow in grace, in knowledge and in love—in the character-likeness of God's dear Son. This mind is transforming and renewing work, referred to by St. Paul, as "changed by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to His mercy He saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Spirit."

No well informed person will dispute the fact that the regenerated condition is a small proportion of the Christian nations; yes, that the regenerated constitute but a very small proportion of the ruling or church membership. The apostle refers to the regenerate, styling them New Creatures in Christ, and declares that to them "old things are passed away, and all things have become new"—new hopes, new aims, new ambitions, new desires, new affections. Such have been "transformed by the renewing of their minds."—2 Corinthians 5:17; Romans 12:2.

Surely it is not an empty statement on the apostle's part, that all these regenerate ones are New Creatures in Christ Jesus. The Apostle, referring to such as these, tells us that they have been begotten by the Holy Spirit through the Message of the Truth. Again, St. Peter says, God hath "given unto us (regenerates) exceeding great and precious promises; that by these we might become partakers of the Divine nature."—(2 Peter 1:4.) There it is! said the Pastor; these are not mere very humans; but by God's grace in Christ, through this begetting, they become of a different nature—partakers of the Divine nature." In comparison with the world, therefore, these are New Creatures—fresh creation.

But the Scriptures everywhere remind us that the New Creation is merely an embryo and will not be perfected until the resurrection. They inform us also that since, by repudiating their covenant with the Lord and turning wholly to sin, man became subjects of the Second Death, God, when He instituted the begotten of the Spirit may never attain the full measure of their possibilities—may never become joint-heirs with Jesus Christ their Lord because of sinful, worldly-mindedness, they may attain only to lower spiritual degree or nature—to be "Kings and Priests" but not "sit upon the Throne of God, who is the ex-emplar of the Father's nature, Jehovah Himself.

In our context the Redeemer assured His faithful Apostles that, as their reward for their earthly care would be associated with Himself in His Millennial Kingdom, the Church, or Spiritual Kingdom. These would sit on twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel (Corinthians 6:2.) No doubt some special glory and honor is provided for the twelve, above the rest of the faithful Apostles—St. Peter talking the place of Judas. Nevertheless he afterward declared that all of His faithful followers would be granted a share with Him in His Millennial Kingdom and in His glory, honor and immortality. He said, "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with Me in My throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with My Father in His throne."—Revelation 3:21.

This is doubly interesting to us; because it shows us clearly that those who are now regenerated and who prove faithful to the spirit-begetting of the Truth now become heirs of the world—to them will be born the privilege of the world's redemption. As every begetting in the flesh must have a birth, so must it be validated, so the begetting of the Spirit must reach the culmination of its purpose in the First Resurrection; on such the Second Death has no power, but they shall reign with Him a thousand years."—Revelation 20:6.

But this is not all. The time when the Church will be glorified with Christ in the Kingdom glory will be the time of the world's regeneration—the blessing of the Lord's people who have experienced the regenerating influences of the Holy Spirit being the channel of blessing toward the unregenerate world—so that they would object to the regeneration of mankind. It is not all such, on the contrary, rejoice in the Lord's purpose that mankind has a Plan by which the non-elect of mankind may be regenerated, and thus "come" to a full knowledge of the Truth. Selfishness and envy desire to exclude others from the blessings God has promised them signify so much of the spirit of the world. We are not only thinketh no evil, but it hopeth all things, and is glad to see the Lord's plan of the ages moving to the effect that all the families of the earth shall be blessed through the Spiritual Seed of Abraham—Christ and the Church.—Galatians 3:16, 29.

Some may see that the Church need regeneration, but fail to see the need of the world. They see that the Church is regenerated because "flesh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of God," whereas the world is not. But there would be no Kingdom of God, no Church, to be Millennially, if there would be no regeneration of the world, if God purposed only a selection of the Church. On the contrary, however, everywhere in the Bible we find this matter of regeneration toward the world, while calling of His particular class, the Church, is spoken of as the apple of His eye.—Zech. 2:8.

Another favorite text, "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish but have everlasting life." The world of God. The whole world was loved The whole world has been provided for in the ransom sacrifice of Jesus, and the whole world is to have the benefit resulting from that sacrifice. Adam's death is not in vain, nor merely for the Church, the elect, but for the whole race, the great mass of mankind, non-elect and, with the Kingdom age, will be blessed—blessed with an opportunity for regeneration as members of the new nature, as the Church, but to the nature once assigned human-kind in the image of God, through sin.

The world's regeneration, therefore, will be to perfect human nature, lost in Adam, redeemed by the sacrifice of Christ, restored later. Moreover, God's provision of Times of Restitution—"times of refreshing"—is another apple—a thousand years. Satan shall no longer be the god of the world. At the beginning of Messiah's Reign, we have the assurance that the eyes of the blind shall be opened and the deafness and darkness for light, no more.

The Great Life-Giver will provide an opportunity for regeneration to all the thousands of millions of the race who died in Adam and who were redeemed to this opportunity for everlasting life through Messiah's death at Calvary. (1 Corinthians, 15:21-23.) Ignorance and superstition, darkness and sin, will flee from before the rising Sun of Righteousness, which will flood the earth with the knowledge of the Glory of God. Then it will be manifest whosoever will, shall have the opportunity of coming to a knowledge of God and of the way of life, and of being brought again by the Life-Redeemer.

The regenerated Elect of this Age will have nothing to do with giving the life to the world. That life must all come from the Life-Giver, who is the second Adam, the Lord from heaven's Everlasting Father by the sacrifice of Himself. But as Christ stayed in the Second Death, the Adamic-related world will be fulfilling the prayer creature in Heaven and on earth shall be heard saying, Praise, glory, honor, dominion and might be unto Him that sitteth upon the Throne and unto the Lamb, forever! There will be no discordant note. God's will shall then be done upon earth, even as it is now done in Heaven; and the reward of everlasting life, with all its blessings and no more pain—will then be with humanity, even as it is now with the angels.

It should not be forgotten that Adam did not lose everlasting life. Although he had a perfect life and was free from all evidences of sinful weakness, nevertheless he was placed on trial, on probation, to see whether by obedience he would develop and prove a character in harmony with God, and thus become accounted worthy of everlasting life. Consequently, when Adam and his posterity are redeemed from the death, the salvation does not entitle them to life everlasting, but merely to a fresh trial as to worthiness of everlasting life.

This new trial will indeed be more favorable for Adam and his race in some respects than was Adam's original trial, because of the large increase of knowledge. Man will have an opportunity to learn the lesson of the exceeding sinfulness of sin. He will soon have an opportunity to learn the blessedness of righteousness and to know of the grace of God in Christ. This knowledge will be of great service to all who will use it during the Millennial Age. Those who will then refuse the world will be on trial for everlasting life, which will be ended at the Judgment Throne.—Revelation 20: 11-15.

God wills that all men shall be saved, not only from the Adamic death sentence, but also from the ignorance and blindness with which the fall has darkened their minds. (2 Corinthians 4:4.) He wills that all should be so saved from the train of evils which has followed Adam's sins and its penalty of death, in order that they may come to a full knowledge of the Truth. This He does in full accord with the highest principles of the Truth they may make the very best possible use of the new trial for their own benefit, for the Redeemer's Ransom-sacrifice. It is to this end, and for this purpose that Adamic Kingdom will be inaugurated, which will first bind Satan and then release mankind from the blindness; as it is written. (Isaiah 35:5.) For the same reason it is the Divine arrangement that the Kingdom work shall be done principally and shall require a thousand years for its completion.

Throughout the Millennial Age it will be the work of Christ Jesus, as the Second Adam, to regenerate all mankind. The regenerating influences will begin with their awakening from the sleep of death. By that time with the Master's declaration, that the hour is coming in which all that are in the graves shall hear the voice of the Son of Man and come forth.—John 5:28, 29.

The coming forth from the tomb will be merely the beginning of the work of regeneration. It will be a gradual awakening, and the awakened sleepers will be in the same condition of mind that they were in when they fell asleep in death—in a very similar condition to those who will be living on the earth at that time. But before they can be regenerated, they must be brought to a knowledge of the Truth, and conform and care of understanding must be opened. This the Millennial Kingdom shall be accomplished. "Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped." "The earth shall be full of the knowledge of the glory of the Lord." (Isaiah 35:5; 11:9; Hab. 2:14.)

The good news of Divine Love and of the possibilities of return to the favor of God through the atoning work of Jesus having then been clearly demonstrated to all, each one will have the opportunity of deciding for himself whether or not he desires to return to human perfection and the blessed privileges of life everlasting. Of so, a work will be begotten again by the Life-Giver and will begin again only those who are desirous of having the New life All willful rejectors of the opportunity will die the Second Death. But those who accept the Saviour's proposition will come under helpful and disciplinary experiences which will gradually lift them up toward perfection—mental, moral and physical—to all that was lost for them by Adam's disobedience. All that was regained for them by the Redeemer's obedience and the Divine arrangement for the regeneration of the world.

Monster "Orange" Crowd in City

The two hundred and twenty-fifth anniversary of the Battle of the Boyne is being celebrated in Belleville, today the largest crowd in years thronging the streets and Agricultural Park. From the earliest hour every vehicle of traffic and transportation, poured its human freight into the City of the Bay. The citizens were ready to receive and welcome the members of the Orange Order and kindred societies and the many friends who came to witness "the walk" and hear the speeches of day. White horses carrying committeemen moved rapidly up and down Front street to trains and boats or to meet county processions. From all directions, the Orangemen, Preston Boys, Tree Blues, and Black Knights came. The Fifteenth band preceded the parades.

Orange banners, yellow ribbons and buttons are common today.

Many of the lodges created fine impressions by their dress. Some wore silk hats, others had donned white clothes and straw hats.

It was a great parade that came in from Plainfield, Foxboro and Ceanlton way. The whole countryside followed "the boys" Fife and drum bands were playing and all was merry

The walk at 4oc-thirty was the largest seen in Belleville

The "Twelfth of July" rain did not mar today's proceedings, although early this morning it gave promise of approaching to dampen the spirits of the celebrants.

Dispute on Street

Front Street on Saturday night was the scene of an encounter between a man high in municipal circles and another gentleman. Some dispute had arisen over some business deal early in the day and the second man had been ordered out of the office of the other and in the evening the men again came together. Words gave way to clinching and the encounter was stopped by two soldiers. One of the participants had his knee hurt a little in the meeting.

VATICAN TAKING DECIDED ACTION.

LONDON, July 12.—The Daily Chronicle's correspondent in a despatch from northern France says: "Vatican correspondents declare that the Pontifical Secretary of State is about to publish two diplomatic documents of great interest to the Allies. One of these addressed to England conveys the Pope's explicit condemnation of the sinking of the Lusitania and the use of poisonous gases as wholly contrary to Christian morality. The other destined for Belgium brands the German's violation of neutrality as equally opposed to the ethics of the Catholic church and expresses firm hope for the restoration of that heroic little nation's independence."

"K. OF K." WANTS SOUTH AFRICANS.

LONDON, July 12.—A Cape Town despatch to Reuter's Telegram Company says that Lord Kitchener, cabling to General Botha his congratulations for his "masterly conduct of the campaign and brilliant victory," adds: "We shall warmly welcome you South Africans who can come over to join us."

Train Derailed on the C.O.R.

The Central Ontario regular train from Coe Hill ran off the track about four miles north of Millbridge this morning while on its regular trip to Trenton. The trouble appears to have been caused by one of the wheels on the tender which caused the rails to spread. There were five coaches on the train all heavily laden with excursionists to the Orange celebration here. Four coaches left the rails but, fortunately none was upset and no passengers were injured. The auxiliary was sent out from Trenton and the passengers were transferred to another train. By this prompt action the Orangemen were enabled to reach Belleville in time to join in the grand procession.

SUBMARINES CARRY REMARKABLE GUNS

Heavy Four-inch Rifle, With Crew to Work it Rises Through Deck, Fires and Then Disappears

The submarine in the role of a commerce destroyer has proved a surprise. But it was inevitable that this method of attack would prove too expensive if hits were to be made by the torpedo alone. The merchant craft of the allies were not slow in realizing the limitations of the submarine boat when relying upon mechanical fish as a weapon of destruction, and many have been the instances where lingering and full speed have made it possible for the ship of trade to dodge the oncoming torpedo.

Then the Germans took to halting their quarries by means of gunfire and blowing them up, after abandonment, by dynamite planted aboard where they would be likely to sink the merchantmen quickest. But this order of procedure is sometimes impracticable because of the great alertness of the flotillas of British and French destroyers. Accordingly, the Germans sometimes sent the trader to the bottom by gunfire alone in many instances, and this method of attack is far more formidable than has hitherto been believed possible on the part of submarines. It is a matter of common report that the German submarines that figured prominently in the early months of the war were equipped with two sorts of guns. One, a 37-centimetre weapon, firing from a fixed pedestal mount a shell of 15-inch calibre; and the other, a more formidable piece, arranged to disappear into the superstructure and to throw a 12-pound projectile. This gun is a stumpy, but powerful rifle, having a calibre of 2.95 inches, and is moderate range likely to prove an unpleasant antagonist for a torpedo boat. But, again, this mean weapons for the gun's crew, for the men had to come out upon the deck. To get under suddenly, the deck hatch might have to be closed before the men at the gun could retreat into the submarine.

The Crown of Castille, a British steamer, was sank off the Scilly Islands by the German submarine U-38, and she was sent to the bottom, according to her crew, by shell fire. But this attack, so it is reported, was not made by 12-pound projectiles, but by shell of 4-inch calibre. The 4-inch gun fires a shot weighing in the neighborhood of 33 pounds. This development confirms a rumor that the Kaiser's submarines were being supplied with bigger guns and that those weapons were installed in a novel manner, in fact, so mounted that they would not be continually exposed to the corrosive action of salt water when the craft were running submerged. Further, the arrangement was such that the gun crews did not have to stand upon the open deck.

The gun, with its superposed recoil cylinder and sheltering hood, is mounted upon a revolving pedestal provided with seats for two operators—one controlling lateral movement and the other manipulating the elevating gear with his left hand and firing with his right. The revolving pedestal, in its turn, is supported by a plunger elevator functioned by means of a pneumatic cylinder. The gunhood is really the hatch cover, and when the weapon is lowered this cover is seated watertight against a rubber gasket in the recess at the top of the hatch or barbette. The gun pointers take their positions when the elevator is lowered, and rise with the ride when the hatch cover lifts and the gun is cleared for action. The piece can be elevated and lowered in a few seconds.

Wednesday, July 14 is the evening will be the first opportunity the people of Belleville will have to see Wing Tabor Wetmore, today one of America's greatest exponents of the art of impersonation.

His part in the program for the Belgian Relief entertainment will be in all respects the same as given in his recent metropolitan successes, including the deliciously humorous Joseph C. Lincoln sketches that have convulsed New York audiences this season, also a serious drama recently added to his repertoire and considered by the critics his masterpiece. The musical features will be contributed by soloists of international reputation.

Miss Elisabeth Basey, the young Californian violin virtuoso, whose debut in Carnegie Hall created a sensation in Eastern musical circles, will be heard in a favorite selection.

Miss Cecilia Basey, the charming young lyric soprano with the company is perhaps the better known to eastern music lovers.

These well known metropolitan artists have volunteered their services to make possible a dramatic and musical program of a quality not often heard outside of the great cities.

ROTERDAM, July 13.—The German Colonial Office in a statement relates the surrender of the German forces in Southwest Africa and says: "If this surrender actually has taken place it was due to the overwhelming superiority of the British forces and occurred under the most honorable circumstances. It is the first British victory of the war and was won by a Boer general, and it will not affect the ultimate result of the war."

AERIAL CORPS PLAN DESTRUCTION OF KRUPP GUN WORKS.

LONDON, July 13.—A great movement was launched here today among aeronautical men to build several thousand aeroplanes to be used in a campaign against the Krupp gun works and other German munition plants. It is also planned to destroy the Rhine bridges over which the enemy transpor supplies and troops to France.

NINETY THOUSAND MEN WILL MAKE MUNITIONS.

LONDON, July 13.—After upwards of a fortnight's work, the 600 bureaus which opened when the Minister of Munitions, David Lloyd George, gave labor the opportunity voluntarily to enroll as munitions operatives, closed today with atotal registration of 90,000 men. Registration hereafter will be carried out through the labor exchanges.

More men are needed, but the chief difficulty now is to place them on war work with a minimum of red tape. H. G. Morgan, assistant director of the munitions department, said today that this problem was causing some unrest among the workers, but that the transfer would take time, for the government was anxious not to disturb industry more than necessary.

"The problem almost amounts to a rearrangement of the whole skilled labor of the country," said Mr. Morgan. "This, of course, will take considerable time.

The new bureau has a staff of 300 men, most of whom are working temporarily in tents.

HEAVIEST FIGHTING SINCE THE LANDING AT DARDANELLES.

LEMNOS, July 12.—The heaviest fighting which has taken place in the Gallipoli Peninsula since the allied force landed there was that which began late Tuesday last and lasted till late Wednesday. It resulted in a swing forward of the southern line of allied armies for about five inchings, and in the inflicting of staggering losses on the enemy. Those who were in the battle place the Turco-German casualties at 7000 killed and between 14,000 and 15,000 wounded. Many prisoners were taken, too. The whole army in the southern part of the peninsula was engaged, and the Australians and New Zealanders further north also played a part.

ITALIANS PRESSING ADVANCE IN CARNIA.

ROME, via Paris, July 13.—The following official statement from general headquarters was issued last night:

"In Carnia, following our successful offensive, begun yesterday, on the heights constituting the southern slope of the torrent of Auder (Ansiet) the enemy abandoned the most advanced positions which he had previously occupied, first destroying the entrenchments.

On Sunday night in the Monte Nero zone, the enemy during a thunderstorm attempted a surprise attack on our positions, but this war repulsed.

"Nothing of importance has occurred elsewhere along the front."

POLICE CAPTURED FRANK MURPHY

Just as he was Leaving Town—He is Charged With Forging Name on Check

The police have had considerable to do with a young man who gives his name as Frank Murphy. He was putting up at a local hotel yesterday and was accused of having obtained board at another hotel a month ago without paying for it. This was under examination finally when confronted with one of the hotel staff, he expressed a desire to settle. He was fined $5 and costs and made good the bill.

This morning another cause of police interference arose. It was discovered that a check had been passed on the Molson's Bank and it is believed to have been forged. It was dated Tuesday, July 12, for $87.85 and purported to be signed by T. S. Hawkins in favor of F. A. Blake. After a hasty search in which an effort to clgred a quiet part, Murphy was arrested just as he was on Albert St. He got rid of the desire of the police to apprehend him and started eastward.

This morning he was charged with signing a forged document and uttering the same and was remanded until next Monday.

Murphy or Murray as he called himself yesterday is a well dressed man of 32 years.

While he was in the cells at the police station before being brought before the magistrate a gas-pipe which was thought a preparation for suicide by the use of his belt.

Progressive Business

A scribe in passing the Gorman Shoe House this morning saw carpenters busily engaged and he dropped in and interviewed Mr. Richie Thompson who informed him that at the present time they were cramped for room and found it necessary to make some alterations in the store so as to enable them to have plenty of room for the large and up to date stock the Gorman Shoe House will have this fall. Mr. Thompson states that it is their intention to carry at all times the most up-to-date Foot Wear to be found in any shoe house in Canada.

Before placing their fall order Mr. Gorman had Mr. Thompson visit some of the largest shoe manufacturers in Canada, after which they decided to take exclusive agency for the Dominion and Georgina shoes for Ladies and the "Just Wright" shoe for men. These shoes are made in all leathers and the very latest shapes in stylish footwear. The Gorman Shoe House guarantee sate will go with each and every pair of these shoes. Reliable footwear, fair, honest and courteous treatment to all, is the slogan of this progressive store. The public are at all times welcome and they will find that the four experienced salesmen now employed will at all times put forth every effort to satisfy and please. NO "FRUITFUL PEACE."

The Westminster Gazette, commenting upon the letter which the German Emperor is reported to have written to a highly-placed personage in Bavaria, in which he declared that "a fruitful peace for Germany could be signed tomorrow if it wished," says a fruitful peace, as explained by the Kaiser, would be a truce, a mere breathing space which would enable Germany a little later to spring at the throats of her neighbors once more. That sort of peace, we need not say, the British people will not make, but the suggestion, if authentic, throws a curious light upon the existing mood in Germany. As the Westminster Gazette says, the mental processes of the Germans are "not divining, but if they really suppose that they can make peace as they make war, at their own moment, and that they can so order events as to give them the war and the next, they must suppose their opponents to be in a very simple as well as a very gullible mood.

"We do not know and we will not speculate upon what may be going to happen in Galicia in the next few days or weeks; but we do know that nothing can happen which will shake the determination of the Allies to continue the war until they have effected their purpose. If the Germans are well informed about us they will know that we are increasing daily in military and naval power, and that the new organization which we are laying down is not an emergency measure for this week or next, but a deliberate preparation for prolonged war. If the Russians have received blows they are all the time giving them, and with a new and powerful Ally, we in the West are not in the least dismayed by the fear of any harm that can be done us by the German armies now in the East, or such of them as can be extricated after the present exhausting conflict. Our enemies will do well to understand that we are going to endure to the end, and that we are confident of our power to make the 'fruitful peace' when it comes, a peace which will rid us of their menace in the future."

A LAND OF STORMS.

Bulgaria has been for many centuries the centre of the stormiest part of Europe known as the Balkans, out of which through Servia sprang the present European war. International interest in Bulgaria is at present centralized around the fact that her influence has for nearly a year restrained Roumania and Greece from entering the struggle. At the conclusion of the first Balkan war of two years ago, Bulgaria was victorious but exhausted. Then Greece, Servia and Roumania turned upon her and compelled her to part with a large portion of the profits of nearly every victory. The deciding factor in this second war was the attitude assumed by Roumania. This nation with nothing more than a mere display of force came out of the struggle chief gainer by the war and as a consequence there is little love lost between Roumania and Bulgaria. Bulgaria has a population of about 4,000,000 split up into 31 races speaking 23 languages. About three-fourths of the population makes its living on the farm. Bulgaria suffers from the excessive subdivision of land. One man commonly has several different holdings often widely separated and this necessarily greatly reduces his labor efficiency. A readjustment of land and property is essential for the future prosperity of Bulgaria and a cessation of the conflicts that have torn Bulgaria for many centuries is equally essential. Education, commerce, individual and civic prosperity cannot thrive under conditions as they have been and as they continue to be.

We read that one may hypnotize a cobra by pressing its neck with the fingers. One may also hypnotize a rattlesnake by biting its head off.

The lure of the "movie" was too strong for DeWolf Hopper, especially since his engagement was accompanied by a salary of $125,000 a year. This might put a quietus on the uproar against Billy Sunday's income.

So far as Germany is concerned, the important announcemnt is not that Roumania and Bulgaria are ready to jump in with the Allies. It is the statement of John Redmond that 120,000 Irishmen have responded to the call of Kitchener to join the colors.

It is when a fellow sits alone in a boat in the middle of a lake in the heart of the north woods and reads a scrap of paper that has been around his lunch, that 6,000,000 human beings have been killed, that he gets the true perspective on war.

The great building trades strike in Chicago throwing 200,000 men out of employment indicates that times are improving. It is the rule whenever peace becomes plentiful and remunerative for the union leaders hatch up some excuse for calling a strike. When there is no work it is not necessary to call a strike in order to block the wheels of industry.

The new war loan issued by England will cost the people something like $450,000,000 annually. It was so arranged that it will increase the interest in the national debt already existing and will itself carry an interest rate of 4½ per cent. instead of 2½, which was the current charge before the war broke out. On December 1, if no other loans are made, England will be borrowing at the national debt approximately $10,000,000,000. The thirsty drinker and the tobacco smoker will have to pay the bill—or most of it.

There are said to be many persons who have in their blood an antidote which kills diphtheria germs. A test known as the Shick skin reaction can tell who these fortunate persons are.

To apply the test, a physician injects under the outer skin a little fresh diptheria toxin. If the toxin is administered in a proper manner there is not the slightest danger, it is said, to the person inoculated. If he who undergoes the Shick test is immune to diptheria, nothing happens. If he is susceptible to the disease, a little red spot about the size of a dime appears on the skin within twenty-four hours.

The Shick test is not a cure nor yet a preventive, but it is important as it tells who is immune to diphtheria and such persons could safely nurse those stricken with the disease.

The success of the Shick method has led physicians to believe that it could be used in connection with other diseases beside diptheria and it is said experiments are to be made especially in regard to tuberculosis and typhoid.

The German Official News Bureau sends out an alleged quotation from a Swedish paper the purport of which is that the British fleet is being destroyed and that it is only a question of time when the German fleet will be its equal. Now Berlin knows perfectly well that the strength of the British fleet has so increased since the war began that all that Germany has done to destroy naval vessels has produced no determining effect. Indeed, Gehelmrath Flamm lecturing the other day in Berlin on the sea power of Germany's nemies, said: "Today the strength of the English fleet in ships of the line and cruisers is hardly less as compared with ours than at the beginning of the war, for they possess ninety-five of the first class and sixty-five of the second class in spite of losses which represent sixteen and thirteen per cent. respectively." Britain has however done better than Gehelmrath Flamm allows. Her shipyards, working day and night, have so hastened construction of warships that were not to have touched the waves before the summer and end of this year, that she now possesses a much greater strength in naval vessels—apart from those she purchased from foreign governments—than on the first of August last.

THE NEWSIE'S PRAYER.

You're nothing much to look at, but I like you jus' the same;
Say Bill, I often wonder how I lived before you came.

To cheer me up 'n comfort me when I was feelin' blue—
Why Bill, I couldn't get along without a friend like you!

When times wuz hard, 'n all the lads gave me the icy mit,
'N when I'd lost my hold on things, old pal, you didn't quit,

You plugged along, you good old chum, till only skin 'n bones
Wuz left on you—'n even then, 'twas me gave all the groans!

You never whimpered when that big truck run you down,
You jus' lay there 'n looked at me, from them big eyes so brown,

'N looked at me—'n looked—until I thought my brain'd give,
'N now I'm on my knees, Bill, prayin' God'll let you live!

I don't much religion, Bill—I only know you're hurt,
'N if by prayin' you'll get well, I'll kneel here in the dirt

'N say, O lord, he cannot ask for himself, cuz he's dumb,
He's jus' a poor old crippled dog—but he's my precious chum!

Other Editors' Opinions

EDITORIALS IN BELLEVILLE PAPERS.

We like the strong, manly tone of the editorials which have been appearing in the Belleville papers from the outbreak of the war. They have been patriotic, uplifting and sympathetic, without showing any of the malice or venom which characterizes the editorial writings in so many pro-Allies and pro-German papers throughout the continent. It seems to us that both Belleville papers have taken a fair stand in this dreadful crisis, and that all the utterances of these papers have been imbued with feelings as an evident desire to present the side of the Allies, without stooping to exaggerate the denial of the enemy alleged. This only goes to bear out and amplify the opinion held by so many people not only residents and former residents of Belleville, but outsiders, that the little City of the Bay is really an intellectual and cosmopolitan centre, which makes it possibly more prouder than ever of the town which gave us the honor of being our birthplace.—Chicago-Belleville News.

IMPROVING THE RIFLE.

The Springfield rifle, model 1903, with which the United States Army is armed, is conceded to be the best rifle in the world. It is simple in construction, stands up under all kinds of usage and is wonderfully accurate. It carries a bullet something over three miles and can be sighted for 2,850 yards. Wonderful work is being done with it on the ranges, both of the regular army and the organized militia. There is no trouble for one acquainted with the rifle to fire ten shots in a minute and get a large percentage of hits.

However, the war in Europe has shown that the machine guns, which pour a stream of lead like water from the nozzle of a hose, has revolutionized infantry fighting, that the modern magazine rifle can not cope with them in actual warfare. The suggestion has been made to arm the infantry with those machine guns exclusively.

It is said the United States has been making experiments and has found that the present Springfield rifles can virtually be turned into machine guns by changing the breach and equipping it with the automatic device now used on the Colt revolvers manufactured for the United States Army. This would allow the guns to be fired as fast as the holder could pull the trigger without deranging the aim in any way. Such a rifle would be a great improvement over any other gun used by the armies of the world and add greatly to the fighting efficiency of the United States Army.

It is also said that a new bayonet has been experimented with successfully. It is made on the plan of the Philippine bolo and has been used by the Philippine scouts. The present bayonet is a sixteen-inch long, straight blade. The bolo bayonet is much longer, heavier and stronger and built more for cutting than thrusting, it being shown in the European war that the bolo but little slashing done when the man get into close quarters.—Oswego Palladium.

HOLIDAY TIME.

Schools have let out for the summer, and the small boy is free from the vagaries of his teacher's mature mind until the end of August. They are a great many happy days in store for the youth of this continent, at least on the northern portion above the Mexican border, and we cannot help hope that here will be nothing happen on either this side of the line or the Canadian side to cause even one short cessation of the pleasures of the boys and girls just let out of school. It is a great time, and the average Canadian youth and maiden schoolboy certainly deserves to have the recreation period during the hot weather, and to have every facility to enjoy it to the full. It is not a very long period from boyhood and girlhood up to manhood and womanhood, and there is somuch of a serious nature crowded into the mature lives of even the most frivolous of us that we should try to see that our children during their playtime have the opportunity of enjoying every possible moment of it.—Chicago-Belleville News.

Ignorance of the Bible.

One thing is undeniable—knowledge of the Bible is far less general now than it was in the days of my childhood. That amazing familiarity with the sacred book with which John Richard Green credits the people of England in the days of the commonwealth had persisted until my boyhood among the sons of the Puritans and the Scotch Irish in New England and in New York state. It was not universal, but it was general. The kind of tests by which college students and students in secondary schools are frequently in these days made to display an ignorance of the Bible which is astounding could have been passed with credit by the majority of country boys and girls sixty or seventy years ago. But this thorough acquaintance of earlier generations with the Bible was not due to any considerable extent to the public school. All that we learned about the Bible in school would have added very little to our store of religious knowledge. It was in our churches and our Sunday schools, but chiefly in our homes, that most of us learned what we knew about the Bible.—Washington Gladden in Atlantic.

"Literary Style."

A high school student writes this office inquiring what constitutes a "literary style." Without trying to answer this interesting and difficult question, two remarks may be cited that throw light on it.

When Charles James Fox was told that his speech read well he retorted, "Then it was a bad speech." "When one of my congregation would tell me at the end of a service that the sermon was fine," Dr. Lyman Abbott has said. "I knew I had made a failure."

In general the style is good when it fits the thought so well that the style itself does not attract attention. As soon as you begin to be conscious of the style—unless of course you are reading with that end in view—you may be pretty sure it's bad style. Style is something like clothes or furniture. The well dressed man is the man whose clothes do not attract attention. The well furnished room is the one you go out of satisfied, but unable to describe the furniture.—Kansas City Star.

ANGER.

Life is short. Let us not throw any of it away in useless resentment. It is best not to be angry. It is next best to be quickly reconciled.

AILING WOMEN OF MIDDLE AGE

Mrs. Doucette Tells of her Distressing Symptoms During Change of Life and How She Found Relief.

Belleville, Nova Scotia, Can.—"Three years ago I was suffering badly with what the doctors called Change of Life. I was so bad that I had to stay in bed. Some friends told me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it helped me from the first. It is the only medicine I took, that did help me and I recommend it. You don't know how thankful and grateful I am. I give you permission to publish what your good medicine has done for me."—Mrs. Simon Doucette, Belleville, Yarmouth Co., Nova Scotia, Canada.

Such warning symptoms as sense of suffocation, hot flashes, headaches, backaches, dread of impending evil, timidity, sounds in the ears, palpitation of the heart, sparks before the eyes, irregularities, constipation, variable appetite, weakness and inquietude, and dizziness, are promptly heeded by intelligent women who are approaching the period in life when woman's great change may be expected.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound invigorates and strengthens the female organism and builds up the weakened nervous system. It has carried many women safely through this crisis.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman, and held in strict confidence.

IN THUNDERSTORMS.

What to Do, and What Not to Do, in Order To Be Safe.

To take shelter during a thunderstorm beneath a solitary tree, or under an open shed or barn, or to be the most prominent object in a field or on a common, is to court death. People are continually being warned of this danger, but the warning is often ignored.

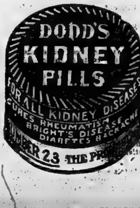
As the eminent scientists, Sir Ray Lankester, who says that all children should be warned against seeking shelter in a thunderstorm under any solitary upstanding shed, tree, or group of trees, points out, such danger can, to a large extent, be avoided if people will only behave in accordance with the dictates of knowledge and experience. The danger of people standing under a tree during a thunderstorm really arises from the fact that the shed or the tree stands out high above the surrounding surface, and its top is the nearest point for some distance round to the thunder cloud, and is likely to "attract" the electric discharge, or to serve as the passage of the electricity from the cloud to the earth.

It is equally dangerous to be the most prominent object in a field or common during a thunderstorm. Indeed, more persons are struck and killed in this way than when sheltering under trees. What, then, is a man or woman or child to do when caught in the open in a thunderstorm? They may take shelter, says Sir Ray Lankester in a wood, though not under any isolated tree nor under a long high hedgerow.

They should ask for shelter in any available house or cottage. Failing this, they may (as goats and sheep and cattle do) get under a low-lying rock-face, or into a ditch, or dry hole, or even, if the storm is close round them, lie flat on the ground. It is less dangerous to be wet through than dry, since wet clothes may, and have before now, saved a man's life owing to the fact that they are good conductors, and allow the electric current to pass away without obstruction.

When you are in a house during a close and immediate thunderstorm you should keep the window shut and avoid placing yourself between two large and prominent conductors of electricity, such as the waterpipe or gas main (if your plumber has permitted you to know where they are) and the fireplace. If the house is a detached one or a corner house, and the storm is close, you will be acting reasonably if you retire into the basement until the storm is over.

It is important that everyone should be able to judge of the nearness or distance of a thunderstorm. The sound of the thunder, caused by the heating and sudden expansion of the air by the great electric spark which we call "a flash of lightning," travels a mile in five seconds. When there is an interval between the flash and the sound of the thunder of two seconds or more, the storm is for the time being at a safe distance, but when the interval is only a second or less the storm is close, and any prominent object near you, or you yourself, may be struck.



DIRECTING A BATTLE.

How the General Staff Keeps In Touch With the Firing Line.

In wartime the many threads leading from the long battle line at length reach a common point, which is the headquarters of the general staff. The activity of each officer attached to the general staff is therefore of the greatest importance for the success of every military enterprise.

During the action every officer of the staff is at the immediate disposal of the commanding general and assists him in the carrying out of orders.

Among the duties of the staff officer during action belong the gathering and compilation of reports which are constantly pouring in to headquarters and which give intimation of the progress of the battle. The staff officer must observe the needs of the troops in action. He must keep a close watch on their supply of ammunition. He must see that their commanders properly execute the orders of the commanding general. He must look after the wounded, see that they are properly treated and sent to lazareta. He must see to it that prisoners are properly cared for and that the commissariat is adequately provided for and the provisioning of the troops.

Sometimes the commanding general intrusts a staff officer with the observation of the action of the opposing forces which may be beyond the view of headquarters, or he may be sent to the firing line with important orders to commanders there, which, however, the staff officer has authority to alter if in his judgment this is necessary.

During defense movements it is of particular importance to observe closely the movements of the opposing forces in order to make preparation for counted moves, such as advances, retreats, the sending of re-enforcements and other movements of troops. The execution of these movements falls within the province of the staff officer.

The training of the staff officer is very thorough. A complete practical course in military science, extending over many years' of active service with various bodies of troops, is augmented by years of study at the war college, which embraces the last word in the theoretical science of modern warfare. —New York Tribune.

BEARD OF THE TURK.

It Is Sacred, For by It He Pledges His Word and Honor.

Some years ago the German Colonel von Schlichting, instructor to the Ottoman army, was shot dead on parade at Yildiz kiosk by a young Albanian soldier, Hadji Bairam, because the German in correcting the faulty pose of the soldier's head touched his chin with his riding whip.

Unfortunately the colonel did not know or did not remember that to touch a Mussulman's chin is a grave offense from a religious viewpoint. It is by the beard of the prophet or his own beard that he swears allegiance and makes his vows and promises. According to a Turkish general, an Albanian would kill his own father if he laid hands upon his son's head in so disrespectful a manner. A Mohammedan military service is simply a religious duty, and it implies a voluntary submission to discipline. But Turkish officers know better than to touch their men rudely or even to shout at them.

Of course it was a very regrettable misunderstanding, and the sultan sent a telegram to the kaiser to express his sorrow, and an imperial Ottoman prince and three Turkish ministers followed the victim's hearse to the cemetery. But in the interests of discipline the murderer had to die despite an appeal for a reprieve from the colonel's widow.

The Albanian was shot by ten men of his own battalion, and when he was asked before the execution if he repented of the deed he replied twice in a firm voice, "No!"—Washington Star.

Some Forgotten Slang.

The cheese. It is the forgotten slang. But there were days when the proper man was not the Champagne Charlie or anything else but the "cheese." And the negative was "Oh, cheese it!" as a request to refrain from anything. And the origin was a song:

Ain't I the cheese,
Walking the park
With my happy Louise?

While walking along a dusty road in Illinois in his circuit days Lincoln was overtaken by a stranger driving to town. "Will you have the goodness to take my overcoat to town for me?" asked Lincoln.

"With pleasure. But how will you get it again?"

"Oh, very readily! I intend to remain in it," was Lincoln's prompt reply.

MONSTER CROWD CELEBRATED "GLORIOUS TWELFTH" IN BELLEVILLE

Fine Weather and Enjoyable Demonstration—Finest Orange Walk Witnessed in Belleville—Over Ninety Lodges in Line—Address at Gathering in Agricultural Grounds Became Powerful Appeal For Recruits in Empire's Cause.

The finest "Orange Walk" ever witnessed in Belleville was the opinion of the vast throng who witnessed the march past of the ceremonies of "The Glorious Twelfth" in Belleville yesterday. The procession was a grand one, the crowd of visitors was orderly, the speaking was short and crisp, the deep note of patriotism was struck in no uncertain tone, and the whole proceedings of the day were the source of much satisfaction to committees, the Orangemen and their thousands of guests.

The only disturbance one could possibly remark, was the riot of colors. Every shade of color—in the rainbow—was worn in the streets. The display on Bridge and Front streets would beggar description. Silken banners, fringed with gold, silk hats, white coats and trousers, the brilliancy of the regalia, the well-groomed horses, bearing the committee, the sober garb of the Black Knights, the gleam of the scarlet, the purity of the True Blue uniform, the spotless white summer dresses worn by the ladies, the throbbing, swaying crowd, which made traffic difficult in the central portion of the city, with a piano here and there moving about, made a scene never to be forgotten. Glorious sunlight and not one token of rain made everything bright. Smiles were on all faces and all was as merry as a marriage bell.

The warm weather exactly suited such a demonstration, the manifestation of the spirit of liberty which every Orangemen felt, having no better setting than a sweltering sun-lit atmosphere.

While the crowd at every turn showed that it cherished liberty, yet it showed that it was the extreme of decorum. Not one celebrant was to be seen under the weather. Every man seemed to feel that the occasion demanded him while manifesting his enthusiasm, to keep himself within bounds. This was one of the glories of the "Twelfth" as celebrated in Belleville.

The scenes, that were enacted on the streets, would require a poet's pen to describe. The dozens of parades of lodges landed in the city, the arrival of the country lodges, the festivities at hotel dining rooms and restaurants, where meals were furnished some fifteen thousand visitors, the largest accumulation of the city's population, the carnival atmosphere and ceaseless movement everywhere without serious accidents or fights to mar the day, were witnessed and felt by all.

The drums were the only "persons" that got a beating yesterday and they got a terrible pounding from the time the rooster began to waken the countryside until the old sun sank wearied behind the horizon. One pathetic kettle drum was sneaked in the enthusiasm of its musician, but it was all in the day's celebration.

The drummers being hearty men, stood the day well, although they "sweat like Fahrafit. But that was what they were for—to beat the band

THE WALK

After dinner had been partaken of in dancing hall, hotel, restaurant, city hall, church hall, in private homes, the men surged to the city hall district for the organization of the parade. In the armouries where the banners were placed, the din was deafening. The marshalls organized the "pomade," it did not start on time, owing to the crowds. The route was about one mile and one third from the market square, down Front to Dundas, down Dundas to George, up George to Victoria avenue, down that street to Pinnacle, up Pinnacle to Mill and Front and down Front to Bridge, across the river to the fair grounds. Murney's hill was the last of the Bridge).

"How many more miles to the grounds?" asked one hundred perspiring Orangemen if one at all.

"How far is it to Trenton?" was the query of another

Some of the older men tired on the Murney hill climb and dropped out.

The route of the "walk" was crowded by thousands and traffic was very difficult

There were between ninety and one hundred lodges in line. The procession was a fine parade. It took an hour and fifty minutes to pass and was about three miles long.

The brass bands played patriotic music but some of the fife and drum bands, knowing only party tunes, played them. Other fife bands struck up national music.

THE SPEAKING

At Agricultural Park, where the procession ended a number of prominent Orangemen spoke and appealed to the members to be loyal and to enlist in the service of the Empire

After the inspection of the directions of ceremonies, Sir Mackenzie Bowell took the chair and after having congratulated the order on this grand demonstration called on Mr. E. Guss Porter, K.C., M.P., to speak. "It is a great privilege to have the opportunity," said Mr. Porter of welcoming you once and all on behalf of Belleville, the Orange lodges and of this portion of Ontario, to this city of lodges." We have met to celebrate one of the greatest events of the world. not for the purpose of bringing the blush of shame to our Roman Catholic citizens, nor because we would unmeed, my, spiritual Ann would Augustall and religious liberties were secured. History dates it in 1690 in the struggle of the people against oppression and tyranny. And today Belleville and Ontario and Canada are

DISTRICT 1. STILL LEADS IN THE GREAT POPULARITY CAMPAIGN

One Candidate Already Has Passed the Ten Thousand Total--A Gerat Campaign in District V, and Everybody Having a Good Time --Some Hints to Workers.

The Great Contest deepens and intensifies in interest each day. Candidates are working like a bevy of busy bees and the returns are in almost every instance most gratifying.

District I still has the honor of leading where Miss Anna Hurley is putting up a remarkably effective campaign. She is the first to pass the ten thousand total. Miss Maude Bland, another very popular young lady has also attained a most creditable standing.

In District II Miss Blanche Gauthier, a very estimable young lady, is receiving strong support from her friends and still has the honor of leading the list. Two energetic high school boys, Masters Jack Orrill and Wm. Towner are pursuing a very active canvass among their friends and the vote accorded to them shows that results are being attained. Miss Margaret Brown, who was nominated only a day or two ago, is also likely to be a very popular candidate and her supporters have already done some successful work in her behalf.

In District III Miss Eva Harker is receiving splendid support and will we predict when the final vote is announced up, not be very far from the top. She has a multitude of friends who will soon be very active in her behalf. Miss Grace Sarvaper, Octavia St., although her residence in the city Bland, another very popular young has also attained a most creditable standing.

In District II Miss Blanche Gauthier, a very estimable young lady, is receiving strong support from her friends and still has the honor of leading the list. Two energetic high school boys, Masters Jack Orrill and Wm. Towner are pursuing a very active canvass among their friends and the vote accorded to them shows that results are being attained. Miss Margaret Brown, who was nominated only a day or two ago, is also likely to be a very popular candidate and her supporters have already done some successful work in her behalf.

paying over cash for subscriptions, and cash is what counts.

The coupons are useful to supplement the subscription ballots, but no candidate should rely entirely upon coupons to carry on their campaign.

In Canniford and Corbyville three bright and active young ladies are working earnestly and zealously to gain one of the tours. These are Miss Pearl Honeywell, Miss Ethel York and Miss Pearl Honeywell, and all three have friends hustling in their behalf to round up the votes. Watch their vote at the next count on Thursday.

Miss Teresa Brennan from her excellent position in the centre of Tyendinaga township has already recorded a fine total of votes and will be enthusiastically supported by her friends as the days go by.

Miss Myrtle Watson and Miss L. McKenna two of Deseronto's popular young ladies, are being generously helped out by their friends and will make a fine showing as the contest proceeds.

The greatest battle of all is in District V and a dozen determined and earnest workers are in a rock and Vera Foster of Trenton, Miss Lela Myers of Frankford and Miss V. Graham of Wallbridge. It is of course anybody's race for the ultimate leadership, but the contestants are deriving quite as much amusement out of the campaign as are the friends who are so enthusiastically supporting them.

District VI has a very large list of candidates which is rapidly narrowing down to the real workers. Miss M. Kerby, one of Stirling's most popular and estimable young ladies still leads her district, but she is having some keen competition from Miss Maude Bailey, a bright and vivacious young lady of Harold, Miss Hazel Salisbury, Moira's wall known soloist, and Miss Murray of Springbrook.

District VII which is the good old county of Prince Edward has some most energetic canvassers whose work is showing most gratifying returns. Mr. Thos. G. Thompson of Redners-ville is pursuing his quest with a determination that seems certain to bring results. He heads the district but is closely followed by Mrs. Gordon Bass of Mountain View, who has already made many warm friends since the settlement of her family in that vicinity. The active competitors of the two leaders seem to be Miss Belsap and Miss Weese of the Redners-ville section. There is plenty of time yet for a most interesting campaign in Prince Edward.

District VIII which comprises all other parts of the habitable earth outside of the other seven districts, is working up a campaign that promises some very interesting developments. Miss Annie Carscallen, one of the obliging and capable assistants in the Madoc post office leads the district, but she is getting spirited rivalry from the friends of Misses Helen Hudgins and Emma Wellington and Mr. Vincent Cox.

But the Village of Marmora is not going to allow Madoc to have everything its own way. The friends of Miss Edith Archer of that village and Mr. C. S. Haigs of the school staff have already placed to their credit a most pleasing total of votes. District VIII will be watched with increasing interest until the last vote is polled.

To the candidates collectively we would say--do not try to do all the work alone. Organize your friends. Get them working in your behalf. They gladly help you out. Some will assist by the collection of coupons others by giving cash for subscriptions, and others again by actively canvassing in your behalf.

The next lot of coupons from the daily and weekly editions will be good for the 16th thus leaving the candidates more time for the collection of subscriptions.

Watch Thursday's paper for an interesting announcement as well as the next count.

Following is the result of the polling to date.—

Different and Better Clothes

The Two Piece Suit

This is the time of year when a man wants to wear as little as possible. If you wear one of our cool Two-Piece Suits, it's certain you won't "wear a worried look."

But there are two considera'ions in a Two-Piece Suit which call for the most competent tailoring. In the first place, the coat must be so tailored as to obviate the need of a vest. In the second place, as the fabrics are extremely light in weight, the tailoring must be done with the greatest skill.

Fabrics of cerefully selected Sun-Proof Serges, Worsteds, Homespuns, etc., etc.

It you'll step in and try on one of these cool Suits and then take a look in the mirror, you'll be surprised to see what a swell and comfortable looking fellow you are.

We've everything in wearables for a man's summer comfort.

WHAT MEN DISLIKE

Pads, Criticism, Sarcasm and Too Much Affectation.

Men hate to be forced to acknowledge that a woman has done them a favor. They absolutely refuse to be patronized by a woman.

They object to a woman indulging in personal criticism of her sister, however much they may do it themselves. They hate a woman to display at least the semblance of the broadest charity.

They dislike a woman to say she does not know what she wants to do, but if she does not suggest and select a mode of entertainment not agreeable to the man, he's "rotten lacking in sympathy and considerate tion."

A man hates to be kept waiting or to be disappointed in an engagement. He hates a woman who at a woman cannot arrange her small affairs but he gets practical in keeping appointments with him. On the other hand, his business affairs are never small and must always assume such an air of importance as to demand the breaking of an engagement.

As a rule, men dislike women with fads and enthusiasms. They think clubs, making collections, going to bed for charity work, etc., all draw women away from their natural sphere in the home circle. Trifles like lodges, political meetings, collecting stamps and incessant chatter are not fads or enthusiasm. They are privileged habits.

Men detest sarcasm in a woman. They will turn morose or vindictive under a sarcastic speech when they would yield and even apologize before a torrent of genuine tears. If a girl is sarcastic before marriage she may be sure she will be worse than shrewish after the ceremony is over.

The girl who poses to the point of affectation is particularly objectionable in the estimation of a man. It is a wise girl who knows where the line is drawn between affective posing and posing that is affected. A girl who, like the great public, like to be fooled, particularly by women, but they do not want to know when they are fooled.

When Archers Fought Napoleon.

We think of the bow and arrow as medieval weapons of war, abandoned by the nations of Europe four or five centuries ago; yet it is only 100 years since soldiers fought with bow and arrow in European wars, and even that, too, on the fields of southern Belgium, where the present war rages.

It was in 1812 when all Europe was armed against Napoleon, Every one of the allied nations brought every possible resource of men and means to further their cause, and among them was Russia. To the war she sent soldiers from the newly-conquered tribes that dwelt upon the steppes of Asia; Bokharans and Turkomans and Tartars as well as the savage peoples. Many of these regiments were armed with bows and arrows. Jomini, the military historian, says that these bowmen held their own against the French infantry. They aim, he says, was surprisingly good, and they could shoot an arrow with effect almost as far as a musket ball was effective, and in those days that was not much more than 100 yards.

Apparently a Total Loss.

Two cockneys went down the river Thames for a bank holiday. In the the afternoon they decided to try fishing. The owner of a stream side mill rented them some tackle, and as neither one of them had ever set a line before he warned them that they must stand financially responsible for any damage occurring to the outfit as a result of their inexperience.

Presently one of them had been fishing a little while, one called along the bank to his friend:

"Garge, wot does yer call the thing that bobs about on the water?"

"The float."

"Well, then, I'll 'ave to pay that there miller five mine—that's all."

"Wy so?" demanded Garge.

"Because the bloomin' thing's sunk!"

West African Natives.

In all parts of West Africa there are evidences that for centuries before the natives began to import or to buy European cotton goods from the European trader they grew their own cotton and were on hand loome their own cotton goods. They also manufactured soap and have made fine use of it in keeping both their clothes and bodies clean, as may be observed by those who travel through the country. Some wash their bodies, as a religious ceremony, two and three times a day.

How To Keep Silver.

Woollen bags hasten rather than prevent silver from tarnishing. Silver kept in a box lined with unbleached cotton flannel and covered with a loose piece of this is all right. Put in bags of unbleached cotton flannel will remain bright a much longer time. A piece thrown over a bureau or dressing table top at night if the articles are silver will save many hours' work. A lump of camphor in the silver drawer or box will also help to prevent tarnish.

How to Take Grease From Woodwork.

A little gasoline on a cloth will remove grease on the woodwork around a gas stove or on the stove itself, as it is magic, thus saving much time and strength. If all the woodwork is gone over in this way about once a month the hardest part of the housecleaning will be eliminated. Of course, great care must be exercised not to use the gasoline near an open flames of any kind.

'Tit For Tat.

First Teacher—You told me to remind you to punish Willie Thompson this morning for impudence.

Second Teacher—I'll do it to-morrow. I'm called before the school board to-day for insubordination.

THE "RAVENING WOLFE" IS CHIEF OF STAFF

Despondent of Mien is Whose Arms the Great General Wolfe Died at Quebec

Chief of the Imperial staff of the British army is the proud title of Lieutenant-General Sir James Wolfe Murray, a man in whom Canadians should be interested because of the fact that he is a lineal descendant of Colonel James Murray, who, when Wolfe fell upon the Plains of Abraham before Quebec in 1759, Col. Murray named his son James Wolfe, and in two names of England's great hero has been handed down from generation to generation. The present James Wolfe was born on May 24, 1854.

This boy in due time went to the aristocratic Glenalmond school in Perthshire. From there he went to Harrow, thence to the Royal Military Academy at Woolwich, getting a commission in the Gunners in 1873. Then he "shone" as one supposed that the young Scot would have a particularly brilliant career but it was recognized that he could work for two things. First with terrors and extremely long-headed. It is told of Wolfe Murray that on seeing the Pyramids for the first time he was observed to be the only member of society who has been twice married and brought up two sons and three daughters in the way they should go. In 1882 he had 60 days' leave. Wolfe Murray first entered the service, volunteers for active service in Egypt. Play he did not greatly care about, but he worked all day, studied Arabian, and passed for the Staff College. He was promptly there he learned that a rifle is a mere or less serviceable arm for the destruction of one's enemies. In his early youth he, like most gunners, had a fine contempt for that weapon, and on an inspecting officer questioning him about the military progress looked vague and astonished. On being pressed for an answer he admitted to knowing that his men had target practice, but added that "he did not know what they used them for."

His Chance Came

On leaving the Staff College he went to the Intelligence Department at the War Office, and then off to Aldershot. At last a chance came, and Wolfe had service with a dusky population. A small British garrison was shut up in Coomassi, and Sir Garnet Wolseley was despatched with a force to the rescue. Major Wolfe Murray was appointed to command one of the lines of communication. Khalis and hard work suited him admirably; he got a decoration and a brevet. His job in Ashanti had done him so well that when the South African War came along he got a similar one in Natal, and was promoted in despatches both by Sir George White and Sir Redvers Buller. By this time he was a major-general, and commanded the Cape Mounted Rifles.

Quartermaster-General. His superiors looked on what he had done and found that it was good so they revived an ancient office by name Master-General of the Ordnance, and with they gave to Wolfe Murray. The chief duty of the Ordnance is to see that guns, rifles, and ammunition were ready, wanting no point in the reasonable other wants, to get the best contractors out of scrapes. Murray could do this most than well because detail and organization were as the breath of his nostrils. In grudgingly for all he had saved everybody from his hands a grudging general in India and later succeeded the late Sir Charles Douglas as Chief of the Imperial Staff.

DALHOUSIE COLLEGE.

Nova Scotian University is Nearly One Hundred Years Old.

Ninety-one years ago, on the 22nd of May last, the foundations of old Dalhousie College, Halifax, N.S., at the north end of the Parade, were well and truly laid by the noble Earl and Governor of Nova Scotia, whose territorial appellation it so worthily bears. In laying its corner stone, Lord Dalhousie declared that the college was to be for "the instruction of youth in the higher classics and in all philosophical studies." He left the following additional remarks with reference to the new institution:

"To doors will be open to all who profess the Christian religion.

"It is particularly intended for those who are excluded from Windsor."

How splendidly has Dalhousie fulfilled the mission, and how widened its arms since then! How grandly has it broadened the educational outlook of the province, how broadened itself therewith!

For about 100 years ago Halifax was engaged in fitting out a naval expedition, intended immediately for imperial purposes, which was to have direct local consequences of the most momentous importance for Nova Scotia and the great Dominion of which it has since become a part. The war of 1812-14 was then on between Great Britain and the United States. A powerful force was directed against Castine, a fortified town in the State of Maine, and completely successful. Castine—and Castine's several vessels, one of them a man-of-war—was captured, and was held until the close of the war. From this success came the fund by which Dalhousie College owes its origin.

Halifax of a century ago gave not only of its time and means but of its very life blood to the foundation of Dalhousie. Halifax of to-day is being asked to contribute at this time to the process of organization for the same purposes that Dalhousie's eight years afterwards, formally declared to be those of "the best liberal but untrammelled secular education" "particularly for those excluded from Windsor." King's College, broad and liberal as is its present spirit, was then dominated by narrow exclusiveness.

The history of the founding of old Pictou Academy, the first non-sectarian College in that province, is one of the brightest pages in the whole history of Nova Scotia. It was in 1816 that Academy and not a College simply because it could not secure proper recognition from the Legislature. Not that any. How that college afterwards moved, in accordance with the exigencies of changing times and conditions, first to Dartmouth, then to Truro and thence to Halifax, whither it brought the blood and vitality for the resuscitation of Dalhousie, when initial spark of life had early darkened, is well known to all.

But few are aware of the heroic efforts, the self-sacrificing and far-seeing struggles which went to the founding of the original Pictou Academy. The poorest men in town and country put their hands deep in their pockets for the good of the thing and its continuance possible. Farmers who were undergoing the struggles and privations of pioneer settlers voluntarily subscribed tea, tweed, or fifty pounds each, for its sustenance—and those were pounds sterling, be it remembered. It is also carefully noted that a hundred or two hundred dollars then, was worth three or four times as much as a like nominal sum to-day.

A VALLEY OF BLOOD.

The Meuse River Has Witnessed 2,000 Years of War.

The valley of the Meuse river, extending through France, Belgium and Holland and up and down whose course 2,000 years of intermittent warfare has been waged, forms the subject of a statement given out by the National Geographical Society:

"There remains more than the Meuse. It rises in France, flows northward through Belgium, crosses the Dutch frontier, enters and flows through Holland and empties into the North Sea. Its course is 575 miles, or else 580 miles, of which 460 are navigable.

"The valley of the Meuse for ages has been a channel for the ebb and flow of armies. It might be said to drain one vast, historic battlefield. Caesar pursued its path into the unknown, barbaric north. The wild Teutonic hordes pressed down between its banks toward the heart of Rome. Christian Europe has been splitting its divisions along the valley of the Meuse by force of arms down to the present day.

"In the forest of Ardennes the Meuse flows through a country rich in records of Charlemagne, Its uplands and hop gardens lie further along its banks, and then it washes great industrial cities, gathering to itself the ashes, rust and acids of factory and furnace waste. Finally it drifts through the flat lands of Holland, crossed by the numerous canals which lastly divide the plains.

"Here and there, as between Namur and Liege, it was a narrow passage between wooded hills and cliffs, their slopes dotted with pretty villas. Just before reaching Liege, on the Meuse, here the Ourthe, divides, one branch going west and the other mingling with the Rhine to empty past Rotterdam at the Hook of Holland.

"In the beginning of its course the valley of the Meuse is a wide meadowland. It then breaks into a gorge, fringed with bryden, tangled banks. There is a wealth of scenic beauty along its way. Philip the Fearless, Duke of Burgundy, is said to have caused 500 people to be drowned in its waters."

In practical science the most marvelously prophetic writer was the Marquis of Worcester, who in his "Century of Inventions," published in 1663 described the steam engine, the telegraph, the fortress, the gun under the hydraulic press, portable military pontoons, matches and many other things which have come into use within the last hundred years.—St. James Gazette.

Old Zeb White

He Tells How His Cabee Was Cut Short

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

"Now, what I think to say this, when I thought I owned this pull mule of my cousse, and was the biggest man in it," said old Zeb White as he was in a story telling mood one evening, "there was a good many t'ings are said and done by a got married, and perhaps it was a powerful good thing that sun shine happened to me when it did."

I asked the old man a question, he tended to get him out, and after a bit he continued:

"Waal, when I was a young man I hadn't the sense in my head. I just reckoned that the critter who could wrastle and jump and fight, and yell was a smarter man than the governor. When I was twenty-three years old that wasn't nothin' human in the town, t'ousand miles which I couldn't stand up to me. One day I fell in love, but that didn't settle me down any. Mebbe I was even wuss after that. I wanted to show off to the gal, yo' know, and so I continued my mad career."

The girl is the present Mrs. White, I take it?" I said as he waited to fill his pipe anew.

"Jest so, sah," he answered, "and she had mo' boss sense in her bustle finger than I had in my whole body. She knowed I was making a fule o' myself, and she knowed it would take strong medicine to cure me. She didn't say much coe way, or coe-cion, but just waited till the sign came right. One day she went down to Spottsville, and when she com home she was to me, she she:

"'Zeb, that's gwine to be a circus down at Spottsville tomorrer, and I reckon I'd like to go. Will yo' promise to behave yo'self?

"'As to how?' I asks.

"'As to how I say, sah.'

"If nobody steps on my boots they won't be any fuss.'

"We made all our plans for an early start the next day.

"She didn't say no mo' till we was on the road next forenoon, and then she suddenly turns on me with:

"'Hev yo' ever been licked since yo' became a fighter?'

"'Never, and that' ain't a thing as stands on me to git to do it.'

"I want to ask a great favor of yo', Zeb,' she sez as we walks along. That's gwine to be a elephant at that circus.'

"'And what of it?'

"'Nothin', I hope, but bein' he's bigger'n yo' are I didn't know but yo'd git mad and want to fight him. Don't do it, Zeb. Don't do it. For my sake.'

"If she hadn't spoken as she did I'd never thought of seein' the critter, but I told Zeb as he softly rubbed his knee, 'but them words sorter stirred me up, and I made up to git mad. We didn't say nuthin' mo' till we got to town, though I was doin' nuthin' but inhalin'.

"Soon the elephant a-walkin' along the street with the purcession, and my wife sez to me, sez she:

"'Zeb, he don't look to be very beffy on the jump, and he can't wrassle, but he 'pears to be a awful fighter'

"'Shoo,' sez I, 'but I don't reckon he kin fight fer shucks.'

"Bimeby the parade was over and we went into the circus. I'd kept gittin' madder and madder all the time, and now I was ready to bust. The elephant was chained up in the middle of the tent, and I walked around him and felt dancerous. The misses was watchin' me and purty soon she sez:

"'Zeb, he's as big as a hill, ain't he?

"'Mebbe he are,' sez I, 'but that's got nuthin' to do with it. The bigness of the man don't count fur much in a fout. I jest consider to reckse I kin make that critter fur fear'n'ny to about two minits.'

"'But, yo' won't try it! Yo' are the awfulest fightin' man on the face of this airth, but yo' won't tackle a critter like that.'

"I shed'd kept quiet mebbe my madness would a gone off, but her words burn me, and I shed'd a-boiden heels of my rest and whoopen a whoop. I was into both feets on this head when he winds that trunk around my body and lifts me off my feet and begins to play with me. He slams me on the ground and sets on me, and squeezes, and when he finally lets go they picks me up and carries me to the doctor's dead, mash.

"That critter broke purty nigh all the bones in my body, and I'm feelin' the affects to this day. It was, two weeks after the fone fello' I got things straight in my mind. I kept thinkin' all the time that that critter Cumberland range and add down on me. One mawnin' I axed the she woman how it was, and she sorter snorfled and said:

"'I just sed yo' up to it, Zeb, cause I wanted to see yo' git some sense in yo' head. I knowed yo'd git whopped, but I reckoned that'd be nuff of yo' left to build up on. Yo' are the whoopedest critter, fur as I know, and I'm glad it's over. Scheduct man in all this world, and 'tain't no use to fool around no mo'. When I git back jest let the fight in' business alone and 'tend to the co's and horses.'

"'And what that adventure affect a cure?' I asked.

"The humerest kind, sah," he replied. "When I got outdoobs a-gin I wasn't eatin' grass for anybody, but I jest quit fightin' and stopped that and took in' for a fone, and I hain't had a fout since. No man likes to be whopped, but I'm feelin' now that when a man gits so puffed up that he thinks nuthin on the face of this earth kin down him it can't help but do him good to run up against an elephant who's bin feelin' mad for a week.

FALLING A MILE.

Curie as Effect of Dropping Rocks Down a Deep Mine Shaft.

In reference to the deep mine shaft at Calumet some experiments conducted by members of the faculty of the Michigan College of Mines are interesting. It had been noticed that, in the vertical shafts at the Tamarack mine, at some one or more points near the surface men working in the bottom of the shaft a mile below were able to hear heard and distinctly observed the drop of rocks, it is stated that a car or broken rock could be dumped into the shaft without any fury to a man standing directly under neath a mile down.

The reason for that cool rock would never reach the bottom but would edge to the sides of the shaft on the account that previously a few inches at intervals that in the rock would not fall straight; since these shafts are rarely vertical for any distance.

In the experiments conducted two round metal balls were dropped into the center of a shaft by hand, the thrown by which they were suspended, so as to give them no lateral motion. It was noted that the balls in a box of clay in the bottom of the shaft. None of them was caught. One ball was never found afterward. The other was found in the east wall of the shaft only a few hundred feet below the surface.

The explanation is that the earth is revolving from west to east, which gives the ball a tendency to maintain in its fall because a particle on the surface of the earth is traveling at a higher rate of speed than those near the center, although at the same angular velocity. Hence the ball dropped into the shaft will strike the east wall a few hundred feet from the surface, bound off, strike another wall and then in its drop end it lodges on a timber or on a level.—Engineering Magazine.

THE FREEZING OF LIGHT.

Radium Rays Applied at a Temperature of Minus 312 Degrees.

The world stood with gaping mouth and upturned head when science announced the phenomenon of frozen air, but, wonderful as this discovery seems its limit when one learns that such distinguible and weightless thing as light has been frozen.

It is customary to speak of the enormous generative power of heat, but the astounding still is the fact that by means of cold a force may be imprisoned and retained which when liberated transmits at a velocity of 186,000 miles per second.

Like all great discoveries, the process is exceedingly simple and based upon formulas that one marvels at not having seen before. It is said that radium emits light which is called "emanation," and this "emanation" is such a powerful force that it is even possible to freeze all gases, and when "emanation" is subjected to a temperature of 312 degrees below zero it becomes congealed.

The strongest feature of the phenomenon is the fact to be observed when the "emanation" commences to thaw when from the so-called solidified sounding liquid air brilliant sparages of light stream upward, producing a most beautiful and startling effect.—Birmingham Age-Herald.

An Appeal to Vanity.

A Messinian general gained a victory over the Greeks and captured their camp and possessions were of no prisoner into his tent, he asked him what treatment he expected from his conquerors. "If you shake war," replied the Greek, "release me. If you make it like a trader, sell me. But if you are a king, be a king's master me." The Messinian general set him free.

Abram-man.

It was at one time the practice to allow the inmates of the Abraham ward of Bethlehem hospital, London, to go out and beg in the streets of the neighborhood. Certain vagrants imposed on the charitably inclined by pretending to be insane became known as "sham-abraham" hence the term Abram-man, one who obtains money by shamming sleepers.—London Express.

The Supreme Test.

"He you think Grace Brown is perfect, my son?"

"Yes, my mother."

"Have you given her temper the supreme test?"

"What's that, mother?"

"Calling up a wrong number on the telephone when the operator is busy either end and somebody trying to break in on the line."—Bernard Flain Dexter.

"Twirl Boylls and Charyadis."

"What are you so worried about?"

"My rich uncle wants to see me soon and this will was drawn up about his will and I'm afraid if I fail him that I am doing well that he will leave his money to his poor relations. I intended to blow up the ship but not other contrivances for the purpose.

One morning when the Arago was sailing near the French coast Captain Le Moyne went aft to look for the floating box. He could not see it even with his binoculars. In fact, it had disappeared. He beat a steward for his information, but the man could not be found.

Now was he or the box ever heard of. When the Arago reached port detectives who had been called from New York came aboard to search an absconding bank cashier who had taken a hundred thousand dollars of the bank's funds.

An Exploded Secret

By CAPTAIN WM. WYMAN

The French ship Arago sailed from New York for Cherbourg, France, in March, 1913, but on the outbreak of war for the allies. She had been out six days, and two of the voyage remained, when one of the passengers, a man appeared at the door of the captain's cabin on the upper deck, entered in hastily, put his finger to his lips to enjoin silence and stood for a moment waiting, and apparently trying to control some strong emotion. Then after locking the key in the door he said abruptly, in a whisper to the astonished commander:

"Captain Le Moyne, this vessel is in imminent danger."

"How so?" asked the captain, startled by the man's manner.

"Write me out a promise of immunity, that I shall be treated in every respect as any other passenger aboard and then you will take my action, steps such as I approve and I will tell you."

The captain scanned for some time the cross questioning the man in an effort to get out of him something of what he had in say even before giving any promises. But the man shut up like a clam and would say nothing more than that there was a strong probability that the ship would be wrecked that night. Finally Captain Le Moyne gave in, wrote out a note such as the man required, and he told his story.

He said that in the stateroom next to his he had heard two men talking. He could not tell in the dark, but had heard enough to lead him to believe that they were emissaries of either the German or Austrian government, who had been sent to blow up the ship and send the cargo of arms and ammunition to the bottom. He had heard distinctly one of them say to the other, "Very well, we'll do it tonight."

The captain started to leave his cabin when his visitor took the key from the door and held it in a tight grip while he added:

"Remember your promise—if on examination you see anything that looks like an implement of destruction you will not leave it overboard, but will report it where it can do no serious damage to the ship."

Why do you stipulate for that?" asked the captain.

"Because I do not wish to be responsible for property destroyed by mistake. I should never forgive myself for doing so, and I would lay myself liable to damages that might take all I have."

This satisfied Le Moyne, who had no more relish for destroying harmless property than his informer.

The search was conducted in gas key and, accompanied only by the informer, went to the stateroom. There they found a box about on the size of a suitcase with a sliding cover, which was locked. Putting his ear down to the box, the captain heard he heard a faint ticking, but was not sure. His informant also insisted and declared that he could hear nothing. But he was a little deaf and could not hear a watch ticking without putting it close to his ear.

The captain was for hoisting the box overboard at once, but the latter demurred, reminding him of his promise. Le Moyne decreed that the ifire of the crew and passengers were of more value than any promises, whereupon the other said:

"In the first place, captain, if you don't keep this matter a secret you'll have a panic aboard your ship; in the second place you can do nothing with the box without the risk of laying you and me liable for damages to the destruction of what may be valuable property. All you have to do is to attach a line to the box, drop it overboard and tow it afloat a couple of hundred yards astern."

The captain was so anxious to get rid of the article that he consented. A line was passed and watered, plenty of the wood floating around the ship, and the box was put overboard and towed astern.

Early in the afternoon the passengers and crew were startled by a terrific explosion. The box had blown up, and the ship was saved.

FRIDAY SESSION OF SUMMER SCHOOL AT ALBERT COLLEGE

The early morning watches are a great help in beginning the day in the proper spirit of reverence and prayer and fellowship, and preparing the way for the lessons to follow.

Prof. McLaughlin's lecture was most interesting and as good things become better and are more appreciated as the taste for them is cultivated, so Prof. McLaughlin becomes more and more helpful each day to the school. Surely the influence of such a man for one whole week will inspire his listeners for a long time to come.

The president of the conference, Rev S. B. Keany was present and addressed the school on "Social Redemption". He was greatly appreciated and all were glad to have him at the school, if only for so short a time.

One of the very practical departments of the school has been the mission study classes. In the social service department the conditions in the country, the country problems of today, and the church's part in solving those problems are taken up by men who thoroughly understand their subjects, and these studies carries back their discussions and knowledge to his own community a step, and a big step, in the work will be gained. By making the church the social center of the community the loneliness and isolation large factors in the country problem will disappear almost completely, and religion will take its own rightful place in all life of the country. In fact the class there is the wonderful privilege of talking with a missionary from China, and the Mission world and Japan are taken by men who have devoted special attention to their studies.

As the last days of the Bay of Quinte Summer School for 1915 are drawing near, the appreciation of the privileges of and responsibilities resulting therefrom, are impressing the delegates increasingly. Each speaker on the program comes prepared to deal with a subject which comprises a real need. "A Purposeful Life" was Rev. R. S. Osborne's theme on Friday evening. The speaker said in part:—We are living in order to intelligently to serve our generation and for God's glory. The achievements of the past and visions of the future arguing lifting feature of life only as they help us to make the present the supreme moment of all. One of the greatest influences in shaping lives is the result of failure to appreciate the importance of our task. When we know our task is God's task, it is important to us as God's work was to Him. Some things that fundamentally affect our lives our [illegible]: Physical health and strength plays a very conscious part in our achievements; 2—intellectual ability. Every man's power are his ideas projected through his personality—there is a vital connection between aim and action; 3—a purpose that will make the most of every God-given gift, that will focus every talent we command for one specific aim that is worthy of a child of Christ.

At the close of the pleasing address Miss Schribner sang a most very much appreciated solo.

Rev. H. J. Smith, who is Field Secretary of the Social Service Department, has been giving a series of practical, appreciated lectures on this life, have his closing address Fri. evening and his words will long remain with those who were privileged to present. He is one of the strongest and most capable speakers in this department that has ever appeared before the school, and his helpful suggestions to the classes and to individuals are highly prized by all. His original manner of presenting his chosen topic, and the forceful and convincing remarks will long be remembered. His final address was the earnest plea for the Child, the Community and the Church. "Every person accomplishes a wonderful achievement who succeeds in that man life with its various phases—intellectual, domestic, social, and industrial—in one great unit. As the character of a man can be judged only by his business, social, church and domestic life, just in the same way are the different relationships that differ it expressions of the same life. The one relationship which if allowed to dominate all our life, will control all the others, is our relationship to God and His Son. The church ought to be the nursery of sweetness and the joy of the life of the community. As a direct or indirect result of the work of the church, the civic, political and social life of the community should receive an impetus. When this is accomplished the proper care, protection and instruction in regard to the children will be the natural outcome. Mr. Smith closed with a personal appeal for the life of the young people to be consecrated in prayer and sacrifice to the lessening of the needs that are so loudly calling for redress.

In the early evening Rev. H. W. Foley, who spoke to a large gathering on the lawn, made a similar appeal in a very earnest way.

Took Carbolic Acid and Died

Special to The Ontario.

MADOC, July 13—Rebecca Youde, a seventeen-year-old girl, employed as a domestic at the home of Mr. Frank Smith, took carbolic acid about eight o'clock this morning and was dead in an hour. It would seem from statements by those near at the time that the poison was administered intentionally. Dr. Harper, the coroner was notified and determined to hold an inquest. A jury was enrolled and after viewing the body an adjournment took place to July 20th for the taking of evidence.

Deceased was a Barnardo girl and had been working in Madoc for several years. A sister resides in the United States.

No reason has been assigned for her rash deed, except that some have stated that of late she appeared to be in twitter a melancholy frame of mind, but no one anticipated that she contemplated self-destruction.

Builders of the "Big Ditch"

There has just been issued by the Historical Publishing Company of Washington, D. C., a magnificent illustrated history of the construction and builders of the Panama Canal. The editor of this great history is Mr. Ira. E. Bennet, with associate editors, John Hays Hammond, celebrated mining engineer; Capt. Philip Andrews, U.S.N.; Rupert Blue, Sur. Gen. U. S. Public Health Service; J. Hampton Moore, Pr'g., Atlantic Deeper Waterways Ass'n, Patrick J. Lennox, B. A.; and William J. Showalter.

One of the most interesting portions of the book is that dealing with the feeding of the immense army of laborers. A few paragraphs concerning one of the foods chosen and supplied by the Commissary Department, are quoted (beginning page 428) as follows:

"Visitors to the canal who were privileged to get a glimpse of the routine inner life will recall a familiar picture of workmen going to their places of labor carrying round yellow tins.

"Often, as they went, they munched a food poured from the tin into the hand. This food, which played no inconsiderable part in 'building' the canal was the well-known artical of diet, 'GRAPE-NUTS.'

"The mention of Grape-Nuts in this connection is peculiarly pertinent. Not merely because Grape-Nuts is a food—for of course proper food was an integral part of the big enterprise—but because it is a cereal food which successfully withstood the effects of a tropical climate. This characteristic of Grape-Nuts was pretty well known and constituted a cogent reason for its selection for use in the Canal Zone."

"This food is so thoroughly baked that it keeps almost indefinitely in any climate, as has been demonstrated again and again.

"One finds Grape-Nuts on transoceanic steamships, in the islands of the seas, in Alaska, South America, Japan, along the China coast, in Manila, Australia, South Africa, and on highways of travel and the byways of the jungle—in short, wherever minimum of bulk and and maximum of nourishment are requisite in food which has to be transported long distances, and often under extreme difficulties.

"The very enviable reputation which Grape-Nuts has attained in these respects caused it to be chosen as one of the foods for the Canal Zone."

Grape-Nuts

FOOD

—scientifically made of prime wheat and malted barley, contains the entire goodness of the grain, including those priceless mineral elements so essential for active bodies and keen brains, but which are lacking in white flour products and the usual dietary.

There's a reason why Grape-Nuts food was chosen by the Canal Commissariat. There's a reason why Grape-Nuts is a favorite food of hustling people everywhere!

VON HINDENBURG DISMISSED AFTER ADVOCATING PEACE

PARIS, July 14.—A neutral traveller, just arrived here from Germany, has told the Temps that the best informed persons in Germany believe that Gen. von Hindenburg has told the Kaiser that the war has reached its climax for Germany, and that as no greater advantage can eb expected it will be well to seek peace and thus prevent a continuation of a profitless butchery.

At this th Kaiser is said to have ordered von Hindenburg to be silent and to leave his presence. Immediately afterward he issued an order giving Gen. Mackensen von Hindenburg's place. The party which preaches "war to death" considers that it has won a great victory in von Hindenburg's disappearance.

SUCCESS IN DARDANELLES APPARENTLY NEAR AT HAND.

TURIN, July 14.—News has been received here that the German military attache has just left Constantinople with over two tons of baggage. The German embassy archives also have been removed from the Turkish capital. German patrons also are withdrawing their depohts from the Constantinople city banks. Il Secolo has this news from its special envoy in the Roumanian capital and he announced the news with a statement that the general impression exists here that the collapse of the Turko-German defense at the Dardanelles is near.

PLAN TO RESTORE BALKAN LEAGUE.

LONDON, July 14.—In th east the operations ar entering a new phase, the Russians having been successful in their counter attack against the Austrians in the region of Krasik. They have taken new positions in the hills to the north of that town and apparently are waiting for the Austro-Germans to make a move. It is not expected that this will be long delayed, for Gen. von Mackensen has had time to receive reinforcements and supplies of guns and ammunition for his next great effort to secure control of the Lublin-Cholm Railway.

The Balkan situation is again in the limelight as a result of the disclosures that the Austro-Germans have offered Roumania alternative concessions, either to continue neutral or join with the Germanic allies. Confidence is expected in British, French and Italian circles that the Balkan states will not join the Austro-Germans, but it is considered likely that owing to-the failure of Russia to hold Galicia and Bukowina, they might decide to remain neutral. Of course, success by the allies in the Dardanelles, where they are unofficially reported to have gained further Turkish trenches, would change the situation.

It is also said that the former Greek premier, Venizelos, in anticipation of his return to power has arranged to reorganise the Balkan alliance, of which he was the founder. Venizelos has been a supporter of the grand alliance, and in the event of such reorganization it is suggested that the Balkan states might possibly join this combination.

CANADIAN PREMIER HAD AUDIENCE WITH KING.

LONDON, July 14.—Sir Robert Borden was received at Buckingham Palace today and had a lengthy audience with the King. Sir Robert today received a cable from Hon. Louis Bothe, thanking him for Canada's congratulation on the acquisition of German South-West Africa.

TURKISH SUPPLY OF AMMUNITION RUNS LOW

THE HAGUE, July 14.—According to despatches received from Berlin the cabinets of Berlin and Vienna have made representations to force Roumania to permit the transportation of ammunition from Germany for Turkey over the Roumanian territory. It was confessed that Turkey will be unable to confine the defence of the Dardanelles if she cannot secure a large supply of ammunition from Germany at once.

WILL ACCEPT MEN WITH SLIGHT DEFECTS.

BIRMINGHAM, JULY 14.—The recruiting authorities in Birmingham have received a communication from the War Office instructing them to invite men who were previously rejected for army service because of weak eyesight, bad teeth or slight physical defects, again to submit themselves for medical examination. In the future no man organically sound will be rejected by the recruiting officers, as those who are unfit for campaigning can be used for home defence and garrison duty.

NEARLY HALF MILLION BRITISH ARE IN FRANCE.

LONDON, July 14.—"The six divisions of the British army that went out at the very outset of the war have been followed by others and yet others, and unless I am mistaken we have twenty-two or twenty-three divisions, (approximately 420,000 to 440,000) at this moment in the European theater."

Lord Lansdowne made this statement in moving the second reading of the national registration bill in the House of Lords this evening. He added that all the time War Secretary Kitchener has been recruiting armies and the stream of men has been flowing in volume, which was a matter of surprise to most people. The stream of equipment did not show so satisfactorily but prodigious efforts had been made to remedy the errors and he was glad to think that those efforts had been attended with a considerable amount of success. . . The bill, said Lord Lansdowne, was not intended to introduce conscription service, but if compulsory service over became necessary a national register would greatly assist in bringing it in. As the duration of the war could not be predicted, it was impossible to say whether it could be brought to a successful conclusion without compulsion.

Lord Lansdowne expressed the opinion that the voluntary system with its present anomalies and injustices would not much longer be tolerated by the country. A third of the men now serving were married men.

"This," he declared "is a terrifying position when you think of the number of unmarried men who have not yet joined the army."

KAISER SAYS THE WAR WILL END IN OCTOBER

LONDON, July 14.—Emperor William of Germany is quoted in a despatch as declaring to a committee of financiers that the war will end by October.

According to information received by the Times, it appears that the financiers called upon the Kaiser to point out to him the grave financial difficulties of the situation and the risk of attempting to continue the campaign for another winter. They are sad to have declared that even if the war was brought to an end as soon this position would be most difficult, while if it be prolonged, the German Empire will become utterly bankrupt.

The declaration of the time limit for the war came after the last assertion in the foregoing.

LONDON, July 14.—The text of the Price of Coal Limitations Bill which was issued today specifies that coal may not be sold at the pit's mouth at a price exceeding four shillings ($1) a ton more than the price at which the same kind of coal sold during the twelve months ending June 30, 1914. The measure was introduced in the House of Commons yesterday by Walter Runciman, President of the Board of Trade, who stated that violators of the Act are liable to a fine not exceeding $500.

CAUSELESS DEPRESSION.

The recent setback of the Russian forces and the outcry in England in connection with necessary preparations for an increased output of ammunition have combined to cause quite unnecessary depression in the public mind with regard to the war. We are disposed for the time being to dwell unduly upon what the Allies have not accomplished. We forget what they have achieved. We are losing sight of the failures of our opponents as well as of our successes. It is high time now to take more comforting thought, and get rid of our temporary pessimism.

Not only are the Allies not beaten but there is no likelihood of their being beaten. The end of the war has been postponed—that is all. We were disposed to be too sanguine after the battle of the Marne. Too much encouragement was perhaps extended by those in authority. Reaction following reverses was to have been expected. It has come. It must not be taken too seriously. Russia has only been worsted—not beaten. Her armies are intact. Her lines are unbroken. Her reserve force is unimpaired. The outcry in the United Kingdom over munitions has been largely artificial, to stimulate the people to greater effort.

The important facts to be kept in mind are these: Germany's carefully matured plan of campaign, on the success of which all her hopes were based, went to pieces ten months ago, on the banks of the Marne. She was to have finished the war nine months ago. It is only beginning now. She expected to have Italy with her. Italy is in the field against her. Germany and Austria combined have not much more than a fourth of the population of their European opponents without taking into account the extra-European resources of the Allies. The material wealth of the Allies as compared with their opponents is in about the same proportion as their population. The financial exhaustion of the Germanic Powers must be much greater than that of their opponents because of the greater strain to which they have been subjected upon the battle fronts, and the much larger armies which during a great part of the time they have had in the field.

The Germans have already exhausted their supreme effort. They must soon be steadily declining in strength whatever they may assert to the contrary. The Allies are constantly increasing in effective power. The British are only now beginning to make their land strength really felt. A few months hence they will have their vast new armies in the field fully equipped well trained and with abundant munitions of war of all kinds. There is absolutely nothing to indicate that the Germans cannot be held where they are for many months to come quite as securely or even more securely than they have been held during the past ten months.

It is, therefore, a matter of waiting until the Allies are quite prepared to advance. In the meantime, the German forces are being steadily and rapidly expended or worn down. Even their nominal victories in Russia are costing them enormously in men and material. They are being "nibbled at" without ceasing in the west. Serious demands are being made upon them by the Italian armies in the South. The sea is closed against their fleet and their commerce. Their submarines are causing a good deal of annoyance, but no serious damage. There is every prospect of further important accessions to the ranks of the Allies from neutral nations in the not distant future. The Germans can have no possible hopes of that kind.

On the ground, therefore, there is no ground for uneasiness much less for alarm. The Allies are more certain of winning now than at any time since the beginning of the war. The only disturbing thing in the situation is that the war seems likely to last longer than many of us hoped at the outset. But even with reference to that, it should not be forgotten that Lord Kitchener at the very first placed the possible duration of the war at three years. It is now only eleven months since it began. Let us try to avoid impatience as well as quite unnecessary discouragement. Let us resolve to keep up our spirits as our soldiers at the front are doing so splendidly, and go on doggedly, with the trying task before us, doing as Canadians our full share in the struggle, certain of fully accomplishing it in the end, and spurred by the knowledge of its vital importance to us, and our children and children's children.

A FAILURE.

"Since Admiral von Tirpitz's announcement," writes the London Financial Times, "regarding the German "war zone," "of the fatal day which was to seal Great Britain's commercial doom, the value of our monthly imports and exports has increased by quite 20 per cent." And the Boston Transcript, an impartial witness, adds that while the raids of the German submarines bear abundant testimony to the courage of their officers and crews, their futility as measures "for bringing Great Britain to its knees" is equally apparent. Many British ships have been sunk, and as the German theory is that the submarines are blockading British waters, not a few neutral vessels bound for the ports of the United Kingdom have been destroyed likewise. Yet the aggregate of the British vessels destroyed to that of British vessels in being is as a "drop to a bucketful."

The British Government figures out the proportion, week by week. During the week ending June 4 the aggregate tonnage of the vessels blockade arrivals and sailings up to June 16 numbered 24,442, while 75 vessels had been submarined. "As an irritant," says the Transcript "the submarine blockade has seldom been surpassed, but as a means of shortening a great war it is a failure."

Lord Kitchener, in a speech of grave import, lays before the Nation "the vital need for men." He calls for "more men and still more men until the enemy is crushed." The Secretary for War was speaking to the people of the Old Country, but his words appeal just as strongly to Canada.

Three of New York's most talented artists are giving their services without remuneration for the noblest humanitarian work of the present generation—Belgian relief. They are Wing Tabor Weimore, protean actor, Elizabeth Bassy premier violinist, and Cecelia Basey, lyric soprano. All three are appearing at Griffin's Opera House tonight. The prices are purposely placed so low as to be within the reach of every citizen. The people of Belleville will do themselves credit by greeting the artists with a crowded house.

We can readily understand that the evidence adduced in behalf of the Fullerton charges has been terribly disappointing to a Conservative press. That is not the reason why the organs should resort to downright lying about it. For instance the Halifax organ headed its report the other day as follows: "Newton, the Liberal leader, tells of the money got from Tories." The truth is that the said Newton is an active Tory worker and one of the heelers of the Robin-Rogers party. No Liberal leader had anything to do with the money in any shape or form.

THE WORDS OF WINSTON.

Breezy as the breezy sea,
Winston, you're the boy for me,
Where's the tonic, where's the wine
Equal to a speech of thine?

When a gloomy week we've had,
Learning our conditions sad,
Hearing Jeremiah's views,
Painted in the blackest hues.

Timely then you come along,
Singing quite another song,
Making all our prospect bright
Turning darkness into light.

"Puha! No use in speeches gay!
Words! And words don't win," they say,
Well, my good, ill-omened birds,
What are all your croaks but words?

If for gloom mere words have worth,
Why, then, have they none for mirth?
Jeremiahs don't alone
All the British language own.

Grant that words may value claim;
Winston's have with yours the same,
Grant they've none—'tis frankly spoke—
Cease yourselves in words to croak.

—London Truth.

THE CANADIAN EXHIBIT AT SAN FRANCISCO.

Canada has become a specialist in the art of getting exhibits at the great fairs of the world.

Since the Centennial Exposition of 1876, we have been represented at all international expositions—the Columbian, Chicago; the Pan-American, Buffalo; the Jamestown, Oaak; the Paris Exposition; the Louisiana Purchase; the Dublin Exposition; the Entente Cordiale Exposition, London the Alaska-Yukon, Seattle; the Franco-British Exposition; the Festival of Empire, London, and, lastly, the Ghent Exposition, Belgium.

This year, at San Francisco, according to all accounts, Canada has surpassed previous records. In opening the building Hon. Martin Burrell, Minister of Agriculture, stated that the object of the exhibit was "To illustrate the character of our natural resources, to portray their development, and to reflect the activities of eight millions people."

Canada has a special Exposition staff, which constitutes a permanent branch of the Department of Agriculture. Experts, under the supervision of Commissioner-General William Hutchison, collect and prepare the various exhibits, which are gathered from all parts of the country and become the property of the government. Our success at international expositions has done much to proclaim the advantages and resources of Canada, and is a most valuable stimulus to immigration.

The Canadian Pavilion at San Francisco covers an area of 70,000 square feet, and required 2,000,000 feet of lumber in its construction. The main floor is divided into three halls, 220 feet long and 80, 30 and 40 feet wide, respectively. The halls and ceiling are decorated with red felt, upon which are worked designs in leaves, grasses and grains. A wide frieze with relief work of grasses, leaves and shrubs, depicting Canadian scenes, extends throughout the building.

The exhibits are varied as well as extensive. The water power section illustrates what resources Canada possesses in her waterfalls. The wood pulp industry is shown by processes and samples. Ores take up a considerable section. Fishery subjects lend themselves admirably to treatment, and Canada's riches in this respect are set forth. The fruit section contains all kinds of preserved and raw fruit, and faces a bit of remarkable scenery showing types of Canadian orchards. One of the most interesting corners is that depicting "Past and Present of Canada." It gives at a glance a conception of our wonderful material progress.

One of the most necessary departments is the Information Bureau. This is connected with reception rooms, where visitors can rest, smoke or conduct correspondence. Special attention is directed to the task of answering questions and supplying information about the opportunities for immigration with a view to encouraging United States farmers to come to Canada.

The Exposition Department is to be congratulated on its splendid achievement.—Industrial Canada.

MENTAL TELEPATHY.

There is something almost uncanny in the way in which some of our circle intuitively guess our ideas. For instance: The ink from the stub of our quill pen had not been dry an hour after writing the announcement of our wonder moving contest (see another column for full particulars) when the mailman brought us four letters, each of which contained a welcome to one casserine to pay up for a year's monthly thrills of the "Power of Intellectuality." We are sending thought waves soaring through the ether, hither and thither, in the hope that the recivers of some of our distinguishing will catch the waves and send along their Billie Dues.—Chicago-Belleville News.

Letters From Our Soldiers

Mrs. E. B. Harris Catherine street has received the following cheerful note from her son. Lionel, now on active service in Flanders.—

Dear Mother,—

Just a few lines to let you know that I have been detailed off to leave for the front at once as an artillery draft. I am feeling fine. I am at the Canadian base but am leaving at noon today. I have lost both of my lieutenants since I left the battery. They were both in the casualty list. We are now, as near as I can find out, in a very quiet place so there won't be so much danger as in the past, so don't worry about my welfare, as I will be all right up the line.

Your son,
Lionel

MORE CANADIANS WANTED.

Col. Carrick Brings Back War Office Request.

Col. J. J. Carrick, M.P. for Port Arthur, who has spent the past seven months in England and France as the special representative of the Minister of Militia at British Army Headquarters, returned to the capital this (Monday) day, and reported to Major-General Hughes. Col. Carrick brings back a glowing account of the work of the Canadian troops at the front, declaring that they unanimously saved the day for Lieut. Allied forces when they stopped, in the battle of St. Julien, the German drive towards Calais." All England, he says, is talking about the bravery of the Canadians, and both the British and the French officers are greatly impressed with the efficiency of the officers and men sent from the Dominion. More men from Canada are wanted by the War Office.

Like all the other Canadians who have come back from the front, he is strongly impressed with the need of every resource of men and money within the Empire being turned into the scale against the still concentrated enemy. Col. Carrick, who received a few weeks ago a special assignment on the Grand Trunk General Headquarters Staff as representing Canada's Minister of Militia, confirms the recent press despatches from London detailing the urgent need of greater supplies of ammunition of all kinds, and the strenuous and successful efforts now being made by Lloyd George and the British Government to meet every need and to adequately prepare for a finally successful offensive from now on. The excellent administration and efficiency of every branch of the Canadian service which characterized the first contingent, both in England and at the front, he says, are being amply maintained, and he pays high tribute to the work of all the commanding and administrative officers.

Col. Carrick spent a few days in Port Arthur before returning to England. He is not acting, as has been reported, as one of the official Canadian eyewitnesses, but in serving rather in a confidential capacity, reporting to the Government at Ottawa as to the needs of the Canadian troops across the Atlantic.

STEFANSSON IS LOST, HE BELIEVES

Explorer Phillips Back Without Word of Canadian.

WAS IN LINDEBERG PARTY

The Last Man to Leave Wrangel Island, Where the Twelve Suffering Survivors of the Karluk Were Found, Does Not Think Canadian Explorer Can Have Outlived Hardships.

INTO the early summer heat of the temperate zone there has just arrived a man whose life, work and interests centre in the frozen north, whose conversation makes clear the lure of the ice and whose baggage consist of nearly a million pictures of Arctic scenes in general and then rescue of the survivors of the Vilhjalmr Stefansson Expedition in particular. He is Harry R. Phillips, one of the best known photographers in the country and the last man to leave Wrangel Island, where the twelve suffering survivors of the lost schooner Karluk were found.

With countless pictures to illustrate his narrative Mr. Phillips recently told the intimate details of the rescue work of the Lindeberg expedition, which he accompanied, and of the theories regarding the fate of Stefansson. The explorer, with two companions, left Herschel Island with a six dog team on March 16, 1914, in an effort to make Prince Patrick Island and have not been heard from since. In his mind there was not the slightest doubt that the men are lost, but he declared that many of the whalers and ice experts at Nome are confident that the explorer has made his way far to the northwest in a line of outlying villages and will yet reappear.

The Lindeberg rescue expedition, financed by Peter Lindeberg, the Alaskan mine-operator, left Nome on September 5, 1914. The party consisted of fourteen natives and ten white men in command of Captain Kinard Hadley.

It made the trip north to the vicinity of Wrangel Island at a time when next an expedition was known to be brought with peril because of the condition of the ice at that season of the year and the difficulty of avoiding lanes and packs. Despite this peril the schooner Corwin, on which the party steamed, succeeded in reaching a point fifty miles north of Herald Island without incident, aided by the vessel of the survivors and returned within a month's time.

Mr. Phillips was of the opinion that the ships still in evidence in some minds that Stefansson had escaped death by starvation.

"We were told," says Mr. Phillips, "pathetic stories of the condition of the men of the Karluk's crew and their actions when the King and Wing ice came into sight along the barren coast of the island. They had no idea that any expedition could ever find them at the beginning of the year, and although they had not given up to die it was apparent that they had reached the last extremity and were not daring to figure carefully what they could manage to do with the remaining food and edible clothing. They could see no indications for three weeks when the rescue parties arrived, and all that they knew was about two cans of shredded and dried seal meat and three or four pieces of fox meat."

Fine Cartoon For Canada.

The original drawing of Bernard Partridge's striking cartoon, "Canada," which appeared in Punch shortly after the battle of St. Julien, and which has been widely reproduced, has been secured by Sir George Perley and presented to Sir Robert Borden for suitable preservation in Canada. The cartoon depicts a Canadian soldier holding aloft the Union Jack in the moment of victory, and vividly portrays the valor and heroism of the Canadian troops.

COUNCIL MAY NOT BE ABLE TO MAKE GRANT TO CHILDRENS' AID THIS YEAR

Expenditures Must be Curtailed Says Mayor Panter--Pinnacle Street Pavement Dilemma--Ald. McFee Upheld by Council--Auto Livery Licence Fee to be Reconsidered

Messrs. T. Ritchie, H. F. Kotcheson and W. H. Wrightmyer formed a deputation which appeared before the city council last evening.

The new Shelter building and lot will cost between $18,000 and $17,000 said Mr. Ritchie, who urged the importance of rescue work as social and charitable. The work of the Dominion realizes the necessity of care for neglected children, who unless looked after may become the tramps and vagrants of tomorrow. A large proportion of these children come from the northern part of the county.

Belleville should contribute $8,000 as the county has done. Trenton will assist. It is thought the Children's Aid could make up the rest, as individual citizens have expressed a desire to assist by private donations.

Mr. F. F. Dickenson said that without $5000 from the city it will be impossible to carry out the building this year. He said he knew the council was coming in view of the financial situation.

Mr. Wrightmyer stated "We need the building and need it badly."

Mayor Panter expressed sympathy with the work of the rescue. After some consideration, some time ago it had been proposed to give $5,000, but the society did not favor this. Since then the council has given grants as needed to the society. But now it looks as if it would be impossible to make a grant to the C.A.S. this year. Still the estimates had not been brought down and it might still be possible to make a contribution. If the work could be laid over for a year, it would be much better. This is a year of great financial stringency and very heavy demands.

Mr. W. B. Higgs came before the council regarding a pavement on Pinnacle street. He would like to see a meeting of the property owners on Pinnacle street to discuss the matter before any pavement was decided on. One similar to Front street's roadway would be rather expensive.

Mayor Panter said the council could call a meeting if the ratepayers asked for it in sufficient numbers.

When the recommendation was read that 30 be the licence fee for livery automobiles, Mayor Panter said the council thought more consideration should be given to this. One may carry four passengers and another twenty and it would not seem fair to make a stated charge.

Ald. Wallbridge moved that the recommendation be referred back to the committee

The other recommendations of the committees carried.

The Provincial Association of Firewards request that a delegate of the council be appointed to attend the memorial service on Aug. 24th at Kingston for the fire chiefs who have died during the year. One of the deserted is the late Chief William H Campbell.—Referred to Executive.

Belleville Hardware Co. thanked the Belleville Hardware Co. through Mr. S. E. Carman by letter asked the council to do for action on the petition for an asphaltic pavement on Pinnacle street or remove his name from the petition as representative of these properties.

Glasses, when necessary, help the most beautiful face—if properly designed. Because they emphasize it, they actually beautify beauty, by giving repose to strained facial muscles, thereby removing the frown.

Mr. Walter Alford wrote asking that his name be removed from the Pinnacle street pavement petition for having it built this year.

Mr. H. Tannahill of the Bank of Montreal asked that the work be not done this year.

City Solicitor S. Masson, K.C. wrote stating that the petition for Pinnacle street pavement was not fully prepared, the numbers of lots not being opposite the names of the property owners. A new petition will be necessary.

A number of the council said all other petitions were not legal.

Mr. W. C. Mikel wrote on behalf of Mr. Geo. Burgess of Dundas street that some notice be taken regarding the drainage from the north of Dundas street coming on his property.—Referred to engineer and solicitor.

The trustees of the Tabernacle Methodist Church wrote stating that they were about to construct an approach to the Tabernacle. "The walk you built there has broken down at each side of the steps; the embankment has fallen out and the cement walk has caved in in consequence. We ask you to allow the contractor the use of the concrete mixer and dedate a sum not to exceed $100 towards them in replacing and completing the work."—Referred to engineer and public works committee.

Messrs. J. A. Campion and M. A. Daly wrote regarding removal of certain trees not necessary.

Mayor Panter said he had been over the situation and found the trees not necessary. The cutting out of a few trees would help the roads, the light, the trees and the health of the community.

The matter was referred to the chairmen of public works and parks and the engineer. They will report to council.

A number of communications were read from City Engineer J. W. Evans regarding repairs to the proposed pavements on George St. and Victoria avenue, so that the city council would be relieved of any burden.

The low zone storm sewers down Campbell and Victoria Avenue from Pinnacle to Front will cost $750.

Bell Telephone Co. proposed cement walk will cost $240.

Dundas street walk near Parker will cost $165.50.

Water service between Moira and Harriett to Coleman will cost $350. Services will return $18, which is not a profit to the city.

A body of the chairman of public works and engineer Mr. Evans, Mr. Lainch's tender orf painting the railing on Mill street before the committee"

Mayor Panter said it had been brought before the committee. He thought the council members would coincide with him in that statement

Ald. Earle remembered it quite distinctly.

Ald. McFee—"What was the council's resolution?"

Mr. Hammond said that no resolution had been put on file. It was thought the tender was quite an excessive charge and had better be accepted later.

Ald. McFee asked Mr. Henderson what was the job price he had secured.

Mr. Henderson said "five dollars."

Ald. McFee—"What was the frost-keeper?"

Mr. Henderson—"About 630 feet"

Ald. McFee—"The reason Mr. McIninch did not get the contract was because Mr. Henderson had got a job price of five dollars. Mr. McIninch's price would have been about $31.50."

Ald. Smith—"Since the matter had been brought up several men have come to me and offered to do the job for $5.

Ald. McFee—"Was I justified in taking the stand I did?"

Mayor Panter "In my opinion you were."

The council took the same stand

Ald. Earle asked if the intention was to rebuild the road on Foster avenue between Queen and Dundas.

Ald. McFee said it was a new road and not much had been spent on it.

A query from Ald. Dunkworth regarding material from the sewers brought the information that the material had to be drawn half a mile away under the engineer's supervision.

Ald. Smith asked if many streets were to be oiled if petitions were signed.

Ald. McFee said if two-thirds of the property owners agreed the work would be done.

Question—"What is the cost of oiling?"

"It costs less than 1½ cents per sq. yard.

Ald. McCurdy asked if paper baskets had yet been procured for Front street.

Ald. Earle said they had been selected

Talking of the financial situation, the mayor said the city so far had been spending money rather lavishly and had used up nearly $70,000 of the two notes of $75,000 secured at the bank. A halt would have to be called

Mayor Panter said no petitions for pavements had been properly signed. There is nothing to prevent property owners holding meetings of their own

Ald. Wallbridge gave notice of a bylaw to regulate sewer connections.

The whole council was present.

New York Stars in Belgian Benefit Tonight

This evening will be the first opportunity the people of Belleville will have to see Wing Tabor Wetmore, today one of America's greatest exponents of the art of impersonation

His part in the program for the Belgian Relief entertainment will be in all respects the same as given in his recent metropolitan successes, including the deliciously humorous Joseph C. Lincoln sketches that have convulsed New York audiences this season, also a serious drama recently added to his repertoire and considered by the critics his masterpiece. The musical features will be contributed by three soloists of international reputation.

Elizabeth Beery, the young Californian virtuoso, whose debut in Carnegie Hall created a sensation in Eastern musical circles, will be heard in favorite selections. Cecilia Beery, the charming young lyric soprano with the company is perhaps the better known to eastern music lovers.

These well known metropolitan artists have volunteered their services to make possible a dramatic and musical program of a quality not often heard outside the great cities.

The proceeds of all the concerts in the tour go to the Belgian Relief Fund

To Stimulate Enlistment

An Eastern Ontario branch of "The Scottish Patriotic League" has been formed to stimulate interest in the war and assist in recruiting in the Eastern Ontario district.

Prof. Mulloy of Kingston, organizing secretary, wrote asking Belleville council to form a branch here.

Ald. Wallbridge moved, seconded by Ald. Platt, that Mayor Panter be requested to call a meeting of the citizens for the purpose of forming a local branch of Eastern Ontario Speakers' Patriotic League and requested that Prof. Mulloy be asked to arrange to have Dr. Michael Clark and other speakers to come to this city at as early a date as possible.

News From Y.M.C.A. Boys' Camp at the Oak Hills

A party of 25 boys were motored out to the Y.M.C.A. camp grounds on the beautiful lake at Oak Hills by a number of local automobile philanthropists last Tuesday evening.

On the Saturday previous Mr. Percy Gifford and Mr. Dunsberry went out to put the equipment in readiness. It took all of Tuesday night in getting accustomed to sleeping on the ground under tent cover, tarpaulins, poles, and mosquitoes added interest to the would be sleepers. Owing to the experiences of the first night there were no surprises next day to see some of the boys writhing around in their sleep.

Some splendid facilities have been added since last year, viz. an up-to-date kitchen with a cement cellar. A good cook stove has been purchased. Messrs. Deana Bros. contributed a large cupboard for supplies. A handy punt was purchased. An engineering corps was formed. They have constructed a real dock at which the commodious war canoe is anchored with all safety. The canoe has had installed a 25 hp. power ash breeze motor which enables the canoe filled with excursionists to to easily pass all the steamers on the lake.

Last Thursday was election day, when three tents of franchisers representing the provinces of Ontario, Manitoba and British Columbia elected their governors. Ontario elected the Honorable Max Bertly, Manitoba elected Mr. Shewan, D. Stockdaddy, British Columbia elected the Honorable Dick Arnott. These governors together with Messrs. Hess and Gifford form what is known as the camp legislative council. The council met, and ruled that all cereals should be salted to time three times a day. It was also decided that the choir of boys be given every encouragement and extended every courtesy.

Plans have been drafted to hold a lunatics' athletic carnival, a field day and a street circus in Stirling.

A camp newspaper has been started and is known as the 'Oak Crest Echo.' It is a daily sheet and appears each morning at the breakfast table to the amazement of some and the edification of others. From its columns we read that a party of eight campers with "Pop" Gifford vaulted all ordway to Stirling on Saturday and did business with everybody, particularly in the "root off parlors" at the expense of "Pop" Visitor James mistook a 10c dish for a 5 cenier. He was so embarrassed that he blushed at the sight of it. He acted like a lady in a cop of milk. Shrimpy Edwards tried to work off a 50 cent piece for a quarter and the waiter said he must have come from Belleville. The party then escorted "Pop" to an agricultural dealers for a shave, after which they repaired to the wholesale fruit importers for a car load to be delivered at the camp dock all for the benefit of Oliver Owen who is a little lunatic.

Sunday was appropriately observed. The campers joined in the study of the Sunday School lesson and in the evening all participated in a song service around the lazy ingot. Mr. Hess journeyed to the Sidney church where he held forth at both morning and evening services.

The Debt we Owe to the United States

Dear Sir:—

We, the descendants of U. E. Loyalists naturally have looked with astonishing interest and success of the neighboring republic. We have enjoyed one hundred years of peace and while we have had differences regarding trade policies, we have maintained friendly relations with our good neighbors. From this time, we shall drop the familiar appellative of "American Cousins" and we shall style them as our "American brothers and sisters." The interchanges of residences, the intermarriages between the two countries have united the people of both lands. Ever since the commencement of the war, we have felt the great heart of the Republic beating in unison with our own. The leaders of thought, ranged themselves on the side of the Allies. Their unstinted factories have furnished munitions of war to the Allies which come just in time to assist in hurling back the German hordes. Great Britain owes a debt of gratitude owing to Belgium. The Allies know but for the gallant stand of the Belgians against overwhelming tons, the enormous masses of our enemies, might have been in possession of Paris, and Calais, today. A few hours, or a few days may, find the Republic fighting side by side with the Allies. If there is one thing more than any other which stirs the hearts of the English speaking people all over the world with gratitude it is "The Belgian Relief Fund of the United States." Recognizing their terrible position, this fund has contributed over sixty millions of dollars in relief of Belgium. It has established hospitals, furnished hundreds of ship loads of necessaries, preserved the lives and relieved the sufferings and wants of hundreds of thousands. The talented artists who will appear on July 14 are giving their services gratuitously for this cause. Every cent of the receipts will go to swell this relief fund. Why should we not strain every nerve to assist in the wonderful work of mercy and succour for the most unfortunate and suffering nation in this world.

I am, Yours,
J. J. B. Flint.

Rats Had Advance Information

The Ogdensburg Advance says that while the steamer Averill was at that port last week, hundreds of rats left the boat and scurried ashore, and the sailors considered this to be a very bad omen. Later the boat proceeded on her trip west, to her way to Chicago and Milwaukee, with a cargo of package freight. When nearly opposite Clayton says the Advance, there an alarm of fire, and Captain Smith immediately applied the chemicals and steam into and soon had the flames extinguished. It is estimated, the paper continues, that 250 tons of freight were damaged. The fire seemed to have started in a bale of cocoa door mats. The insurance adjusters inspected the damage, the damaged freight was replaced by other goods, and the steamer proceeded on her way.

Boys Caught At Buffalo

The boys took the money and went to see the Toronto and Rochester teams play Baseball at Rochester, but on reaching Buffalo were apprehended on a charge of violating the Immigration laws of the United States. Different and Better Clothes

The Two Piece Suit

This is the time of year when a man wants to wear as little as possible. If you wear one of our cool Two-Piece Suits, it's certain you won't "wear a worried look."

But there are two considerations in a Two-Piece Suit which call for the most competent tailoring. In the first place, the coat must be so tailored as to obviate the need of a vest. In the second place, as the fabrics are extremely light in weight, the tailoring must be done with the greatest skill.

Fabrics of carefully selected Sun-Proof Serges, Worsteds, Homespuns, etc., etc.

It you'll step in and try on one of these cool Suits and then take a look in the mirror, you'll be surprised to see what a swell and comfortable looking fellow you are.

We've everything in wearables for a man's summer comfort.

DAREDEVIL FIGHTERS.

"Kangaroos" and "Kiwis" Doing Splendid Work at the Front.

The London Daily Chronicle publishes the following from a correspondent who is serving with the Royal Naval Division at the Dardanelles:

"Every colour and clan in the great British parties of the colonial Empire, ranged in battle array against a common foe. Only those who have had to fight their way up the precipitous and difficult heights, the long, grinding, terrible death trap rolling downwards and past down the gorges, can realize the wonderful work and splendid property realize the overweening delightfulness of the initial task undertaken with such alarming boldness and success by the sturdy sons and adopted sons of Australia and New Zealand. They forced a landing on an apparently impregnable spot immediately opposite the one objective of all the landing forces and the key to Constantinople and the forts of the Narrows.

"Even the Australian Naval Brigade who have endeavored to follow worthily in the footsteps and legend then retain and to increase the area of the land so gallantly seized, cannot be more proud of the bearing and fine of patriotism and self-sacrifice, which has been and is being shown by the eight weary months of waiting in training centres and in Egypt — alone, with the Australian garrison and the "Kiwis" to send the Garrison Artillery regiments as a reserve of terror from the beach up into the hills of the Gallipoli and sigh away into the comparative security of their distant intrenchments.

"True, the Australian and Indian were shelled with great deliberation and exactitude of precision by the big ships fleet, and no one is more enthusiastic than the colonials regarding the wonderful accuracy of the Anzac shell. Still, there were hidden machine guns and rifles in the scrub and natural hiding places for troops that no artillery fire could search or destroy, however well directed by aeroplane observation.

"And good methods of landing and attack under such conditions would be hard to improve upon. There was the personal initiative, extraordinary dash, virility and reckless daredevilism of the Australian bushrider that completely shattered the elaborated defensive scheme of defence.

"Come on, you Australian kangaroos; we have been waiting for you for two months!" shouted some German officers to the occupants of one of the boats, but whatever forms of attack they had expected and prepared for, they certainly had not expected the invaders to throw off their equipment and every other tunics, under a hail of lead and shrapnel, to wade or swim ashore with little but their rifles and bayonets, to make a mad rush in their shirt sleeves at machine guns and lines of infantry, to chase the scattered Turks up the face of the treacherous cliffs with primitive weapons such as sticks and stones, and to engage in hand to hand struggles which were bound to result in both combatants hurtling through space together to destruction.

"These desperate and superbly heroic measures could certainly not have been anticipated by the German strategists, and it can hardly be wondered at that the Turks were utterly demoralized from the very outset. 'One Australian alone shot or bayoneted as an enemy machine gun section on the beach and "outed" the Maxim. He was shot through the jaw the next day.

"The machine guns of the New Zealand Brigade, commanded by Captain Wallingford — best known to England as Sergeant-Major Wallingford, the V.C. hero of Langemarck — also accomplished a fine thing when they rushed a hill and with the cliffs with their Maxims. When their rifles became too hot to handle they buried lumps of sandstone and any other handy missiles at the flying Turks, wrapped handkerchiefs round sticks and eventually planted a Maxim on the ridge.

"There they held it with their hands until a tripod could be fetched, and the boiling water and hot cartridges came meanwhile scalding and burning them as they scrambled down the enemy they had so dramatically routed.

Modest "Tommy."

It is one of the fact that all letters written by the men have to be read and signed by an officer and the gallantry of Private Tom Barry, 7 Battalion Royal Dublin Fusiliers, has become known. The writer's letter to his family was supplemented by the following from his company commander: "I see he is too modest to tell you that he is mentioned for conspicuous gallantry. He crawled out alone, the man carrying one of the Maxims was wounded and fell on the ground. Your son ran out from under cover, brought the gun up to the firing line, and then, as there was no ammunition he had previously been carrying, got you two wounded Germans like Tom, send them out here."

A Brother's Heroism.

From South Africa comes the touching story of a mother's heroism. The elder of two brothers serving with the 1st was shot down at the first volley of firing. His brother, stationed behind some rocks, at once opened fire on the enemy's firing line. While doing so he, too, was shot by the German force. A fellow-soldier afterwards came across the sad sight of the two dead brothers. The brave mother-in-law stood by the body, and around his elder brother's neck, and as still held the cup in his other hand. A hero's death indeed!

MEN CHEERFUL IN SPITE OF GASES

They Call the Deadly Vapor "Pea Soup Fog."

BITTERNESS ENTERS WAR

British Soldiers Go Grimly Into the Gas Zone Determined to Avenge Dead.

Death Roll of the Guards—Very Few Cries of Pain Are to Be Heard in the Hospitals.

THE more one sees of the British army in the field the more is one impressed by its cheery optimism and good humor. It works and plays with the same good, hearted zest; nothing can disheartten it, says a correspondent.

The battalion marching past to the trenches! All the men are singing. See that other returning, tired but cheerful. They, too, are singing.

Until the gas poisoners began their foul work it was an army that regarded the fog-facing its impersonality. Nothing was the business to hand, but since without caution. Now the bogey men of killing is full of bitterness.

BRITISH SOLDIER WITH RESPIRATOR.

Yet even the menace of the new death has not choked the spirit of cheerfulness. Men take their turn in the gas zone with a grim resolve to swell the enemy's casualty list with their own, but they can jest even when they are gasping for breath.

"Another pea soup fog," said a North Somerset lad to a comrade in the trenches when he saw the wall of gas vapor stealing toward him. "It isn't safe to be out in the night air."

"It's a bad da,' for the Lord Mayor's procession," said a London rifleman when the fog swept over his trench. He lay in a dugout for an hour, his face buried in a respirator, and then staggered into the open air, blear but practically unhurt. "He minded me of the Thames Embankment on a November morning," he said as he lay in a hospital, "except that it was much safer. No trams."

The chaplain attached to the clearing station was going among the new arrivals as they lay on stretchers in the open air, later having their wounds dressed, and giving to each a New Testament and a postcard—one of the sort which is prepared for the use by wounding out some printed sentences and leaving others. He came to a victim of gas—a mere boy who stared at the card sus piciously.

"Would you like to send your people a post card, my boy?" said the chaplain, and went on to the next sufferer.

"Done—does this mean that I am going to die?" asked the lad, as he tried to scrawl a name across the front of the card.

"Nonsense," retorted an orderly who was passing. "You'll be right as rain in a week."

"Then I'll wait before I write," said the soldier. "I'd'ave no use wasting the card. Besides it says, I am wounded. I'm not wounded—I'm full of this bloody gas, and as soon as me chest is clear I'm going back to 'do' for some of those Germans. Give us a drink!"

The cheerfulness of the wounded is very marked. A man who has been shot in the leg or arm after severe shelling, and time carried for perhaps twenty miles in a slow moving ambulance, could be forgiven if he took a somewhat gloomy view of the immediate future. Ten to one he arrives at his destination bluing his suffering behind a mask of jaycety.

But on the ground of a casualty clearing station and watch the ambulance procession of sad Cross Attendants discharging their painful burdens under the trees. You will hear very few cries of pain. Those men have been brought direct from the battlefields, with only a cast at the dressing station, where first aid is given to them. They remind one of schoolboys waiting for the headmaster, as they sit in rows, silent, rather grim, with their thought still fixed on the battlefield. They have just left.

Hand Books For Invaders.

Hands books, giving instructions on how to invade Italy through the valley of the River Po, thus reaching Verona, Mantua and Ferrara, casting of Venice from the remainder of the kingdom, have been found in the possession of Austrian officers who have been made prisoners. These booklets apparently were compiled by an officer of the Austrian general staff.

A BLESSING AND A CURSE.

Opium Is the Oldest and Most Useful Drug Known.

It is a curious commentary upon our boasted progress in scientific medicine, in recent years, that the most useful drug in the entire Pharmacopeia is the oldest one in the whole medicine. Recently discovered coal tar products and serum antitoxin and vaccines have revolutionized the treatment of certain diseases, but opium is the remedy which doctors the world over turn to at the head of the list for the relief of the greatest number of serious ailments.

If the infinite materia medica of opium could be reduced to a single drug, said Prof. Martin, of Johns Hopkins University, recently, "I am sure that a unanimous, if not a majority, vote would choose opium. " ," which has proved such a boon to suffering humanity." It was unnecessary for him to add, what every intelligent man knows, that the abuse of the beneficent remedy is also one of the greatest curses to humanity. Apparently it has no rival in either Solomon's or Dante's hell.

The first authentic record of the use of opium is that of Theophrastus, a Greek physician who lived almost 400 years before the Christian era. Later the Romans regarded its value as a medicine, and the great Roman physician, Galen, held opium dear for its use that same guides to physicians for 1,500 years.

According to Galen, "Opium resists poison and venomous bites, cause inveterate headache, vertigo, deafness, lethargy, dimness of sight, loss of voice, asthma, coughs of all kinds, spitting of blood, tightness of breath, colic, the like poison, jaundice, hardness of the spleen, stone, urinary complications, fevers, dropsies, leprosies, the trouble to which women are subject, melancholy and all pestilences."

Of course, if Galen had been entirely right about the uses of opium, most diseases would have vanished from the earth long ago. Nevertheless, he understood the case in some particulars almost as much as he overstated it in others. And the modern physician could make a list of conditions in which opium was the sheet anchor even longer than Galen's, although considerably less comprehensive, and with less emphasis on the "cure." Opium is a drug is of such importance, and such a menace, that it occupies the attention of all lawmakers at the present time.

Perfectly Proper.

"I am afraid this company is doing business on the wrong principle."

"Yes, but then it does it extremely well."—Baltimore American.

WARFARE BY CATAPULT

MODERN FIGHTING REVIVES METHODS OF OLD DAYS.

Advices From the Front Say Grenades Are Being Thrown For Short Distances With a Device Invented by the Romans—Pitfalls, Pike Boats, Chain Shot, Hand Shields and Fire.

In these days of quick-fire warfare it is somewhat startling to notice how extensively hand grenades, weapons of the days of old, are being used. They are thrown in the trenches, and by the weapons—"in the street sand beside the house fighting." A report from the front related that the Allies, after a grenades, not only near them with remarkable effect in the trenches, but also in clearing villages. A couple of hand grenades thrown into a house occupied by the enemy will, says the military experts, clear it more quick ly than anything else, and with far less loss of life than by the use of the bayonet.

This is not the only ancient weapon, however, which is being used in the present campaign. In the course of the war Germany has reintroduced the following other old-fashioned methods of destruction: Pike boats, trench mortars, chain shot, and her example in regard to the last has been promptly followed by the Allies with great success. "Eye Witness" has frequently shown. It also has said that when the Germans first carried Belgrade, the big guns were assisted by a huge apparatus known in ancient times as a ballista, a military engine which was used to hurl huge stones, catapult fashion, at fortifications under siege. An adaptation of the ballista is now being used, except that it throws bombs instead of stones.

Earlier in the struggle a French colonel declared that catapults such as the Romans used were also employed to hurl shells from one trench to another, and, in addition to their great execution, they were free from loss and smokeless. Another French officer has advocated the arming of soldiers, to be used in bayonet charges. His idea in regard to the shields has been partly realized in some of our colonial troops, who have among their equipment a curiously formed shovel, which they can best apply either for digging trenches, but also when looking over the top of their "dug-outs", for those shovels have two sections through which they can peep while protecting the face from stray bullets on the other part of the shovel.

A strategem employed by the Scots at the Battle of Bannockburn has been frequently tried in the present war. The Scots, it will be remembered, dug numerous pits, plated pointed stakes in each, and covered them over with fallen leaves. When the English charged over the trap it was broken and they were cut to pieces immediately after the occupation of Brussels the Germans are said to have dug all the barrels in the city and mark them in the streets, it being almost impossible for cavalry to charge across these pitfalls.

When the allied line made its great stand in Flanders the Belgians cut the dykes, sending a broad inundation across the country and forming a natural barrier against which the great fortresses German charges broke down time after time. The Kaiser's soldiers sacrificed themselves by the thousand in their efforts to force the control of the canals from the Allies, but in vain to stop the floods. Failing this, they reverted to the ancient idea of fireboats. There is no doubt that large quantities of crude oil were stored in Antwerp for the purpose of the present campaign. It is considered that the Germans intended covering the water with oil. The German plan, however, was to send fire-boats into the inundated territory, which would ignite the floating oil and spread a way of fire. This would drive the soldiers from their trenches and into easy range of artillery fire. This plan, however, not meeting with much success, the Germans set the fire-boats adrift on the River Aisne, about two miles north of Albert—doubtless in the hope that they would explode against the bridge at Aveny and destroy a link in the allies' communications. Fortunately, the design was frustrated by the French.

The site of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition is described as wonderfully well chosen, for its natural beauty, accessibility and suitability for the purpose.

Imagine an amphitheatre some two miles long and about one-half mile wide, backed by low hills and fronting for its entire length on the blue waters of the famous bay. Across a mile or more of sparkling water rise the picturesque Marin hills, topped by cloud-capped Mount Tamalpais." Beyond, to the west, is the famous Golden Gate. Beyond that, the broad Pacific

CHINA HEAVIEST VICTIM OF WAR

She Will Suffer Most of All the Neutrals, Says Merchant.

BRITAIN MAY ASSIST HER

Chang Chen Hsun, a Noted Chinese Capitalist, Who Is In America, Says Japan Is Now Out to Check Japan's Aggression—A Peace Loving People

THAT China is likely to be the greatest victim of the European war is the contention of Chang Chen Hsun, head of the Chinese Trade Commission now on a visit to the United States, and who is known as China's J. Pierpont Morgan. Japan's demands upon China, which are likely to be assented to because of China's weakness, will make his native land practically a subject state of the Mikado. China will have but one right left—to labor—and that for Japan's benefit.

"It is possible," he said to an interviewer, "that Great Britain may realize the grim necessity of coming to our aid, even though she be involved in the vast European war, with Japan as an ally. As a matter of fact, if something is not done to check Japan, Great Britain will lose more in the Far East than she stands to lose in Europe, if the worst which is conceivable as the result of the conflict with Germany.

"I believe, as all thinking China believes, that possibly great Britain may have paid too high a price for the assistance of Japan.

"Japan has taken advantage of the present crisis in Europe as an opportunity for the assessment of China in the moment of her weakness. She has been all honest nor an admirable course in any way. A nation never did a more terrible thing.

"In principle, her course is not unlike the assault of a strong man upon a child of three, for China, as a republic, is but a child of three, just learning how to walk. It would have been the better and more generous course if Japan had helped it.

"But instead of helping us she is making plans to throttle us, to prevent us from growth.

"Is China capable of self-government now?" he was asked.

"Of course she is. She is the oldest of the world's civilized nations and much more civilized than Japan. We eat from tables, as we sit on chairs; while Japan still eats upon the floor and eats from mats upon the floor."

"If your civilization is so much superior to that of Japan, how comes it that Japan has grown to be so much more powerful than you are?"

"That is due to the fact that the Chinese are a peace-loving people.

"But Japan has become military. She has had to, for she has placed herself under the necessity of being predatory. She has been like a poor family which lives on the scale which only a rich family should affect.

"She has spent more than she has had, in order to create and maintain her militarism, and so finds herself unable to exist upon the product of her own natural resources, which is not very large.

"That army and that navy which Japan has created must be supported in some way. So she chooses to use them wickedly as a means wherewith to coerce poor China, making her pay the great bills of their expense.

"The situation really is desperate. When the Russians went into Manchuria the highest class Chinese suffered, but it still was possible for the lower class to live, because the Russians were glad of their cheap labor.

"But since the Japanese have gone in even the lower class Chinese labor has been displaced, to the great distress of a numerous population, by cheap Japanese labor. Though they find it necessary to pay a little more for it, the Japanese prefer Japanese to Chinese labor, it makes their grip upon the land more firm. But what is to become of the displaced Chinese."

CROWN PRINCE'S ARMY RECEIVES ANOTHER CHECK.

LONDON, July 14.—Another severe check was inflicted on the army of the German Crown Prince on the road between Binarville and Vienne le Chateau as far as Haut Chevauchee in the Argonne today, the French War Office announced.

The enemy bombarded the French positions with asphyxiating gas shells in an extremely violent manner and then advanced in great force.

The impact of the German onset momentarily beat the French line at certain points, but energetic counter-attacks delivered in the faces of the advancing forces restored the former equilibrium. Fighting continued with success on the part of the French, who eventually compelled the retirement of the Germans.

Among the forces detailed by the enemy for this great assault, the French have already identified five different regiments of the 16th corps.

Ground has been gained by the French infantry in attacks in tunnels near Pay-en-Haye, while the Germans continue to subject the French positions between the Meuse and the Moselle to an extremely heavy bombardment. Apremont and LePretre forests are in particular the scene of heavy artillery fire.

The Germans in Belgium are using asphyxiating gases in bombarding the French and British lines.

A violent cannonade has been carried on north of Arras, but no infantry actions are reported today. Material damage was done to Arras again by a German bombardment today.

The Germans were defeated last night in a violent attack in front of the Labyrinth, under the protection of a violent rifle fire. The French forces were decimated and thrown violently back on their own lines as a result of the encounter.

The Germans were also repulsed in an attempt at attacking a bridgehead east of the Pecht River in the Vosges.

A British aerial raid was carried out by a French squadron of 85 aeroplanes early today on a strategical railway station established by the German at Vigneulles-les-Hattonchatel, constructed to serve the region of the Calonne trenches and the forest of Apremont. It was a depot of important stores of war material, particularly of ammunition. The aviators dropped not less than 171 heavy bombs on the place and had the satisfaction of seeing several fires started before they flew away. All the French machines, though fired at by a great number of anti-craft guns, returned safely to their base. Credit is due to the men who carried out this raid for firing against a wind blowing at 40 miles an hour without mishap.

Saunders Sent to the Central

William J. Saunders who was on July 8th, found guilty of vagrancy in securing board and lodgings without payment in return, was this morning sentenced to not less than 3 months in the Ontario Reformatory and for an indeterminate period thereafter for not more than two years less one day

Chief Thompson of Peterborough, who was in court was asked by Magistrate Masson—

"Do you recognize this man?"

"I do, your worship."

Magistrate Masson said he was satisfied Saunders was guilty of the charge "and from your previous record I do not think a light sentence is one that will appeal to you or reform you. I think you should get as long a sentence as possible."

Della Saunders, his wife who went to Mrs. Van Allen's boarding house and the Anglo-American Hotel, was given the benefit of the doubt, there was, the court said, with Saunders, but as he secured board and lodgings she was not held accountable, although she was perhaps nearly as guilty.

Albert Haines on a charge of being drunk was fined five dollars and costs or 15 days

Robert Gibson, who was up yesterday, was pleaded again this morning early for drunkenness. The 8$ fine not proving effective, this morning's fine was made $10 and costs or 15 days.

Walter Lasher charged with theft of a bicycle was remanded until Saturday.

120,000 MINERS IN WALES WENT OUT ON STRIKE TODAY

Business on Railways Carrying Coal to Docks is Suspended--May Have a Serious Effect on Naval Operations--Harmony Restored in British Cabinet--Balkan Nations Consult as to Joint Action--Austria Protests Against United States Traffic in Munitions.

SERIOUS COAL STRIKE IN WALES.

CARDIFF, July 15.—In spite of optimistic predictions that serious labor difficulties in the coal fields would be averted, virtually every mine in Wales was idle this morning, 120,000 men going out on strike for higher wages. The men walked out against the advice of the majority of their leaders; it is expected a working arrangement will be reached within a day or so. Meantime practically all the railway lines carrying coal to the docks are suspended.

TURKEY SEEKING PEACE?

MILAN, July 15.—A telegram from the Bucharest correspondent of The Corriere Della Sera states that Nedjemkdun Effendi, the Turkish minister of justice, accompanied by Fassum Effendi, passed through Sofia yesterday. They are stated to be bound for Switzerland, where they will meet representatives of the entente powers and discuss a separate peace.

Reports from various sources, that Turkey is nearly at the end of its military resources, have been persistent within the past few days.

NEWSPAPER PROPRIETOR ARRESTED.

BERLIN, July 15.—A despatch from Prague, Bohemia says: Dr. Raschin, President of the Czech newspaper Narodny Listy and a well known pan-Slav leader has been arrested. He is a member of the Austrian Diet.

NORWEGIAN STEAMER TORPEDOED.

LONDON, July 15.—The Norwegian steamer Rym has been torpedoed and sunk, the second engineer was killed, but the rest of the crew has landed at Great Yarmouth.

MANY NEW WARSHIPS ADDED TO ROYAL NAVY.

LONDON, July 15.—The annual accounts of the British dockyards expenditures for last year reveal for the first time to the public that an airship, "No. 16" was in course of construction in 1914. It had been the impression at that time that Great Britain had confined its airvraft activities almost exclusively to aeroplanes, and the fact that so many airships had been built was known only to the initiated.

Since the period covered by these figures, other airships have been added to the British aviation service.

The same accounts give the total cost of the combatant ships in the British navy in commission at the end of the last fiscal year at upwards of £174,000,000 ($870,000,000).

ITALIANS ADVANCE IN MOUNTAIN FIGHT.

PARIS, July 14:—AsGeneva despatch says: "The Italians have captured two miles of Austrian trenches in the Carnic Alps according to a despatch received today by The Tribune from Villach, an Austrian town on the River Drave, about 52 miles northwest of Laibach. The Alpine troops, these advices say, dragged their artillery to the heights near Roskofel, which is situated at an altitude of 6600 feet.

The Italians are also said to have captured two important points south of Goritz."

$5,000,000,000 A YEAR BRITAIN'S WAR COST.

LONDON, July 15.—"A war costing a thousand millions a year is bound to be of comparatively short duration," exclaimed Chancellor McKenna in the House of Commons last evening. "If the war were to last thirty-six months it would be impossible rationally to estimate its cost."

A thousand million pounds is five billion dollars. This is the sameestimate of the cost of the war to Great Britain alone for the first year that Lloyd George, then Chancellor of the Exchequer, made on May 4.

GERMANS WOULD RECONSTRUCT A CITY THEY DESTROYED.

LONDON, July 15.—The Morning Post has the following from Copenhagen: A Berlin telegram states that the Prussian Minister of the Interior last week visited Louvain and examined a German architect's scheme for rebuilding Louvain. Interviewed the Minister declared that the government intended spending 30,000,000 marks in the reconstruction of Louvain as a modern town.

TURKS BRING UP RAW TROOPS TO ATTACK ALLIES.

LONDON, July 15.—The official British press representative with the allied forces in the Dardanelles, in a despatch dated July 7, and reaching London by way of Alexandria, Egypt, July 14, says:

"A successful allied advance on the left wing June 28 alarmed the enemy seriously, causing him to bring up heavy reinforcements, including raw troops, and he has been launching vigorous counter attacks ever since in a vain effort to recover his lost ground.

"Enver Pasha, the Turkish minister of war, hurried down from Constantinople to stimulate the troops, a great banner being hoisted on Achi Baba to signalize his arrival. There had been some discussion among the Turkish leaders, especially regarding the advisability of counter-attacks, but Enver Pasha insisted upon general attacks, which were undertaken repeatedly with great bravery and tremendous losses, masses of Turkish troops fading away before the allies' artillery.

"Meanwhile the Turkish Asiatic batteries were active, causing some annoyance at our landing places, but there were few casualties, since all the troops were too well entrenched to be harried, except by direct hits.

"The allied men all pay tribute to the extreme gallantry and indifference to death shown by the Turkish infantry, but their methods of attack are crude and wasteful. They are lacking in knowledge of how to carry out an assault scientifically.

"The Turks generally make for an attack behind some natural barrier. Generally our artillery is informed of their massing before the attack is launched, whereupon, knowing all the ranges to a foot, we break up the mass with a torrent of shell.

"The Turks recently have been adding extensively to the defensive possibilities of their positions in an effort to prevent any further advance by our troops, and the Turkish soldiers have been given special orders prohibiting their retirement under any circumstances. Their officers have been directed to shoot soldiers who attempt to retire."

TERRIFIC FIGHTING UPON ISONZO LINES.

BUDAPEST, July 15.—Private advices describe the battle of Isonzo as the greatest yet fought on the Italian front, the attack of the Italians being almost incessant. The bridge head of Gortiz has suffered severely from the bombardment of the Italian artillerists, who seem resolute to carry this position at whatever cost to develop an offensive in the upper region on the east side of the River Isonzo. The whole front along this line is strewn with thousands of dead. The mountain slopes are also spotted with the bodies of attackers and defenders alike. The new Italian offensive seems to develop all along the front in Tyrol, Carnia and Trentino.

A new device has been adopted by the Austrians. Steep and high slopes of the mountains have been fortified and the men are under cover behind rocks and great stones made up all around the peaks. When attacked by great masses from below they blow up these fortified places positions, so that great boulders roll down on the oncoming enemy like a great avalanche. It is stated by the Austrians that the losses of the Italians up to the present are 100,000 men, including 17,000 prisoners.

BALKAN STATES' MINISTERS HOLD CONFERENCE.

ROME, July 15.—Daily conferences between the new Bulgarian minister Stunicoff and the Roumanian minister Chik at the Roumanian legation here strengthen the report that Bulgaria, Roumania and Greece are preparing for joint action by either joining the Allies or announcing their neutrality for the remainder of the war.

AUSTRIA OBJECTS TO BRITAIN'S WAR PURCHASES IN U. S.

AMSTERDAM, July 15.—It is learned from Vienna that the Austro-Hungarian minister of foreign affairs sent a note to the American ambassador at Vienna on June 29 drawing attention to the fact that commercial business in war material on a great scale is proceeding between the United States and Great Britain and her allies; while Austria-Hungary and Germany are completely cut off from the American market. This state of things the note points out is not in cognizance with the defined neutrality and it is suggested that the United States is in a position to redress it. "It would be quite sufficient" the note declares, "to advise the enemies of Austria-Hungary and Germany that the supply of foodstuffs and war material would be suspended if legitimate trade in these articles between Americans and neutral countries was not permitted."

EPIDEMICS DRIVE GERMAN FORCES OUT OF LEMBERG.

PETROGRAD, July 15.—All enemy troops have been with drawn from Lemberg, owing to the terrible epidemics of cholera in particular, which are raging there. Refugees are pouring into Russian territory, and among other novel sights at Kieff are cabmen from Lemberg, who are plying for hire.

The population of Galicia is starving because the enemy requisitioned everything, and all who can are escaping through the enemy's lines to Russia.

COMPLETE HARMONY EXISTS IN BRITISH CABINET.

LONDON, July 15.—The Daily Chronicle declares today through its parliamentary correspondent that whatever differences may have existed in the cabinet on certain matters, there is now complete harmony. The relations between the prime minister and Mr. Lloyd George, the correspondent adds, continue to be what they have always been, of a most friendly character.

KIEL IN A STATE OF SIEGE.

AMSTERDAM, July 15.—The entire district surrounding the great German naval base at Kiel has been placed in a virtual state of siege, according to Berlin despatches today.

WHAT THE EMPIRE HAS DONE.

The amount of "wisdom after the event" which this war has developed is phenomenal. Every individual who can wield a pen or has a mouth in good working order seems to feel constrained to point out how everybody else has been the wrong thing because of insufficient prescience. The impression intended to be conveyed is, of course, that the fault-finding individual himself knew it all in advance and that if he could have had the direction of affairs, everything would have been all right. The only appropriate response to such wise ones is "Bosh."

The truth of the matter is that while all well-informed people knew that a war such as Germany has forced upon the world was possible, if not probable, it was considered so monstrous that no one felt justified in regarding it as really likely to happen. Perhaps, sub-consciously, we may have been deceiving ourselves. That as it may, it is certain that the nations could not have acted otherwise than they did. If such a war had to come, it was well not to hesitate it. That might easily have helped to precipitate it. Having come, let us at least look at it honestly.

A year ago the Government and people of the United Kingdom had absolutely no thought of the grimness of such a struggle as that in which they are now engaged. In so far as they were not worried almost beyond endurance by suffragettism; they were alarmed at the possibilities of serious domestic complications, over the Irish question. The unanimous belief was that British relations with Germany were peculiarly satisfactory, and were tending to become more so. The European situation had not for many years looked more favorable for a continuation of peace. There were no threatening diplomatic issues. There was no apparent cause for quarrel in any quarter. The war broke from a clear international sky. How did it find the nations prepared?

So far as Britain is concerned there need be no hesitation about the answer. Never in all history had the Empire been nearly as ready. Never had it possessed such a Fleet. Never, since Lord Haldane, had the United Kingdom had such an Army, or one even comparable to it. The war has demonstrated these facts; it is necessary to do more than state them. Within twenty-four hours after the declaration of war the German flag had disappeared form the seas and was fleeing to the uttermost parts of the ocean, either to seek concealment or with the intention of waging a short period of desperate strife against its overpowering marine opponents. In a word, the British Fleet was recognized as supreme, from the moment that war broke out.

Thanks to the patriotic foresight of Australia in organizing a good section of that Fleet for her own defence, and that of New Zealand, even the waters of the distant Pacific in which British interests might otherwise have been in jeopardy, were rendered secure for the Empire, wholly untenable for the Germans. Through closer proximity to the heart of the Empire the Atlantic waters were safeguarded against naval attack, and so enabled to devote ourselves and means to the organization of land forces which were urgently needed. Had this Dominion provided as was proposed, a year before the Thirty-Five Million Dollars for Dreadnought building in England, the British Fleet may have been no more effective, and Canada would have been handicapped to that extent in her military efforts. With a very little more than the Thirty-Five Million Dollars which, at Winston Churchill's demand, it was proposed to hand over to the British Admiralty, we could have raised and send across the Atlantic an army of over thirty-thousand men to have not only exalted the name of Canada throughout the world, but have rendered direct services to the Empire an to our Allies, the value which can be scarcely fully estimated.

With regard to her Army, Britain was equally fortunate. She was able to send more than a full contingent which she had promised—

Army Corps—to take part in the first great battle of the war. She was able to land two hundred thousand soldiers in France within a fortnight after the declaration of war while holding in reserve more than three hundred thousand well-trained and fully equipped men. The significance of these figures is only to be appreciated when it is remembered that but thirty-two thousand British soldiers, all told, took part in the Crimean war and that the Canadians already sent to France outnumber the British who fought under Wellington at Waterloo. Had Britain withdrawn support from her Fleet prior to the war for the purpose of strengthening her Army, one or two disastrous things would have happened—either the war would have been precipitated sooner, and when she was less adequately prepared, or the Fleet would have been dangerously weakened to the same extent that the German army was weakened by the vain attempts to make the German fleet more potent.

As far as can be judged in the light of what has so far happened, the British Empire could not have been in a more fortunate position than it was found at the beginning of the war. This was largely due to wise statesmanship, although no doubt somewhat owing to good luck, as it is ordinarily called, otherwise to Divine Providence. It is ridiculous to chatter now about how things might have been better arranged. No one will deny that they might have been, could we possibly have known in advance what was going to happen. But we neither could nor did know—not the wisest or best among us. And yet the Empire was found ready as it had never been in all its history.

No doubt errors of judgment have been committed since the war began, probably other errors will be committed hereafter. But we have been and are doing our best. We have no reason to be dissatisfied with the results of our efforts. Therefore, in the name of practical patriotism, let us stop concerning ourselves about the past. Let us devote all our thoughts and all our energies to the future.

"Men, material and money," are the needs of the moment, and Britain can supply them all.

There has been nothing more significant in Imperial history than Lord Kitchener's message to General Botha, congratulating him upon his brilliant victory and welcoming the coming of a South Africa force to fight in Europe with the Allied armies.

Turkish losses in the Dardanelles fighting, both on land and sea, now total 180,000, according to Constantinople advices noted in an Athens despatch. Premier Asquith announced on July 1 that British losses at the Dardanelles up to May 31 aggregated 38,635. They have been largely augmented since then, and the French have also suffered heavily.

The cabled reports of the pessimistic views of the campaigns appearing in the London Daily Mail and the London Times should be read, says the Winnipeg Free Press, in the light of the fact that Lord Northcliffe has set his heart on frightening or cajoling the authorities of Great Britain into accepting conscription. He won't be happy until he gets it; and he is not very scrupulous about the way by which he gets it.

Nearly 500 Montenegrin reservists left Montreal one day last week for the front. "We did not have to go," said one the older men, who hailed from Pittsburg, and who said he had been a number of years in the States. "But every Montenegrin is a soldier, and ready to fight for his country whenever the call comes. So far as I know not a Montenegrin in the United States has refused to answer the call. There are about 25,000 of us in the States, men of all ages, women and children, and it is expected that about 5,000 will be mobilized here for the war." He said the Montenegrin, "it is a wonderful thing to think that the British Government is able to arrange for our mobilization under her flag on this continent, and later to send us forward to join our own armies in the battle for freedom."

THE FIGHTING INSTINCT.

The love of fight is in us all—
Why should it not be pray?
Since life evolved upon this ball
Have not the great o'ercome the small,
The strong, the weak alway?

Have not the ablest types survived
From every primal age?
And both what beasts and humans thrived
Who, by their greater strength, contrived
The fiercest war to wage?

The natural fighting instinct shows
In varying forms of might,
When aught seems ready to oppose
Or menaces what each creature knows,
To be its normal right.

Not till old evolution's plan
Is ended on this sphere—
Not till we've seen the end of man,
Whose term of life in brute began,
Will warfare's end be near!

BOTHA'S TRIUMPH.

The recent news of the surrender of all the remaining German forces in South Africa is not of high military importance, but has great dramatic significance and a wide suggestiveness. For one thing, it marks the extinction, undoubtedly for ever, of the German Colonial Empire. Kiao-Chau, the Pacific Islands, and now the vast stretch of territory in South Africa—that Africa for which so many have been lost to Germany. This was one of the great stakes which the Kaiser put on hazard when he decided upon a war into which Great Britain was certain to be drawn. The result was inevitable. Sea power would attend to that. After all the Kaiser's exhortations to Germany across the ocean, the whole colonial edifice, built up with such pains and at such cost, has now crumbled to the ground. The fatal end in South Africa may not cause so much of a sensation in the world, or provoke so many cries of vengeance, as did the expulsion of Germany from China by the Japanese, but it cannot fail to give to serious Germans food for melancholy thought.

It marks for them the frustration of many hopes. Besides the actual loss of the colony upon which Germany had expended so much treasure with not a little blood on the war with the Herrerot, there is the further, bitter reflection that this blow was dealt by the Boers, now loyal British subjects. What a change from the day when the Kaiser sent to Kruger his famously imprudent telegram! And to the German way of thinking, it would seem absolutely impossible, after the Boer war, that the Dutch burghers could have been found so soon, and in a world-wide convulsion imperilling the very life of the British Empire, fighting under the Union Jack. Germany was confident of a Boer revolt, the moment the present war broke out and England's hands were tied. There was, indeed, a weak and speedily quelled revolution, which the Germans were suspected of fomenting—just as they were going to have India aflame and Egypt in insurrection—but the wise and tested colonial policy of Great Britain, giving self-government to the Boers, had its wonderful vindication in the rallying to the Empire of the great body of the Dutch in South Africa. It is a Boer, Gen. Botha, who received the surrender of the Germans. In that fact alone there is a whole history. It has as well as an entire body of political morals.—New York Post.

FUTILE WAR PROPHECIES

Prophecies about the war abounded last August. To-day the prophet may be said with a good deal of confidence that no single positive and definite prediction has been verified—except the one that the war would last more than a year. It has been a year of surprises. Neither on land nor on sea has the progress of the struggle been what was anticipated. The military experts have been learning as they went on—and bloody lessons they have been. Not even today are they agreed concerning the decisive factors of the struggle. What will prove to be the winning weapon is still uncertain. Whether the submarine will send battleships to the junk-heap has not yet been determined. After eleven months of war such as the world never saw before, the clearest heads and most seasoned judgments are not to be trusted as to outcome. In war finance as well as in the actual clash of arms, nearly every forecast has been nullified. The result of caution and humility such as Lincoln breathed in his often-quoted words of March 4, 1865: "Neither party expected for the war the magnitude or the duration which it has attained."—New York Post.

Lightning Picked The Chickens

Lightning plays funny freaks sometimes. A. J. Lacey of Cairnborne has a steel clothes line connecting two trees. On Tuesday lightning struck the clothes line, passing down the tree, tearing the bark off the tree, killed a chicken and made a hole in the ground. The chicken was plucked as clean as one could do it by hand. Several feathers were also broken in the house.—Colborne Enterprise.

SYNOPSIS.

In her apartment at the Leland flats, daughter of Lord Ashleigh, is murdered and the Ashleigh diamond necklace stolen. The New York police place the case in the hands of Sanford Quest, keen and fearless the master criminologist of the day. Mr. Edwin Arnold, a friend of his own boyhood days, invents an electro-keleastic appliance whereby in connection with the crime, recovers the diamonds and arrests the murderer, Medford. Lenora's husband, though nearly trapped to his death in a tough tenement house with a woman in the worst. Lenora becomes one of Quest's proteges and he succeeds in getting her to testify at the theft of the skeleton of an age, of Lord Ashleigh. Mac-Gugal receives gifts on his way to prison. Setting of diamonds is mysteriously stolen from Mrs. Rheinhold's during a reception.

THE "POCKET WIRELESS."

CHAPTER VIII.

Mr. Sanford Quest sat in his favorite chair, his cigar inclined toward the left hand corner of his mouth, his attention riveted upon a small lustry man, which he was examining with keen eyes. He glanced across the room to where Lenora was bending over her desk.

"We've done it this time, young woman," he declared triumphantly. "It's all O. K., working like a little watch.

Lenora rose and came toward him. "Is that the pocket wireless?" she nodded.

"I've had Morrison out at Harlesden all the week and he sent me a note her. "I've sent him at least half a dozen messages from this easy chair and got the answers. How are you getting on with the code?"

"Not so badly for a stupid person," Lenora answered.

Laura, who had been busy with some papers at the further end of the room, came over and joined them.

"Say, it's a dandy little affair, that Mr. Quest!" she exclaimed. "I had to try with it, a day or so ago. Jim spoke to me from Fifth avenue."

"I've got it down to a whole now," Quest declared. "Equipped with this simple little device, you can speak to me from anywhere up to ten or a dozen miles."

Quest rose to his feet and moved restlessly about the room.

"Say, girls," he confessed, "this is the first time in my life I have been in a fix like this. I've cases on hand and nothing doing with either of them. Criminologist, indeed! Whose business is this?"

Quest had paused suddenly in front of an old sideboard which stood against the wall. Occupying a position upon it of some prominence was a small black box. The presence there seemed to him unfamiliar. Laura came over to his side and looked at it also in puzzled fashion.

"Never saw it before in my life, she answered.

Quest grunted.

"H'm! No one else has been in the room, and it hasn't been empty for more than five minutes," he remarked. "Well, let's see what's inside, anyway."

He lifted off the lid. There was nothing in the interior but a sheet of paper folded up. Quest unfolded it out with his hand. They all leaned over and read the following words, written in an obviously disguised hand:

You have embarked on a new study, sanford Quest. What characteristic efforts you most forcibly in connection with it? Imagination and genius. Search for where the skeleton is. Why not begin at the beginning?

The note was unsigned, but in the spot where a signature might have been there was a rough pen drawing of two hands, with fingers extended, talon fashion, menacingly, as though poised to strike at some unseen enemy. Quest, after their first moment of stupefaction, whistled softly.

"The hands!" he muttered.

"What hands?" Lenora asked.

"The hands that gripped Mrs. Rheinhold's throat," he replied. "I remember them. "Don't you remember? Hands without arms?"

There was another brief, almost stupefied silence. Then Laura broke into speech.

"What I want to know is," she demanded, "who brought the thing here?"

"A most daring exploit, anyway," Quest declared. "If we could answer your question, Laura, we could solve the whole riddle. We are up against something and somebody."

"The hand which placed that box there," Quest continued slowly, "is capable of even more wonderful things. We must be cautious. Hello!"

The door had opened. The professor stood upon the threshold.

"I trust that I have done right in coming up?" he inquired.

"Quite right, professor," Quest assured him. "They know well enough downstairs that I am always at home to you. Come in."

"I am so anxious to learn," the professor continued eagerly, "whether there is any news—of my skeleton."

"Not yet, professor, I am sorry to say," Quest replied. "Come in and shut the door."

"There is a young lady here," he said, "who caught me up upon the landing. She, too, I believe, wishes to see you."

He threw open the door and stood on one side. A young woman came a little hesitatingly into the room. Her face was plainly brushed back, and she wore the severe dress of the Salvation Army.

"You want to see me, young lady?" Quest asked.

She held out a book.

"My name is Miss Quigg," she said. "I want to ask you for a subscription to our church."

Quest frowned a little.

"Very well, Miss Quigg, you shall have a subscription. I am busy today, but call at the same hour tomorrow and my secretary shall have a check ready for you."

The girl smiled her gratitude. Then she glanced at his hand upon her arm as she passed.

"Young lady," he observed, "you seem very much in earnest about your work."

"It is only the people in earnest, sir," she answered, "who can do any good in the world. My work is worth being in earnest about."

"You compel my admiration. My most respectful admiration. May I, too, be permitted?"

He drew out a pocketbook and passed over toward her a little wad of notes.

"It is so kind of you," she murmured. "We never have any hesitation in accepting money. May I have your name?"

"It is not necessary," the professor answered, "but you can enter me," he added, as he held open the door for her, "as a friend—or would you prefer an pseudonym?"

A pseudonym, if you please," she begged. "We have many men who give us sums of money as friends. Anything will do."

The professor glanced around the room.

"What pseudonym shall I adopt?" he ruminated. "Shall I say that an oak sideboard gives you five hundred dollars Or a Chippendale sofa? Or?"

He looked very restless for a moment upon the little box, "a black box?"

The two girls from the other side of the table started Even Quest swung suddenly around. The professor, as though pleased with his fancy, nodded as his fingers played with the lid.

"Good, I will do very nicely," he decided "Put me down—'Black Box,' five hundred dollars."

The girl wrote out her book and began to write. The professor, with a little farewell bow, crossed the room toward Quest, who stepped toward the door.

"Let me see you out," she said to the girl pleasantly.

Lenora opened the door. Both girls stood there for a few seconds. Quest was standing, his head a little thrust forward. For a moment the quiet selfpossession of his features seemed to have deserted him. He seemed at a loss for words

"What do you want?" Lenora demanded.

I was waiting for my master," Craig explained.

"Why not downstairs?" Lenora asked suspiciously. "You did not come up with him."

"I am driving the professor in his automobile," Craig explained, "but I feared to me that if he were going to be long here I should have time to go and order another tire. It is of no consequence, though. I will go down and wait in the car."

Lenora stood at the top of the stairs and watched him disappear. Then she went thoughtfully back to her work. The professor and Quest were talking at the farther end of the room.

"I was in hopes, in great hopes," the professor admitted, "that you might have heard something. I promised to call at Mrs. Rheinhold's this afternoon."

Quest shook his head.

"There is nothing to report at present, Mr. Ashleigh," he announced.

"Dear me," the professor murmured, "this is very disappointing. Is there no clue, Mr. Quest—no clue at all?"

"Not a ghost of one," Quest acknowledged. "I am as far off solving the mystery of the disappearance of your skeleton and Mrs. Rheinhold's necklace as I have ever been."

The professor took a courteous leave of Lenora and Laura. Departing, he crossed the room to where Quest was seated.

"Mr. Quest," she asked, "do you believe in inspiration?"

"I attribute a large amount of my success," Quest replied, "to my profound belief in it."

"Then let me tell you," Lenora continued, "I have one, and a very strong one. Do you know that when I want to the door a few minutes ago the professor's servant, Craig, was there, listening?

"Inspector French has had his men watching Craig ever since the night of the robbery," Quest answered quietly. "What's that? Answer the telephone, Lenora."

Lenora obeyed.

"It's Inspector French," she announced "He wants to speak to you."

Quest nodded and held out his hand for the receiver.

"Hello, French!" he exclaimed "Anything fresh?"

"Nothing startling," was the answer "One of my men, though, who has been up Mayton avenue way, brought in something I found rather interesting this morning. I want you to come, round and see it."

"On right ahead and tell me about it," Quest invited.

"You know we've been shadowing Craig," the Inspector continued. "Not much lock up-till now. Fellow seems never to leave his master's side. We have had a couple of men up there, though, and one of them brought in a curious-looking thing he picked up just outside the back of the professor's grounds."

"What's the thing?" Quest asked.

"Well, I want you to see whether you agree with me," French went on. "If you can't come round, I'll come to you."

"No necessity," Quest replied. "We've got over little difficulties of that sort. Laura, just tack on the phototeleme," he added, holding the receiver over the mouthpiece for a moment. French. There that's right,' he added, as Laura, with deft fingers arranged the second to the assimilated mirror to the instrument. "Now, French, hold up the article just in front of the receiver. There, that's right. Hold it steady. We've got the focus of it now. Say, French, where did you say that was found?"

Just outside the professor's back gate," French grunted. "But you're not kidding me—"

"It's a finger from the professor's skeleton you've got there," Quest interrupted.

There was a long up the receiver • The: he turned toward his two assistants

"Another finger from the professor's skeleton, he announced. "It has been found just outside his grounds What do you suppose that means?"

"Craig," Lenora declared confidently.

"Craig on your life," Laura echoed "Say, Mr. Quest, I've got an idea," Quest nodded.

"Go right ahead with it."

"Didn't the butler at Mrs Rheinhold's say that Craig belonged to a doctor's club up town? I know the place well Let me sc and see if I can't join and pick up a little information about the man. He must have a night out sometimes. Let's find out what he does. How's that, eh?"

"Capital!" Quest agreed "Get along, Laura. And you, Lenora, don't forget to your tea. We'll take a ride towards Mayton avenue."

CHAPTER IX.

The exact spot where the bones of the missing skeleton was discovered, was easily located.. It was about twenty yards from a gate which led into the back part of the professor's grounds. Quest wasted very little time before arriving at a decision.

"The discovery of the bones so near the professor's home," he decided, "cannot be coincidence only It will waste no time out here, Lenora. We will search the grounds. 'Come on.

It was hard to know which way to turn. Every path was choked with tangled weeds and bushes. They wandered about almost aimlessly for nearly half an hour. Then Quest came with a sudden standstill. Lenora gripped his arm. They had both heard the same sound—a low, crooning cry, half plaintive, half angry.

"What's that?" he exclaimed.

Lenora still clung to his arm.

"I hate this place," she whispered, "it terrifies me. What are we looking for, Mr. Quest?"

"Can't say that I know exactly," the latter answered, "but I guess we'll find out where that cry came from. Quest seemed to me uncommonly like a human effort."

They had made their way up so far as the hedge, which they started for a few yards until they found an opening. Then Quest gave vent to a little exclamation. Immediately in front of them was a small hut, built apparently of sticks and bamboos, with a stronger framework poking. The sloping roof was grass-grown and entwined with rushes. The only aperture for a window was a queer little hole set quite close to the roof.

There was a rude-looking door, but Quest, on trying it, found it locked. They walked around the place, but found no other opening. All the time from inside they could hear queer scuffing sounds. Lenora's cheeks grew paler.

"Let us stay!" she murmured. "I don't think I want to see what's inside. Mr. Quest! Mr. Quest!"

She clung to his arm. They were opposite the little aperture which served as a window, and at the moment it suddenly framed the face of a creature, human in features, diabolical in expression.

"Say, that's some face!" he remarked. "I'd hate to spot it in a dark room. Lenora glanced around at its strange contents with an expression almost of awe.

A small motor car passed the window, driven by Craig. The professor descended. A few minutes later he entered the room He gazed from Quest to Lenora at first in blank surprise. Then he held out his hand.

"You have good news for me, my dear sir," he exclaimed, as he shook it. How unfortunate that I was not at home to receive you! Tell me—don't keep me in suspense, if you please—you have discovered my skeleton?"

"We have found the skeleton, Quest announced.

For a single moment the newcomer stood as though turned to stone.

"My skeleton found!" he cried. "Mr. Quest, I knew it. You are the greatest man alive. Now tell me quickly—I want to know everything, but this first of all. Where did you find the skeleton? Who was the thief?"

"We found the skeleton, professor," Quest replied, "within a hundred yards of this house."

The professor's mouth was wide open. He looked like a bewildered child. It was several seconds before he spoke.

"Within a hundred yards of this house? Then it wasn't stolen by one of my rivals?"

"I should say not," Quest admitted.

"Where? exactly did you find it?" the professor insisted.

"Inside it is in a hut," Quest said, "hidden in a piano box. I found there, also, a creature—a human being," I think you called it, "in a state of activity."

"Hidden in a piano box?" the professor repeated wonderingly. "Why, you mean in Hartoo's sleeping box, then?"

"If Mr. Hartoo is the gentleman who tried to club me, you are right," Quest admitted. "Mr. Ashleigh, before we go any further I must ask you for an explanation as to the presence of that piano box in your grounds."

The professor hesitated for a moment. Then he slowly crossed the room, opened the drawer of a small escritoire, and drew out a letter.

"You have heard, no doubt, William Raysmore, the president of the Royal society?" he asked.

Quest nodded.

"This letter is from him," the professor continued. "You had better read it."

The criminologist read it aloud. Lenora looked over his shoulder:

To Prof. Edgar Ashleigh, New York.

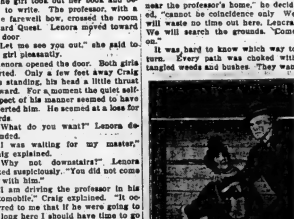
Dear Sir:—I have made my communication to the standing committee, but as yet no move. It fell to your lot to discover the skeleton of the kahirpoid, a new one thing, in its way, and needing only the discovery of the missing link to prove its theory the dark area. Now you tell it, if you can find the skeleton. Then it will be time to move. Yours truly, Wm. Raysmore. You have found that corollary. You have given me the missing link. You are in a position to give to the world a definite and logical explanation of the origin of man. Let me give you one word of warning, professor, before I write you a greater length. Be on the watch. Surround your secret well, lest the honor of your discovery should be stolen from you.

WILLIAM RAYSMORE.

The professor nodded deliberately as Quest finished the letter.

"Now, perhaps you can understand," he said, "why it was necessary to keep Hartoo absolutely hidden. In a month's time my papers will be ready. Then I shall electrify the world. I shall write not a new page but a new volume across the history of science. I shall—"

The door was suddenly thrown open.



"The Hut, Professor! The Hut is on Fire!"

"You need sleep no longer," Quest said. "Wake up and help yourself."

The effect of these words was instantaneous. Almost as he spoke, the creature crouched for a spring. There was wild hatred in its close-set eyes, the smear of something fiendlike in the contorted mouth. Quest slipped quickly through the door.

"Anyone may have that for a pet!" he remarked grimly. "Come, Lenora, there's a word or two to be said to the professor. There's something here will need a little explanation."

He lit a cigar as they struggled back along the path. Presently they reached the untidy-looking avenue, and a few minutes later arrived at the house.

Quest searched in vain for a bell They walked round the piazza. There were no signs of any human life. They came back to the front door. Quest tried the handle and found it open. They passed into the hall.

"Hospitable sort of place, anyway," he remarked. "We'll go in and wait, Lenora."

They found their way to the study, which seemed to be the only room in the room. Lenora glanced around at its strange contents with an expression almost of awe.

A small motor car passed the window, driven by Craig. The professor descended. A few minutes later he entered the room He gazed from Quest to Lenora at first in blank surprise. Then he held out his hand.

The door was suddenly thrown open.

Craig, equal to no longer the emotions contained, perfect self-control, with his face as one could of agony—

"The hut, professor! The hut is on fire! he cried.

His appearance on the threshold was like a flash. They heard him racing feet down the hall, and with a moment's hesitation they all followed. The professor led the way down a narrow path and never had men when they reached the little clearing in which the hut was situated. They came upon a strange and lurid spectacle. The place was a veritable mass of flame. The smell of kerosene was almost overpowering. In the midst of the leopard raged above the strange hut between the flames of the fire and the hearse, bass calling of anger or voice, at the sound of which the grass and even Quest shuddered. Then as they came, breathless, to a standstill, they saw a strange thing. Out of the fire, full in the glare of the flames, leaped the leopard with a mighty spring, leaped from the place and remained there, its claws clutching the monkeys followed but they came straight for the professor, wrinkling their black lips and showing their teeth as though trying to show him the scorched bodies. Almost at the same moment they saw the form of the man as he struggled to follow the animals. He fell backwards into the burning chasm.

The professor bade them farewell an hour later, on the steps of his house. He seemed suddenly to have aged.

"You have done your best, Mr. Quest," he said, "but fate has been strong. Almost I am inclined to laugh. Is quite true that the cunning of his foe may have made it possible for him to have stolen the skeleton as to have brought it back to its hiding place, but it was jealousy—cruel, fatal, foul jealousy which smeared the walls of that hut with kerosene and set light to it. The work of a lifetime, my dreams of scientific immortality, have vanished in those flames and I am left—a beggar. Good-by, and re-entered the house. Quest and Lenora made their way down the avenue in silence. Craig in the motor car was waiting for them, almost in silence. The latter glanced toward Lenora. She was pale

Our Boys

(Composed by Mrs. H. B. Burke, of Ivanhoe.)

Come, all young men of Canada
Arouse ye, one and all,
The principle invokes you,
Hark! listen to your call.

The Germans are united
In millions, stands and strong,
To crush the nations
Who oppose their hellish throng.

Our motherlands in trouble
Sister, brother, sire, your help implore,
But how brave men will the look of
Will still help her wield the sword.

The Kaiser thought us unprepared,
That England he could crush,
But our fair motherland declared,
"My boys, be most be crushed."

A line was sent to Gen. Sam,
Who did not pause his step,
But quickly our boys did send,
But we must fall in line.

Our mother's cause we must main
No matter what the cost,
We have could see her hearted rights
Be trampled in the dust."

Oh could the Kaiser see our men
As they go marching on,
With colors flying in the air,
His courage would be gone.

We've left our homes our native land
Our trust is in the Lord our God
And over we'll be yearns,
To stand aside and see our lads
All bravely and brave you know
Their country's cause our hearts are sad
As to the treat they go.

Mark what did you say!
Do they realize, do they know
What it means to be in the fray!
Yes and that's why they go.

Our God is God of love
And a God of battles too,
He ever looks down from above,
And will help our armies through;

Our boys have kissed wives and mothers
And have told them not to cry,
That there is another country
And they're not afraid to die.

Farewell, dear boys, "God bless you"
Add to your God be true.
Our prayers and our hearts are with you
And we trust He'll bring you through

But if on earth our meeting's over
And you return in arms no more
We'll meet you on the other shore
Where wars and battles all are o'er.

Poison in the Porridge

A curious case of poisoning occurred on Tuesday of last week at the summer home of Mr. J. H. Moore, Hideau Lake, but fortunately no fatalities resulted from it although the cause from such almost miraculous. Mr. Moore, his sister, Mrs. Moore-Miller and her son, Andrew, had just moved up to the island and had taken their man, Christopher Imeson, up to their room the plan for the noon-day meal after taking breakfast Tuesday morning they sat all taken very ill and from the symptoms they knew they had been poisoned. They then began several times an emetic and had been left on the island from last year, and poisoned to kill cats, had got mixed in with the raw supplies just taken up, and that the porridge for the breakfast had been made from the old meal. The three men had taken very heavily of the porridge and were made so sick that they threw off the poison, but Mrs. Miller's condition was alarming. A physician was sent for and worked with them all day to such good purpose that all were able to come home on the steamer Mohawk that evening. The three men were quite recovered but Mrs. Miller was in a critical condition and was taken up to Public Hospital. Fortunately the treatment succeeded and in a few days she had fully recovered.—Gananoque Reporter

CONTEST GRADUALLY NARROWS DOWN TO THE REAL WORKERS

Result of the Vote to Date in the Great Panama-Pacific Campaign District I. Still Maintains its Lead in the Grand Total—Remarkably Even Race in all Districts.

In all eight districts in The Ontario's Great Popularity Campaign there is a remarkably even race among the leaders. Today's vote shows some changes in the relative standing of the leaders. We are omitting from the list of candidates many who had shown no activity in their own behalf or whose friends had ceased to work for them. The group is gradually narrowing down to those who mean business, who are not afraid of a little honest work, who are not fickle-minded—here today and somewhere else tomorrow.

As we have stated several times before, we now repeat—it is the workers who will win every time.

And those who do win will receive better pay for their efforts than they ever received before. The eight tours that the Ontario presents to its readers free of cannot be purchased for less than $350.00 each. In addition we offer $200 in gold for the highest winners. The contest closes three weeks from today. Are such rewards worth working for? Surely the candidates will devote every spare minute to enable them to secure such magnificent rewards.

But cost in money does not altogether represent the real value of a tour to California such as we propose. Mr. D. V. Sinclair, who has just returned from a two months' tour to San Diego and San Francisco and who travelled by the same route as will be taken by The Ontario party speaks most enthusiastically about the magnificent scenery both going and coming. But those who go this year will have the opportunity of visiting two world's expositions—a privilege that they will never have again. The educational advantages of the 7000-mile tour we have arranged for them cost need not be enlarged upon. To visit the expositions alone has an educational value beyond computation.

Fortunately there are in each of the eight districts a select few who do appreciate the splendid opportunity that is being held out to them by the publishers of The Ontario. And these few workers, who have ambition and vision and a desire to succeed are obtaining results of which they may well be proud.

To all candidates we must again emphasize the importance of organizing your friends. In this way your own efforts become multiplied in effectiveness.

The result of the polling for those for whom returns have been received since Monday night, will be found below.

We would strongly advise all candidates to make returns regularly and see that their names are well to the top. Nothing succeeds like success. The people like to support those who support themselves.

The vote will be again published in Saturday's issue and on Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday thereafter.

Be sure to have sufficient votes in at each count to keep your total mounting up in an active manner all the way.

Mr. W. F. Kerr prosecuted and T. F. Hall defended the prisoner. He was committed for trial and comes up on Tuesday next.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

MOSQUITO FLEET BASE

Harwich Plays Important Part in Britain's Naval War Game

Tourists who know Harwich as the port of departure for the Hook of Holland would hardly recognize the famous harbor these days. For where the packet boats of the Great Eastern and Great Northern railways ply, there is gathered the new stationed low-lying, destroyer-looking, mosquito fleet, ever ready to sneak out under cover of darkness and raid the enemy's fleet base, while in the day time it darts further up the River Stour, bob comfortably at anchor, with their gasoline tanks filled to the brim, and torpedoes in their tubes, ready to attack "from the depths below," should the foe be detected.

This is the base for the British "mosquito fleet," and the sight of the low, plister-looking destroyers, torpedo boats and submarines lying in rows as straight as a billiard cue, is about as entertaining as the inspection of a surgeon's table of instruments.

The naval strategists in Whitehall have been charts of the North Sea, said, by means of models, know where every vessel is at any given moment, and an unprecedented straight to the smallest submarine. They decide upon an attack by the "mosquitoes" and the orders are wirelessed from the roof of the London government offices down to Harwich. A dull toils, call ing the sailors aboard. The rest is known until the newspapers announce a naval battle.

The very latest "destroyer" to join the ranks of the fleet now stationed at Harwich. These boats of nearly a thousand tons each, are driven by turbine driven, can jump off from the post half an hour after the order to miles steam is given and keep in any reasonable weather," continue at 27 knots for all their long journeys.

Young men, very young men, are in charge of these boats of the "mosquito fleet." Destipline is not, for rather cannot be, formal or ceremonious on these small floating masses of machinery. The lieutenant in command and the engineer officer are never out of sight, touch or hearing of the men whom they command.

The part I served in during the great war game between the British and German fleets is largely a flanking one. At the word "go" the flotilla is expected to shoot out her fastest destroyers and torpedo boats in search any of the craft of Admiral von Tirpitz that might attempt to pass down the North Sea into the English Channel.

To Make Pot As Fat.

This is the national French dish and is really delicious cooked at once in a large saucepan. Bone, roll up and tie with string a good half-pound of lean beef; put it into the saucepan with a bay leaf, two quarts of cold water and a little salt, and let it heat gradually. Prepare the vegetables as follows: Slice two onions, peeled, blanched and stuck with a clove; one small turnip, peeled, trimmed and quartered; one leek, washed, trimmed split and cut in lengths; two carrots and one turnips, scraped and quartered, and a tiny bunch of parsley.

When the pot boils skim it and add the vegetables with four peppercorns and three wholespice. When it nearly boils skim once more, then cover closely and simmer for about one hour and one-half hours. Remove the meat to a hot dish, pour a little of the broth over it, garnish with the vegetables and keep hot till wanted. Strain the broth, remove any fat and use the top with white kitchen paper. Make it hot again if necessary and serve in cups, with fried bread dice handed separately.

The Time He Went.

"Mamma," said Harold, "I made a bet with George."

"But, my son," said the mother sternly, "you know mamma always tells you not to bet, and it will serve you right if you lose."

"Oh, I bet my new rubbers against five marbles that you would give me a dime. You don't want me to lose my rubbers, do you?"—Lippincott's.

A Tangle.

The justice of the peace was just on the point of marrying the couple.

"Oh, before I begin," he said, "I must find out your names."

"Harrison," said the bridegroom.

"Sure," said the J. P. "as soon as I find out your names."

"Harrison," said the bridegroom.

"Yep," repeated the J. P., "but I must first know your full names."

"Will C. Harrison," said the groom.

"No," said the J. P.: "I will be blowed if I will."—Pennsylvania State Frock.

Cured by Suggestion.

"And you say that Jorkins was cured of an extremely bad case of insomnia by suggestion?"

"Yes, purely by suggestion. He's wife suggested that since he could not sleep he might as well sit up and hammer the baby. It worked like a charm."

All Through.

"Your friend appears to think that life has nothing more to teach him."

"Yes; he seems to imagine he is the only living specimen of the school of experience."—Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

Different and Better Clothes

The Two Piece Suit

This is the time of year when a man wants to wear as little as possible. If you wear one of our cool Two-Piece Suits, it's certain you won't "wear a worried look." But there are two considerations in a Two-Piece Suit which call for the most competent tailoring. In the first place, the coat must be so tailored as to obviate the need of a vest. In the second place, as the fabrics are extremely light in weight, the tailoring must be done with the greatest skill.

Fabrics of carefully selected Sun-Proof Serges, Woradeds, Homespuns, etc., etc.

It you'll step in and try on one of these cool Suits and then take a look in the mirror, you'll be surprised to see what a swell and comfortable looking fellow you are.

We've everything in wearables for a man's summer comfort.

Vi: Last Battle Fought on the Soil of Great Britain.

The last battle fought on the soil of Great Britain took place in the middle of the eighteenth century.

While George II. of England was engaged in the war of the Austrian succession Charles Edward, who was called the Young Pretender, a grandson of King James II. of England, landed in Scotland and made two attempts to obtain the throne of his ancestors. He was victorious in the battle of Falkirk, but the Duke of Cumberland, son of George II., having been recalled from the continent to take command of the king's forces, the Pretender was shortly defeated at Culloden moor, a plain in Scotland, four miles from Inverness. This was the last battle fought on the island of Great Britain and took place April 16, 1746, and it was also the last attempt on the part of the Stuart family to recover the throne of Great Britain.

Charles Edward Stuart escaped to France after he had wandered for five months in the highlands, pursued by his enemies. He died in Rome Jan. 30, 1788. The Duke of Cumberland gave no quarter. The wounded were all slain, and the pills of England were filled with prisoners, many of whom were executed. Among the latter number were Lords Barmerino, Kilmarnock and Lovat—Lovat being the last person who was beheaded in England.—Philadelphia Press.

Woman Who Make Living Desire.

Woman's sphere of work is changing principles adds tremendously to the cost of operating department stores, and places a needless burden upon every buyer. One of the large merchants of New York city is authority for the statement that 25 per cent of the articles sent out to charge patrons are returned, not occasionally, but habitually. We are not thinking of the woman who returns garments that have been worn or articles they have never been used. She belongs in a class by herself and demands special treatment. But the woman who orders goods sent home without considering whether she needs them or not ought to be amenable to reason.—Francis Fraz in Leslie's.

KING STATES HARD HIT.

Little Principality of Europe Has Suffered From War.

When San Marino, with its thirty-two square miles of territory in Northern Italy, declared war on Austria-Hungary and assumed the position of Italy that its thirty-nine officers and 950 soldiers desired nothing better than to march to Vienna in the van of a victorious Italian army. A public attention was drawn to the fact that many small peoples have been cast into the vortex of European maelstrom. Here and there upon the face of Europe these petty communities may be seen. If one looks very hard, but despite their size many of them have glorious traditions in their history and can point with pride to the days when which the large powers might well envy. Among the more interesting of these independent and semi-independent territories are Luxemburg, Monaco, Montenegro, the Isle of Man, the Isle of Herm and the smallest of republics, San Marino.

Each of these has sent men to war; all of them have suffered. Inhabitants of the Isle of Man, for instance, are reported to be in a state bordering on starvation, because the tourist traffic on which they have lived has been stopped, while Monte Carlo's mainstay, the late of Man, the Isle of Herm and the smallest of republics, San Marino.

Each of these has sent men to war; all of them have suffered. Inhabitants of the Isle of Man, for instance, are reported to be in a state bordering on starvation, because the tourist traffic on which they have lived has been stopped, while Monte Carlo's mainstay, the late of Man, the Isle of Herm and the smallest of republics, San Marino.

San Marino has a population of about nine thousand five hundred people, and the entire of the tiny republic into the war is in reality of great assistance to Italy, despite the limited size of its army. Had San Marino declared its neutrality it would have afforded a haven for Austrian sympathizers, who would flow over Italian territory once they had established in the republic and claimed immunity from capture. Curiously enough, San Marino, it is said, has been in a state of war with Austria for almost half a century, ever since the Italians and Austrians in 1865 fought with each other. The republic never ratified the peace made at the time.

The Grand Duchy of Luxemburg, southeast of Belgium, felt the iron heel of the German invader at the first outbreak of the present war. The army of the Grand Duke consists of 150 gentlemen volunteers, while the Council consists of eleven members.

With the exception of San Marino and Monaco, the smallest independent state in Europe is Liechtenstein. The little principality lies south of Lake Constance and extends eastward the right bank of the Rhine, opposite Swiss territory. It covers about sixty-one square miles and has a population of 9,427 people.

Monaco, in southeastern France, is the smallest of the sovereign principalities of Europe. It has an area of about eight square miles and its population is more than 15,000. The prince is an absolute ruler, and has no Parliament.

Comparisons Are Odious.

"Oh, dear!" sighed a lady on her return from a fashionable reception, "I have made such a terrible blunder! Lady X. introduced me to an artist, and, trying to be clever, I commenced to rave to the poor man about—that it is impossible for me to describe. I would draw faces as well or less like his own. This artist disagreed very politely, but I wouldn't give in and told him his own paintings proved it. I have discovered since that I have, nothing but pigs and sheep!"—London Tatler.

Soldiers' Steps.

Soldiers are marching across Europe, but they do not keep step. They vary both in the length of the step and the rapidity of their pace. A Russian infantry step is 31 1-2 inches, the longest of all the steps Germany keeps step with Switzerland, both each 30 inches, while 29 inches is the pace in the armies of Italy, France and Austria. The Russians take the shortest step, 27 1-2 inches, and only do 112 in a minute.

A Precaution.

Husband (going to his rich uncle's funeral)—Put a couple of large blackberries into my pocket, dear. The old gentleman promised to leave me 150,000, and I shall want to shed some tears for appearance.

Wife—But suppose when the will is read you find he hasn't left you anything?

Husband—In that case you can better put in three.—London Mail.

RUSE APED GERMAN SNIPER.

Pte. Alfred Collier Had an Exciting Experience.

Pte. Alf. Collier, of the 4th 6th Battalion, writes to relatives an interesting account of an escape from German snipers. He says:

"On the morning of the 13th of May I volunteered to get some wire, having a dozen bottles I started out, but did not get far when a German sharp-shooter got me in the muscle of the left arm, tractering the bone and smashing me on my back. I lay still, knowing as not if he would fire again, and presently saw him creeping towards me. I turned on my head and my heels, and with my right hand I began digging into a ditch, lunging on my back in about two feet of the dirtiest and filthiest smelling and darkling water I ever got into, for I got a good mouthful when I landed in it.

"I made my way along the ditch about twenty feet and crawled into the grass. Then bullets came in quite thick and fast. I go, his again just above the left hip, but I kept right on going with one hand dragging on the ground and very painful. The grass was about three feet high and pretty fair cover.

"Well, I kept traveling all directions and finally lost my man; then I lay for one hour and bled my arm up a bit and rested for an hour or so. By this time I had got about half way between the two lines of trenches and our own bullets, and they were whizzing and singing merrily along over my head in hundreds. You can bet I was just about seventy-five yards from either of the trenches, and some shots were really too close for comfort. Well, I struck a shell hole and stayed there, for if I showed myself the bullets started coming my way thick and fast.

On crawling in when it got dark, but I was tired and got dozy along, and some of the enemy's snipers and bullets came quite close to me this morning, so I had to stay out all the next day, but I was in a different spot each night, and when our guns are going to leave the trenches I yelled at them to tell our men in the trenches I was coming, not to fire, and you can take my word for it I made one of the fastest moves I ever made. I got behind our trench, and I was all in.

"An Army Service Corps man bandaged my arm and got it in splints and in a sling, and we started off for the dressing-room station, where we got there. I found my clothes were full of holes and my cap was the same to pieces, bullet holes all the top of the cap on the edge and tore it straight across, and several other holes besides that. I went to the hospital in France, and from there on to another train, then on a hospital ship, and landed in Kingland at Southampton, and got another hospital train and came to Liverpool.

"We got a great reception in England, cheering and giving us all kinds of things. I was bad as many others given me as I can smoke in the next month, and the nurses are as kind and as nice as you could wish for."

Private Collier, who is 27 years old and single, was born at Stratford, Ont., where he was educated. He was in the first battalion before going to the front. His mother lives at Haileybury, Ont.

The Lonely Battery.

Yet another great feat can to be added to the many already performed by the Royal Field Artillery, the latest hero's crown for which is awarded to the 15th battery. On November 11th, when the Prussian Guard opposed the British, the batteries concentrated their guns on the 15th battery. Lieutenant-Colonel says that suddenly he found himself alone, with the exception of two or three signalling men. A number of guns had been "knocked out," and the remainder were silenced by the fire of the enemy. But the battery stuck to their guns and held on till supporting infantry came and threw the enemy back. Then it was that every man who could sit down the line that they had won their position. Of the 7,500 Prussian Guards only fifty were left alive, and those were wounded.

To Save the Non-Com.

The second in command of Lieutenant H. E. Hancock of the 1st Devonshires, is dead a sad one. On October 25rd he left his trenches to go through the German guns were beginning forth a ball of fire, and going back some sixty yards, over absolutely bare ground, picked up Corporal Warren, and ran back again whilst coming up with a party of reinforcements, and carried the non-commissioned officer to the cover of a haystack. The lieutenant also returned to his trench, only to be killed later in action.

"Stand Solid!"

"The captain said, 'Get up, men; stand solid!' We all stood about six deep. Then we gave them the surprise of their lives. We could just see a black mass in front of our trenches, and we let out for all we were worth. We were like devils possessed. I could feel my heart jumping, and trembling still. Not a German got his foot in the trench. They were mown down like rabbits, and to coup them we gave them five rounds rapid."—Private D. Hamilton, Royal Scots.

A Hero Indeed.

"Then I got hit, I couldn't say how long I lay there, but a chum of mine, Tommy Quickie, under a perfect hail of bullets and shells, dragged me to safety, and said, 'Cheer up, Smiler, here's a rag. I'm going back for dandy' (his other chum). He never got there. Poor Tommy got a piece of shell, and was buried the same night. If ever a hero lived he was one."—Sergeant J. Hoste, 2nd Battalion, King's Royal Rifles.

Busy Trenton

THIS latest news of the town and surrounding neighborhood is given in condensed form for busy readers.

TRENTON, July 13—In our account of the Old Settlers' Field Day celebration, which of course is out of time and was written hurriedly, we omitted with that description Mr. Conby, the donor of the Middleboro cup, which was held overnight and is now on the fireplace mantel. Two other omissions were made which we may as well claim being that the fine Robert Weddell cup offered for the best appearing family was won by the Brigadier lodge; and the other that the Trenton Fire Brigade, on short notice, joined in the parade, thereby adding materially to the fine display.

Geoff Seriff, Mark Thomas, dentist, and myself left on the Dominion Limited on Tuesday with a few accommodations have now been completed for the trip to Toronto.

CANADA TO GREAT BRITAIN.

An original poem by Alice Frost McDavitt, Foxboro, Ont.

In splendid isolation,
The isles of Britain stand,
Around the wild gulls flying,
The seas surround her land.
Her ships go from her harbors,
To every port of earth,
Her commerce and her merchantmen
Are proven things of worth.

Oh! Royal Isles of Britain,
Washed by the chanconing waves,
Beyond your cliffs are scattered
Deep, deep your foemen's graves.
You've stood the shocks of battles,
And God kept well His storms;
As ever over Israel
Are spread His mighty arms.

Begirt by seas o'er lapping
The waves do ever call,
Your sons have answering, wandered
From out and daily hall,
And learning New World's methods,
Have formed new ties that bind,
And Britain's sons their descendants
Though New World's friends be kind.

And Britain's sons are steadfast,
No German hand shall rule,
The Royal Isles of Britain
The British sons shall foil
The deep-laid plans of statesmen,
From William's tax-ruled sod;
With Austria's haughty people
Shall call—in vain, for God.

To aid their limp-led soldiers,
To the Great Britain's pride,
To float their flags o'er Belgium;
And our Colonies deride.
For we are one with Britain,
Whose sandid isles afar;
We—Britain's sons are British,
To us those isles are dear.

Our manhood has been offered,
Our mothers urge their sons
To grapple with the foe-men,
Till crushed shall be the Hun.
And to the God of battles,
Who has aided us of yore,
We humbly pray thee—for freedom,
Lead us, as oft before.

And when our foes are conquered,
Teach us to wisely guide,
Let not the aliens fill our land,
Beneath our banners bide.
To print their barbarous schisms,
Their Anarchism spread,
But 'neath the stately maple
May our children first be fed.

Let not our own go hungry,
Train all to honest work,
And may our children boldly scorn
The rich and poor—who shirk.
May the people all go forward
Who England's language speak;
And ever kneel to reverence
Thy Spirit—Lord—to seek.

Austro-German Allies Have Begun a Tremendous Attack on Russian Lines

Conflict Extends From the Baltic to Bukowina Along 800 Mile Front--Russians Giving Ground in Galicia But Hold Their Own Elsewhere--South Wales Coal Strike Grows More Serious--80,000 Germans Leave For Drive on Calais--French Regain Important Strategic Hill in the Argonne--Berlin Press Jubilant Over Austrian Note to U. S.

AUSTRO-GERMANS SMITING HARD ON RUSSIAN FRONT.

PETROGRAD, July 16.—The War Office today admitted that on both wings of the 800-mile battle front reaching from the Baltic to Bukowina, Russia's enemies reinforced by fresh troops are striking hard. In the extreme north in the Shavli and Riga region along the Baltic, the Germans thus far have been checked by Cossack regiments. Further south in Poland the Czar's armies have been forced to evacuate some trenches, and in southeast Galicia they have given ground before heavy attacks by the Austrians.

TEN LOSE THEIR LIVES BY SINKING OF TRAWLER.

CALAIS, July 16.—Ten of the crew of the French trawler Neipert lost their lives when the vessel was mined and sunk off this port yesterday.

GERMAN SUB. SUNK IN BLACK SEA.

LONDON, July 16.—A despatch from Varna, a Bulgarian port on the Black Sea, that the German submarine U-51 which had been credited with the torpedoing of the British battleship "Majestic" in the Dardanelles recently has been sunk by a Russian warship in the Black Sea.

IMPORTANT CAPTURE IN THE ARGONNE.

PARIS, July 16.—Hill No. 285 in the forest of Argonne which was stormed by the Germans early this week has been recaptured by the French forces according to this afternoon's statement of the French war department.

GERMANY SAID TO BE MAKING TENTATIVE PEACE PROPOSALS.

LONDON, July 16.—The Financial News today displays with great prominence reports from quarters in close touch with German sources of information that Germany is making "tentative peace proposals" through the United States.

GERMANS JUBILANT OVER AUSTRIAN NOTE.

BERLIN, July 16.—The Austrian note to the United States has been enthusiastically greeted by the Berlin press which says it is evidence of the loyalty of a true ally. The general opinion expressed is that the note sweeps away side issues such as the submarine war and the sinking of the Lusitania and goes straight at the heart of the problem, the huge export of war supplies to the enemies of Austria and Germany.

TWO TURKISH FORTIFIED LINES CAPTURED AT DARDANELLES.

LONDON, July 16.—The capture of two strongly fortified Turkish lines stretching across the entire allied front at the Gallipoli Peninsula, at the Dardanelles, is reported by the British official press bureau. The total advance was around a quarter of a mile, but its importance must not be merely measured by the actual ground traversed, it is pointed out by observers. The Turkish resistance has diminished in vigor and not nearly so much difficulty was experienced in making the advance. Only a small section of the line, about 300 yards in extent, still remains in the hands of the Turks. The French have now pushed their extreme right to the mouth of Kereves Dere, where it empties into the sea. Only in one case, where the British right had advanced too far, did a Turkish counter-attack temporarily succeed, and the success was only short lived, for the British naval division promptly regained the trenches.

Counter-attacks of the Turks the following night were without success.

LAST RESERVES CALLED OUT BY GERMANY.

ZURICH, July 16.—It is becoming more clear that Germany has now called up her last reserves, and that every available man is being sent to the fighting line. Germans of 45 years of age residing in Switzerland have now been called to the colors. The most typical case is that of a German of 42 years residing in Basle, who, never having been a soldier, was called up a month ago. A few days ago the family received a letter from the Russian frontier, where the man had been sent after a fortnight's military training.

Hardly anyone is refused by the doctors. A German in Zurich who had lost four toes on his left foot was declared fit for service. Such men are utilized to guard the lines of communication, which liberates the more robust men for service at the front. Germany has every available man in uniform, and can no longer make good the wastage. Everything now depends on a last desperate effort to burst through the allies' lines which is being prepared and expected to take place before the end of the month.

Germanic Allies Would Coerce U.S.

WASHINGTON, July 16.—The United States probably will send within another fortnight a reply to the note recently received from the Austro-Hungarian government which contended that the extensive shipments of war supplies from this country to the allies was "not in consonance with the definition of neutrality."

Unofficially word came today that Turkey would follow Germany and Austria in making representations on this subject, and should a note from the Ottoman government arrive, officials would delay the sending of their answer so as to simultaneously inform the Germanic allies of the unalterable view of the United States on arms shipments.

While Germany has admitted in diplomatic correspondence with the United States the legal right of individuals in a neutral country to sell munitions to belligerents some emphasis was placed on the super-profits was placed on the supernormal growth of American industries for the manufacture of arms and explosives.

In the Austrian note, extracts of which have appeared in despatches from Amsterdam, this idea is developed almost entirely to the exclusion of the legal question involved. It points out that the American government would be entitled to prohibit the export of war material "if the trade in contraband takes the form of dimensions whereby the neutrality of the country will be endangered."

Sir James Aikens Accepts Conservative Leadership

WINNIPEG, July 16.—Sir James Aikens, K.C., M.P., announced in the Convention of Manitoba Conservatives yesterday afternoon that he accepted the leadership of the party in the province. He did this, he said, because the call has come to him and the responsibility was upon the convention. He hoped to relieve himself of some of his responsibilities instead of taking on new burdens, but he would take up the fight.

Sir James Aikens was exceedingly popular with the delegates who cheered him with great vigor.

Vice-Chairman Willis of the convention predicted that Sir James would be premier of Manitoba without a doubt.

"The whole thing," he said, "is to select a man that people will follow."

"Our chairman has all the qualities which fit him pre-eminently for the leadership of our party," said James Bowman, of Dauphin, who seconded Sir James' name. He characterized Sir James as possessed of honesty, integrity, cleanliness and ability.

Mr. Coleman, of Brandon said he believed, with Sir James as leader, the Conservative party would go back into power.

The resolution was carried with an outburst of cheers.

Italy Mounting Artillery Along the Isonzo Front

ROME, July 16.—The Giornal d'Italia commenting this evening on the fact that the situation on the front remains unchanged, points out that he lull is due to delay caused while heavy Italian artillery is being mounted on important and long-standing positions beyond the Isonzo. As soon as this work is completed, the paper says, the Italian advance will be rapid.

The boyish Crown Prince motored to the railway station today to meet an incoming train of wounded soldiers from the front. He personally directed that a number of the men be placed in his car while he himself kept a seat and chatted affably with the men as they drove to a hospital.

BRITAIN WILL RESTRICT HER EXPORTS OF COTTON.

LONDON, July 16.—The British Government hopes very shortly to limit the export of cotton to neutral countries to the precise amount of actual need.

The Marquis of Crewe, Lord President of the Council, and Liberal leader in the House of Lords, made an announcement to this effect in the upper house yesterday afternoon.

GREAT FORCE FOR NEW DRIVE ON CALAIS.

LONDON, July 16.—Eight thousand Germans and numerous guns left Aix-la-Chapelle on Wednesday night and Thursday morning bound for the Yser apparently for a new drive on Calais says a Rotterdam despatch to the Daily Mail.

COAL STRIKE BECOMING MORE SERIOUS.

CARDIFF, July 16.—The South Wales coal strike grew more serious today. With the exception of about five hundred men composing half the staff of the Albion colliery, the scattering groups who remained in the pits yesterday joined the strikers today. All the coal mines in South Wales from which comes the coal for the British Navy have suspended operations.

HUNS FEAR BALKAN NATIONS WILL GO AGAINST THEM.

ROTTERDAM, July 16.—Berlin reports indicate a growing fear of the final attitude of the Balkan States, where matters are approaching a climax. Prominent German papers declare the Allies' success in the Dardanelles will decide the war.

HOW GERMANY PREPARED.

"The German has spent quite as much energy in the last forty-five years preparing for war as we have in convincing ourselves that wars should not be prepared for. (Hear, Hear). He started this war with a magnificent equipment which took time and heavy taxation to get together. That equipment we have had to face for the last ten months. We have had to face more. The Germans went into this war with a mind which had been carefully trained out of the idea of every moral sense or obligation—private, public, or international. He does not recognize the existence of any kind [illegible] of all those he has [illegible] war against combatants or [illegible] men, women and children. He has [illegible] from his own point of view [illegible]. All mankind bears witness today that there is no crime, no cruelty, no abomination that the mind of man can conceive, which the German has not perpetrated, is not perpetrating, and will not perpetrate if he is allowed to go on. These horrors and perversions were not invented by him on the spur of the moment. They were arranged beforehand—(hear hear)—their outlines are laid down in the German War Book. They are part of the system in which Germany has been scientifically trained. It is the essence of that system to make such a hell of the countries where her armies set foot that any terms she may offer will seem like Heaven to the people whose bodies she has defiled and whose minds she has broken of all purpose and intention. (Hear, hear). In the face of these facts it is folly for any fit man to waste one minute in talking about what he would do if our system of recruiting were changed, or to wait on, as some men are waiting, in the hope of compulsion being introduced. (Cheers). We shall not be saved by argument. We shall most certainly not be saved by hanging on to our private jobs and businesses. Our own strength and our own will alone can save us. If these fail the alternative for us is robbery, rape [illegible] starvation, as a prelude to slavery. Nor need we expect any miracle to save us. So long as an unbroken Germany exists, so long will life on this planet be intolerable not only for us and for our Allies, but for all humanity. And humanity knows it. At present six European nations are bearing the burden of the war. There is a fringe of shivering neutrals almost under the German guns who look out of their front doors and see, as they were meant to see, what has been done to Belgium, the German-guaranteed neutral."—From a speech delivered by Rudyard Kipling at a recruiting meeting at Southport, Lancashire.

THE SOLDIER'S PSYCHOLOGY.

An interesting account of the way in which the human organization reacts against the shock of war is contained in an article in an Italian paper, reviewed in the Manchester Guardian. The writer, Signor Ragazzoni, was able to talk with a number of French wounded, and the answers they gave to his questions were vivid and clear (not too suspiciously so), and explain how more or less highly developed men can tolerate conditions against which in normal circumstances their reason, their whole habit, would mechanically rebel.

It is a matter of hypnotisation—"one rushes forward, runs, stumbles, rises, fires, as if in a dream"—time and space lose all proportion, and "one ceases to feel oneself as a personality, one is a mere fragment, a molecule in a shapeless, writhing mass." To this hypnotisation material facts contribute in no small degree. Thus we are told that the noise of battle produced on many the same effect as chloroform. On soldier declared that in the midst of a furious hand-to-hand struggle he felt he had emerged from his body and could see himself quite detachedly moving and striking.

In this hypnotic mood there can be no question of fear or courage, but occasionally the normal self intrudes upon the exalted one in the heat of battle, and a feeling of overwhelming terror may be the result. An instance of this is the story of the scouting party which came under shell-fire, lost one of its number, and fled in panic to an abandoned hut nearby, where they remained cowering till a sudden odd, inconsequential phrase released them from fear. After the battle, of course, reason and the emotions become active again as usual, and one stands aghast at what has happened and what one has seen.

The psychology of war, as the Manchester Guardian remarks, has never been systematically investigated so far, but there is a great deal to be learnt in a discussion of war, and the possibility of abolishing war cannot move along political lines only, but must take into consideration the ultimate factor—the individual.

THE WAR MACHINE.

A very significant passage from an article by Mr. John Buchan, the Scotch novelist, who has been visiting the front at Ypres is worth quoting:

"Any man who journeys from the base to the actual front must be impressed," he writes, "with the immense and complex mechanism of modern armies. At first it seems like a gigantic business concern, a sort of magnified combine. Fifty miles off we are manufacturing on a colossal scale, and men are suffering from industrial ailments as they suffer in dangerous trades at home. There are more mechanics than in Sheffield, more transport workers than in Newcastle. But all this mechanism seems to [illegible] to resemble a series of pyramids which taper [illegible] as they near the front. [illegible] hospitals and convalescent [illegible] last of all the advanced and regimental dressing [illegible] [illegible] arrows."

We are constantly [illegible] about the daring and skill of the German submarines, but we hear very little [illegible] of the British under-sea boats. And yet nothing that the Germans have done is to be compared with the brilliant exploit of the British submarine which stole into the [illegible] the mines and patrol craft of the enemy, and torpedoed a German battleship. This and the feat of the British submarine which penetrated the Dardanelles, sank several ships in the Sea of Marmora and created consternation in Constantinople itself, will rank as among the most brilliant naval achievements of the war.

GERMANY.

O land of music and of dream,
Your songs are dead!
O morning-rose, O twilight-gleam,
Forever fled!
Now, through your thunder-cloud of wrath,
We see but frenzy's aftermath—
Stark ruin following every path
Your legions tread.

Was this your dream—a baleful light
In stormy space?
Your soul—a threatening shape of blight,
With hate-wrung face?
What madness moves you, to rejoice
In women's woe, in terror's voice?
Is this the music of your choice,
Your song of grace?

Now from your shattered flutes we hear
A long, harsh cry,
The note of passion and of fear,
That will not die;
And ever, on the desolate sea,
Your shamed and haunted ships must flee
Child-faces, floating silently
Under God's sky.

GERMANY'S NAVAL STRENGTH

The present strength of the German fleet in its state of inactivity in the Kiel Canal, is being referred to of late by the press of the Allied and neutral nations. While it is at all times kept in a state of preparedness it is also admitted that recent additions of new battleships have been made, which will more than make up it is claimed, for the naval losses sustained since war was declared.

Thanks to the efficiency of the British navy, and its great superiority over that of the enemy, little trouble may be expected from the latter. Germany's ships are securely bottled up, and even should they venture out and give battle, are no match for the ships of the Allied fleets.

The Liverpool Journal of Commerce believes that the German [illegible] likely to fight when the [illegible]

[illegible] worthy [illegible] The [illegible] Austrian [illegible] Without an ample supply of cotton there could be no German gun-cotton.

Cotton does not grow in Germany and cannot be manufactured chemically there. Every ounce that she fires away in killing or maiming the British troops and their Allies has to reach her by sea. If her supply of cotton were cut off she would be most gravely embarrassed. Even supposing she could devise a new powder, to change explosives in the midst of a great war is a matter of tremendous difficulty and peril.

Now the amazing fact is that Great Britain has not stopped Germany from getting cotton abroad. There is one sure way of cutting off her supply. It is to proclaim cotton contraband or liable to seizure by the British and Allied cruisers. We have not done that, though it ought to have been done in the first week of the war—London (Eng.) Letter Written 15 Years Ago Delivered Last Week

TORONTO, July 15—To receive an envelope that had been stamped and addressed for fifteen years, through the lungs of two British guardsmen, waiting to be forwarded to the Exhibition, is the unique experience of Dr. Orr, Manager of the Canadian National Exhibition.

The novel epistle, carrying a stamp with the late Queen Victoria's head, came in yesterday from a gentleman living in Eastern Ontario. For some years he was a regular exhibitor at the Fair, but for some unexplained reason he developed a grouch back in 1900.

At the moment years ago when he decided that the fair was not being run to suit his ideas he had his entry ready for mailing with the stamp affixed to the envelope and had the address written in a fine, bold hand. He put the envelope aside, tore up the entry form and neither soul, himself nor any but his vestile for exhibition that year.

Nor the next, nor the next, nor at any time since, though it would appear from the tone of his belated communication just received that he several times was on the point of forgiving and forgetting. But each time his prejudice apparently proved too strong and he replaced the letter in its resting place.

Now, however, he appears to have become fully convinced that the fair was not altogether to blame and feeling that there is no room for fighting at home when so much of it is going on at the front, he has sent along a few words of approval of the patriotic nature of the fair in 1915 and assures the officials that after a lapse of a decade and a half he has again become friend and patron of the Canadian National Exhibition.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment, by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

Late Alexander Weatherson

In the death of Alexander Weatherson, ex-reeve of Percy Township on Saturday last, a very capable, worthy and outstanding figure made an all too early blank in the home, the community and these United Counties. At the age of forty-three years the deceased had completed his course and accomplished much in the betterment and development of the country. Born of Scotch parentage "Sandy" as we all knew him was a true son of the heather and his knowledge of the songs and poetry of Scotland was only equalled by his love of the lore of the mountain and glen. His feet became restless and his lips responded whenever instrument land or voice struck the strains of Bonnie Scotia.

Having acquired a good education, and added to that unusual natural ability. Our mutual friend was always conspicuous and active in any place or gathering and his fairmindedness and precision were never laid aside. Sandy Weatherson was a prince among men, as his minister, Rev. Mr. McDonald of Warkworth Presbyterian remarked, as we stood in the silence of the flower laden grave as the throng of friends were leaving the cemetery. A prince indeed he was, one who could be trusted at all times, whose nobility and large heartedness will linger long in hundreds of hearts and minds as an incentive to true service to home, country and God.

Educational affairs ever found in him a strong supporter and the reputation and splendid results shown by Warkworth School evidenced fully Mr. Weatherson's watchful interest. As Councillor and Reeve of his home township and at the Counties Board he was always a faithful servant and leader and in his church affiliation and duties he did all with a single eye to the general advancement. He did "his bit" and did it well, and his book being now closed, he has to his credit "well done, good and faithful servant." He was a member of the Sons of Scotland, the Masonic and I.O.O.F. Orders, each of whom laid inspiring tributes of flowers upon the casket, as did the bereaved brothers and sisters and other sorrowing friends.—Port Hope Guide

At present the most interesting unit in Barriefield camp is the 59th Battalion which is now going through the progress of organization. To organize a battalion of 1,134 men is a big job to say the least, but so far Lieut.-Col H. J. Dawson has been highly successful. In the selection of officers he chose only those who to his personal knowledge could make soldiers.

The number of men in the battalion is steadily growing and it will be a very short time before the announcement is made that the 59th Battalion is up to full strength. There have been cries through the country that the men are not volunteering fast enough. In this division, however, there has been a steady arrival every day of recruits for the 59th.

Men are throwing up positions which bring them in all kinds of money to join this battalion, not as officers but as privates. It is common when the question as to the former occupation of a recruit is asked to receive the statement that he was a merchant, commercial traveller, bank clerk, or of some other responsible position.

Dean Connell has received notification from Lieut.-Col. F. Etherington that Miss Bertha Willoughby, formerly superintendent of nurses in Kingston General Hospital, has been appointed matron of the Queen's Stationary Hospital to the established shortly in France.

Miss Willoughby has had six months' experience already in a Canadian hospital in France, and is splendidly qualified.

The four additional officers appointed to the Queen's Stationary Hospital, and who will leave in a few days, are Lieut.-Col. H. B. Duff Bonnetty; Major Edward Kidd, Trenton; Lieut. Carl Hollis, Bermuda now at Barriefield Camp, and Lieut. F. X. O'Connor, Kingston, at present in England with the first contingent of the hospital. Dean Connell has more volunteers for the reinforcements than he can accept.

All the officers of the Queen's Hospital now in England, and who had been divided among various hospitals through the country, have been recalled, and are now near Folkestone, where they have a large hospital under canvas, with about 250 patients. Lieut.-Col. Etherington expects to take his corps to France within a fortnight.

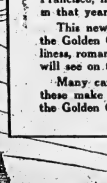
To The Golden Gate in 1915



IS THERE IN ALL THE WORLD ANOTHER SUCH SPOT as the Golden Gate in romance and attraction? Long before gold was discovered in California the Golden Gate had been named and was the haven craved by hundreds of intrepid navigators who had wearily voyaged around the Horn, seeking California's hides and timber. The discovery of gold made it the most talked of spot in the world—the magic gateway to incalculable wealth—the spot above all others to which the eyes of voyagers from all the seas were turned with longing.

In 1915 it will possess an emphasized interest for thousands upon thousands. For, just within the Golden Gate on the shores of the beautiful blue bay of San Francisco, lies the site of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition—the Mecca in that year for all the world.

This newspaper will send a party of young women to the great exposition at the Golden Gate. It is probable that the earth does not hold more of varied loveliness, romantic charm and thrilling interest than these young women, our guests, will see on this trip.

Many candidates have been nominated to go in our party. If you are one of these make sure of your election. Be one of those who, at our expense, will see the Golden Gate and all the beauties that lie within it.

Double Drowning Tragedy at Deseronto Last Evening

Mrs. Dr. Madden, Kingston and Miss Bartley, Deseronto, Suddenly Disappeared While Bathing at Foresters' Island--One of Rescuers Had Narrow Escape--First Aid Fails.

Special to The Ontario.

DESERONTO, July 16th, 1915—This town was thrown into a sensation shortly after seven o'clock last evening when news arrived that two prominent young ladies had been drowned at Foresters' Island, which is just opposite Deseronto. The tragedy occurred about seven o'clock. Mrs. (Dr.) Owen Madden of Kingston and Miss Mac Bartley of Deseronto, were with others bathing near the shore of the island. Suddenly these two ladies disappeared. Soon they were missed and boats were entertained that they had gone beyond their depth and perhaps drowned. Their friends at once began diving in the hope of recovering them. Little time was lost, the bodies were soon recovered but life was extinct. Dr. J. Newton and Dr. E. S. Vandervoort of Deseronto who were called were early on the scene and assisted by Dr. Madden, husband of one of the victims, made every effort possible to restore vitality but without results. In the work of rescue Mr. Alfred Lee of Deseronto had a very narrow escape. He dove repeatedly after the bodies but did not succeed in locating them. By coming in contact with the bottom, Mr. Lee received severe injuries on the head rendering him unconscious. Mr. Myers' young daughter swam after him and saved his life.

The double tragedy has cast a gloom over the town. It is the first water accident that has marred the holiday season.

There will not be an inquest, said Crown Attorney F. J. M. Anderson this morning.

Mrs. (Dr.) Madden was a bride of only two months. The mother of Miss Bartley was visiting at Corbyville and had to be summoned home at once.

Neither of the victims could swim.

ABSINTHE CAUSED HIS DOWNFALL

McGregor Says it was Bright Lights and Absinthe

Allan F. McGregor, 3rd Field Artillery Battery, C.E.F., who deserted from Salisbury Plains, after having fraudulently cashed cheques to the extent of hundreds of dollars, is in the cells at Tete de Pont barracks, Kingston.

When volunteers were called for last year, McGregor, whose home is in Brockville, joined the 3rd Field Battery, and went overseas with the detachment. He proved to be a good clerk and was quickly transferred as the artillery clerk in the pay office. In November a cable was received which stated that McGregor had absconded with a large sum of money, and was supposed to be heading for Canada and his home at Brockville.

McGregor crossed the ocean to New York and went, after a short delay, to Brockville, being there on New Year's day. He recrossed the border to the United States, and was next heard of as being under arrest at Rochester, N.Y. An application was made by the 3rd Division Headquarters to have him brought to Kingston for trial. The reason this was not done sooner was the complicated nature of the case. It is obviously impossible for his commanding officer, Major H. M. Bridge, to try him by court martial, as the Major is at the front. As all the evidence is at the local headquarters, there is no object in sending him to England, so that under the circumstances he was deported to Canada, and arrived Monday night in charge of two civil police, and turned over to the military authorities for trial.

Kingston Standard:—Bright lights and sips of absinthe caused the downfall of Allan McGregor, the Brockville youth, who is now in the guard house at Tete de Pont barracks, awaiting instructions from headquarters as to what disposition shall be made of the charge of embezzlement lodged against him by the military authorities in London, England.

Those who are in close touch with the deeds of the lad say that Mc. Gregor fell in with some light hearted Frenchman in London and they commenced to do the town up. McGregor, who has been a teetotaller, was tempted to taste the national drink of France—absinthe—and it is said that while under its influence he spent freely and lost heavily at cards. In order to meet some bills he again fell before the spirit of tempting and according to information which the officials at Barriefield have in their possession he defrauded with a pen in the neighborhood of $1,000.

Major Rev. Dean Starr is interested in the young man's case and every effort is being brought to bear to have sentence suspended. It is also understood that relatives and friends are ready to make restitution.

Bullet Came Dangerously Near

Minden Echo: The careless use of fire arms might easily have resulted in the loss of a life at Carnarvon on Monday. The facts are the Rev. H. F. Hockey, of Kinmount was returning from Muskoka Lake, where he had been in charge of the Anglican church camp, and was accompanied by his little son of 12 years. Having arrived at Carnarvon, where he desired to enter Mr. Rogers' store, he drove his horse in the shed and left his little son sitting in the buggy. The horse, a quiet animal, was left without being tied, but while the reverend gentleman was absent for a few moments a rifle bullet passed through the shed close to the horse's head, splitting the boards and causing the horse to quickly back out, endangering in another way the life of the little boy, who was not used to horses and could not control him. The horse was stopped, however, while the buggy was yet right side up, but we dare not consider the narrow escape of the little boy, to say nothing of the horse.

The person who fired the rifle may strive to excuse himself by saying he had no thought that the bullet would go there, but people who use fire arms should surely be more cautious.

Y. M. C. A Boys Camp Titbits

Some friends asked, "how do they live up there?" Here it is—For breakfast we have cereals, porridge or cream of wheat, and jam, frequently chocolate or eggs, and bread and butter. For dinner we have one meat order, each day a change. So far we have had ham, beef roast, beef stew with which is served a cooked vegetable, such as peas, corn or tomatoes, besides potatoes. For tea we are provided fruits in season, Boston baked beans, or cooked rice with raisins. Extras we obtain all the fresh milk we want, Sunday we have pie as an extra. Last Sunday we had in addition to this two delicious plum puddings. Before camp is over we will be able to get fresh tomatoes. We have already been supplied with cherries, they are pretty tart however. Two or three times we have had shoals soups and flavored with nice garden vegetables.

Just the first day or two in camp do we experience any disadvantage. We brought some sausage with us to use until we made arrangements with our meat man.

Lots of the kids not very pawkey and streaky. Guess they don't get enough sleep at home and are kind a "makin' up for it." Some of the boys are awfully busy, just growin'. It's great living out in the open air. Then the water is just fine. We go in twice a day—at eleven and again at four o'clock.

We have christened our big war canoe, "Onenhawkhaka." Our warriors visit the camps of the pale faces every morning to show that we are a friendly tribe. Thursday night at the time of the big concert, we are all invited by canoe to journey to the camp of the Deseronto tribe, to hear the music of their paperees. We will have a sweet time before we return to our old camp ground.

One of our chiefs, called "Max" sometimes talks in his sleep. The other night he surprised the spirits when he lisped "How I love you dear."

Boys whose parents have automobiles have been making us a visit and incidentally bringing us some fruit for which we feel very grateful. I am sure after perusal of these "Camp Tidbits" that you will agree with us that we are trying to give the boys a "real good time" ever keeping before us our motto of "clean sport, clean speech, and clean living."

ALL CANDIDATES ARE DISPOSED TO WIN ONLY BY FAIR PLAY

The Publishers are not Only Gratified by the Results to Date But by the Spirit of Fairness That Prevades the Field of Canvassers--Candidates Should Not Collect Coupons and Neglect the Getting of Subscriptions--No Hard Times in Belleville District.

The Ontario wishes to congratulate all those who are working in the Popularity Contest upon the spirit of fair-play they have one and all shown. It is gratifying to the managers to note the entire absence of any disposition on the part of the candidates and their supporters to subvert the rules or try to gain petty advantages by twisting their intended meaning. Every person has so far shown the utmost desire to play the game fairly.

Some have told us that while they are out to win, the tours and intend to do so, they do not wish to win out too easily. They desire above all to see a good contest. They like the work; the excitement of the competition, the meeting of honorable opponents; the amusing experiences they encounter. If they fail to win the chief prize, they will be much richer than when they entered the Contest by the valuable lessons and experience gained.

Allow us to illustrate. One young lady, whose parents are well-to-do, had been nominated in a district lured upon the work with great energy. She had time on her hands and has set out in this contest more for the valuable experience she will gain than for any reward it may give in the way of prizes. She is determined if she does not win that it will be exactly by the same means as the candidate has to employ who has no wealthy friends—that is to say by persistent, personal work. She is collecting coupons and securing new subscriptions in a way that would make old subscription canvassers turn green with envy, but it is with her a straight business proposition. If she wins, as win she may, she is determined that one of the grand tours will be given her as a reward for the personal work she has done. But if she loses she will have no regrets for having undertaken the contest. The experience gained will be of almost as much educational value as one of the prizes.

That is the right spirit. There are plenty of lessons to be learned in a contest of this nature that are worth far more than could be any reward in mere money. This is experience that could be gained in no other way, and experience that will be invaluable because it can be generally applied.

But the fine feature about this Ontario Contest is that while the pupils are learning these valuable lessons, they are also wonderfully rewarded by the most costly series of tour premiums ever given by any Canadian publication. Think of it! Eight tours to California costing $350.60 each and eight tours to New York and eight other tours to Niagara Falls with $300.00 in cash prizes to be given absolutely without one cent of cost to those willing to put forth a little effort for the next three weeks.

Now is the time to act.

CANVASSING EASIER.

We desire to assure all the candidates that as the days go by and the general interest becomes intensified they will find the work of canvassing far easier. People will "loosen up" much more quickly once the scent of battle is in the air. Everybody loves a contest, and consciously or unconsciously they will get in sympathizing with or actively backing up some candidate. People who flatly refuse to subscribe for The Ontario at first can be later on persuaded to give their names and their money without argument. Those too who have already paid in subscriptions or whose papers are paid in advance can later on be persuaded to extend their subscriptions a year or more.

The moral of all this is to hustle for all you are worth now and the subscriptions and money will flow in later like water.

LOOK AFTER SUBSCRIPTIONS.

We fear some of our candidates are spending far too much time looking after coupons and to little time looking after subscriptions.

For instance a few minutes' talk will usually serve to secure a new subscription from a party canvassed. A year's subscription from a new subscriber in Belleville means 2000 votes for the fraction of time spent, but to collect enough coupons to amount to 2000 votes means hours of work. The same time spent in rounding up subscriptions would mean many thousands of votes added to the total.

THERE ARE NO HARD TOURS.

There are a few people who are seized with the idea that times are hard and bound to be hard locally. Nothing could be further from the truth. The Belleville District never had such magnificent crop prospects as are now visible on every side. Every Saturday since the beginning of the Cheese season, the dairymen have been receiving on the Belleville Cheese Board from eight thousand to ten thousand dollars a week MORE than they ever received for the same amount of cheese since the industry was first inaugurated.

Therefore, candidates, when prospective subscribers try to pat you off with the excuse that times are hard, lead them to see in a courteous manner that they are miles away from the truth, that there is something wrong with their vision, that they need to change their outlook and join the procession. The war has been a calamity in many respects but it is quite contrary to the facts to state that the war has occasioned any hard times for the Bay of Quinte district. On the contrary there have never been such fine prospects since the days of the first settlement.

Business is bound to boom, and the symptoms are already strongly evident.

Percussion Caps Found Near Plant

Peterboro Examiner 3.—Two freak Ontario Articles of use were found among some weeds next to the Ackerman Lawless factory might have been placed there without any destructive intent. Mr. W. C. Ackerman told the Council's legal committee Monday night, but the discovery nevertheless caused some deep thinking among the heads of the factory.

One of the employees had been sent out to cut weeds adjacent to the building, and while engaged at this work he found the two boxes, which, from their appearance, had been placed there during the recent rains. They seemed to be caps from No. 12 gauge shot gun and shells might have been dropped there innocently or probably with malicious intent. They had not greatly alarmed Mr. Ackerman, but they had given rise to deeper thoughts in the direction of protection.

Ald. Stratton—Percussion caps are not running around loose these days.

Another Prisoner Gets the Lash

Peterboro, July 18.—John Martin, the young married man who pleaded guilty before His Honor Judge Hoyles, for an offence against a young girl under 16 of the age of 14 years, was sentenced to spend three months at the Industrial Farm, Pentanguishene. Martin received thirty lashes, fifteen of these to be given upon entering and the other fifteen when he is leaving.

This is another case, the result of a similar nature in the past two weeks. The first man is at present out on bail awaiting the decision of the Court of Appeal. The second case was disposed of recently when William Hoag was sentenced to one year and twenty lashes.

His Honor Judge Hoyles included lashes in the sentence yesterday for the first time in any sentence during his regime as Judge for the County Court of the County of Peterborough. It was followed up by another sentence in the morning with lashes, which should be an effective punishment for such offences.

A Generous Contribution

Many, if not all of the towns, cities and villages described in previous issues have to dole their hats to the village of Port Perry in the matter of subscribing to the Red Cross Fund with fairness in hands. As a result of a few days' canvass that little village of 3100 inhabitants contributed $7300 for the above purpose. This is an average contribution of $6.44 per head of the population. Considering the great needs of the soldiers, the sacrifices they are making and the ability of those who stay at home to contribute to their necessities we think the donations and contributions that are raised here are away below what the cause demands and what might be expected from a district of 30,000 and thirty people. The British government advises the practice of economy among all people of the British Isles.

With a little sacrifice and more liberality—for we have as yet in no wise come to the point of genuine sacrifice in the matter of contributions—we could add to the comfort and relieve the wants of many of our boys at the front.

Motorboats Collided

Last Saturday evening a collision occurred between two motorboats which proved disastrous to the craft, but fortunately with no serious results to the occupants. Fred Fletcher was coming out of Half Moon Bay, having in the boat his wife and five young ladies, on his way to his summer home, Grand Black Duck Island, and according to Mr. Fletcher the man at the wheel was facing the stern and apparently engaged in conversation, and did not see the other boat. Mr. Fletcher yelled, but too late to avoid a collision, and the Black Duck boat struck Fletcher's just forward of amidships, on the port side, tearing a hole in the side and splitting the deck. The Black Duck boat also suffered damage, and both rapidly began to fill with water. The occupants were thoroughly wet and somewhat excited, but the boats were got to shore before anything more serious happened. We understand Mr. Fletcher is claiming damages of $100.—Gananoque Reporter

Cruelty to Livery Horse

Sidney Bott, of Cobourg, appeared in Port Hope police court on Monday for working a horse, Mr. Jones shamefully abusing it and ill-treating it. The horse was from Mr. Greer's livery, and it was shown that Bott had overdriven the animal and whipped it unmercifully without any excuse or justification. Bott was arrested about 7.30 Saturday evening by Chief Royce and was lodged in the lock-up where he remained over Sunday. Bott was fined $6.00 and $4.00 costs or thirty days in jail. He should have been given a taste of the cat-o'-nine tails.—Port Hope Times.

Shell Factory For Port Hope

Messrs. R. A. Mulholland, T. B. Chalk and C. J. Thornton, M. P. have returned from Ottawa where they interviewed General Benson in connection with securing a contract for the Standard Ideal for the manufacture of shells. The deputation received blue prints and specifications of the parts required and also the assurance that the Standard Ideal Co. would receive the contract provided they can do the work.

Messrs. H. T. Bush and Aa. E. Pipher are busy visiting other points which are manufacturing shells and they will use every effort to have a plant established here.—Guide.

Picton Man Not a Pro-German

Considerable excitement was stirred on the streets of Picton recently by a rumor that Mr. VanHorn, a grocer and baker in town, was pro-German and had spoken in a seditious manner.

The Chief of Police, hearing the current rumor, started an enquiry, resulting in an investigation at the Police Court on Monday evening, when the Magistrate, accompanied by Messrs. Adams, Cook, the assistants of three bakers, ex-employees of Mr. VanHorn.

It was found by their statements that one of these men when peculiarly loquacious on the streets on Saturday evening, had started the rumor leading to the investigation, and that the trouble grew out of resentment for one of the men losing his job. It also appeared by the statements that the man starting the rumor had returned to his former employment at VanHorn's and that there was no foundation in fact for the rumor being circulated.

Mr. VanHorn came to Picton with the family about 40 years ago. He is a good citizen, successful in business, and gives employment to several residents of Picton. The VanHorn came from Holland several generations ago and settled in Pennsylvania, where he was born and lived until he came to Ontario.

In December, 1913, previous to the outbreak of the war, he took the oath of allegiance to Britain, contributed liberally in common with others to the Patriotic Fund, and it is an apparent injustice to him that his business interests and his life and peace should be threatened by any friction growing out of changes made in the personnel of his employees, casting a reflection on his loyalty and patriotic intentions.—Times.

Another Fish Hatchery

The Reporter had a pleasant call this week from Capt. A. Hunter of Belleville, Inspector of the Ontario Game and Fisheries Department. The object of Capt. Hunter's visit was to instruct the Overseers to enforce the regulations requiring all non-residents to take out a license to fish. All non-residents who are stopping at hotels or boarding houses are required to pay a fee of $3, but parties who cross the line and locate in this local are required to pay a fee of $5 per rod.

It costs the Department $4000 a year to enforce the fisheries regulations on the St. Lawrence and this is done altogether for the benefit of sportsmen to prevent the depletion of game fish, the fee is a reasonable one and is generally paid willingly. In fact Mr. Toner informs us that one gentleman in paying the fee said it ought to be $10 instead of $5 as he knew, good in any part of the province.

For the convenience of any in this section, Capt. Hunter has arranged so that license can be procured at the office of J. Arthur Jackson, barrister.

An announcement of importance was made by Capt. Hunter namely that it is the intention of the Department to shortly establish a hatchery for propagating fish and re-stocking the river. The hatchery will be located at a point between Gananoque and Rockport.

—Gananoque Reporter.

To License Liveries

The council were approached on Monday night asking that a license be placed on the livery business. The argument was advanced that while established liveries employ labour the year round pay business taxes, etc., and exists for the accommodation of the public summer and winter, that individual owners of one or two horses hire out vehicles, especially during the summer months, thus depriving the established liveryman of his trade. We believe that the case is a just one and we have no doubt that when the committee report on the matter a recommendation will be made to have a by-law prepared in accordance with the wish of the liverymen.

Rendered Unconscious

Messrs John Grills and Hugh Coulter, of Chapman, were badly shaken up by being thrown from a boggy when driving to Tweed on Saturday last. One of the pole straps of the harness broke letting the tongue drop and throwing them out. They were both rendered unconscious and were unable to leave their bed for several days but no serious results are anticipated. Mr. Coulter is about 70 years of age and Mr. Grills about 60 in which case no doubt their recover will be slow.

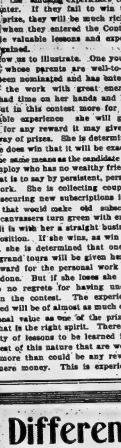
Different and Better Clothes

The Two Piece Suit



This is the time of year when a man wants to wear as little as possible. If you wear one of our cool Two-Piece Suits, it's certain you won't "wear a worried look."

But there are two considerations in a Two-Piece Suit which call for the most competent tailoring. In the first place, the coat must be so tailored as to obviate the need of a vest. In the second place, as the fabrics are extremely light in weight, the tailoring must be done with the greatest skill.

Fabrics of cerefully selected Sun-Proof Serges, Worsteds, Homespuns, etc., etc.

It you'll step in and try on one of these cool Suits and then take a look in the mirror, you'll be surprised to see what a swell and comfortable looking fellow you are.

Armies Defeated By Weather.

The weather has often served Britain well in times of war. We all know how the weather finished the destruction of the Armada, and served us when the French invaded Ireland, and there have been other times when a foe, anxious to raid Britain's shores, found his work rendered difficult by bad weather. A heavy thunderstorm at Crecy slackened the bow strings of the Genoese archers of the French, whereas the English kept their bows cased, and suffered nothing; and, to come to modern times, the Devons made their famous charge at Waggon Hill, Ladysmith, with a thunderstorm at their back.

It is only fitting that fogs should have aided us at times. It was a heavy mist that allowed Marlborough to get his army across the Scheldt, although the enemy had gathered to dispute the passage. Anson was once well served by a fog, which enabled him to slip through a French fleet unobserved. Snow and frost have always hindered rather than helped, though the terrible winter in the Crimean War showed that we could rise superior even to such handicaps; and Col. Kelly's march across the snow-covered mountains to the relief of Chitral showed the same.

That Barrel Chair.

A woman there was, and she wrote for the press, as you or I might do. She told how to cut and sew a dress and how to cook many a savory mess, but she never had done it herself, I guess, but none of her readers knew. She told how to comb and dress the hair and how out of a barrel to make a chair — 'twould adorn any parlor and give it an air—we thought the tale was true. Oh, the days we spent and the nights we spent, with hammer and saw and tack, in making a chair in which no one would sit, in which no one could possibly sit, without a crick in the back.

Commander Samson Again.

A veritable thorn in the side of the Kaiser is Commander Samson, of the Royal Naval Air Service, on whose head the Germans are said to have put a price of $5,000. His latest exploit, resulting in the destruction of a windmill and a cottage which sheltered a couple of destructive German machine guns, is typical of his wiliness and dare-devil methods.

The Germans were surprised one bright morning to see a low, slate-colored car come rushing out of the English lines, followed by a heavy but erratic fusillade. They concluded that the car was attempting to escape from their enemies, and so refrained from firing upon it.

But just as the car appeared to be about to enter the German lines it pulled up. In fifteen seconds the windmill, with its machine gun and crew, was levelled by the shells from armored car's quick-firing gun, and before the astonished Germans could collect themselves the gun had swung round and more shells crashed through the cottage windows, destroying whatever was within. Then the car shot back to the British lines, to be received not with a fusillade, but with a cheer.

Are Nearing Port Nelson.

Grading gangs are now within fifty miles of Port Nelson is the report of J. D. McArthur, who has the contract for the Hudson Bay Railway. This season will see the grade completed, although all the steel will not be laid until next spring. Bridge-building over the first crossing of the Nelson River has been delayed by the sinking of the trestle work near the first approach, but this has now been completed, and the big bridge is now under construction.

Crop prospects in the West are magnificent, is the good news brought east by the big railway builder. His interests in the West are in each of the provinces, and from personal observation and reports of employes he considers that under fair conditions for the remainder of the season the crop will be enormous.

Swiss Marriage Customs.

In remote Alpine hamlets and villages, especially in the Bernese Oberland, there still exists ancient and pretty customs of proposing marriage by the language of flowers. If a maid accepts a bouquet of edelweiss from a man she at the same time accepts him as her fiance, the idea being that the man has risked his life to obtain the flowers for the woman he loves. Another method which exists in the Canton of Glarus is for the young man to place a flower pot containing a single rose and a note on the window sill of the girl's room when she is absent from home and wait—perhaps days—for a reply. If the maid takes the rose the young man boldly enters the house to arrange matters with her parents, but if the rose is allowed to fade away the proposal is rejected without a single word having been exchanged between the couple.

Answered the Call.

The London plumber was apologising for delay. "You see, sir, I'm that short-'anded. I'd a nice lad of 13 I meant putting on this job. His three brothers had 'listed and he promised his mother he'd stay. I'd started 'im round 'ere with a boy and a 'andcart, and on 'is way he met a marching brigade. They just sang to 'im 'Drop your bag and carry a gun,' and drop his bag he did, into the 'andcart and I've 'eard nothing of 'im since, except a postcard asking me to give his mother his wage."

Pins.

It seemed as if it would take a whole paper of pins to mend the torn dress. The wearer appealed to her car neighbor.

"Have you any pins?" she asked.

The woman had none, but passed the query on, and in a little while every passenger was feeling along concealed edges and turning back lapels. In all, sixteen pins were produced. Fourteen were contributed by men.

"We never used them as much as the women, but somehow we carry them and the women don't," said one of the male passengers.—New York Post.

COSSACKS FIGHT MUCH LIKE COWBOYS

Superb Horsemen Made a Magnificent Showing as They Beat Back Superior Austrian Force

Mr. D. Thomas Curtin describes below how he watched by the side of a Cossack chief the failure of the huge Austrian advance from Czernovitz against the small Russian forces which had just withdrawn from that corner of Austria near the Rumanian border. Mr. Curtin states that the Russians left behind not so much as a wounded man or a rifle.

The artillery, with caissons of ammunition, rattled over the road, while Cossacks dashed beside to lash the horses up the hill towards Sadagora. The infantry was coming up, choking the road as far as one could see.

The first battalion stepped smartly to the fray. A field priest clad in rich robes of satin and velvet rode in majesty on his coal-black steed. And then, striding along beside those big men was a mite of a boy who could hardly be 12, and who wore a complete uniform. Lengthening his stride to keep pace with the men, and with head erect and eyes that never swerved, he swung along in measured tread, the embodiment of martial pride. Rough stretchers and a battered Red Cross wagon bore testimony of the grim work about to begin.

In a field directly opposite a battalion was still waiting for orders. It had been there since early morning, and had evidently marched during the night, for the men lay stretched out fast asleep. The call to assemble brought them to their feet, and the companies formed before one could realise that the men had been awakened. They moved across the field and hit the highway in column of fours, an old veteran with a medal of 1904 blowing lustily into a mouth-organ while the dull brown column went into battle to the strains of some soldier song.

At last I succeeded in reaching the top of the highway hill, from where I could watch the shrapnel bursting in the valleys. The Austrians who had crossed, numbering 3,000 men, I was told, were battered back across the pontoon bridge, to which a body of Russian infantry advanced along the open road. "This division could have been wiped out while advancing," an officer told me later, "if the Austrian artillery had only devoted its attention to it instead of trying to find ours."

Preparing for Stand

A clatter of hoofs coming up the hill caused me to turn to see a troop of Cossacks, their lance-tips glinting in the dazzling sun, a red-legged Hussar at their head. "Stay right here," he exclaimed, "if you wish to see the big excitement. We are going to set up a machine-gun by this building; the Austrians know that our main force has gone back to Sadagora. It is of vital necessity that we prevent them from crossing."

We took up our position near the partly-completed building, which looked like a blockhouse. The Cossacks gathered fondly about their new pet, captured from the Austrians, and belted it for action. "We will not fire until they cross," said the chief. "If the enemy throw a bridge and attack in force he can wedge us in from two sides. If we can forestall this by bluffing until our reserve infantry come up from Novosielica we can save the day. Now you will see what my Cossacks can do!"

A whirlwind of cavalry was launched from the base of the hill across the plain towards the river. A rattle of Austrian rifles from the opposite bank, but not a horse swerved, not a rider fell. When near the bank the avalanche broke up into flying fragments, which whirled in every direction in wild confusion. Erect in their saddles, to which they stuck as if glued, the Cossacks blazed away like the American Indian of pioneer days.

Magnificent Soldiers

On the mound by the machine gun stood the Cossack chief, gazing down in admiration upon his men. "Are they not magnificent—admirable? See how motionless they sit there watching to pick off any enemy who may appear. My men form a picked regiment, chosen from everywhere. They are the greatest Cossacks of the world!"

I was thrilled by the scenes of this wild Eastern warfare of the old type. Not a motor-car or a motor-cycle; every officer rode a horse.

The sun sank behind the hills when a great body of cavalry was seen approaching along the highway from Novosielica. Even in the distance they did not appear quite like any Cossacks I had ever seen. Every papakha was jet black, and every flowing robe was of carmine, faintly streaked with white. The handles of their deadly yataghans were all of ivory and bone, while that of their leader was inlaid with precious stones. Not the faintest flicker of change in the broad Mongolian features of these proud fighting men as they passed by on their superb black chargers; not a lip seemed to move as they chanted some soft, weird melody of a far-off Eastern land. They were the Tar-tar Cossacks whose coming had been so long expected.

"The Austrians have lost their opportunity," the chief cried joyfully, as he sat down to eat that night.

Corporal's Charmed Life

The Gainsborough News printed the charmed experience of Corporal Bowyer. The corporal told the following story: "In a rush I was struck by a bullet, which hit my ammunition pouch. Instead of entering my body, it glanced away off the ammunition, exploding fifteen rounds of it, and tearing my equipment all to pieces on that side."

WOMAN'S WORLD.

Oregon has four women professional chauffeurs.

In China the mother-in-law is the boss of the house.

It is claimed that women of this country spend 85 per cent of the wealth.

In the field at harvest time in Poland far more women are to be seen than men.

The University of New Mexico has established a department of household economics.

There are 106 colleges in the United States exclusively for women, with nearly 20,000 students.

Twelve women are making a canvass of the most remote parts of England for recruits for Lord Kitchener's army.

Owing to the depression caused by the war female servants are the only kind of labor wanted in the British colonies.

Lesson III.—Third Quarter, For July 18, 1915.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, I Kings iii, 4-15. Memory Verses, 9, 10—Golden Text, Prov. ix, 10—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

In every record there are the two sides, God's and ours. His is always perfect; our ours is the failure. The sinfulness of man and the wonderful grace of God sum up one phase of the whole Bible story. Last week we saw Solomon on the throne of the Lord as king and prospering (I Chron. xxix, 23). Today we are told that Solomon loved the Lord, walking in the statutes of David, his father, only he sacrificed and burnt incense in high places (verse 3). That "only" does not sound well, nor does the affinity with Pharaoh, king of Egypt, of verse 1. It looks like the beginning of wandering, a heart not perfect with the Lord. Egyptian fellowship, as well as horses and wives, seems to be forbidden in Deut. xvii, 16, 17. In II Chron. i, 1, we read that the Lord, his God, was with him and magnified him exceedingly, and [illegible] in his kingdom. [illegible] by [illegible] Jerusalem. [illegible] expressions in this lesson [illegible] worthy of special attention. Solomon in his [illegible] over whom he reigned were like the dust of the earth [illegible] and it is written [illegible] wisdom and understanding exceeding much and largeness of heart, even as the sand that is on the sea shore (I Chron. i, 9; I Kings iv, 29). The two expressions "dust of the earth" and "sand upon the sea shore" [illegible] the same [illegible] Genesis xiii, 16; xxii, 17.

The thought seems to be that God gave Solomon wisdom to meet each individual case as it might arise. A notable illustration is given in I Kings iii, 16-28. It is written that Solomon's wisdom excelled the wisdom of all the children of the east country and all the wisdom of Egypt, for he was wiser than all men, and there came of all people to hear the wisdom of Solomon, from all kings of the earth which had heard of his wisdom (I Kings iv, 30, 31, 34). We cannot but think of the wisdom of Joseph and of Daniel, which was greater than all the wisdom of Egypt and of Babylon in their days. But what is that to me? He who gave this wisdom still lives and is Himself the power of God and the wisdom of God; the Son of God who loved me and gave Himself for me (I Cor. i, 24; Gal. ii, 20). It is written, "If any of you lack wisdom let him ask of God, * * * and it shall be given him, but let him ask in faith nothing wavering." There is a wisdom that is earthly, sensual, devilish, but the wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle and easy to be entreated (Jas. i, 5, 6; iii, 15-17). We need continually to know the way wherein we may walk and the thing that we may do, and to pray, Cause me to know the way wherein I should walk, for it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps (Jer. xiii, 3; x, 23; Ps. cxliii, 8), but we can rely on Ps. xxxii, 8, if only we are honest in our desire for guidance and seek not our own will or pleasure. Then we shall experience Isa. xxx, 21.

PASTOR RUSSELL

the great author and lecturer, President of the International Bible Students Association and Pastor of London and Brooklyn Tabernacles, will deliver a lecture next

Monday at 8 p. m.

at the GRIFFIN THEATRE

his topic being, "The Battle of Armageddon." The Brooklyn Pastor comes at the invitation of the Associated Bible Students of this city.

Pastor Russell's recent public utterances have attracted special attention because of the fact that during the past forty years he has frequently expressed the conviction, based upon the interpretation of Bible prophecy, that a time of unprecedented trouble was impending and would become world-wide. The time set by this Bible scholar was the autumn of last year. Since the outbreak of hostilities in Europe he has been delivering a series of lectures specially relating to the war and Bible prophecies respecting its outcome. His address here next Monday is one of these.

The present conflict in Europe is but the prelude to an even greater struggle, according to Pastor Russell's view. He believes the following conflict will be largely the results of the poverty and distress occasioned by the war and the discontent these will cause, finally leading to social revolution and anarchy. This succeeding conflict, the Pastor declares, is clearly marked in Bible prophecy and termed, "The Battle of Armageddon," and described by Christ as "a time of trouble such as was not since there was a nation." This final trouble, the venerable preacher believes, will prepare the world for, and usher in the long promised reign of "peace on earth and goodwill among men," at the hands of the Prince of Peace.

Pastor Russell is an independent religious worker, and has won world-wide distinction as a defender of the Bible and because of his "anti-hell-fire" preaching. He is a familiar figure here, having visited this city a number of times during his long career of public life as author and lecturer. During the past year, the Pastor created a sensation by the launching of a moving-picture exhibition detailing the story of the Bible from the creation to "Paradise restored." This progressive method of carrying on evangelistic work has proved eminently successful according to the report of the Bible Students Association which financed the production. The Drama, styled "Creation," has been shown during the past year throughout this country and the United States, and is now being presented abroad. Many hundreds witnessed the production here last summer, when free exhibitions of it were given daily at the Palace Theatre for several days.

As usual, it has been announced that no admission charge will be made at this lecture, and no collection taken.

Passing of James Coyle Brown

Mr. James Coyle Brown, an estimable citizen and for many years Public School Inspector for Peterboro County passed away at the hospital here on Tuesday. A week ago Sunday Mr. Brown attended service at St. Andrews Church and was taken ill when returning to the residence of Mr. Parker Smith, where he was staying at the time. The spell passed off but the following night he was seized with another severe attack of heart failure. Mr. Smith at once summoned a physician who remained with him all night. He rallied from this and was removed to the hospital for treatment, but his age, 82 years, was against his restoration to health, and he passed quietly and peacefully to his rest that remained the following Tuesday. A funeral service was held at the residence of Mayor E. A. Duncan on Wednesday morning, and the following morning his remains were taken to Norwood and interred in the family plot there. A son Mr. Harold Brown, Toronto, and a daughter, Mrs. Williamson, were here to attend the last sad obsequies.

Mrs. Brown came to Cobourg some few years ago to reside with her daughter, Mrs. E. A. Duncan, who died a few years afterwards, and made many friends who held him in high esteem and regard. He was educationalist of many years experience, having been engaged in the teaching profession and Public School Inspector for Peterboro County for thirty-seven years.

Mr. Brown is survived by three sons Messrs. C. B. Brown and T. H. Brown, Saskatchewan; Mr. H. F. Brown, Toronto; Mrs. G. H. Williamson, Port Arthur, and Mrs. W. H. Craig; Golganda.—Cobourg World.

Death of Thomas M. Roblin

These passed away at his home in Picton on July 1st, an old resident of Prince Edward county in the person of Thomas Moore Roblin. He was a son of the late Levi G. Roblin. In the early part of his life he was engaged in teaching school and for upwards of twenty years was engaged in the different sections in Sophiesburg and other places. He afterwards settled on a beautiful spot at Green Point, where he remained until two years ago. He could no longer do his duties on the farm and came to Picton to spend the remainder of his days. And for the last four months he had been a great sufferer but he bore it all with Christian fortitude. He was a faithful husband and a loving father—a man who enjoyed the respect and confidence of all who knew him. In religion he was a consistent member of the Methodist church, having united with that Church in his early boyhood days. He leaves to mourn his loss, a widow, two sons and two daughters, namely Mrs. W. B. Lyons, High Shore, Overton of Green Point, George of Kingston, and Bessie at home. He was eighty-two years of age. His funeral was held at his late residence on King street and was conducted by his pastor, the Rev. W. J. Wood. The remains were followed by a large number of friends to their last resting place at Glenwood.—Picton Times.

Military Notes

The 49th regiment recruiting tent on the armouries lawn is a very cool spot and it is proving to have more attraction to young men desirous of enlisting. Yesterday six were enrolled and an equal number enlisted today. The tent has been equipped with electric lights and a telephone is to be installed. Col. Ketcheson and Sergt. Douch are on hand

The tent will remain on the grounds it is expected until autumn. Now and then concerts will be given on the grounds to inspire the loyal young men.

It is expected that an officer from Kingston will be here on Monday to deliver a recruiting address

It is said that the Fifteenth Regiment will have a recruiting tent on Bridge street side of the armouries lawn.

The meeting called for this evening by Mayor Panter for the purpose of organizing a local branch of the Speakers' Patriotic Association to stimulate recruiting, will be held in the committee room of the city building. A number of prominent citizens who have taken an active part in patriotic work since war began, will be present

Ladies in Dispute

A disturbance between some ladies on Brock street necessitated a call from the police to crush their loquacity. Needless to say, no arrests were made.

Sandbanks Popular This Year

Many families have arrived at the Lakeshore House to spend the summer. It is really that guests begin to arrive at Canadian summer resorts before the 1st of July. But this year the latter part of June brought several families to the Sandbanks.

Soldier Injured

On Monday afternoon Pte. Gilmour one of the soldiers on guard at the G.T.R. bridge was taken to Hotel Dieu, Kingston, suffering from injuries received while on duty a few days ago.

Leading away from the bridge there is an embankment over which one must travel to get on or off the tracks. While attempting to descend Pte. Gilmour's feet slipped and he tumbled down the hill. His back and hips were badly bruised and gashed. His condition grew worse, and the military authorities were obliged to have him sent to Kingston for treatment. Pte. Gilmour's home is in Belleville.

Given a Fine Send-off

Friends and neighbors of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Johnston, Fifth Concession of Sidney, to the number of about 125 gathered at their home Tuesday night for a farewell party prior to their removal to Belleville. The assembled guests came well provided with refreshments and soon after their arrival Mrs. Geo. Bamber read the following address—

ADDRESS

Mr. and Mrs. Johnston,—

We your neighbors and friends here met on your intended removal from this community are reminded very vividly that we are about to break the knot that has long bound us together as true friends and neighbors. Not through any mere formality but sincere regret are we gathered here this evening to say farewell and also incidentally to remind you again that we have known you both were as kind, thoughtful, considerate and charitable friends, ever willing at all times to offer a willing hand in sickness or to assist us on our daily occupations.

For these acts we are deeply indebted to you and wish you to accept this little present as a memento of this occasion when you were about to sever your relations with your friends on the Fifth Concession. And as you are going to a new locality where the environment will again be strange we hope and know that as you have looked abroad the rays of true friendship that they will in a measure be reflected upon your pathway through the remaining days of life giving you consolation and happiness and possibly reminding you that you are now enjoying the fruits of a life well spent in scenes of true friendship.

Mr. Ed. Bartlett presented, on behalf of the company, Mr. and Mrs. Johnston with a beautiful ball rack

Mr. Johnston though taken by surprise made a most appropriate and feeling reply, thanking his friends for their appreciation, neighborliness and generosity.

Impromptu addresses were also delivered by Ex-Reeve Geo. Nicholson, Mr. Chas Massey and Dr. J. A. Faulkner. After the formal proceedings were over refreshments were served, and then the young people remained to enjoy a social dance.

Mr. and Mrs. Johnston are soon to take up their residence in Belleville and the splendid farewell party was an evidence of the esteem in which they are held by a multitude of friends and neighbors.

A letter was read from the chairman stating that Russell B. Werner, manufacturer, who resides near Belleville, desired to manufacture box, barrel, and apple packing pads and requested the use of the Pinnacle St. school. From 10 to 20 operatives would be employed, chiefly women and girls The products of the manufacturing would be a year amount to $10,000. Mr. Warner would agree to pay any extra insurance necessary, but expected free rent and exemption from taxes for 1916. This would not interfere with any other industry in town.

The school management committee reported that Mr. Donald M. Clarke had been engaged as commercial teacher and Miss E. R. Delmage, B.A. as art teacher for the high school.

Miss Simpkins who had been recommended for a position in the Q.V.S. had reported that she was not able to accept as she had secured a position elsewhere. Miss Lucy Grant, 1st class certificate, was appointed to take her place. Miss McMullen who had received an appointment to Grier street declined and Miss Irene F. Hobgin, holder of a first class certificate was appointed to this place.

Printing and supplies committee reported that the tenders of Schurter Co. Ltd. for coal had been accepted for Queen Mary and Grier street public schools; for the Dewar Co. for the high school Q.V.S. and Q.A.S. 18 seats were recommended for the high school.

Sites, Buildings and Repairs Committee recommended the awarding of contracts as follows, on the lowest tender in each case—

Manley and Son, two porches for $215.00

G. A. Bennett, cement walks at Q. V.S. and the approaches; burlap for the three public schools; cleaning, painting, including doors and partition at the high school for $115

Joshua Lang, chimney at the high school,

The committee recommended that the drain in the ravine be built by day's work.

The board went into committee of the whole. Mr. W. C. Reid in the chair. The reports of the committees were passed

Mr. S. S. Moore moved, seconded by Mr. L. C. Pascoe, that the matter referred to in the letter of Mr. Warner's be referred to the chairman of the board and the solicitor to deal with, with power to act.

After some discussion, an amendment was made

Mr. O'Flynn moved seconded by Mr Elliott in amendment that the board be and in favor of renting the school property for any purpose other than educational, but if for the purpose of assisting an industry and if the city council makes a request for it, the board is willing to hand over the property to the city council to use it for such purposes and that it be referred to the Sites, Buildings and Repairs committee with power to act"

An amendment to the amendment was moved by Mr. McGie, seconded by Mr. Deacon, "that the board is willing to hand over to the city council for eleven months the Pinnacle St. school property for the purposes referred to in the letter and that the matter be referred to the chairman of the board and the chairman of the sites committee with power to act."

The amendment to the amendment was put and declared carried.

Committee rose and reported. The report was received and adopted.

Mr. McGie moved, seconded by Mr. O'Flynn that the board express its sympathy to Miss Urquhart in her present illness and that the secretary convey the same to her by letter."

The resolution carried. Mr. W. C Reid volunteered to present a bouquet of flowers to Miss Urquhart when the letter of sympathy was forwarded

Successful Social

Despite the torrid heat, the lawn social at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Mark Sprague last evening was a most enjoyable affair. The entertainment was under the auspices of the Ladies' auxiliary of the Y.M.C.A. The grounds were prettily decorated, this being the work of Mr. W. J. Carter. Booths for candy, tea room and ice cream did a flourishing trade, while the Fifteenth band played a program of music much to the delight of the large crowd.

During the evening the ladies' gymnasium class of the Y.M.C.A. performed a wand drill and the barn dance. The social was a success in point of receipts and pleasure.

Capt. Ponton Writes Home

Col. Ponton was gratified to receive a brief note this morning from his son, Capt. R. D. Ponton who was reported some days ago in hospital ill from gas fumes. Capt. Ponton wrote from the hospital at St. Hapres, France, and stated that he was doing as well as could be expected. He was surprised and gratified to find that he was being attended by two Belleville nurses, Misses Hope Sewell and Mary Bambly. Since, the date of writing, Capt. Ponton has gone to England to await recovery in one of the hospitals there

Today's Market

In general this morning's prices in the market were about the same as last Saturday's, but some new lines of fruit are offered. Strawberries were still fairly plentiful at 25c for two boxes. Cherries, currants and gooseberries were cheap. Gooseberries sold at three quarts for a quarter; red currants four boxes for 25c, black currants 3 boxes per quarter.

Huckleberries at 18c per quart were eagerly purchased although the price was rather high. Red raspberries sold at 15c per box.

New potatoes were rather reasonable today at 75c per peck.

Hogs have declined, 16c per cwt live weight, being now worth $8.50 Dressed pork goes at $12 to $12.50 per cwt.

Eggs sold at the regular price 21 and 22c per dozen, and butter 33 to 35c.

Beans brught 5c per quart.

All the vegetables are getting much larger in size.

Cabbages run between 5c and 10c per head, cucumbers from 40c to $1 per dosed, onions 5c per bunch, etc.

New hay sold at $15 per ton. There were several loads for sale and old hay at 17 to $18.

The hide market is unchanged with the exception of lambskins which now bring 50c and sheerlings 45c.

Fowls bring $1 to $1.40 per pair.

STEAMER ANGENORIA STRUCK AN ICEBURG

Accident Happened Last Sunday--Boat Reached Montreal This Morning

MONTREAL, July 17.—With her bows crushed in as the result of a collision with an iceberg in the Straits of Belle Isle last Sunday morning and her stern deep in the water to raise the damaged stem as far as possible from the sea, the steamer Agenoria from England for Montreal crawled into port early this morning.

KAISER SERVES NOTICE ON STRIKERS AT KRUPPS.

CHIASSO, July 17.—According to a despatch from Munich to Swiss papers, the German military authorities have informed the management and union officials of Krupps, where a dispute occasioned by the increased cost of living has arisen in several departments, that in no circumstances will a strike be tolerated.

A mass meeting of workers has been fixed for Sunday, when it is expected appeals to patriotism will prove effective and a settlement reached.

WELSH MINERS OBDURATE, MUNITIONS ACT UNAVAILING

LONDON, July 17.—The day has brought no change in the South Wales coal strike situation. The wet weather, which kept the men indoors prevented the holding of the mass meetings which had been arranged, but a few gatherings took place in small halls where speakers devoted themselves to attacks on the colliery owners and the press, which is out-spoken in condemnation of their action in quitting work.

The executive committee of the South Wales Miners' Federation, most of the members of which are opposed to the strike, came to London yesterday and conferred with Walter Runciman, President of the Board of Trade, who, it is understood, made new proposals for a settlement of the trouble which were to be considered at a meeting this morning.

There is no indication of any weakening on the part of the men, but the impression still prevails that a few days will see an end of the walkout. It is not believed that the introduction of the Munitions of War Act can force the men to return to work, for it is impossible to bring 150,000 men before the courts to impose fines for contravening the act. In fact, the resort to this measure is believed rather to have made the situation worse, and the men's demands now include its withdrawal, so far as coal mining is concerned.

The supplies of coal on hand are sufficient to prevent any embarrassment for a week or more as far as the navy is concerned.

LATER.

LONDON, July 17.—The executive council of the South Wales Miners having failed at a meeting held in London today to reach an agreement on the means of settling the coal dispute left for Cardiff where it will meet again on Monday.

THE AMERICAN CRISIS.

What will be the American rejoinder to the latest German communication? This is the most immediately interesting question in connection with the war. Of course, there can be no two opinions as to the deliberate insolence of tone and contents—or absence of contents—of the latest German Note. It is studiously insulting—all the more so from the weeks which were allowed to elapse before its presentation. The pretence that time was required for its preparation it not even outwardly specious. The note reads like the hastily written reply of some arrogant and none too literate business man to an importunate claimant. It might have been dashed off in less than an hour by an ordinarily practiced writer without displaying less ingenuity or method or as little accuracy of thought and expression. It is as defective and unworthy from a literary as it is from a diplomatic point of view. Its every turn of phrase or attempted subterfuge is so "cheap and nasty" as to stamp it at once and forever as "made in Germany."

The American press has promptly recognized its real character. The opinions of the American Government remain to be expressed. We may as well be patient on that point, until President Wilson has been heard from officially. We shall have to bear as best we can, for at least some days, with press despatch chatter from Washington concerning the imaginary sayings of "high officials" and other more or less mythical individuals. We shall have to put up with being informed one day that there is to be "no surrender," and the next that "a peaceful rejoinder will be despatched immediately," and that "a fortnight or more will be required for its preparation." All these things we shall have to endure, as usual, with as much philosophy as possible. But back of it all is the question—what will the American rejoinder be?

It goes without saying that, sooner or later, there will have to be a rejoinder. Insolent the present German reply undoubtedly is. It is not of itself sufficient ground for an immediate diplomatic rupture. But it certainly does go far to pave the way definitely for the issue of an ultimatum—with a time limit—by the Government would not tolerate any interference was solemnly warned, last January, when she announced her "war zone" that the American Government would no tolerate any interference with her international rights within that zone. Then, over two months ago, the Lusitania was sunk with more than a hundred American citizens on board, the Government of the United States, in a firm and yet moderate Note, demanded indemnification for its suffering citizens, and made diplomatic assurances for the future. Germany returned a shuffling and grossly unsatisfactory answer. With exemplary calmness, patience and courtesy the American Government reiterated its demands. Germany has now made a brazenly impudent and provoking response.

If President Wilson and his cabinet are not at this time, fully convinced that, through diplomatic channels, there is no honorable exit for them, and that further attempts at "friendly negotiations" with Germany on their part, can but will only serve to humiliate their country still more profoundly, they never will be convinced. If they are so convinced the only logical and patriotic line of action open to them, as representatives of the American people, is the send of a brief, categorical statement of their irreducible demands on behalf of the United States, coupled with a time limit for a satisfactory response with notification that, failing such response, a rupture of diplomatic relations between the two countries must result, to be followed by a possible and probable intervention of the United States in the war, against Germany.

That this will be the outcome of the present situation, there is good reason to expect. President Wilson has borne himself with the greatest circumspection and propriety at all times since the beginning of the war. He has very properly considered, first of all, the interests of his own country. He has been most scrupulous in preserving strict neutrality. The best evidence of this is that he has been blamed at various times by both sides. But President Wilson has not only a statesman's regard for International morality, he has a lofty sense of the honor as well as the material interests of his own country. There is ample ground for believing that he has a clear realisation of the duty of the United States as a great world Power. There can be little doubt, therefore, that when he has fully satisfied his own mind and conscience he will act promptly, decisively and strongly. He knows that the American people will stand firmly and almost unanimously behind him in any proceedings which he may deem necessary to vindicate the honor of his country and the justice of its claim as a neutral Power. He has already shown great and most creditable forbearance in the face of outrageous provocation. A man capable of that is the one, above all others, likely to strike, "quick and straight," when forbearance ceases to be a virtue.

It is to be anticipated, then, that President Wilson's next communication to Germany will be very different from those which have preceded it, and that the disreputable government of that fallen and contemptible country will soon find itself confronted directly with the alternative of war with the United States or ignominious retreat from the outrageous naval attitude it has assumed in defiance of all civilized humanity.

A report just issued by the Department of Commerce of the United States shows that whereas the American exports to Germany in May, 1914, were valued at $19,295,126, they had fallen off in May of this year to a mere trifle of $400. This, in itself, is a very striking tribute to the naval supremacy of Great Britain and shows how completely Germany's overseas trade has been swept away.

A Washington despatch reports passengers who arrived from Europe on the Holland-American Line steamer Rotterdam, as stating that they witnessed the departure of the steamship Franconia, now a British transport, from Avonmouth for the Dardanelles with Canadian troops This report, of course, is to be accepted with reserve, but in view of the pressing demand for reinforcements in Gallipoli, it is not improbable that Canadians will be sent to join the Australians and New Zealanders under Sir Ian Hamilton's command.

One Industry in Canada which has increased its output in war time is the pulpwood and wood-pulp industry of Canada. The consumption of pulpwood in Canada increased nearly ten and a half per cent. in 1914, as compared with 1913. Since 1910 the increase has been one hundred and four per cent. The sixty-six active pulp mills in Canada in 1914 consumed 1,224,376 cords of pulpwood, valued at $8,089,868 while in addition to this, 972,508 cords, valued at $6,680,490 were exported in an unmanufactured state. The proportion of pulpwood made into pulp in Canada to that exported in the raw state is increasing, thus giving more employment in Canadian mills. In 1914, 55.7 per cent. of all pulpwood produced in Canada was made into pulpwood produced in Canada was made into pulp in Canada and 44.3 per cent. was exported, chiefly to the United States, in the raw or cordwood state. A few years ago only one-third of the pulpwood produced in Canada was made into pulp here.

IF.

If you survived the honeymoon's first waning
With some ideals unshattered, and intact;
If you can stand for comment, uncomplaining,
Upon your every little, thoughtless act;
If you can hook and not be tired of hooking,
Or button minute buttons by the score,
Wind clocks, throw out the cat, and smile while brooking
Some hundred petty daily tasks—or more;

If you can pass your tailor's shop unflinching
And wear with unconcern a hand-me-down;
If you can undergo a season's pinching
To buy Her much-desired imported gown;
If you can shave yourself each blessed morning
And put that fifteen cents into the bank,
Passing up private brands with well-feigned scorning
And smoke Flora de Cabbagias rank;

If you can meet the butcher, grocer, baker,
Doctor and dentist with a pleasant smile,
Nor wonder at the whimsies of the Maker
Who gave insurance agents all their guile;
If you can trim your weekly pocket-money
Till you locate it with a microscope,
And still can deem the situation funny,
Plugging along and keeping up your hope;

If you can chuck the weekly game of poker,
Successfully concealing all regret;
Pass up a straight tip from your erstwhile broker,
Calmly refrain from placing one small bet
While the home team is straining every sinew
What time the yearly pennant race is run—
You've got the makings of a husband in you;
And you did the right in marrying, my son.

THE DRIVE TO CALAIS.

Despatches credit the German General Staff with the intention of shortly resuming its offensive to make a drive at Calais. Months ago the Germans failed in the effort to "back their way to Calais." They were defeated and driven back and since that time, save for their long distance bombardment of Dunkirk, they have held the French ports in their region alone. Now that they have relieved themselves of the Russian pressure in East Prussia and Galicia they seem to be again turning their thought to the French shore of the British Channel as the objective of their grand strategy. Some of the German military experts who are permitted to write for the newspapers are preparing the public mind to acquiesce in the great exertions which a renewal of the drive at Calais must entail. Naturally these experts give Calais a tremendous strategic significance. One goes so far as to say that Germany in possession of Calais is master of the world. Calais is less than twenty miles from Dover. The latter place can be bombarded and the bombardment can be used to cover the invasion of England, according to these seers of visions particularly flattering to the Kaiser.

With all due respect to the German General Staff and with the frankest recognition of its energy and ability, one is at liberty to paraphrase an old saying by reminding the German military experts of the importance of first getting their Calais. The common report that a break is between Kaiser Wilhelm and Marshal von Moltke was on the desirability of Calais. Parts was the objective and Moltke was the wisdom. His advice being rejected, he went into retirement, where he remains. Now the Kaiser has a free hand, but none the less he must overcome the same objections and the same obstacles that influenced von Moltke. He must break through the Allies' lines to get to Calais and he must do more. Unless he annihilates the French, and Belgian armies in Northern France and Belgium they will be on the flank of his forces and he will between them and the deep sea, a far from enviable position. He must take millions with him, for if the Allies escape a perfectly crushing defeat they will be able to muster millions to operate against him.

But suppose that the Germans do get to Calais, destroy the fortifications that guard it, and set themselves on the shore looking at the white cliffs of Dover, only eighteen miles away—what then? How are they going to cross "the silver streak?" Where are the transports to carry them over? To send anything less than a great army across would be madness. To convey it would require hundreds of steamers, and all the German steamers of the first-class capable of providing quarters for from 2,000 to 3,000 men each are interned or tied up in their home ports. The absolute mastery of the Channel is essential to an invasion of England from Calais or Boulogne. The Channel is likely to be held with British warships and auxiliaries for Great Britain has by no means put all its navy in action, and the French fleet would be at hand to reinforce those with which familiar to its officers and men. When Napoleon mustered his hosts at Boulogne he had built a flotilla of hundreds of light craft to carry them across the Channel. These transports, always held in readiness, were to be convoyed by Villeneuve's fleet of warships. Villeneuve's fleet never came; the British blockade of the flotilla was never lifted. Napoleon abandoned his project, yet he was operating in his own country, with the enthusiastic support of France. He did not have enemies on his flank and rear. His enemy was at his front, posted in great number on that British shore which he could lay day after day with his fieldpieces.—Boston Transcript.

MR. D. V. SINCLAIR TELLS OF HIS TOUR TO CALIFORNIA

Educational Value of a Trip Such as The Ontario Proposes—The Luxurious Character of the Hotels Enroute—Magnificent Scenic Features.

Brockville, July 15th, 1915.

To the Editor of The Daily Ontario:—

Having returned very recently from a Two Months' trip to the great Panama-Pacific Exposition now being held in San Francisco and San Diego, California, and having enjoyed every moment of our trip, it was a source of real pleasure to me to read on my arrival home that the Ontario newspaper, through the enterprise of its proprietors, was about to make possible a visit to these great exhibitions, as well as an extended trip through the most wonderful country on this great continent of ours to the eight prize winners in the Ontario Competition.

While planning our trip we thought how to take advantage of almost every possible attraction, and yet I am free to confess that the trip proposed by the Ontario has advantages over that selected by us, and knowing what I do of the many attractions that present themselves for the admiration of the tourist, I am free to confess that the Ontario management have selected a tour and placed at the disposal of the winners of your competition, many advantages that were beyond us to enjoy, for when I was informed that such hotels as the La Salle of Chicago, the Antlers of Colorado Springs, the Manx of San Francisco and the U. S. Grant of San Diego were among those selected by the Ontario for the comfort of their guests, I was made to feel that the very best hotels in America had been selected to add to the attractions of this wonderful trip, for these are some of the best known American hotels and are such that the man or woman of average means, has to be contented with viewing from the exterior—and I confess we could not afford to stay at these hotels, although on some occasions we took advantage of the splendid concerts rendered by expert musicians during the evening hours in the beautiful rotundas of these great hotels. Just here let me say that a tourist misses a great deal who does not avail himself of the privilege of visiting the great hotels and if we may speak from experience we would say, the tourist is always welcome even as a visitor.

The route selected, going via Chicago, Denver, Colorado Springs, Salt Lake City and thence on to Los Angeles, with many other privileges to enjoy your prize winners to see the great Exposition at San Francisco and San Diego, where you will find so much more than to view the wonderful buildings, representing as they do architecture, ancient and modern, the latest and best that the world's best buildings all of which are surrounded by great expanses of lawns, ornamented and filled with many species of flower, plant and tree known to tropical climes, yes if only once, to say nothing of the attractions to be seen within these buildings, for Ontario representatives would feel they had been amply repaid for their efforts they had made to secure a place in this wonderful trip.

And then apart from the attractions of the great Exposition, a trip through California from east to west and from the extreme south to the north, covering more than six hundred miles through this land of sunshine, fruit and flowers, of snow peaks, delightful dark and cool nights where after the most strenuous day they retired quietly and awaked refreshed and rested, always ready for the sights of another day, ever finding that the new day adds to the wonders of the preceding one. And now while I admit the many attractions of such a trip as you have outlined through the republic to the south; I do not hesitate to say that the wonders of the return trip through our own Canadian West including as you do stop over privileges at Glacier, Lake Louise, Banff etc., with a visit to such Canadian cities as Victoria, Vancouver, Calgary, Winnipeg etc., these I say will leave pleasant memories that will linger with one, long after the wonders of the Exposition are forgotten.

If I may be permitted to make a suggestion I would say there are dozens of readers of your great family journal, who belong to the honest profession of school teachers, who for a place among the prize winners in your contest, could well afford to employ every spare moment in securing subscribers to your paper, in order that they might secure a place among the fortunate eight, and I would suggest further that the teaching profession regard your generous trip such as they would a post-graduate course in the world's greatest school, the School of Travel.

If I was a member of a School Board, I would, other things being equal, give the preference to a teacher who had by personal experience, learned his or her Geography by a trip through our own great Dominion.

And now in closing may I wish the Ontario the success you deserve, for placing within the reach of so many of your readers a trip that they will remember and profit from, as long as memory lasts.

Respectfully yours,

D. V. Sinclair.

Record Factory Out-put

Citizens were somewhat alarmed on Friday morning about ten o'clock at hearing the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. blowing its whistle at a furious rate. Upon inquiry we were informed there was no fire at the factory nor had the engine blown up, but the tooting of the whistle was only the joyous announcement that over one thousand auto tires had been manufactured in the factory during the preceding 24 hours, the exact output being 1,063 tires! The demand for Goodyear tires both in Canada, the British Isles and Australia is enormous during the past year requiring the installation of thousands of dollars worth of new machinery as well as several hundred additional employees to operate the machines. It is reported that at least one hundred men will be employed in the factory are now working here at the big Goodyear factory. If a man wants to work he can surely find employment in Bowmanville.—Bowmanville States man

Editor is Recovering

The Stratford Beacon announces that its editor, Mr. William E. O'Beirne, who has been confined to his house for some time owing to a serious attack of apoplexy is recovering and hopes to soon be able to again occupy the editorial chair. This is cheering news for his friends, many of whom were given to understand that his illness was of such a serious nature that his ultimate recovery was doubtful.

Patriotic School Girl

One little girl in Bowmanville after hearing the letter from Major Beattie, Chaplain of the 40th Regt., which was read in Bowmanville Methodist church some time ago, decided to give the money she had given her for passing her exams at public school and accordingly took it to one of the members of the Women's Institute as her gift to the needy soldiers. Her generous act will put to shame many older and very much better off who give people.—Bowmanville Statesman

Charge the Foe Without Officers

Canadians Proved That They Had Plenty of Discipline

Harry R. Free, formerly of Campbellford, who is at the front in France says in writing to a friend: "Perhaps you have heard that the Canadians had no discipline. Well, let me tell you that our battalion, No. 3, stood to charge without officers and pulled it off. It is the word of a parson. Does that look like discipline? Well, we dressed by touch and go for about three days. The gas helmets were hellish. I could smell them two miles away. We all have respirators and gas helmets now, and there is little to fear from gas. On the front we now occupy we 'go through German trenches and up about half a mile to our first line, lined through the roads made proper here. Occasionally we chew off a few yards somewhere, but 'tis the whole line does not change very rapidly."

Water in Rideau is Very Low

Navigation along the Rideau waterway is becoming more difficult each day. The steamer Rideau Queen, which last year ran to Ottawa, had to be content in making Smith's Falls its destination this season on the outset. Now however, it can go only as far as Nelson Ferry. The motor launch owners are lamenting over the condition the Rideau is in. On account of the shallow water the weeds have grown to an enormous length and boatmen have often been not half so small far before his propeller is twisted up tightly with weeds. It is a costly job for launch owners to get a motor boat enthusiast trying to extricate the weeds with a pike pole.

Muskoka Lake

NERVOUS CHILDREN

Hard Study and Too Little Exercise Leads to St. Vitus Dance

There is much criticism of modern educational methods that require too much work of school children, allowing them too little time for play and preventing sufficient out-of-door exercise. This criticism is in many cases by any other accomplishment, with the necessary practice, is added the strain in the nervous system. Under conditions the blood becomes impoverished and fails to nourish the nerves. The child becomes restless, and twitching of the muscles follow. Sometimes the child stumbles in walking and drops what it tries to hold. Pallor, listlessness and nervousness are symptoms that early show that the blood and nerves are suffering. Such children should be sent equal Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, which build up the blood, strengthen the nerves and safely help to meet the demands made upon them, and that St. Vitus dance has fastened its hold upon the child. Fresh air, moderate exercise, plenty of sleep with these tonic pills will soon restore the most severe case of St. Vitus dance. We offer fat following case: Mrs. Johnson, of Hemford, N.S., says "my son Calvin was as healthy and rugged as any child could be. Then he began to complain that his eyes pained him and would close in the head and began to fall back in his studies at school. Then came a twitching of the muscles of his face and arms, and later his whole body seemed to be affected. Doctor's medicine did him no good but did not seem to improve. We had taken him from school and were taking him home, although quite sick, but notwithstanding he grew worse, and the doctor said would bring on attacks of hysteria. This went on for some time until Dr. Williams' Pink Pills were brought to our attention and we decided to give him this medicine. After using the boxes there was a noticeable improvement, and by the time he had taken nine or ten boxes he had recovered his former good health. There has been no sign of a return of the trouble, and I can sincerely say how thankful we feel for the complete restoration of our son's health."

Parents who find their growing boy or girls becoming nervous should lose no time in giving them Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. You may ward off an attack of St. Vitus dance, or if the trouble has reached that stage the Pills will effect a cure. Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

MEET OPPOSITION WITH A SMILE--IT MEANS SUCCESS

Everybody Loves a Scrap--That is Why Popularity Contests Thrive Best Where There is Vigorous Opposition--A Word About Organisation--The Result of the Poll to Date.

In some districts where there is a keen and spirited contest as in Districts IV and V there is a disposition on the part of certain candidates to loop courage and to drop out.

We cannot emphasize too strongly the idea that candidates need not worry about other candidates working or coming into the same field. The more there are the better, not only for The Ontario, but for the contestants themselves. These campaigns flourish only when there is real opposition. The candidate who is working in some section all by himself will find it slow up-hill work unless he is an exceptionally good canvasser. But let one or two rival candidates enter the field and at once there is an intensification of interest. People watch proceedings with as much zest as a lover of good horses follows his favorite in a racing event. The net result, is that where there is spirited local opposition each canvasser can get ten dollars as easily as he could one before, when he was alone, without proper competition.

There is in all human nature an inherent love of anything in the nature of a "scrap." It makes little difference whether it is a public debate, or a general election, or a game of baseball, or a newspaper voting contest. It is all one and the same in effect. We pick our favorites and long with more or less earnestness for our side to win.

That is the whole secret about these popularity contests, and their success as a means for rounding up subscriptions. It is the love of a "scrap."

Therefore don't be afraid of opposition. Rather, pray for it, welcome it, go out to meet it with a smile as the one thing needed to bring success.

A city canvasser has asked us if we accept subscriptions in the city for a period of six months. The answer is that we do. While this is not given on the regular schedule its value in votes would be 375 for a renewal or 750 votes for a new subscription.

In today's statement of the poll there are few changes to record in the relative standing of the leaders in the various districts.

In District II, however, Master Jack Ortill, an active and clever high school boy, has forged to the front and now holds the lead. Jack was not contented to spend his holidays merely idling his time away. His friends are showing their admiration of his ambition and pluck in the most practical way by saving coupons and turning in subscriptions in his behalf. Jack is just at that impressionable age when one of our tours would be of as much value as a course at college. He has a spirited and hard-working rival for the leadership in Miss Gauthier, and this particular part of the contest will be watched with deep interest.

Mr. Wm. Morrison, the popular foreman of the Chas. L. Walters mercantile tailoring establishment has been nominated as a candidate in District I. Mr. Morison is very popular and has a host of friends who will be very active in his behalf. He will prove a formidable rival of those already in the field.

A number of candidates are still showing a tendency to confine their activities to the collection of coupons. In this they are most unwise. The coupons are all right to supplement the other vote for subscriptions, but they should be made supplementary. No candidate can hope to win out by the employment of this means alone. Collect coupons to be sure as far as you can, but don't neglect to do so, but do not allow this work to monopolise any great amount of time. Three hours spent in landing a new subscription become more effective than three hours spent in collecting coupons.

The collection of coupons, particularly in the country districts, can be carried out with less effort by having the various subscribers to leave them at a store, post office or some handy point for collection. Then the candidate could leave a few stamped envelopes addressed back to himself. If the coupons are left blank and the envelope left unsealed they will be carried for a one-cent stamp. The candidate can then fill them out at home and remail them to The Ontario office.

But be sure to mail them in so that they will reach our office before the time of expiration. They will positively not be honored after that date.

Some of our candidates are organizing little clubs among their friends to facilitate the work of canvassing. One canvasser is assigned a certain street, or 5 certain customers or neighborhood where he or she is well acquainted and has a certain "pull" with the people by way of acquaintance or business relationship. In this way one candidate becomes a miniature army.

Possibly the candidate might not be able to secure a subscription from certain parties at all, while it would be easy work for some friend who was intimately acquainted, or who had some special influence with the party canvassed.

We all have our intimate friends and where one candidate might himself fail to produce any argument whatever to gain a subscription it might be only the work of a minute for some other person canvassing in his behalf. You all have your friends. Many of them are so situated that they can help you for a few hours a day with your canvass, and will be only too glad to do so. There are many favors to be had for the asking.

The Hotel of The Century

"The Fort Garry," the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway's magnificent hotel at Winnipeg, is described and pictured in the latest booklet issued by the Company. The combination of simplicity and elegance which characterizes "The Fort Garry" is splendidly portrayed in the illustrations of the spacious public rooms of the hotel. Fourteen stories in height, and built of steel and stone, "The Fort Garry" undoubtedly one of the finest buildings in Canada. The people of Winnipeg very proudly refer to it as "The Hotel of the Century." Every modern appliance has been used in making the house perfect in its appointments, and in this regard, and also in the matter of service, it confidently challenges comparison with any of the famous hotels of America or Europe.

WORRY.

Do not try not to worry, says a writer. While contentment is a pleasing virtue, to people who are contented would be better off if they worried more. Absolute contentment and indifference to the possibist troubles of others will land anyone in the poorhouse. The cow does not worry, neither does the horse; but people are built to worry, and it was intended that they should. On the other hand, to worry too much will land anyone in a lunatic asylum. It is just the golden mean on the one hand and the poorhouse on the other; the point is to worry just enough to keep out of both of them.

Different and Better Clothes

The Two Piece Suit

This is the time of year when a man wants to wear as little as possible. If you wear one of our cool Two-Piece Suits, it's certain you won't "wear a worried look."

But there are two considerations in a Two-Piece Suit which call for the most competent tailoring. In the first place, the coat must be so tailored as to obviate the need of a vest. In the second place, as the fabrics are extremely light in weight, the tailoring must be done with the greatest skill.

Fabrics of carefully selected Sun-Proof Serges, Worsteds, Homespuns, etc., etc.

It you'll step in and try on one of these cool Suits and then take a look in the mirror, you'll be surprised to see what a swell and comfortable looking fellow you are.

We've everything in wearables for a man's summer comfort.

Gipsies Guilty of Assault

J. Watson, G. Walsh, and T. Brooker, gipsy horse traders, were up before Trenton Magistrate Rankin on Tuesday, charged with committing an assault on Mr. G. B. Curran. The men camped on Robbin's hill, near Mr. Curran's home, and their horses wandered on to Mr. Curran's premises. In an ensuing altercation over the horses the assault was committed. The men were found guilty and let off on suspended sentence, on paying the costs.—Napanee Beaver.

MR. WHITMAN
233 St. Valier St., Montreal.

"In 1913, I was taken suddenly ill with Acute Stomach Trouble and dropped in the street. I was treated by several physicians for nearly two years. I was told I had Chronic Dyspepsia. My stomach and my weight dropped down from 225 pounds to 160 pounds. Several of my friends advised me to try 'Fruit-a-tives' and I did so. That was eight months ago. I began to improve almost with the first dose. No other medicine I ever used acted so pleasantly and quickly as 'Fruit-a-tives', and by using it I recovered from the distressing Stomach Trouble, and still take it for Constipation and misery were cured. I completely recovered by the use of 'Fruit-a-tives' and now I weigh 208 pounds. Council Decide to Abate th Sabbath Dust Nuisance

Deputy Reeve Patterson occupied the chair at the regular meeting of the town council on Monday. The gentlemen were Mayor Bush, Reeve Chislett and Councillor George.

Councillor Sherriff raised the question of watering Walton street from Brown to Mill streets when necessary on Sundays. He intimated that many respectable people open head about the dust nuisance on the Lord's day. He told how one merchant had carefully swept out his store on Saturday night and how a great quantity of dust had found its way into the shop by Monday morning. Councillor Sherriff and the street was watered at Cobourg on Sundays

Councillor Howevear —If we water the street on Sunday the Lord's day Alliance will have us prosecuted.

Moved by Councillor C. E. Sherriff, seconded by Councillor George A. Smith that the chairman of the fire and light committee be authorized to sprinkle Walton street from Brown street to Mill street on Sundays when necessary.—Carried.—Guide

Rich In Gold

Very favorable report is to hand from the gold prospect of Messrs Feency & Cowain on lot 4 in the 2nd concession of Hastr Mr. Cowain, our Govt. Engineer, visited the spot one day last week and expressed surprise and delight with the geological formation of the district. Samples were taken from a 12 ft. vein at a depth of 6 ft. and showed gold at any point which the rock formation was highly pleased. Three samples previously sent to Mr. Armour from the vein assayed at 70 and 80 dollars in gold to the ton. If the engineers report is favorable the property will be taken over by a party of capitalists who will begin development work at once. The mine is located about a mile and a half from the C. N. R. station at Actinolite and is reached by a first class gravel road.—Tweed Advocate

BIRDS FORETELL STORMS

Crows and Swallows are Particularly Good Barometers

To one who understands the habits of birds their actions foretell changes in the weather with as much accuracy as the observations of the government scientists. Weather bureau forecasts on telegraphic reports and their own study of atmospheric conditions. Indeed, there is nothing more remarkable in nature than the ability to foretell the weather which some birds instinctively display, and which a little study enables others to grasp.

If birds which are known to fly high and for long distances, such as crows, and the different kinds of swallows, are observed flying close to the earth, or hopping near their nests, it is almost a certain indication of a storm, with heavy rain fall.

The reason for the action of such birds is simply because these birds depend upon insects flying in the air for food, and insects do not fly high preceding a storm, because the atmosphere is so heavy. During fair weather, when insects are lighter, and insects can fly higher, and consequently range have to fly lower and higher in distance to secure their food.

An unusual silence is frequently noticed among many birds a short time prior to a severe or sudden wind or thunder storm. Robins sometimes will perch a high twig and sing long and loud just before what is called a "downpour" or shower, but seldom do it the storm is going to be a severe one.

Bats flying high in the air in the late evening indicate fair weather. This is because the insects which the bats are after are flying high, when the lightness of the atmosphere allows them to do so with ease.

For centuries persons who have observed closely have insisted that rain is certain to come when birds and barnyard fowls are to be seen vociferously oiling their feathers. Others declare that when fowls rub themselves in the dust and clap their wings vigorously, rain is indicated.

The Zuni Indians have made many interesting and valuable observations concerning the weather changes, and these people declare that when chimney swallows, martins and other species of swallows fly in circles, and try out loudly, there is certain to be rain in the next few hours.

When cranes scream and make a loud noise, and seem to be restless, and when herons fly swiftly up and down, and seem to be dissatisfied with any location they may take along a stream, it is sure indication of rain coming.

When great horned owls are heard hooting in the deep wood for more than a few minutes at a time, a storm is indicated, either rain or snow, according to the season. If grouse are heard drumming at night we are told, is the close season for rain. While we may expect a heavy fall of snow. This drumming is a practice we seldom heard nowa-days, as forests containing this very useful bird are growing very scarce.

When crows fly in pairs and to great heights, we may expect fair weather; while if they fly lower and wheel in great circles, making an unusually loud noise, rain is near at hand. Crows flying alone are also certain indications of an approaching rainy period. When crows make a very loud noise they are usually quarrelling in a great battle, and these contests are certain indications of a sudden and very severe change in the weather.

Though peacocks and guinea fowls are very noisy we may expect a sudden squall or heavy rain. Their chatterings foreshadow rain as well as merely as any first class barometer.

At sea, or near large bodies of water, gulls are seen soaring very high and uttering shrill sounds before a change in the weather, especially if the change is to be a stormy one. Hours long ago learned to heed their warnings.

Blackbirds singing quite early in the morning, and continuing their song well into the forenoon, foretell rain. When they utter very sweet and liquid notes fair weather is indicated.

Pigeons which are in the habit of making long flights return to their homes or make only short flights just before a rain.

MAN'S PRIME OF LIFE

At what age is a man in his prime? Opinion varies. The period of greatest efficiency has fluctuated between 21 and 60. Medical science has recently been interesting itself in this question. As death rates decrease and the health of the average man grows better, the period of efficiency, mentally and physically, must extend also and later life.

A man to-day retaining his health and efficiency at 50 is the equal of a man of 60 or 100 years ago because of the improvement in his condition, due to progress from dozey and degenerate days.

For example, the death rate from tuberculosis alone in 1850 was twice as heavy as it is to-day.

A higher average of years of personal care due to education has done its share to extend the working powers of man beyond the age of 35—considered the "ripe age" a hundred years ago.

In 1890 the death rate in Canada was 16 per thousand. To-day it is less than 14. Then the average length of life was 35—to-day it is 50.

This means that men are better preserved now-a-days and therefore more valuable. Time has not yet claimed or gains its grasp on affairs as sharply at 50 to-day as it did at 35 in 1850.

Men are sent into the discard later in life—ripe experience is coupled with keen mental power and good health—all looking towards the betterment of mankind and the progress of the world.

In ancient Greece amethysts were worn round the neck to prevent intoxication; hence the name, which means "uninoxicated."

THE GOOD WORK OF LORD KITCHENER

Day by day

"Whom the Gods intend to destroy they first make mad," is a very ancient adage. This Teutons are mad, evidently, and belong, we solemnly trust will be overcome; but, not destroyed. Take down your Shakespeare and read the play of Julius Cæsar, particularly the quarrel between Brutus and Cassius. History reproduces itself, and in the terrible state of things existing between Lord Kitchener and Sir John French, you will see that there is much in that play applicable to the present embroglio. The food relates back to the Boer war, and the surrender of Cronje with his immense army; Kitchener received the most of the credit deservedly but Sir John French has always felt that he never received the praise which was due to him from that surrender. The enemy feel it, that there is and has been for years two parties among the war lords and their respective friends, one favoring French's position, one Kitchener's. Matters came to a head a few weeks ago, and in consequence, a terrific state of things exists of a highly dangerous character to Great Britain. Lord Northcliffe is the owner of the "Times", the "Mail" and half a dozen more of the leading papers, which influence public thought the world over. He has been a warm friend and eulogist of Sir John French, and visited him for a number of weeks at the front. The result was a furious and venomous attack upon Kitchener by all of the newspapers owned and controlled by Northcliffe. So intense became the conflict that the government threw up its hands in despair and requested Asquith and Churchill, and Balfour and Beresford were at once given, and the Government could go on. The present condition was formed, and is composed of such diverse elements that its long continuance would appear impossible. The Liberals joined Bonar Bole on the Statute Book, Sir Edward Carson, the Leader of the Unionists and deadly enemy of Home Rule, is now a member of this hybrid Government, side by side with Asquith and Ireland has sent over one hundred thousand men to the front. Redmond, the apostle of Home Rule, has been travelling all over Ireland to obtain recruits for the Army. How can the Government be an amicable and powerful family party? French's party supported and retained Lord Roberts, and Kitchener dismissed that great soldier and illustrious man, the Duke of Connaught, from his position as President of the Military Promotion Bureau. Now the stunned, unlining friend of Kitchener is our imperial and beloved King, who has recently conferred upon Kitchener the most distinguished honor he could bestow by making him a Knight of the "Garter"

The most shocking and terrible thing that has been done in this conflict, was done by Sir John when he sent his emissary to say to the British Parliament, that so ineffectual were Kitchener's plans, that had it not been for the indomitable bravery of the French, the army of the Allies would have been defeated and destroyed within the six weeks preceding the delivery of this message. This statement was intended to destroy Kitchener and to cause his dismissal. Fortunately for the country, and I may say, the world, this attack failed and the result was the "Garter" to Kitchener, and the calling to his support of the leading statesmen of the country. The course pursued by French has (it is said) caused much friction with four of the French army. Joffre says that the French have had to bear frequently almost the entire burden of the war maintaining a front of 336 miles as against the British front of about thirty miles. Joffre urged French with his army of about three millions, to make a rapid advance, and overcome the Teutons before the vast army advancing from the east could reach the German line on the west. But French would not move, but contented himself with the terrible wastage of trench fighting.

It is a melancholy fact, that a number of generals of the greatest renown in the British army have retired from service. No greater General than Smith Dorien lives, with the possible exception of Kitchener. You will remember his wonderful advance with his small company in the teeth of the German army, and how he saved the Allies from ominous defeat. Well, this gallant officer has retired. Where is Baden-Powell the hero of the Boer war? French's party tried to throw the blame of defective explosives upon Kitchener. They also blamed him because the army was not adequately supplied with munitions. The plain, simple fact is, that the labors and success of Kitchener cannot possibly be over-rated. He found Great Britain asleep. He aroused her, as no other man could do, and what has he accomplished? He has created and moulded into fighting shape a grand army of millions. He has borne the immense burdens without a complaint. Not one word has he replied to the bitter attacks of his opponents. Silent, reticent, he goes on his way, bringing order out of chaos, forming the great army, which, notwithstanding all difficulties, will yet drive the Teutons out of suffering Belgium and France, and we hope, trust, and believe, will, in due time, place the royal standard of Great Britain upon the Berlin capital.

Long live the King and Kitchener!

Yours,

John J. B. Flint.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT TO CONTEST WORKERS

Subscription Values Doubled

To afford workers in the Panama-Pacific Voting Contest greater encouragement in the collection of subscriptions the publishers have decided for the remainder of the campaign to make all subscriptions count double what they do now, with the exception of the five-year subscriptions in the City of Belleville. This will apply to all ballots that have not actually been received and counted at The Ontario office, but will have no reference to coupons cut from the paper which will remain at ten votes each as at present.

The schedule from now to the close of the contest will therefore be as follows, the higher values going into effect at once,—

PASTOR RUSSELL

The great author and lecturer, President of the International Bible Students Association and Pastor of London and Brooklyn Tabernacles, will deliver a lecture next

Monday at 8 p. m.

at the GRIFFIN THEATRE

on topic being, "The Battle of Armageddon." The Brooklyn Pastor comes at the invitation of the Associated Bible Students of this city.

Pastor Russell's recent public utterances have attracted special attention because of the fact that during the past forty years he has frequently expressed the conviction, based upon the interpretation of Bible prophecy, that a time of unprecedented trouble was impending and would become world-wide. The time set by this Bible scholar was the autumn of last year. Since the outbreak of hostilities in Europe he has been delivering a series of lectures specially relating to the war and Bible prophecies respecting its outcome. His address here next Monday is one of these.

"The present conflict in Europe is but the prelude to an even greater struggle, according to Pastor Russell's view. He believes the following conflict will be largely the results of the poverty and distress occasioned by the war and the discontent these will cause, finally leading to social revolution and anarchy. This succeeding conflict, the Pastor declares, is clearly marked in Bible prophecy and termed, "The Battle of Armageddon," and described by Christ as "a time of trouble such as was not since there was a nation." This final trouble, the venerable preacher believes, will prepare the world for, and usher in the long-promised reign of "peace on earth and goodwill among men," at the hands of the Prince of Peace.

Pastor Russell is an independent religious worker, and has won world-wide distinction as a defender of the Bible and because of his "anti-hell-fire" teachings. He is a familiar figure here, having visited this city a number of times during his long career of public life as author and lecturer. During the past year, the Pastor created quite a sensation by the launching of a moving-picture exhibition detailing the story of the Bible from the creation to the "Paradise restored." This progressive method of carrying on evangelistic work has proven eminently successful according to the report of the Bible Students Association which financed the production. The Drama, styled "Creation," has been shown during the past year throughout this country and the United States, and is now being presented abroad. Many hundreds witnessed the production here last summer, when free exhibitions of it were given daily at the Palace Theatre for several days.

As usual, it has been announced that no admission charge will be made at this lecture, and no collection taken.

RECRUITING CAMPAIGN TO BE LAUNCHED IN BELLEVILLE

Local Branch of Speakers' League Formed Last Evening—Prominent Speakers Will Come to Belleville—Officers Elected Suggestions For Stimulating Enlistment.

A Belleville branch of the Ontario Patriotic League to stimulate interest in recruiting in this portion of the territory comprised in the Third Division."

There was a large and enthusiastic gathering of men in the committee room in the city building last evening. Mayor W. H. Panter presided. Among others present were ex-Mayor Lt-Col. L. W. Marsh, ex-Mayor W. F. Wills, K.C., Mr. J. W. Johnson, M. P.P., Lt-Col. W. G. Ketcheson, Lt. Col. S. S. Lazier, Col. W. N. Poston, K.C., Ald. W. S. Smith, Ald. E. O. Platt, H. F. Ketcheson, H. L. Ingram, W. C. Mikel, K.C., Capt. Ruston, J. Elliott and others.

Col. Lazier moved seconded by Mr. J. W. Johnson, M.P.P. that "we form a Belleville Branch of the Speakers' Patriotic League to stimulate interest in the war and assist in recruiting in the territory comprised in the third military division."

Mr. J. W. Johnson thought the military men should lead in the organization.

Col. Lazier said in the Old Country the civilians were leading in the work.

"Our object is to enlighten the people" said Col. Lazier "and then the military men will come in and enlist men who are influenced."

Col. Marsh said two recruiting organizations were working daily at the armouries. They are on duty and are on the streets. The officers and non-commissioned officers are busily engaged. They are doing all they can do. "They visit the pool rooms and the hotels and use all the arguments possible to urge the men to enlist"

The object, he said of the Speakers' League was to stir up the citizens. Lt-Col. Ketcheson substantiated the remarks of Col. Marsh. This week he had enlisted 22 men, nine on Friday The 49th had moved to the street and was meeting with success. His officers in all districts were organized to be on the look-out for men.

Lt-Col. Marsh said recruiting speeches could not bring in so many. You must get the public enthusiastic

Mr. Johnson said he was strongly of the opinion that recruiting officers should be largely represented at any patriotic meetings.

Mr. J. F. Wills said you would have to talk to the men in the crowds on the market place or on the streets.

Mr. H.-F. Ketcheson—"You want a movement to shame parents who are opposing their sons' enlistment"

Mr. Johnson—"I think the churches should open their doors to that sort of thing. Our very lives are in danger

Mr. Ketcheson—"Some 42 young men have gone from our church and you can count those of eligible age, who have not gone, on the fingers of one hand

After some discussion officers were elected as follows—

Hon. Pres—Sir Mackenzie Bowell

Pres.—E. G. Porter, K.C., M.P.

1st Vice Pres.—W. B. Northrup, K.C., M.P.

2nd Vice Pres.—Lt-Col. W. N. Poston, K.C.

Sec.—W. C. Mikel, K.C.

Treasurer—H. L. Ingram

Executive—Lt. Col. W. G. Ketcheson, Lt.-Col. L. W. Marsh, Lt Col. S. S. Lazier, J. W. Johnson, M.P.P., J. F. Wills, Mayor Panter, Ald. W. S. Smith, Ald. Dr. Platt, J. O. Herity and the officers ex-officio, four to constitute a quorum.

Mr. Mikel moved that arrangements be made to have Dr. Michael Clarke and others as speakers for a public meeting here. The motion carried.

It was decided that the pastors of the various churches be requested to preach on the necessity of enlistment by young men, and that the various leaders of the city be asked to present the claims of enlistment upon the men.

Mr. Mikel suggested that the citizens in general be asked to act as recruiting agents in and about the city and that an appeal be made through the press.

It was decided to procure literature of a character to stimulate recruiting to be placed in pool rooms, hotels, and all public places in the City of Belleville

Mr. Mikel—"How would it do for the military authorities to get a list of men of fighting age in the city and try to go after them and see what can be done"

Mr. Mikel suggested getting out statistics and inviting comparisons

Mr. H. F. Ketcheson suggested that a special effort be made to get the fathers and mothers of boys to attend the patriotic meetings.

Mr. Mikel moved that the ladies of the city be especially asked to assist in recruiting.

The offer of Mr. W. S. Northrup, K.C., M.P. to entertain the speakers during their visit here was received and acknowledged

The meeting adjourned to meet on Monday evening in the military tent on the armouries lawn or in the officers' headquarters

Letter From Capt. O'Flynn

Letters were received today from Captain O'Flynn at the front bearing date the 1st of July. He says that Capt. Poston has not returned to the trenches but had learned that he had been cleared to the base hospital. He was afraid that his friend might have fever but was not sure. He did not anticipate anything serious and said that if anything arouse in which he was actually ill he would write to Col. and Mrs. Poston. He mentioned in his letter that he was writing to Mr. McLaren Brown in London, F.R. Manager and no doubt he would cable home.

The Captain says that the Belleville boys are all well and in good spirits; that one of the boys got a card from Charlie Gibson and he is getting along fine.

He sent best wishes to his Belleville friends. He says that matters are rather quiet in the part of the country where the Canadians are but he cannot tell when things will change

Horse Turned Somersault

A peculiar accident happened to a horse belonging to McWilliams & McWilliams this morning. The animal was driven by Mr. Floyd Gray and when going over the crossing at the foot of the Royal Hotel bill it slipped on the cement. For a second it appeared to recover its footing and then its head went down between its legs and it turned a complete somersault falling on its back with its head toward the buggy. The horse was soon unharnessed and got on its feet again Except for a couple of scratches it appeared to be uninjured and neither harness or rig were broken or damaged. How the animal escaped breaking its neck is a mystery. The act would be a winner in a circus.—Marmora Exchange

Death of Sergt. D. L. Anderson

On Thursday, July 1st, Mrs. A. L. Anderson received the sad news from Ottawa of the death of her son Serg. Donald Lawrence Anderson, killed in action in France. Mrs. Anderson's other two sons are still at the front. Sincere sympathy is extended to the family in their bereavement. The following letter has been received by Mrs. Anderson:—

Sergt. D. L. Anderson,
1st Canadian Con.,
British Rx. Force,
3rd Batt. 1st Brig.
B. Co.
France, June 16, '15

Dear Mrs. Anderson:—

It is with regret that I have to inform you of the death of your son, Sergt. D. L. Anderson on June 17. Dear old Andy was in my platoon, and was my chum. In fact, he was everybody's chum; and was one of the jolliest and cheriest boys I've ever known.

We all sympathize with you in your great loss. Our only consolation is that he died very quickly and suffered no pain. We buried him where he fell, and erected a cross to his memory. With deepest sympathy,

I am, Yours very truly,
Edward Harvey.

Germans Attempted to Carry Positions on Cliffs Along Wide Fronts—British Line Quiet—Heavy Artillery Engagements Proceed in Artois, North Arras.

The engagement was commenced by a violent artillery bombardment begun under cover of Friday night and Saturday morning. Next came a violent infantry attack on the French positions, extending from the Calonne trench to Les Eparges Village and on the southern ridge of the Bonvaux ravine. At one point the enemy succeeded in gaining a foothold in the French position. This was in a trench captured from the Germans on July 6. Some parties of Germans who succeeded in creeping into the Bonvaux ravine were either killed or taken prisoner. In the section between the Bonvaux ridge and the Calonne trench, the Germans were completely repulsed with heavy losses.

Mr. Herbert George who was taken into custody here two weeks ago and interned at Fort Henry, Kingston, as being a Turk, was on Friday, at the instance of Messrs Porter & Carnew granted an unconditional release. Mr. George proved himself not a Turk but originally a Syrian and took the oath of allegiance to Great Britain three years ago, and is a Protestant, an Orangeman and a Oddfellow.

RUSSIANS HOLD GROUND IN FIGHT ON GREAT FRONT

Violent Engagements Prevail From Dulester to Baltic Sea—Win Some Success—Enemy Defeated on Dulester and Cossacks Make Brilliant Win Near Radom.

LONDON, July 19.—Violent fighting has broken out on the thousand-mile front in the Russian theatre of war, and in all cases the Germans and Austrians are advancing to the attack They are meeting with a desperate and heroic resistance by the Russian advanced troops, who are firmly holding their lines or slowly withdrawing to more strongly fortified positions.

The Russians gained what they describe as a rather important success against the Austrian troops, who had crossed the Dniester River The enemy was thrown back with the loss of about 2000 prisoners and seven machine guns in one day's fighting.

More than ten attacks were delivered on the road to Lublin by Austrian and German formations in one day, these being all repulsed by the Russians. Great losses were inflicted on the enemy, who attacked in great masses the Russian forces stationed on the right bank of the Vlepez River and occupying positions on the Volitka River, the foe leaving heaps of dead in front of the Russian trenches. On the left bank of the Vlepez River great masses of German and Austrians also were launched in a vilcent attack, and they succeeded in making progress northward in the Inderzo district, near Krasnistav. Despite suffering heavy losses, the Russian troops held their ground and repulsed the furious attacks which were delivered till late in the evening of Saturday.

On the Russian front between Grabovets and Berestie, trenches held by two Russian companies were all that were captured in desperate attacks of the enemy, delivered in the course of two days' fighting.

Old Boys in Town

About one hundred and fifty visitors from Toronto came to Belleville by G.T.R. and C.N.O.R. on Saturday, the occasion being the annual homecoming excursion. Sunday was spent quietly in town except for a concert by the Fifteenth Regimental Band at Victoria Park in the afternoon. A large crowd latched to its music and much enjoyed the breezes of the old bay.

CUNARD LINER'S SAFETY MARGIN ONLY TEN FEET

German Torpedo Missed Stern of Orduna by Half a Second—Americans to Protest—Chicagoan Will Lay Situation Before the Wilson Cabinet at Once.

NEW YORK, July 19.—The Cunarad line Orduna, bound from Liverpool to New York with 227 passengers, including twenty-two Americans, was attacked with out warning it was learned on her arrival here Saturday, by a German submarine, on the morning of July 9.

Twenty miles from the graveyard of the Lusitania, off Old Head of Kinsale, the Orduna escaped the Lusitania's fate by one-half a second of time, or ten feet of space, the German torpedo churning the water that distance behind the liner's rudder. Then the Orduna sped away. She was followed by the submarine, which rose to the surface, manned a gun on her deck and shelled the fleeing steamer.

The attack was timed at 5.50 o'clock in the morning, when all but a few of her passengers lay sleeping in their berths. Aroused by stewards, the passengers dressed hurriedly and went to the upper decks, where they put on lifebelts and took their places at the lifeboats. They heard the boom of the shells and saw the ocean spit up columns of water where the shells struck. When the fire grew hot they were ordered for their own protection, to the next deck below.

Bulgaria Breaks With Turkey

LONDON, July 19.—A ministerial order was issued today, says The Times' Sofia correspondent, under date of last Thursday, "definitely suspending railway communication with Turkey. The step appears to have been taken in consequence of continued Turkish interference with traffic, and may probably be regarded as marking the collapse of the negotiations for the cession to Bulgaria of the Dedeagatch railway."

Wounded Soldier Here

There is in this city a soldier who has just returned from the front. He has suffered several wounds. His leg had been pierced with several rifle bullets and he lay for over a day without help. A German party came along and one of them stabbed him. Fortunately the bayonet wound was only in the leg.

GREECE'S POLICY DENOUNCED BY VENIZELOS

Former Premier in Accepting Call to Party Leadership, Made Attack Upon the Government for Ignoring the Wishes of the People—A Grave National Danger.

LONDON, July 19.—An Athens despatch to the Central News says: "At a meeting held today, 186 members of the chamber of deputies requested M. Venizelos to resume the leadership of the Liberal party. The ex-premier in accepting, said it was his duty to obey the call of the people as "wavering foreign policy of the present government constitutes a grave national danger."

M. Venizelos attacked the government for remaining in power against the wishes of the people, and expressed the opinion that with the removal of King Constantine affairs would resume their normal state.

MONDAY, JULY 19, 1915.

A SIGN OF THE TIMES.

Henry Ford, of Detroit, whose work seems to be chiefly keeping people on the go and cutting melons measured by millions, says he has no political ambitions. In other words, Henry, notwithstanding he has amassed a competency, has no notion of dedicating himself as some would say or, speaking in the terms of those who hear the call of friends to get in the race, of devoting his time to the service of the people in some political position.

This is a sign of the times which have changed somewhat since the day when so many piled up dollars and then got a hankering for office and official honors, and it's a good sign too. It indicates satisfaction with business, with conditions under which business is conducted now, it also evidences the large appreciation of the fact that mixing business and politics is neither honorable nor profitable. The man who today makes millions and knows his business and knows that his business is not politics is in position to be of service and at the same time get a pretty large degree of satisfaction out of life. All that, however, is no discouragement to the public which can still call the man and insist upon his service, even if he has a pretty good pile of dollars to his credit and has at the same time the honor, the ability and the courage to serve.

Mr. Runciman, President of the Board of Trade, in a recent speech at West Hartlepool, made some very useful and encouraging statements about the war situation. The British numbers in Flanders, he said, were "adequate for any task which the Germans might set us, and now, while we were holding our own on dangerous salients, the French were advancing hard for yard. But our turn would come, and when it did our men in the north would play their part gallantly, as they did in the past." With reference to explosives, he said, "it is true now that we have enough explosives for our own use, and some to spare for our Allies. We have not, however, got enough munitions of war, and we believe, at the pace we are overtaking the requirements of the moment, we shall soon have enough, not only for ourselves, and Russia, but possibly if the French need them, for the French as well." "He was afraid this was not likely to be a short war, but we know the German methods, and whilst not adopting these methods we could bring against the enemy methods which were just as strong." This assurance from a leading member of the government in the Old Country is distinctly encouraging.

A long and instructive article on "The Problem of the Submarine," by Frederick A. Talbot, a noteworthy feature of the "World's Work," by Talbot, who is a leading authority on the subject, so far from regarding the submarine as a serious menace, considers that the war has served chiefly to reveal its relative impotence. The measures adopted by the Admiralty have, says, abundantly justified Mr. Winston Churchill's remark, that its menace has been "fixed within definite limits." "At the moment," he observes, "it is not possible to describe the dodges and more practical ways which have been devised for locating a submarine, but should these traits become vouchsafed after the war a wonderful story of ingenuity and fertility will be unfolded." The employment of waterplanes for their detection has proved very useful, among other devices, while not only for detecting but also for destroying the boats when located there are many different methods. The comforting conclusion is "The Great War has witnessed the rise of the submarine to its zenith; still it also record its passing?"

"The British front in Flanders remains remarkably quiet." Noting this, the Philadelphia Record says, according to Lloyd George, now Minister of Munitions, the war is costing Great Britain $15,000,000 a day. For at least sixty days the British army in Flanders has been "remarkably quiet," keeping watch in the trenches, and in that time the expenditure of the government have totalled the enormous sum of $900,000,000. And it adds:

"Of course, there are some big items to the credit of that $900,000,000. It has maintained magnificent fleet, which has accomplished very difficult and important work as well as, if not better than, any other fleet in the world could have done. It has kept in operation hundreds, if not thousands, of establishments engaged in the manufacture of munitions of war, and the vast supply of shells and high explosives now being turned out must exert a powerful influence on the fortunes of war some day. It has maintained in the field or in training from 2,000,000 to 3,000,000 officers and men, who should now be in the pink of condition for active service. It has extended financial aid to Russia, Servia and Montenegro, and possibly even Italy. Doubtless there must be many calls on that $15,000,000 a day, of which the world knows nothing. Certainly it has done vastly more than guard a trench line of some thirty miles in Flanders."

The German propaganda in the United States has recently expressed itself in the form of what are called "neutrality posters," which are exhibited in many cities throughout the country. These posters, in effect, express the view of the insane dynamiter of the Capitol at Washington, and would-be assassin of Mr. Morgan. They misrepresent the President of the United States, and advise, as the Boston Transcript says, unneutral, pro-German action by stopping the sale of munitions. The display of these posters has called forth an emphatic protest from Gertrude Atherton, the distinguished American novelist. Mrs. Atherton objects to these "disingenuous posters" as a defamation of patriotic American women. American women, she holds, are "defamed by the unneutral posters because to aid victory of German arms is to aid the eventual destruction of democracy, the annihilation of the principles of America as epitomized in the Declaration of Independence." Her protest is promptly replied to in New York by the decision of the Mayor forbidding the display or the obnoxious posters. In Baltimore, the Police Commissioners have taken similar action, and it is expected that American public opinion will compel the removal of the objectionable bill boards in every city where they are exhibited.

An American who recently returned from Europe tells the New York Sun that persistent efforts are being made by the Allies to secure the assistance of Holland. While they believe they can force the Germans lines on the western front, they know by experience that this will be an extremely costly operation, whereas if Holland were on their side an army could be thrown into that country which would turn the German flank. "England," says this American, "is offering her all sorts of guarantees, but Queen Wilhelmina is notably obstinate, and the influence of her German husband is, of course, exerted against such a move. I even heard rumors that the possibility of sending an allied army through the Netherlands without Dutch consent was being considered by the Allies, but was unable to find much ground for these rumors. Such action on the part of the Allies would seem to be the more unlikely since Germany's invasion of Belgium has shown the effects of such wanton violations of neutrality on public opinion in other countries."

THE TOY BAND.

A Song of The Great Retreat.

Dreary lay the long road, dreary lay the town,
Lights out and never a glint o'moon;
Weary lay the stragglers, half a thousand down,
Sad sighed the weary big Dragoon.
"Oh! if I'd a drum here to make them take the road again,
"Oh! if I'd a fife to wheedle, Come boys, come!
You that mean to fight it out, wake and take your load again,
Fall in! Fall in! Follow fife and drum!

"Hey, but here's a toy-shop, here's a drum for me,
Penny whistles, too, to play the tune!
Half a thousand dead men soon shall hear and see
We're a band!" said the weary big Dragoon.
"Rubadub! Rubadub! Wake and take the road again,
Wheedle-deedle-deedle-dee, Come boys, come!
You that mean to fight it out, wake and take your load again,
Fall in! Fall in! Follow fife and drum!

Cheerly goes the dark road, cheerly goes the night,
Cheerly goes the blood to keep the beat;
Half a thousand dead men marching on to fight
With a little penny drum to lift their feet.
Rubadub! Rubadub! Waken and take the road again,
Wheedle-deedle-deedle-dee, Come boys, come!
You that mean to fight it out, wake and take your load again,
Fall in! Fall in! Follow the fife and drum!

As long as there's an Englishman to ask a tale of me,
As long as I can tell the tale aright,
We'll not forget the penny whistle's wheedle-deedle-dee
And the big Dragoon a-beating down the road again,
Wheedle-deedle-deedle-dee, Come boys, come!
You that mean to fight it out, wake and take your load again,
Fall in! Fall in! Follow the fife and drum!

Other Editors' Opinions

THE TWEED ROAD.

Possibly some comment through this public organ would not be out of place in relation to our county road between Tweed and Belleville. It seems to us very peculiar that a road running between Madoc and Belleville can be kept in such a splendid condition while we who are fully entitled, both by our population and amount of taxes, to an equally good service are receiving in return for our money such a rough and treacherous road that the pen of the writer would hesitate to express the true feelings of those who are constantly using it.

Cannot something be done in this matter? We do not claim any influence with our county politicans neither can we expect that they who represent us in this locality to do it all themselves but still we think possibly a little action on their part and the co-operation of those affected by this particular road would stand a pretty good chance of giving us at least a road that would not be a disgrace as a public highway for buggies or wagons.

This comment is offered with the best intentions and in the hope that it will draw this matter to the attention of the proper authorities who possibly do not know what condition this road is in.—Tweed News.

BURNING THE PEOPLE'S TELEGRAMS.

The underground workings of Government wrong-doing unearthed in Manitoba have brought to light several matters with which the people of Canada are none too well pleased. Crookedness seems to have been rampant and whether it was fostered most in the breast of the liberal or conservative party it matters not so long as the house-cleaning is complete and the Royal Commission, acting in behalf of the people's and the Crown, do their duty. One complication which threatened to accentuate the seriousness of the case was the burning of the telegrams transmitted over the wires of the Great Northwestern Telegraph Company. It was supposed that they were significant and should be produced for the consideration of the Commission. Much to the astonishment and surprise of all they had been burned and the people were deprived of important evidence relating to the matter they were investigating The President of the Company issued a statement to the effect that confidence in the secrecy of such communications as passed over the wires must be maintained and that the Company was justified in destroying copies of such messages.

The President's statement has not vindicated the company or justified the action in the eyes of the people. Forgetting the provisions of Magna Charta and caring not whether the late Government is guilty or innocent so long as the truth is known, are we to suppose that the wires joining the Atlantic and Pacific and erected for personal business by charter from the people are to be the carrier of messages from crook to crook, or traitor to traitor without chance of exposure If the company must go to such limits of secrecy in order to maintain the confidence of an honest clientele there is something wrong with the patrons of the wires, the majority must be dishonest.

Business men do not approve of the destruction of telegrams for in many cases they are the only records of business transactions intact. A public servant then whose energies and efforts are for the people's and in whose service he is employed should not stowish to withhold from them copies of the messages sent in their behalf If the telegram is personal or private, it is to friend or colleague to colleague it is a reflection upon the character of both if the contents must be kept a secret. The startling aspect of the whole affair was the cremation of business telegrams as well as personal and private which had been entrusted with the G.N.W. lines for transmission and safekeeping. It appears that the rights of many had been ignored to protect a few. Assuming that the majority of Canadians are honest it is no more than right for the Dominion to demand the production of messages transmitted over the wires in this Dominion. The absence of a certain amount of privacy might be taken advantage of by a few but when the people as a whole rise up and demand investigation of matters concerning their homes, their Government and their country no company or private individual should be allowed to destroy evidence of vital importance to all.—Farmer's Advocate.

Toronto, Ont., July 2.—Pastor Russell spoke here to-day on the text, "The Father Himself loveth you" (John 16:27.) Among other things he said:

This is one of the most wonderful texts in the whole Bible. We think how great God is and how little a man is when we consider that sin has blotted out every large quantity whatever there was of God's image in humanity, we are constrained to wonder why this text can mean. We are not surprised that the Father loves Jesus, for He is perfect, without blemish in any sense of the word. But how could He love mankind? We read, "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him might not perish but have everlasting life." (John 3:16.) This text tells of some kind of great love that God had for the whole world of mankind.

God had a sympathetic love for humanity, not an affectionate love; but there was nothing in Father in it worthy of Divine love. He felt just as we would feel for some poor injured dog or cat—we would bind up its paw and give it something to eat. This is the sympathy for the world takes notice of the fact that mankind have gotten into a great deal of trouble ,through the curse which came upon Father Adam through disobedience in his Creator's command. Divine mercy and sympathy have gone out toward our race to such an extent that God has provided a great Plan of Salvation for mankind. He has provided the death of our Lord Jesus Christ to be our Redemption-price—not to recover us from eternal torture, but from death. Unless we were rescued from that perishing condition of death, we would have no future life whatever.

His first great step on behalf of mankind toward our getting eternal life into a sleeping condition. Instead of perishing as do the brute beasts, when mankind fall asleep, in the death, in the morning of the New Dispensation, when our Lord will call forth those sleepers from the tomb, (John 5:28, 29.) They will be called forth to the opportunity for restitution to human perfection in a world-wide Paradise—a restitution for which God has made provision based upon the death of our Lord Jesus. Restitution lifting mankind out of sin, misery and death—all who will be willing to do right. St. Peter tells us that this Restitution is mentioned by all the Holy Prophets. (Acts 3:19-23.) In their writings are repeated references to the wonderful time when the Lord's obedient shall be brought back into fellowship with God, and the wicked shall be destroyed in the Second Death.

Over and above Divine love for mankind in general comes the love manifested in our text. God so loved the world that He provided for their redemption from sin and death. But in the Scriptures we find Jesus says, "The Father Himself loveth you." This is addressed to this class except the saints—those in covenant relationship with Him through Christ. (Psa. 50:5.) It does not include those who merely have turned from sin to say, "I will not lead a wicked life any longer." To these the Father is paying no attention. They are still of the world, still condemned, still children of wrath, and under the curse, which will transfer them from being children of wrath to being children of God.

We are not to think of the Heavenly Father as exercising no discretion in bestowing His love. If He loves any one, He loves him or her for some reason. So in the character of those in whom our Lord has referred there must have been something which constituted them worthy of the Father's love. The commendable thing in their character was that they had given themselves to God to do His will. They had come back into God's family as sons. John 1:12, 13.

Adam had been a son of God; but he sinned and forfeited the Father's love. When he came under the sentence of death, "Dying, thou shalt die," he was cut off from fellowship with God. He and all his posterity became sinners under the death sentence, unworthy of Divine notice or care. While God has permitted certain blessings to come to mankind—the sunshine, the rain and other material favors—yet He has kept Himself aloof from our race, and has treated mankind as aliens and strangers. Their claim upon Him was forfeited when disobedience came in.

Since all mankind were born in the condition which would not be acceptable to God, and since the Church are still in very much the same condition, why does the Father love those who have given themselves to Him in consecration? It is because from the Bible viewpoint a very great change took place when they came into the family of God. There is only one way back into harmony and fellowship with the Father, Jesus is the way. He as the Bible points out, in harmony with Father's Plan, gave His Life and gave Himself sacrificially, with all the rights which He had as a man; and in the merits of His sacrifice is to be applicable to Adam and his race. Christ's death is the satisfaction-price for the sin of the whole world. And although it has not been appropriated by the whole world, God is inviting a certain class to come out of the world in advance of the remainder of our race. Of these our Lord said, "They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world."—John 17:16.

Those disciples whom Jesus was addressing had come out of the world. They had left everything that they might be H's pupils and the most right thing in the right way. Thus to be children of God we: their belief sim and anointing. The first step in this direction is justification—the being made right, the Justification and righteousness mean the same thing; they are different ways of expressing the same thought. We must be made right with God before He will deal with us at all.

God has permitted six great Millennial Day Days the world to have experience with sin and death. During all this time He has not manifested any favor, nor did He to help themselves out of sin and death conditions. We have seen the sorry failure of it. The wisest people in the world have been unable to deliver themselves from the bondage of sin and death that is upon the whole world. God's time for delivering mankind is the great Sabbath of the Lord our God, when Jesus and His Church will be associated in the blessing of all the families of the earth.

During man's Work Week the race has had a severe lesson of what sin is and what it will do. As we look over into Europe, we see what evil passions can accomplish, and the savagery there is only beginning; it will be far worse. With all our preaching and teaching, with all our surgery and medicine, we have not bettered our race very much. When we perceive that sin has accomplish this evil work, we should see very readily that it is the most terrible thing that can befall any one. When the whole world come to realize the true situation, then will know that the entrance of sin is the worst thing that can happen.

According to the Divine Program for human salvation, the Lord Jesus Christ was to be a sacrificial work for the race; next the Church are to be gathered out from amongst mankind, and then the Millennial Age was to begin. When our Lord Jesus gave His life freely and unreservedly to the Father in consecration at Jordan. God started a New Creature, by begotten of the Holy Spirit to the Divine nature. He was coming up out of the water, the Holy Spirit came upon Him, anointing Him to all the glorious work which He is to accomplish as the great King and the great Priest for the world of mankind.

When the Father planned this New Creation in connection with human salvation, He arranged that the New Creatures should be those who would give up all their own rights as men, laying everything at His feet, and desiring to know and to do His will. As our Lord was the beginning of this New Creation, so the Church is the second step in the Father's plan. Jesus is the way. The Church are the truth, and the life are the saints; and in no man cometh unto the Father, but by Me." (John 14:6.) The first members of this Body came from the Jews, to whom the call was first made. Jesus was a man; they were the natural seed of Abraham, God had told Abraham that He would give the first chance to the Jews. It is wonderful to contemplate how this plan was read; for the call. Probably twenty-five thousand Jews responded quickly to the Gospel message, thus showing a wonderful condition of consecration to God and His ways.

Then the door was thrown open to the Gentiles. They were not many of those ready for the call; and so it has taken nineteen hundred years to gather from amongst the Gentiles enough to complete the exact predetermined number. This has already been as thoroughly consecrated as were the Jews, the increased number might have been found during the first century. But the Gentiles had not had the previous instructions of the Law to assist them, and therefore it has taken much longer time to take out the proportionate number. They were called out of the world to be followers of Jesus—invited to make the same kind of consecration to God which He made, and to receive and to manifest the same Holy Spirit of the Spirit of anointing.

During this Gospel Age the Father is calling only those who have the spirit of His Son, whose disposition was one of faith and obedience. These cannot have the same degree of obedience because their flesh is imperfect; but they have the same degree of obedience as they have the same degree of faith in the mind, as He discerns it. We can will to be whatever we will, but we cannot do as well as we will. He knows far better than we do that we cannot perform the things which we would. The Apostle said, "Yes, I judge not mine own self. * * He that judgeth me is the Lord." (1 Corinthians 4:3, 4.) St. Paul did not know how much allowance to make for even himself; and we do not know how much allowance to make for ourselves, or anybody, our friends, our brethren.

Therefore the Lord informs us not to judge one another for whatever kind of judgment we mete to others will be the standard of our own judgment.

The ability to criticises others manifested a knowledge of what constitutes the wrong act or word, and renders the one acting to be judge the more responsible. We are to render all the help we can to others, and to leave them to their discipline of the Lord. He alone knows what extenuates His people and have. Therefore His people should avoid all judging, condemning and fault-finding, and be judging and and and punishing which He may see necessary.

In the Millennial Age mankind will simply put away sin and try to live as nearly right as possible. Then God will bring them up to perfection. But in this Age it is different. Those who come trusting that Jesus has made satisfaction for their sins, a certain measure of His merit is imputed as soon as their consecration has been accepted by the Lord. For instance: Suppose the one who offers himself to God is full of weaknesses representing twenty per cent. of a perfect human being. Since he is willing to give his little all to God, and since Jesus imputes to him eighty per cent. Thus the whole person has the one hundred per cent. representing the perfection of human nature, imputed to him." Then our Lord, the great High Priest, takes His own eighty per cent. and presents it to the Father, and then presents it all to the Father. Just when we give take the same right of reckoning then the Father begins to love us with a special love.

The Father's love, which began when He begat us with His Holy Spirit, continues with us as long as we are loyal to Him and in proportion to the degree of our loyalty. Should we at any time prove disloyal, like Judas Iscariot, the Holy Spirit would withdraw from us, and the forgiveness for errors made through weakness would be withdrawn. Disloyalty to the Lord will not be forgiven. A sin against the Holy Spirit will never be forgiven.

We should all be very careful not to have any spirit—covetousness—to barter off the Lord or the Truth or the brethren for thirty pieces of silver or for any kind. Some believe the Lord is saying, "For business reasons I must do this deal." They are not loyal to the Lord by declaring, "I know that I am not pleasing to the Lord in business, I am slandering God's character and His Word, as well as misrepresenting myself and the Lord and the Truth." Why should such persons be acknowledged before the Father and before the angels? But only the Lord could determine whether such were worthy of the second death. They are not be of the Body o: Christ, however.

Those who are found able to do which God has called us! Those who have been begotten again by His Holy Spirit have been anointed with the Holy Spirit and begotten to be kings and priests unto God and to reign with Christ a thousand years. There are tribulations identified with all their experiences; nevertheless, they have tribulation!, they also have the Holy Spirit as a comforter and helper and understanding. As the Bible declares, all things are working for good to Christ's, and Christ is God's. (He has promised grace sufficient for every need. Those who are members of His shall work together for good to them. Because they love God and are the called according t Him Purpose.

"Love Divine, all Love excelling, Joy of Heaven to Earth come down."

COOLER IN SUMMER AT SAN FRANCISCO THAN IN BELLEVILLE

A Delightful Climate Both at San Francisco and San Diego Where Temperatures Higher Than 90 Degrees Rarely Occur

Many of those in The Ontario's Panama-Pacific Contest have been under the impression that the Californian climate would be oppressively hot in the summer season. Nothing could be farther from the truth. We have interviewed Mr. Wm. Morrison, who has spent two years in California upon this subject. Mr. Morrison spent several months in both San Francisco and San Diego and knows both cities intimately.

"In San Francisco," said Mr. Morrison, "the nights are always cool and the days pleasantly but not oppressively warm. In the evening a light overcoat or wraps are almost always required, even in the warmest days of summer."

San Diego, Mr. Morrison described as having the finest all-the-year climate he ever experienced. The days are bright and although 600 miles farther south than San Francisco he never suffered at any time from the heat. At no time did he experience a temperature higher than 90 degrees. But 90 degrees at San Diego is nowhere nearly so oppressive as a similar temperature would be at Belleville, owing to the absence of humidity. Fogs, which sometimes trouble some at San Francisco rarely occur at San Diego.

Rain rarely falls either at San Francisco or San Diego. The official average annual temperature at San Francisco is 56 degrees. September is the warmest and January the coldest months. The mean temperature of September is 59.1 degrees and of January 49.2. In the last twenty years the government records show only twenty-seven days in which the temperature exceeded 90 degrees, and in the same period it has not fallen below freezing point.

As the mean temperature at Toronto for July and August is 68 degrees, it will at once be seen that San Francisco with a mean temperature of 59.1 degrees for September, its warmest month, is very much cooler than it is in Belleville during the heated period of summer.

No visitor to California, however, should return home merely having gone to San Francisco. In that case they miss seeing altogether the tropical part of the state with the orange groves, fruit orchards, ostrich and alligator farms and other features on intense interest to visitors from the northern zone.

The Daily Ontario party traverses California from the extreme south at San Diego to the northern bound to, making a journey in that state about of nearly 2000 miles.

Watch for the standing of candidates in tomorrow's issue.

Souvenir From the Missanabie

Lt.-Col. Ponton received a souvenir on Saturday morning that he will greatly prize. It was a menu program of the farewell dinner given by the official staff of the Missanabie to the officers of the 39th regiment as they were approaching their destination. The menu was signed by all fifty of the officers of the 39th and by Commander Evans of the Missanabie.

In an accompanying letter from Col. Preston, the latter described the wonderful system of convoy that has been arranged by the British Admiralty. A destroyer met the Missanabie a thousand miles out to sea and kept circling about the great ship until port was safely reached. Although the Missanabie was going ahead at top speed the little destroyer had no difficulty in cutting rings around her.

Customs Officers Catch Excursionists

That mindreader who said the ferry was to be hit with a bomb or torpedoed on the occasion of the excursion to Rochester on Wednesday was not the boat, it was the excursionists who were hit by a bomb. The bomb was Jas. Bugler of H.M. Customs at Cobourg. As each gay excursionists stopped on the boat at Rochester with his or her little parcel stuck under their arm they were politely but firmly told to leave it with the customs officer and write their names on their parcels. The cause of this was quite exciting. Each hat, waist, dress, pair of shoes and various articles of wearing apparel that they had on when they left the shore without at Rochester were assessed 42½ per cent. duty. One young lady told Mr. Bugler it should only be 25 per cent. duty. He obligingly told her 7½ per cent. war tax had been added to that duty. The excursionists had to "cough up" to get their parcels back, and what promised to be a nice pleasant shopping trip turned out to be a stern business transaction. And the rain which fell all the way back did not dampen the spirits of the happy excursionists half so much as the efforts of the customs representative.—Cobourg Sentinel Star.

How Lasher Was Arrested

Walter Lasher who escaped from Belleville gaol on Wednesday last was arrested on Monday morning by chief Ponton and Constable Barrett, and with him a girl named Ida Weese, of Belleville. Since escaping from gaol Lasher and the girl made a try to get over the border but failed, and had been hanging around the vicinity of Napanee for a couple of days. They came with $71 from a farmer near Selby, and the police have been on the lookout for them. Late Saturday night they were reported near town but an all night search failed to land them. Monday morning they were located on the railway track and by a little scrapping were easily caught between the two officers. Lasher was taken to Belleville to answer the theft charge and breaking gaol. The girl who has been posing as his wife and who had lived with him previously, was charged with vagrancy and remanded for a week.

Ida Weese, the girl arrested with Lasher on Monday, was brought before Police Magistrate on Wednesday and discharged with a warning.—Napanee Express.

World's Longest Cantilever Stand

Mr. W. G. Morton, of Lachine, and formerly of Toronto is in the city yesterday the guest of Mr. W. H. Morton, Victoria Ave. Mr. Morton holds the responsible position of inspector for the Dominion Government of the new Transcontinental bridge now being erected over the St. Lawrence at Quebec. The Dominion Bridge Company has the new contract and have been busily engaged on the work for the past year. It will require at least two years yet to finish the work to completion. The central span of the bridge is 1800 feet—the longest cantilever span in the world The river at the point where the Transcontinental crosses is 400 feet deep with a very swift current. Above the surface there must be more feet left clear below the bridge so as not to interfere with navigation. Every piece of material that leaves the shops at Montreal is rigidly tested and inspected by government officials before being passed. The company had to install a whole outfit of special machinery for the work.

Great Guns on the Elizabeth

A pinnace, once we were safely anchored, writes E. Ashmead Bartlett from the Dardanelles, takes me across to the Queen Elizabeth to visit the Admiral. This, the latest of our super-Dreadnoughts, is a relation of the only carrion of eight 15-inch guns, and a secondary armament of 6 inch. But these eight make every other gun I have ever seen look ridiculous and contemptible. The gunners say they can almost hear a penny 115,000 yards away, even with three-quarter charges. They have done some wonderful shooting right across the Gallipoli peninsula, over the towering ground near Gaba Tepe. The great ship has in turn received her baptism of fire, and has been struck by three shells, one of which went through the gunroom, but fortunately all the midshipmen were at their stations and no one was hurt. Another went through her unprotected side, high up, but burst without doing any damage. The third, I think, hit her funnel.

You get some idea of what a complete command of the sea we have obtained when you see how we are able to spare this our largest and most powerful dreadnought, for the operations against the Dardanelles, instead of carrying her off, as soon as completed, to Sir John Jellicoe somewhere in the North Sea. Very shortly there will be four Queen Elizabeths ready for active vice; therefore if the Germans ever intend to leave the shelter of the Kiel Canal, they had better do so soon. They have no ships afloat which can compare in gun power with the Queen Elizabeth

Bancroft News

Michael Pearson, a former resident of this village, but at present living in Dungannon, was arrested on Saturday on an information laid, by his wife, who charged him with assaulting her. He spent Sunday in the lockup and on Monday morning the complainant appeared on the scene and withdrew the charge after paying the costs.

Sam Bowers of Herschel was an inmate of the lockup over Sunday. He was charged by his father-in-law, Paddy Cox, with being drunk and disorderly and also with threatening to drown him and his wife in Baptiste Lake. Cox has a decided aversion to fresh water, even for drinking purposes, and he was afraid to go home on Saturday until he saw Bowers safely under lock and key. When the case was called Monday morning Cox was not on hand to prosecute, and Bowers was given his liberty.

Frank Jones of Marmora, drifted into town on Friday last from Hughes' camp, on Elephant lake, where he had been working. Under the exhilirating influence of Corby's "Special" he conceived the idea that as a flatic artist Jess Willard had nothing on him. The hallucination was rudely disturbed when a companion named Chisholm landed him one on the jaw. This brought the police on the scene, and it took two able-bodied men to intern Mr. Jones. He came up before M. I. A. Eby, J.P., Saturday morning, who thought he had had about $1 worth of fun and assessed him that amount, plus $5.50 costs. —Bancroft Times.

Peculiar Accident

A peculiar accident happened to an automobile belonging to Tanner's livery, Madoc, when enroute to Arden on Tuesday. The report states that Mr. Tanner accompanied by the county constable from Arden who had in his charge a prisoner whom he placed under arrest at Madoc. When nearing Kaladar something happened to the car that caused it to catch on fire and the occupants were forced to make a hasty exit. Fearing an explosion of the gasoline the owner of the car kept a safe distance away and all the inflammable material about it was consumed leaving a charred and desolate looking mass of rods and iron work standing in the highway. The tank of gasoline, strange to say, did not explode as was expected but the owner was not taking any risk.—Tweed Advocate.

Whitby's Boom

One of the good points about the building boom now prevailing in Whitby is that many of the houses under construction are being built by citizens as residences for themselves. Not a few houses, however, are being built for speculative purposes. There is just a fear in some minds that building will be over done. It is to be hoped that this fear will not be realised. Not for half a century has there been such a building boom in Whitby as exists today, where between thirty and forty residences are in stage of construction. This looks good. for there was a crying need for many new residences here.—Whitby Gazette.

Charged With Stealing Cow

Arthur Free, a farmer residing in the township of Rear of Leeds and Landowne, was found guilty of the theft of a cow from Alex. Carpenter, a neighbor, by His Honor Judge Reynolds this morning and sentenced to serve one month in jail. The witnesses for the prosecution were Mr. and Mrs. Alex. Carpenter, John Vallentgold, Ernest Rounsfee and Edward Brown. For the defence the accused was sworn. His claim was that one morning he found the cow in his herd. He milked it and turned it loose, but it wandered back into the herd. He was, he claimed, at the point of going to Gananoque to advertise his find when he was apprehended. Free was committed for trial at Gananoque last Saturday.—Brockville Recorder.

Clung to Canoe For Two Hours

Ward Burke, eighteen years old, of Prescott, had an experience Saturday which he will not soon forget, and narrowly escaped being drowned. He left Prescott about three o'clock in the afternoon in a sailing canoe for his father's camp four miles below Prescott. While in mid-stream a sudden puff of wind upset his canoe and he was thrown in the water. He clung to the canoe but was unable to attract the attention of anyone on shore. Finally he began exhausted and crawling up on the bottom of the canoe, lost consciousness. After being two hours in the water the upturned canoe was observed by a man named Duvall, of Ogdensburg, who at once put out in a small boat and rescued the youth from his perilous position, taking him to the camp where medical aid was summoned as the lad was still unconscious, and did not recover his senses until three o'clock the following morning. When the rescue was made the canoe was just entering the swift water of the rapids.

The young man is the nephew of Chief Burke of Brockville.

FIVE HORSES BURNED TO DEATH IN STABLE FIRE

International Hotel Barn Destroyed on Saturday--Adjacent Buildings Saved

The stables of the International or Burke's hotel were totally destroyed by fire on Saturday afternoon with the attendant loss of five horses. At one time it was feared that other buildings might fall a prey to the flames but thanks to good work of Chief Brown and his fire fighters, no considerable damage was done to the adjacent houses and warehouses.

It was about two o'clock when the barns were noticed on fire. Five minutes before there had been no trace of a blaze. The alarm was at once given and the citizens in the vicinity ran to the scene and aided in the rescue of horses which were stabled in the barns. This work was very dangerous as the whole building was emitting smoke in dense clouds. Some of the rescuers swallowed a great quantity of smoke and one or more were severely burned. Mr. Brennan of Tyendinaga had a fine team within the burning building and he rescued them at the cost of a burned wrist and scorching to his neck and cheek. His animals escaped with less than he for only the forelock and mane of one were singed

Five animals could not be got out in time. One of these owned by Mr Tobe, had been led to the doorway and there fell back overcome and became a victim of the fire.

The neighing and screeching of the burning horses could be heard distinctly for a few moments. But this grueling experience was soon over, as the animals sank unconscious to the floor.

Chief Brown on the arrival of his brigade at once hemmed in the fire from all sides. The gable end of the barn projected into the eave of the Graham evaporator building on Pinnacle street and the fire made a short catch here, but this was extinguished and as a good stone wall interposed, no damage was done by fire. One stream of water was kept playing over the roof which was of a patent substance. One line of hose played from Pinnacle street and another from the hotel yards. The small barn belonging to the Masonic property was partially destroyed, together with about one hundred dollars' worth of goods belonging to Mr. A. E. Bailey, unmoured. Outside of this only the hotel barns really suffered destruction. Even the drive house and adjacent sheds were saved. This was perhaps due in a large measure to the east wind which was bowing a way from the frame structures which are numerous in that district.

The residences to the number of about six were given Pinnacle street showed signs of blistering and smoking from the intense heat and signs of fire appeared here and there. One load of hose was turned on these buildings and amply protected these structures

The International barns were a part of the Doyle property and were insured.

One end of Graham's evaporator suffered somewhat from water and smoke

Mr. John Burke proprietor of the International, had no insurance on the contents of the barn, which were hay, grain and poultry

Four of the horses who each lost a horse were from Read, Tyendinaga, Jerry Hazniford, John Devan, James O'Neil and Patrick Fitzgerald. The other loser was Moses Tobe of Belleville.

Mr. Dan Stapley had the job of removing the dead animals

Hotelkeepers Please Answer

Three of the hotelkeepers in Cobourg have each contributed twenty five dollars towards the celebration there on July 12th, and the other hotelkeepers will give twenty dollars. The local hotelkeepers should paste this in their hats and refer to it regularly. The hotelkeepers made the money on July 1st and surely they should contribute something to the Dominion Day Committee. As it now stands the Committee are losers on the celebration to the extent of two hundred dollars. If the big benefactors from celebrations of this kind are going to join in and not assist, their celebrations will pass into oblivion. The Committeemen are quite willing to do all the hard work in arranging to show for the pleasure of every person but they do not feel that they should go into their own pockets for the benefit of a few. Think it over hotelmen and just figure out what your receipts would have been on July 1st without a celebration. We can tell you; not more than 15 per cent of what they were. The Dominion Day Committee made you the citizens of Cobourg. Will you help to stand the loss or let the Committeemen.

FIVE YEARS IN PENITENTIARY

J. L. Murray Convicted of Forgery--Under Influence of Dope.

Five years in Portsmouth Penitentiary was the sentence handed out this morning by Magistrate Masson to John Joseph Murray, alias Frank Murphy, on two convictions of forgery and one of uttering a forged document.

Murray is a druggist by profession and has held important official positions outside his profession. But he is devoted to the use of morphine in large quantities and it is said has taken quantities of the drug in tablets from doctor's offices.

Murray elected this morning trial by the magistrate and pleaded guilty to uttering at the Molson's Bank at Belleville a cheque for $27.55 purporting to be signed by Dr. T. A. Farnombe of Trenton in favor of F. A. Blake. He also confessed to forging this cheque. A third charge was read of having forged a cheque on the Molson's bank for $22.08 purporting to be signed by Dr. J. U. Simmons in favor of F. G. Gates. To this Murray pleaded guilty.

The magistrate stated that on Jan 8th the prisoner had been committed at Toronto for six months on charges of forgery and false pretenses.

Murray said he had spent only two months at Guelph and had been given dope every day

The magistrate stated that the sentence to be imposed would be in an effort to save him. Already in July the accused had committed two forgeries displaying an ingenuity, that if used in any right course have brought credit to any man. He would be imprisoned for a term so that the influence might wear out of his system.

On each of the three convictions he was sentenced to five years, sentences to run concurrently. The third offence would naturally result in a separate term, but, owing to the circumstances, it was made to run concurrently. His offences had been committed through the agency of the drug, although he would know he was wrong. There was no hope for him except in ceasing the use of the drug.

The court expressed the hope that whether he filled the full term of 5 years or not, when he left, he would have escaped the influence of the drug

W. D. M. Ghorey appeared for the prisoner. P. J. M. Anderson for the crown and W. C. Mikel, K.C., private prosecutor for the Molsons Bank

GOOD ROADS' EXECUTIVE TO MEET HERE IN SEPTEMBER

Have Just Returned From St. Thomas Where a Useful Session Was Held

Mr. L. E. Allen, who has just returned from the meeting of the executive of the Ontario Good roads' Association held last week at St. Thomas was more than delighted with the hospitality shown them by the St. Thomas members of the executive. Mr. Allen and Mr. Vernatyen extended an invitation to the executive to hold its September session in Belleville and this invitation will in all probability be accepted. The following account of a trip over the roads about St. Thomas we clip from Friday's issue of The St. Thomas Times.

The members of the executive of the Ontario Good Roads Association, who on Thursday made a somewhat extensive inspection of the district west of St. Thomas, were more than delighted with what they saw. Many of them living in the eastern part of the Province, where good land is interspersed with rocky land unfit for cultivation, were pleased to find that they were able to travel all day an fairly good loads and through a country that is uniformly the best for agricultural purposes.

The grain crops are looking well, the wheat being about ready for cutting. In some instances corn was tasseled, and show the effect of extensive rainfall, but in most localities even these crops are good.

The party arrived at Ridgetown and were met by Mayor Henry, Phil Bowyer and other citizens, and after having disposed of a sumptuous repast provided for them by the proprietor of the Arlington, they were escorted to the Government Park by Mayor Henry.

The Government are making this park a most desirable objective point for visitors. Every accommodation is provided for picnic parties. On the trip through the woods a great many deer were seen.

The roads through the park were recently constructed by the Provincial Government to enable access parties to take in all the beauties of the park in a short time

Among those in charge of the party were Warden McColl and Mayor Johnson. R. M. Anderson, C. St. Clair Leitch, N. S. Cornell, Reeve of Port Stanley, Reeve Smith of Yarmouth, President Penhale of the Publicity Association, and County Clerk McKay

The Warden of Middlesex, accompanied by the chairman of the County Roads Committee, the county clerk and engineer joined the party at Melbourne, accompanying them throughout the trip.

The officers of the Ontario Good Roads Association who enjoyed the outing were: Honorary Presidents, N. Vermilyea, Reeve, Belleville; A. Rankin, M.P.P., Frontenac; president, S. L. Squire, Waterford; vice-president, C. R. Wheelock, county treasurer, Orangeville; secretary-treasurer, Geo. H. Henry, Albany, New York; directors, W. H. Pugsley, Richmon Hill; J. J. Parsons, Jarvis; L. E. Allen, county engineer, Belleville; F. A. Seneeal, county clerk, L'Original; David Clow, Mallorytown; W. A. McLean provincial engineer.

CAUSES OF SOFT BACON

This Hogs and Those Fed on Corn Products Poorest Grade of Meat

In the manufacture of "Wiltshire sides" Canadian packers have experienced a great deal of difficulty with sides turning soft in the process of curing. In a soft side the fat is soft and greasy, and sometimes the lean of a selected. A really soft side is practically worthless, and even a slightly degree of tenderness detracts very much from the quality of the bacon. The Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph, and the Central Experimental farm, Ottawa, Canada, conducted extensive experiments in connection with the causes of soft bacon, and following are the principal points brought out in the investigation:

Lack of maturity.—Generally speaking, the more immature a hog is, the greater the tendency to be soft. Almost invariably the largest percentage of softness occurs among the light sides of bacon.

Lack of finish.—This hogs have a tendency to produce soft bacon. Marketing hogs before they are finished is, no doubt, responsible for a great deal of softness.

Unthriftiness in hogs, no matter what the cause may be, almost invariably produces soft bacon.

Lack of exercise has a tendency to produce softness, but this tendency can be largely overcome by judicious feeding.

Exclusive meal feeding is perhaps one of the most common causes of softness, especially when hogs are not given exercise. Some kinds of meal are more injurious than others, but wherever exclusive meal feeding is practised and the exercise is limited, pigs or less softness is always sure to result.

Corn.—Of the grains in common use corn has the greatest tendency to produce softness. Its injurious tendency can be modified by mixing it largely with other meal, or by feeding skim milk, green feed, and roots, but its tendency to produce softness is so strong that it must be regarded as an undesirable food for bacon hogs. Corn appears to give a good quality of meat in the case of the lard hog, but it must be remembered that the bacon hog is marketed at lighter weights and in thinner condition than the lard hog, and possibly this may explain why corn is unsatisfactory for feeding bacon hogs. It is possible also that the difference in the methods of curing may have an influence.

Beans seem to have a more marked effect than corn in producing softness, and should not be used for finishing bacon hogs.

This is the time of year when a man wants to wear as little as possible. If you wear one of our cool Two-Piece Suits, it's certain you won't "wear a worried look."

But there are two considerations in a Two-Piece Suit which call for the most competent tailoring. In the first place, the coat must be so tailored as to obviate the need of a vest. In the second place, as the fabrics are extremely light in weight, the tailoring must be done with the greatest skill.

Fabrics of carefully selected Sun-Proof Serges, Worsteds, Homespuns, etc., etc.

LAST OF DELEHANTYS LEAVES BIG LEAGUE

Five Brothers Starred at Baseball During Quarter Century—Greatest Players of All Time

In an obscure corner of a newspaper appeared the following notice: "The Pittsburg Federal League club is managed by Jimmy Delehanty." What of it? This: It was the passing notice of the last heavy of the world's greatest baseball family. Almost was the last of the Delehantys. The six sons of an obscure, hard-working Cincinnati boatman who became great ball players, each by brilliant exploits on the diamond, helped to spread the name of Delehanty in fame as enduring as the same kind. Bid, Tom, Joe, Jerome Frank and Will all played in the big leagues in the combination of the established option that a ball player's brother never makes good.

Bid, Tom and Jim were the oldest and the greatest of the family. He began to make a name for himself in the late 80's, and for eleven straight years occupied a big league reputation that has never been surpassed. For eleven straight years "Big Bid" batted well over .300, twice he passed the .400 mark, on one other occasion he hit but one point short, .399, and in the following year hit for .394. Three other years he averaged over .310, and his poorest season was that when he batted .313. Bid accomplished many feats with the willow; the most famous of these was probably his achievement in batting four home runs and a single in five times at bat in one game.

Bid Delehanty is considered by many as the greatest of old-time players and the best natural hitter that ever lived. Almost all of his career was with the Philadelphia Nationals, but he also played with Cleveland, and was a member of the Washington club when he was killed in 1903, by falling from a railway bridge.

The name of Tom, the second of the Delehanty, extended over fifteen years. He played with Cleveland, Joe, the third brother, starred with the St. Louis Nationals for two years. James was the fourth. He starred since 1900 as a star of many teams. He was played with nine big league teams and in every position on the diamond. Frank, the fifth brother, played with the New York Americans, and with Cleveland. Will, the youngest, never got a chance for a big league club, although he was drafted. An injury to his arm put him out of the game for good.

Jim was relegated to the Colonial League, in Philadelphia. He is thirty-five years old. He is the last of the Delehantys, and there are no more to take his place. It is the first time in nearly twenty-five years that the game has been without a Delehanty.

PASTURIZE THE SOIL

Many Fine Results Claimed for New English Treatment

They are pasteurizing the soil in England, thereby adding tremendously to its productiveness and greatly promoting the health of the vegetables which it supports. In a report of the Rothamsted experiment station Dr. B. J. Russell asserts that the process accomplishes the following results: First, it increases the production of nitrate of ammonia; second, it destroys many disease-producing organisms. Protozoa and organisms detrimental to bacteria likewise suffer; third, it forms certain substances not normally found in the soil; fourth, it works a very marked improvement in the heavy soils.

The effect on the plant is, in brief, to give it a larger supply of microorganic food and a healthier condition in which to grow. The work is generally accomplished by heat, usually steam, but the station is diligently seeking some means by which it may be done chemically, which would be to make the process at once cheaper and far more convenient. Experiments have been confined almost entirely to green-houses and nurseries, owing to the expense. But even so, the cost has been reduced from a shilling and a half per ton of soil to sixpence a ton, and the prospect for a still farther cheapening is good.

FILMS FOR STOKERS

Teach the One Proper Way to Keep Trains Going

A motion picture theatre on wheels has been inaugurated by the education department of several railroads for demonstrating fuel economy to stokers and engine drivers. The demonstration coach is equipped with a moving picture machine which throws pictures of the proper and improper firing of locomotives on a screen at the end of the car, and the classes for instruction occupy the regular car seats facing the screen. Some of the pictures show the difference between stiff-back firing, where the coal scoop is held tight with both hands and a jerking stab comes on the back each time a shovelful of coal is fired, and easy firing, where the scoop is handled properly and the coal is fired with a swing.

The pictures also show the open with which coal is placed when it is wanted when the scoop is held properly; the proper method of lining up the sides and corners of the fire box; the way in which to turn the scoop to put a fire directly under the door; the proper amount of coal to pick up in the scoop, and the bad results of picking up too much.

QUALITY OF POTATOES

Mush Depends on the Percentage of Starch in Tuber

Fortunately the factors which seem to influence quality in potatoes are within the control of the thoughtful potato-grower, writes an expert, commenting on the lack of knowledge in one branch of this subject. It is perhaps quite singular that little attention has been paid to the culinary side of the matter, to what really constitutes a good or poor potato. Form, shape and appearance are thought much of, but the potato should be conveyed to the kitchen to form a practical judgment. Boiling quality varies much, we know, and expert cooks have to try various methods of boiling and of steaming to get satisfactory results before they can get the best results in any case.

The seems largely to turn on the arrangement and proportion of the starch cells, not apparently, perhaps, on the actual starch matter, until it is realized that the palatability and flavor of potatoes are intimately connected with the progress of water and starch that they contain. Good quality largely depends on a high percentage of starch, and hence the popularity of plenty of light and heat for the formation of starch. Soil, too, probably, an open soil is best, because it is warmed, and so it encourages and that of the air seem to have a very important bearing on the fruitfulness and taste, according to test experiments on the subject—probably, than manuring, which gives very acequal results.

Manuring is a very important method, for too much is heard of different kinds of starving and bewilderment arises. The trade supply and the value of soil are also factors largely determining. Potatoes are sometimes forced upon fallows that are clean and in good condition.

Another factor which affects cooking quality is storage. When ripened and the affect of the former was shown a few years ago. Where slowly boiled in cold water and partially steamed, "mushiness" is marked (or "soggy," to the chemist" in flavor, texture and appearance, whereas the same varieties did not give this same result. Scotch-grown kinds then proved to be of superior quality to the same qualities, and after standing for 3 hours they and several others had fairkened and deteriorated. It is satisfactory that good qualities such as these can be closely connected with breeding and improvements, and it is to be hoped, therefore, that they will go hand in hand with selection for keeping qualities and other points hitherto so much insisted on.—The Maritime Farmer.

CARE OF BOOKS

The proper way to "break in" a book is to lay it open on a table and then open but a few leaves at a time, alternately at the front and at the back, until you reach the middle of the volume.

Some readers have the bad habit of keeping their place by opening the book with the cover upset, and then laying it down, still open. Limp leather bound volumes will stand such treatment, but those bound in boards will not. Almost as bad is the trick of keeping your place by putting it between the leaves some bulky object. If a volume is much used, the natural heat dries the paper and consequent shrinking will cause it to separate from its with a piece of furniture. Leaving a book constantly in the sunshine will have the same effect, and the binding will fade the covers. Damp places should also be avoided.

Bad packing, either for travel or for storage, is to prevent shifting and the resultant cross strains. Where a gap is unavoidable, stop it with paper. If possible, wrap the books in paper before you pack them.

Many book cases are made without doors; but a curtain will keep out an immense amount of dust. Nevertheless, dusting should be both frequent and thorough. No one should leave his books long in a standing position on the shelf unless he is willing that they should be permanently crippled."

Undeniably, paper covers are of some aid in preserving the fresh appearance of books, but their the appearance nor the feeling of a covered book is agreeable. Still, for those who have no objection to the cover there is a good thing. Nothing is better than ordinary brown wrapping paper for your annual cases, as, for example, the cookbook, which every careful housekeeper knows, should be covered with oilcloth.

Electric Boring Machine

Because boring stumps preparatory to blasting is an arduous task an inventor has devised an auger driven by a portable gasoline engine.

A Powerful Explosive

Salubite, a new explosive, is fifty times more powerful than dynamite, and is much safer, for it will explode only by means of the percussion cap.

A Deadly Wasp

Parsaguy is the home of a giant wasp so terrible that most native forest hunters fear it more than they to snakes, centipedes or spiders.

Best Light in Dusty Shops

Yellow flaming gas lamps have been found to give the best light in foundries as their rays penetrate dust, smoke and gases.

THE MAKING OF TIRES FOR AUTOMOBILES

Several Intricate Processes in Which Special Machinery is Used Before Tires Are Shaped Up

About the first process rubber goes through on the way to the tire maker's tube is mastication. After the crude gum is washed it is broken up into lumps and tossed into the crackers. These machines with heavy rollers which take the rubber to between them and "chew" it. Entering the masticating machine a cracker, the first impression is that there is a bunch of breaking or else there is a den of snakes at hand.

The rubber snaps and crackles like breaking branches and then it hisses mightily. The staff is kept at a small fit comes by the regular meals, very thin and looking like a sort of cake dusted with crumbs. Then after a thorough drying in vacuum chambers it is ready to be put in with the chemicals and other things that make up the compound.

Here the final compounding of rubber, that is after crude material has been thoroughly washed and dried many chemicals enter in order to produce the required results. In the compounding of rubber lies the secret of rubber manufacturing business success. The men in the workrooms, where the entire mass is put together, must know it becomes a plastic whole.

Rolling into Sheets

When the compound of rubber for tires and tubes has been worked up to the proper point of mixture and plasticity it is ready to be removed from the masticating machines and it is then transferred to another type of machine with heavy rollers. According as the distance apart of these rollers is the thickness of the sheet of rubber which runs through.

The material is worked in so th it runs around the lower roller continuously and knives set at certain distances apart resting on this roller cut off strips of rubber of desired width. These run off onto trays of no rolls, thus providing a convenient form of transporting them from one machine to another the rubber which is used for building up the sides of the tire as well as in making tubes.

When the linen rolls are taken about large saw run on long tables and the strips of plastic rubber are sliced at certain lengths to be used as plies for the tires.

Rubberizing the linen which goes into tires is done by means of a rubberizing machine, which grinds the plastic rubber into the fabric at high pressure and impregnates it thoroughly with the gum. The fabric for the breaker strips and canvas plies is first held at great heat in order to be thoroughly dry. Then it is ready to be wound into the calendars, which "frictions" the rubber into fabric.

There are three huge rolls on this frictioning machine, the middle one revolving at high speed and the lower at low speed. By the difference in the speed of the rolls the rubber is thoroughly worked into the cloth, which passes between one roll as the rubber revolves on the drum opposite.

How Casings Are Built

Casings for automobile tires are built up around moulds formed like a wheel. Strips of the heavily rubberized fabric are carried from the calendaring to the circumference of the tire to be built, where the fabric is cut by a sudding up of a shoe. These have been sewed so that they form a continuous piece and the tire is worked around the mould. Around this inner layer of fabric are piled on more and until the breaker strip is inserted. Plies of rubber are added to the tread until the whole is built up in the form that it is designed to take.

Then the tire, mould, and all is carried away to be weighed, because it must weigh up to a certain standard. This process so briefly described is one of the most important of all in the building.

These tires which are designed to have a wrapped tread are sent to a spiral machine, which winds a narrow strip of canvas for the purpose of tread. Then the casings are placed in the steels and put into the vulcanizers, where they remain until the process is completed.

NAMING THE ANTARCTIC

South Polar Regions Cause Much Worry to Scientists

Although the encyclopedias define the name "Antarctica" as synonymous with "the Antarctic regions," or the whole area lying inside the Antarctic circle, no such use of this name has current among geographers. The following, we believe, Sir John Murray—applying the name "Antarctica" to the supposed Antarctic continent. Dr. Ludwig Mecking has recently urged the claims of "Antarctia" as a more satisfactory name for this continent, especially when it comes to forming a corresponding adjective. "Antarctic" and "Antarctian" are the natural adjectives of "Antarctia" as "Asian" is of "Asia" and "Asian," etc. "American" is only an apparent exception, since it did not, of course, originate as a feminine Latin adjective.

"Not Worth His Salt"

"Salary" comes from the Latin word "sal"—that is, salt—Roman soldiers having received a daily portion of salt as part of their pay. Hence the expression, "not worth his salt."

FISHING WITH POISON

These natives of Rennenga, one of the islands in the South Pacific Ocean, have a singular method of catching fish in which the whole community takes part. On the shore of the bay and there are many long, narrow lagoons, each lying between a beach and a low growth of coral, that swarm with fish. The natives choose one of these stretches of shallow water for the fish drive, and close it at both ends by rear by having sets across them or building up rough barriers with pieces of coral.

When they have done that, six or seven hundred men, women, and children wade into one end of the lagoon carrying little pleated fibre bags filled with the nut. In most places the water is about three feet deep, and nowhere more than four feet; so the natives march slowly up the lagoon, beating the bags on the water as they go. The nut is the substance in wet it forms a peculiar narcotic, which it diffuses through the water. The process is called "poisoning the lagoon."

Half an hour is allowed for the "poison" to spread, and at the end of that time the fish are found to be under the influence of the drug, and are swimming about in a confused and aimless manner. The natives, armed with their primitive weapons, then attack the fish as they come to side of the lagoon, and march along shouting splashing, and driving the intoxicated fish before them. When the fish are all collected at the farther end of the lagoon, the natives begin to cry, "En kai kai kai!" and fall to eating. All is all directions. The natives are very dexterous with the spears, and the fish are so sluggish, owing to the effects of the fish nut, that very few of their escape.

Why Athletes Get "Stale"

The question of short versus long periods of practise in training the human muscles—for any particular kind of work is admirably solved in the teaching application. Some interesting experiments on this subject were carried out by Dr. K. S. Lashley, of Johns Hopkins University. Acquisition of skill in archery was selected as the subject of observation. Twenty untrained persons were divided into three groups. One group shot five arrows with the English longbow per day; another twenty shots per day; and the third, fifty shots per day. It showed conclusively that the group shooting only five times a day improved in accuracy with less expenditure of time and energy than the group that either of the other groups for the same amount of improvement. A report on the experiments says:

"The relative value of short periods of practice omitting for many days is in accordance with the results of the study of motor skill, of habit, of habits in man, and indicates that in training to muscular feats, in both animals and men, the length of practise periods should be relatively too great for maximum efficiency."

Harnessing Volcanoes

Italy's newest product is electric energy from volcanic steam. Not far from the little city of Volterra is a region of volcanoes. The steam issuing or otatmy have been a source of horic acid, and that in addition supply heat for drying the dyestuff. But for the purpose of preparing the material for market. Borings of 80 feet or 40 feet are said to yield steam from modern wells. This steam preserves up to more than three atmospheres, and of temperatures up to more than 700 degrees. The steam is first passed through a series of engines of an old, non-condensing type, but in recent experiments the heat of the springs—on account of the impurities contained—is made to generate steam from fresh water, and this is employed in low-pressure turbines for driving small electric motors. The plant is to be served with electric energy from the earth's own heat, if present expectations are realized, will include the electrical operation of Volterra, Massa, and Leghorn.

Why Nations' Teeth are Good

Physicians say that the reason so many of the poorest Italians have such perfect and such beautiful teeth is that from childhood up they eat such an bread that has a thick, hard crust.

Spinach was introduced into England early in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, as also was the cucumber; while celery was not known until the English ladies by a French prisoner in 1784.

RAISING BEEF HERD ON THE ARABLE FARM

Professor Shaw Argues in Favor of Having Two Calves Run With One Cow—An Alternative Plan

Those who have thought upon the subject cannot fail to have noticed that the few pioneers who on their farms have made the growing of beef a prominent part of their work, unless they were so located that they had extensive areas of grazing land, writes Prof. Thomas Shaw in the Farmer's Advocate. On the small or even on the ordinary arable farm but little beef was grown from the birth of the animals until they were slaughtered. Fattening animals purchased from outside sources was not uncommon, but growing the animals from birth to slaughter and making a business of the same was comparatively rare. Why was it so? For the reason that it did not pay.

On anything be done to make this business bring greater profit? It would be much more profitable if each cow could be made to nurse two calves instead of one. There are two ways in which this may be brought about, at least in certain areas. One of these would secure the additional calves from dairy herds in the neighborhood. The second plan is that the farmer to milk a part of his cows, and to rear the surplus calves on the cows that were not milked.

Let us carry out the first method, the farmer would need to have an understanding with one or more dairymen in the locality that he would take all their calves, or would undertake, at a reasonable, or until the cow had become dry.

That three calves may thus be reared quite successfully on the one cow has been demonstrated in the practice of the breeders of Aberdeen-Angus cattle in Scotland fully a century ago.

Why the other method, the farmer would keep two lots of cows, one lot he would milk, and the calves of these he would be reared on the cows that were not milked. The cows of the first lot should, of course, be good milk producers, and the cows of the other lot should not be low milk producers. The cows of the lots should not be interchanged, that is a cow should not be milked one year and then set to rearing calves the next year, and the reverse of this should not be practiced.

These methods of growing beef on the arable farm may not be found practical in any considerable extent in the past, but that does not furnish any argument against their feasibility.

Old Time Sealing Wax

Interesting results have been obtained by the British Government chemist by making analyses of old sealing wax on documents in the Public Record Office. The seals examined dated from the thirteenth to the eighteenth century, and differed but little from modern sealing wax. Most of them consisted of a mixture of beeswax and resin, others of pure beeswax. Two seals, of the dates 1290 and 1307 respectively, had a composition of wax the characteristics of which agreed more nearly with those of East Indian lac of European beeswax. The wax comprising an impression from the Great Seal of 1856 agreed, in chemical and physical characters, with pure beeswax of good color. The pigment in the red seals was vermilion, while the green seals consisted of verdigris.

What Insects Do

C. A. Ealand, author of "Insects and Man," says that every year four insect species alone cost the United States $32,000,000. Insects, he goes on, control the destinies of nations, render uninhabitable many of the richest parts of the earth, hold up great engineering schemes and have caused the abandonment of world important enterprises. Were the insect world not a home divided against itself, the human race would be settled in five or six years. As it is, a vast number of our diseases are due to it, and a great part of natural wealth has man control so indispensable. In few matters, then, can it be said that widespread knowledge is more important.

Our Garden of Eden

Long years ago when the world was young,
And Angels, their Hosannas, sung,
Because a world had builded been,
And they its wonders great had seen.
And in the fairest spot of earth,
God gave to Adam wondrous birth
A garden, planned by mind divine,
Symphony of colorings to entwine.

And to that home so lovely fair,
He led our earth's first parents there.
They, premiers of our human race;
Knew what it was to see God's face.
We hear His voice when conscience speaks,
And when our heart in sorrow breaks
But dimmed by sin, through ages gone,
We see not wondrous Face that shone.

The dazzling light our eyes would dase,
To see the One of ancient days.
And sin did send our parents forth
Their descendant toil throughout the earth.
And, lo, today war's gracious arise,
From ancient Eden to God's skies,
The old Euphrates ne'er has seen,
For years gave such battles been.

The Turko-German forces fight,
While Britain struggles for the right,
The Lake of Galilee doth hear
The moans the winds do wafting bear
Capernaum's ruin's there yet stay,
Or know, when comes the end of day?
Those Cities of which our Bible speak.

Now 'neath the mighty cannons break
They fall—beneath the debris lie:
Surely the Angels are listening, sigh;
But when shall come our Lord again?
Who, crucified, died there in pain.
We do not know, and none may say,
But in the East—behold some day,
In glory, and in might, He'll come,
And view despoiled His ancient home

And shall we cowardly, stay here,
While Right doth call for soldiers there?
What judgment shall you hear that day?
You, who are men, give answer—say.
Treasure your relics in church's shrine,
The Huns' destroying bullets whine;
The land's made desolate where Jesus trod
And with the Mother of Sorrows walked.

A cough is often the forerunner of serious pulmonary affections, yet there is a simple cure within the reach of all in Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, an old-time and widely recognized remedy, which if resorted to at the inception of a cold, will invariably give relief, and by overcoming the trouble, guard the system from any serious consequences. Fine Cherry Orchard

The Cherry orchard of Capt. W. E. Anderson, Redmondville, is a sight well worth going some distance to see. The orchard covers rather more than two acres and is laden with the most luxuriant crop it has been our pleasure to behold. There are some cherries that are not so good as others, even of the same variety. The cherry tree belongs to the vegetable world and like all other vegetables, plants or trees thrives the better for cultivation. Mr. Anderson's planting was largely of the Montmorency variety. Given proper cultivation, the Montmorency is a big, rich, juicy, brilliant red cherry. Neglected, it is pale, sour, hard and nearly all pit.

Mr. Anderson's orchard shows the effect of proper cultivation. The trees themselves show fine growth and the fruit has attained a size that is almost incredible. This is practically the first year that Mr. Anderson's orchard has come into bearing, but the yield will surprise several hundred baskets, giving him a handsome return on his investment in the early thousands of dollars invested. The Montmorency are being taken care of as rapidly as a capable corps of girls and women can do the work. The English Morellos will be ready in a few days.

Mr. Anderson's success in cherry growing suggests that this profitable branch of fruit culture might be successfully extended in Prince Edward where the soil and climate seem especially suited for the growth of this fruit.

The Farmer's Trouble

The long suffering and patient farmer has at last rebelled. For years he has been drawing pens into the canning factory by the load, only to have a large quantity stolen off the load all along his way through town by children and very often grown up people tear lage quantities of the vines away, perhaps not realizing they are stealing another man's property. This causes a great loss to the farmer, and many have refused to bring them to town this year. Twenty-one boys have been rounded up for this offense and were notified to appear in court, failing to do this they will receive a summons. The prosecutor only wants them warned this time but in future they will be dealt with according to law.—Odessawa Vindicator.

Thieves in Kingston Township

Organized Band is Working Overtime

Residents of the township of Kingston have in the past few weeks been victimized by what few years to be the work of an organized band of thieves and are very much concerned over the matter. The latest victim of the band is Mr. John Baker, market gardener, who lost some produce on Saturday morning.

Mr. Baker had gathered a load of vegetables to bring to the city, and in the load were some orders he was going to deliver. The thieves were cute, as they took some from each box and thought perhaps they would not be missed. Mr. Baker discovered his loss before coming to the city, and his customers did not suffer. The smart thieves paid a visit into the barn and there helped themselves to some produce.

Hot, perhaps, the scurviest deed that has been perpetrated was the robbery of the Cataraqui cheese factory on Wednesday night when three cheese, valued at $30, were stolen. The work seems to be that of an organized band and the residents of the district are determined to bring them to justice

Infant Mortality

According to the last decennial census, about one hundred and eighty thousand babies are born in Canada every year. Out of these, no less than thirty-six thousand die before they first birthday. This mortality percentage is four times as high as that from tuberculosis. Measles heads the list of Canadian cities in the "slaughter of the innocents." The child death rate here is two hundred and fifty for every million live births. In one hundred and seventeen per thousand. Port William, two hundred and two; Toronto, one hundred and fifty-five; and Hamilton, one hundred and fifty-one.—Montreal Star.

Love's Sweet Dream

Port Hope Young Man Lured Girl From Her Home and Was Arrested

A young man of this town fell desperately in love with a maiden of a neighboring village and he pretended to her how life would be one sweet dream if she would only leave home. She yielded to his pleasantness and for the past few days they have been in each other's company, but life to the young dreamer was not half so sweet as painted by her lover.

Last evening the police found the couple near Dogwe's Creek and took them into custody. A charge of vagrancy was laid against the man but owing to the absence from town of Police Magistrate White the case was adjourned. He will appear again tomorrow morning and it is likely that a more serious charge will be brought against him. The girl comes of a respectable family, and they are almost heart broken over the affair. She was given into their custody this morning and will appear to give evidence against the prisoner tomorrow.—Guide.

Gave Black-Lister Liquor

Were the Police Neglectful ?

A Port Hope citizen, who should have known better, supplied a woman who is on the prohibited list, with intoxicating liquor, and was fined by P. M. White, Tuesday $25.00 and $3 costs. The woman and her children are now at a home in Toronto, and there is being held over her a sentence of six months in the Mercer. The woman has been repeatedly furnished with liquor almost every morning about 8 o'clock, by a man other than the one that was fined, and the police were informed on two or three occasions, and given minute particulars, but as far as results indicate, failed to take any action. The police are inefficient, or they are shielding the man who is responsible for breaking up a home. The Times can furnish the Mayor or the Police Committee with names and all particulars.

Mr. Mjuna appeared at the trial in the interests of the Children's Aid Society.

We trust and hope that Tuesday's case will be the last of the kind in Port Hope. The giving of liquor to a woman on the black-list, who has a family of small children is most reprehensible and punishment should not be a fine but a lashing.

A well-know resident of Port Hope was fined $5.00 and $4.75 costs for stealing from Dawley. It appears that some boys had been stealing green peas growing on the property of the gentleman, and he caught Dawley in mistake.—Port Hope Times.

New Rink For Campbellford

Although this is the middle of summer and hockey is seldom discussed at this season of the year, those behind the game in Campbellford have given out the statement that a contract has been let to a Preston firm to erect a large rink, to be ready for use this coming winter.

The rink will be 66 feet wide by 180 feet long, and will cost in the neighborhood of $6,000. It is to be built of corrugated iron galvanized siding, with circular, self-supporting roof. The erection of the rink will be a great stimulus to hockey and other sports in this district.

McINTOSH BROTHERS

Three Boys Drowned Near Eganville

A triple drowning accident occurred at Knightington, six miles from Eganville, about six o'clock Sunday evening when three sons of John Tracey, a farmer—Simon, aged 9 years, Sam, aged 13 years and Albert aged 17 years—lost their lives while bathing in the Bonnechere River. None of the three could swim. Simon had gone beyond his depth, when Sam went to the rescue, and Albert seeing the plight of his two younger brothers, made an effort at rescue, when he in turn was pulled under in the struggle. The bodies were recovered a short time after in eight feet of water. Assistance was sent for by two small boys, who were the only witnesses of the accident.

This Might Pass as Another Ford Story

Mr. J. T. O'Connell slowed his car up, to the curb in front of his office on Hunter street, Sherbrooke, yesterday. Mr. John Brightman drew up behind it and the two cars had a few minutes chat. A few minutes later Mr. O'Connell re-issued from his office, his mind more or less intent on some business, turned over the engine of the car and shot down the street. While he was away he had the tank filled with gasoline and after completing the business of that trip returned to the office.

"You're the man that took it, eh?" Mr. Brightman exclaimed, as he recognized his car, with Mr. O'Connell at the wheel. Just then it dawned on Mr. O'Connell that he had been buying "gas" for somebody else's car.—Peterborough Examiner.

Doings at the Y.M. Camp Grounds

While people in Belleville were almost blistered by the heat on Wednesday, there were most comfortable breezes at the camp where it is 500 feet higher altitude. In the cool morning a number of athletic events were pulled off. Pop Gilford acted as referee. In the 100 yd. dash all kinds of time was made.

Girl Runs Away With Soldier

Thomas W. Foster, a soldier belonging to the 38th Battalion, Kingston, for whom High County Constable Wakenshaw has been looking for the last few days on a serious charge, was arrested on Tuesday by Chief Ellis, about five miles east of Trenton. Foster had coaxed a girl of about 15 years of age to go away with him on July 1st, and had been wandering around the country, sleeping in the open or in sheds. He forced the girl to part with some of her clothes for a second-hand shop in Belleville, in order to get him a suit of civilian clothes, and his uniform was found near Belleville. When arrested accused was working on a farm for B. Meyers, and the girl was picking fruit, having passed themselves off as brother and sister. With the assistance of Chief Ellis, Constable Foster was located and placed under arrest. It is understood that he has a wife and children living in Kingston.—Napanee Express.

Says Member of Kitchener's New Army--One and Three Quarter Million British Troops Soon to be in France--Russian Reverses Reported From Berlin but Russians Ready to Endure for Sake of Ultimate Victory--Italian Gains are Large--Early Settlement of Welsh Strike Expected--Austro-German Ultimatum to Roumania.

RUSSIA PREPARED TO PASS THROUGH REVERSES.

LONDON, July 20.—Today's despatches from Berlin claim continued success against the Russians who are declared to have retired across the Narrow River.

A German army is said to be not at Novo Georgievsk, ten miles northwest of Warsaw.

On the Baltic after capturing the port of Windau, the Germans are pressing on to Riga.

Petrograd despatches admit that the Russians have been forced to give ground at many points, but declare that a steady increasing supply of ammunition there is no fear for the future. The nation, as one despatch puts it, is prepared to pass through a period of reverses if necessary, but never has felt more certain of ultimate victory.

FRENCH AEROPLANES BOMBARD COLMAR.

PARIS, July 20.—The official announcement from the War Office this afternoon says that a squadron of six aeroplanes bombarded the station at Colmar, capital of Upper Alsace. The aeroplanes returned undamaged.

KITCHENER'S NEW ARMY READY TO STRIKE.

NEW YORK, July 20.—The Tribune this morning publishes a letter from a London correspondent which says the great British advance will begin about the first of August, and England will then make her great throw in the war was the confident declaration today of one of Kitchener's newest army, a man equipped with information although he is only a private. "We are off to the fron tnext week, July 14," he went on, "and we are almost the first of the new force. Kitchener's great army of two million men is at last on the way. Within a couple of weeks after that there will be 1,750,000 British troops in France."

AMOUNT OF ITALIAN LOAN.

ROME, July 20.—The amount subscribed to the national loan up to Monday morning was 950,000,000 lire ($190,000,000) according to information gathered by the Banca Italia. This sum will be increased by subscriptions received by institutes of commerce which have not yet come to hand.

EARLY SETTLEMENT OF WELSH STRIKE.

LONDON, July 20.—Today the prospects appear bright for a peaceful settlement of the Welsh Coal Miners' Strike. The government's veiled threat to assume control of the mines for the period of the war if negotiations failed, has caused the mine owners to recede from their previous positions, and they are now ready to concede practically all the mens' demands.

ULTIMATUM TO ROUMANIA FROM GERMANY

MILAN, July 20.—The newspaper Corriere Della Sera today says: "Austro-German diplomats are preparing to send an ultimatum to Roumania demanding that she permit the passage of war munitions to Turkey."

ITALIAN GAINS ARE MOST IMPORTANT.

GENEVA, July 20.—Despatches to the Tribune say large gains have been made by the Italians since July 16, according to these advices the Austrians have lost very heavily in Cadore and lesser amounts in Carnia, at Hochsput, Gradina, Dodero, and Kellerwand on the Isonzo. The Austrians have recaptured two positions near Tolmino and north of San Lucas.

POPE DISAVOWS INTERVIEW WITH LA LIBERTE

PARIS, July 20.—An autograph letter to Cardinal Amette, Archbishop of Paris from the Pope, absolutely disavows the alleged interview with him recently published in the Paris paper, La Liberte. The interview, he says, "represents neither our ideas, nor words, and was published without our revision or permission."

U. S. TO INVESTIGATE GERMAN ACTIVITIES AGAINST GREAT BRITAIN AND ALLIES

WASHINGTON, July 20.—At the instance of the British Government the State Department has called on the Department of Justice to investigate the activities of certain German sympathizers in the United States who are alleged to have been employing unlawful means to strike at Great Britain and her allies.

Until enquiry has developed whether there is sufficient evidence to warrant prosecutions no names will be made public and officials of the department as well as those of the British embassy are reticent about discussing the matter. It is known, however, that information has reached the embassy concerning all kinds of plots ranging from schemes to wreck bridges over which railroad trains were carrying volunteers of the British army, to the betterment of strikes at American industrial plants making war supplies for the allies.

All the evidence furnished by the British embassy will be turned over to the department of justice, which will conduct the enquiry through its bureau of investigation. This bureau and the United States secret service as well have been conducting widespread investigations in their own initiative, and several prosecutions already have resulted. It is understood that stories of plots to blow up British ships at sea have been carefully looked into, and that scores of suspected persons have been under surveillance in various parts of the country.

According to reports today in official circles, some persons of high repute in American business circles has been mentioned in reports transmitted by the British Government, but their names are being jealously guarded, pending the outcome of the investigation.

SUPPLIED MONEY TO DYNAMITARDS.

WASHINGTON, July 20.—The British Government today informed the State Department it has evidence that a wealthy German resident of Detroit, Mich., has supplied money to certain persons in Windsor, Ontario, which was used to destroy property of the Canadian Government. The British Government has inquired if the Department would not regard the case, if fully substantiated, as a case of military activity, constituting a breach of neutrality.. Pending investigation, the name of the man accused is being withheld.. The case is connected with recent attempts to dynamite an armory and an explosion in a factory making clothing for British troops.

LLOYD GEORGE WILL ADDRESS MINERS TODAY.

CARDIFF, July 20.—The center of negotiations in connection with the great strike of the miners shifted suddenly to Cardiff with the arrival here of the Minister of Munitions, David Lloyd George, the President of the Board of Trade, Walter Runciman, and the President of the Board of Education, Arthur Henderson for a conference with the miners' leaders. Mr. Henderson is leader of the Labor party in the House of Commons.

Mr. Lloyd George told the executive officers of Federation that it was impossible to wage a successful war abroad with a strike at home, and that no government responsible for a colossal war could possibly allow the continuance of a conflict between labor and capital to imperil the chances of victory.

In addition to a conference with the miners, a meeting has been arranged between the Minister of Munitions and the coal owners.

DRAMATIC TURN IN WELSH COAL STRIKE.

LONDON, July 20.—Minister of Munitions, has at last taken a hand in the South Wales coal strike, and announces his intention of going to Cardiff to have a talk with the men. This announcement was made shortly after it became known that new proposals had been advanced which apparently offered good prospects of settling the strike.

Mr. Lloyd George is very popular with the miners and it is thought a direct appeal from him will have a greater effect than any other influence.

A conference between the Executive Committee of the miners and Walter Runciman, President of the Board of Trade, had been arranged for last night, but was made unnecessary by the action of Mr. Lloyd George. The meeting was cancelled, although some members of the Executive Committee already had started from Cardiff for London when Mr. Lloyd George's intervention was announced.

FRENCH THREAT TO USE TURPENITE.

WINNIPEG, July 20.—Major A. DeMartin, of the Belgian Army, lecturing here on behalf of the Belgian Relief Fund, stated that Belgium had a new army of a quarter of a million men, well trained and equipped, ready to take the field towards the end of August. He announced that the next time the Germans used poisonous gases in the fighting the French will retaliate by using turpenite, the French Government having advised Berlin to this effect.

"BIG LIES" WRITES THIS CANADIAN.

HALIFAX, N.S., July 20.—How the German censor can be fooled was shown in a letter recently received by a Cape Breton mother from her son, who is a prisoner of war in Germany. The letter told in detail of the kind humane treatment and the abundance of food meted out to the prisoners generally and the writer in particular. In fact, everything was lovely, but the Gaelic words added as the writer's name so as to deceive the censor told the whole story. The words were "Brigean Mor," meaning "Big Lies."

GEORGE GORDON MILLS ARE AFIRE.

NORTH BAY, Ont., July 20.—The large mills of the George Gordon Company, Limited, at Cache Bay, are afire. The fire was discovered at 11.40 yesterday morning and is now burning fiercely. It looks as if the loss will be enormous.

Toronto lumbermen say that if the fire destroyed the George Gordon mills and yards 10,000,000 feet of lumber would be lost. This company deals in soft woods, mainly in white pine, Norway pine and spruce. They advertise a capacity of 200,000 feet a day. Senator Gordon, who gave up his constituency to allow Hon. Frank Cochrane to enter the Dominion House, is owner.

LITTLE PATCH OF ITALY INVADED, SAYS BUDAPEST.

BUDAPEST, July 20.—The invasion of Italy is greeted here with great enthusiasm, and the Budapest and Viennese papers look upon it as most encouraging.

The leaders comprised the Austro-Hungarian, Karinthian, Polish and Croatian troops, and the territory they occupy is eleven square kilometres (about three square miles) in size. The territory belonged to the old Venetian republic.

GREEK GOVERNMENT SENDS NOTE OF PROTEST TO PORTE.

PARIS, July 20.—The Greek Government has received confirmation of the report that the inhabitants of Aivali (in Asia Minor, on the Gulf of Adramyti) have been ordered to evacuate the city and go into the interior of Asia Minor, according to an Athens despatch to the Havas Agency today.

The government has sent an energetic protest to the Porte the despatch adds.

GERMANY WILL BE CURTLY TOLD VIEWS OF U. S., S.

WASHINGTON, July 20.—President Wilson and Secretary Lansing prepared today the draft of a note on submarine warfare to be submitted to the cabinet today and to be sent to Germany probably before the end of the present week.

Beyond the fact that the points already taken by the U. P. in the previous notes will be reiterated, no information was forthcoming at either the White House or state department concerning the probable contents of the new note.

The President continued those with whom he consulted to refrain from discussing the note in advance of its despatch to Germany and White House officials particularly requested the correspondents to avoid speculations in detail at this time, because the character of the document had not been finally determined.

The note, it is understood, will be comparatively brief, expressing the conclusions of the government as a result of Germany's failure to give the assurances asked for in previous notes, namely that the lives of Americans travelling on the high seas, bound on lawful errands aboard unresisting and unarmed merchantmen be not endangered.

THE DIRECT CALL.

In affirming, as we have so often done, that the British people and their Allies are certain to win in this war, we mean merely to convey an idea similar to that expressed in the assertion that righteousness must ultimately prevail in the world. In each case the application of proper human means is understood to be implied. Neither Providence nor Nature works miraculously. Should mankind resist or remain inert, the victory for righteousness might be indefinitely postponed. Should we or our Allies or any of us fail in the present crisis, far-reaching defeat may be our well-deserved fate. We can only hope to conquer through effort and still greater effort up to the supreme endeavor. The full strength of our opponents is but now beginning to be realized. Our strength remains still to be organized and concentrated. Our ultimate powers of endeavor are yet to be tested. Should they fail, woe to us! Woe to our children! Woe to the world!

What the final triumph of Germany would mean for Britons the world over does not need to be imagined. We have only to sum up what has happened to Belgium and Northern France, and multiply it a hundredfold to arrive at a definite idea of what would befall our Motherland and us in Canada. The Germans had no cause of enmity against either Belgium and France. They knew, on the contrary, that they were cruelly wronging the peoples of both countries by invading their lands. In spite of that, they murdered and burnt and pillaged and ravaged and laid waste with systematic ferocity. They spared neither childhood, womanhood, nor old age. There were no barbarities too atrocious for them to perpetrate on peaceful civilian populations.

On the other hand the Germans hate British and Britons with a ferocious hatred, with the concentrated spiteful envy of generations of consciousness inferiority and hopeless rivalry. Should they conquer in the war, the United Kingdom would be given over to merciless ravage and oppression. Canada as a nominal colony would at once be seized and enslaved. We know how the Germans have dealt with their own colonies. We can conjecture from that what we might expect as a British Colony falling into their hands. And if our forces are defeated in the battlefields of Europe, that is the fate which inevitably awaits us. There is no salvation for us except through our own and common British efforts in the battlefields of Europe.

Canada's soldiers in Europe are, therefore, quite obviously fighting not only for the life of this Dominion as a British country, but for our very hearths and homes, for the honor of our sisters and wives, for the lives of our infants, and for the avoidance of enslavement for all of us. That this fact is not at all properly realized even by any but the most thoughtful and well-informed of our people is daily becoming more manifest. The great struggle grows more critical as it proceeds. A sudden smashing German blow delivered at any point in the long defensive lines of the Allies followed by an overwhelming German onrush, might divide the Allied armies and subject them to succeeding detailed defeat and destruction. This may not be probable; but it is not impossible. The line between victory and defeat for us has long been very thin, is thin still, and must continue to be so for an uncertain time to come. Everything for us depends on putting forth our utmost exertions without any unavoidable delay.

What are we, in Canada, doing? The men whom we have sent, or rather, we should say, who have freely and manfully volunteered to go to the front for us, are today wherever they may be, far more effectively guarding the homes of their infancy, the firesides of their fathers and mothers, their sisters and brothers, the graves of their forefathers, than if they were standing on guard directly before those homes with loaded rifles and fixed bayonets. They are keeping war and its baleful consequences far away from us, instead of struggling hopelessly against it as they would have to do should Germany beat down her opponents in Europe.

But how pitifully few in numbers they are! They are not even missed from their home surroundings. There is not a single community in the whole Province which feels conscious of the absence of those who have volunteered from it.

When Sir Wilfrid Laurier confidently promised years ago that Canada's "last man and last dollar" would be available for the defence of the Empire, in case of need, he believed that he could trust the men of the Dominion to come forward in such a cause when called upon. He knew that the rulers of Canada, no matter which party might be in power, would do all that they could to finance the occasion. In his confidence in the men of Canada to be proved at fault when put to the real test? We ask the young men of this Province to lay this question to heart, to consider it conscientiously and patriotically, and to act accordingly.

Now we know where summer has been hiding itself all these weeks. It was away up in Alaska, among the glaciers, pushing the mercury up to 90 in the shade.

The imports of the United Kingdom during the month of June were $89,900,000 larger than in June of last year. Thus Britain's overseas trade goes merrily along in spite of Von Tirpitz' pirates.

When we read the Admiralty statement that out of 20,000 steamers which arrived at or departed from the port of Liverpool, since the Germans proclaimed their "submarine zone," only twenty were captured or sunk, it suggests how little the submarine "blockade" means after all.

Sir Robertson Nicol who was accused of promoting a cabal against Mr. Asquith in favor of Mr. Lloyd George, gives an emphatic denial to the scandal-mongers. The brilliant editor of the British Weekly says that Mr. Asquith is the only possible man for Prime Minister.

Canada's population is now estimated to be over eight millions, an approximate gain of 850,000 since the taking of the census of 1911. But the heavy decline in immigration makes it unlikely that this rate of gain will be maintained at least, not for some time to come.

Speaking of the British war loan, the Boston News Bureau says: "The pledges and the results under the British subscriptions have been wholly genuine, unexposed to the suspicion of paper pledging which attached, in the course of some weeks, to the second German loan. This is real gold and free gold."

Mrs. Burnett Smith ("Annie S. Swan"), who has just returned from a visit to the men in the British base camps in France, described the impression of her tour at a meeting of the National Council of the Y. M. C. A., in London. Despite the rigors of the campaign, she found that the men were cheery and of good heart. Many men told her that they did not want to go back to the trenches, but that was a very different thing, she maintained, from saying that they would not go back. "If", said the well-known writer to her hearers, "you could visit the British camps you would find that the only place where you found pessimism was on this side of the channel." Mrs. Burnett Smith is deeply impressed with the excellent work being rendered to the British soldiers by the Y. M. C. A., and without it she did not know what the soldiers would do.

GONE OFF TO PLAY.

So still the house,
So noiseless yard and street,
No little laughter and no pattering feet,
No cry of happy voices ringing through
The echoless rooms of beauty unto you
School over, and it's Saturday—
Gone off to play.

Faith keep me strong
That in some far-on hour—
When once again no sound of little feet
Makes all the empty roominess so sweet,
And gentle memories round my pillow throng—
I shall look up to their blue heaven, and say—
Gone off to play!

For all so leave
These homes so empty, and so ghostly still,
No wonder that our lonely spirits grieve,
Forgetting that it is so like the child
Whose holiday turns all her nature wild—
That, these go out to laughter and to song,
Where anthemning angels throng.

No footsteps swift
Along these halls where sunny patterings stirred
Only the dreams of morning life that drift
Across the shadows—just the echoing word
Our lips of woe some day shall have to lift:
Life's over, and it's Saturday—
Gone off to play!

—The Bentztown Bard.

THE BELLIGERENTS' LOSSES.

In support of its appeal for help for destitute French families the French Relief Society has published in London a statement of casualties in the forces of the various nations at war. The figures are said to be derived from official sources so far as possible. They show that France has lost 498,000 soldiers killed, 700,000 wounded and 300,000 prisoners or missing, a total of 1,400,000. Russia has lost 723,000 killed, 1,983,000 wounded and 770,000 prisoners, a total of 3,546,000. Britain has lost 116,000 killed, 329,000 wounded and 83,000 prisoners and missing, a total of 428,000. These figures may be correct and they may not. But the society's figures relating to Germany and Austria are transparently incorrect. Germany is said to have lost 482,000 killed, 825,000 wounded and 233,000 in prisoners and missing, a total of only 1,567,000, while Austria Hungary have lost 341,000 killed, 711,000 wounded and 183,000 prisoners, a total of 1,235,000. That is, the total casualties of Germany and Austria-Hungary are 2,800,000, as against the Allies' 5,200,000, in spite of the fact that the Teuton forces have been doing most of the offensive campaigning.

It is easy to prove that the German figures are not at all likely to be correct. Before the losses of the great Galician drive were compiled the Prussian casualty lists contained 1,-388,000 names, according to Berlin announcements. The Bavarian, Saxon Wuerttemberg and other extra-Prussian lists, hundreds in number, contained hundreds of thousands of names. If the South German losses had been at the same rate as the Prussian, they would have totalled 850,000, at least, giving Germany a total of 2,250,000 killed wounded and missing. The figures compiled by various military experts corroborate this estimate. Austria is said, in the French Relief Society's statement, to have lost 183,000 in prisoners. The Russians obtained nearly 120,000 Austrians in Peremysl alone, according to their official statements, and other authoritative Russian statements announce that Russia holds nearly 400,000 Austrians. There are other glaring discrepancies. It is absurb to claim that, while Russia, France and Britain have had casualties of 5,200,000 men, Germany and Austria have had casualties of only about 2,800,000.

For weeks now no information has come from Germany respecting losses. The publication of the lists is prohibited by the Government owing to the fear and uneasiness caused at home by the "tale of murder," and to prevent rejoicing and cheer among the enemies of Germany. It is futile to place reliance now in Germany lists of losses as given out, and the French Relief Society does not do itself justice in allowing the assuredly incorrect comparisons to be put out under its name, suitable for its purpose though they may be.—Mail and Empire.

TOO LITTLE ATTENTION TO THE SCHOOLS.

We have long held the opinion that too little attention is given to our high and public schools by officials and parents. The most expensive institutions are the schools and how very slight concern they cause to citizens generally. Teachers are engaged and placed in charge or in some cases are allowed to go alone to the new school to take charge and trustees or parents seem quite indifferent to school matters. We have actually heard of a teacher passing thru a term without ever seeing a trustee in the school or on the school grounds. What progressive farmer would run his farm help that way? The teacher should have frequent visits from or with trustees to discuss matters relating to the school and parents should invite the teacher to visit their home to confer about the interests of their children going to school. To this way a better understanding can be had between all concerned. School inspectors and trustees should have conferences too when confidential reports can be given and school interests discussed. The schools are for fitting and developing children into intelligent citizens so that they may make the best of life's opportunities. This is why the combined efforts of teachers, trustees, parents and inspectors should be exerted in behalf of every school in the land. The interest of all concerned should be at least commensurate with the expenditure necessary if they cannot extend to the children to be educated. —Bowmanville Statesman.

LINDSAY'S RATE IS 37 MILLS

Lindsay's tax rate this year will be 37 mills on the dollar—an increase of two mills over that of 1914. This was decided on at a meeting of the council last week, when the estimates for the year were presented by Town Treasurer Currie.

Several items in the estimates provoked considerable discussion. There was a reduction in the fire hall expenses of $150, and the Lindsay Library and Office Fittings item is $1,700 The appropriation for the former was $1300 and the latter $3,300. The appropriation for charity ($600) was cut in two.

The appropriation for the Board of Works is $3200 less than last year. His Worship Mayor Beal contended that the deficit of $3,100 (1914) should not be saddled on the people this year, but should be held over until inflation was secured to enable the council to spread the amount over a period of twenty or thirty years.

Deputy-Reeve Smale said this was a cowardly suggestion, and the Government would not consider such a proposition.

Both Ald. Clark and W. E. Baker favored carrying this deficit over.

This amount, it might be stated, is made up largely of outstanding taxes, which included the Carew and Madison William's taxes.

A heated battle ensued between His Worship Mayor Beal and Deputy Reeve Smale over this item. Mayor Beal said the fixing of the rate at 38 mills was a bad advertisement for the town.

Deputy-Reeve Smale said the council was duty bound by statute to provide for this item. His worship the Mayor was figuring on not being in next year's council and wished to relieve himself of his share of responsibility for this item by leaving it unprovided for this year.

Mayor Beal said he was quite prepared to defend his record and attitude on all questions affecting the town's interests.

"In connection with this year's rate, there is an increase of one mill for school purposes over last year, besides an increase of almost a mill for war and patriotic purposes.

The council will meet at an early date to pass a by-law confirming the rate.

The striking of the rate at 37 mills and the reduction in the items referred to leave a balance to pay on 1913 overdraft of $1300.—Post.

The Teacher's Letters

Far away from dear old Belleville,
From the Quinte's undulous shore,
From the Moira's sinuous river;
Some to come again—no more.

They do hear the booming cannon,
See the dead, fall by their side,
Revere the art of German "Science,"
While they with the right abide.

And the busy hurried teacher,
Thought with love of scholars brave,
And he wrote them thoughtful letters
And he wrote them with faces grave.

They will keep as sacred treasures,
The kind missives that he wrote,
And in loving years, their children
Will those same letters re-quote.

And some day, the Greater Teacher
Will with gentle welcome say,
You wrote to my lonely children,
Fighting there—so far away.

And I've heard the prayers you offered,
Many souls well gathered come;
These, your sheaves, won for the Master,
You will welcome them, at home.

From your one-time scholar, in kindly remembrance.

Alice Fyne McDavitt.

3 MEN RENDERED UNCONSCIOUS BY LIGHTNING

The electric disturbance which visited Lindsay last week, although of short duration, nearly claimed three victims in the persons of Messrs John Gunn and Francis Costello, jr., of West Ops, and a farm hand named Ryan.

The three men with teams, were engaged on the Denver Farm, which is owned by Mr. Frank Costello, and when the thunder's rumbling heralded the approach of a storm they drove their teams towards the stable in order to seek shelter. Mr. Gunn placed his team in the driving shed, and the other horses were placed in the stable. While the three men were near the stable door a heavy crack of thunder came, followed by a bad flash of lightning. "That was a bad one," remarked Francis Costello, and no sooner were the words uttered than the second one followed. The three men were instantly felled to the ground, as well as one of the horses in the stable, and Mr. Gunn's valuable team was instantly killed. Mr. Ryan recovered from the effects of the stroke, and immediately proceeded to drag Messrs. Costello and Gunn from the unconscious to Mr. Thos. Denver's residence on the farm. Mr. Joseph Costello, who was in the house at the time, was not aware that the men were injured until Mr. Ryan appeared. He immediately hurried to his home and telephoned for Dr. Blanchard. When he arrived the men had regained consciousness, but were both in a serious condition. Mr. Gunn appeared to be more severly injured the Mr. Costello, the condition of the latter showing such decided improvement this morning as to warrant his removal to his home this afternoon. It will be some days, however, before he fully recovers from the shock.

Mr. Gunn suffered considerably this morning, severe pains shooting up and down his body. Grave fears were entertained at first regarding the outcome, but strong hopes are entertained that no serious results will follow. The escape of the three men from instant death waf providential

Mr. Gunn sustains a severe loss in the death of his horses. The team was a valuable one and was highly prised by the owner.—Lindsay Post.

The Man With Asthma, almost longs for death to end his suffering. He sees ahead only years of endless torment with intervals of rest which are themselves fraught with never ceasing fear of renewed attacks. Let him turn to Dr. J. D. WRITS ISSUED FOR TOWN'S BACK TAXES

Cobourg, July 19th.—Last week three writs totalling $3092.06 were issued by the town of Cobourg for arrears of taxes against John Dick, John Dick Limited, and the Cobourg Matting and Carpet Co., Limited. One writ is for $4858.89 in the county court against the Cobourg Matting and Carpet Co., Limited. Another is for $2450.92 in the supreme court of Ontario against John Dick, the president of John Dick Limited. The three writs are for taxes payable in the years 1909 and 1910, with interest thereon at 5 per cent. per annum. Mr. A. J. Armstrong, on behalf of Mr. Dick, has offered in settlement $414 for the town's claims.

Before the writs were issued, the defendants refused payment, and claimed from the town several hundred dollars as due them by way of refund in respect of 1909 and 1910 taxes.

PTE. HOLLAND A PRISONER

It is surprising how slowly news travels with reference to casualties from the seat of war. Some days ago The Ontario published a statement that Private George Holland of Madoc who had gone to Europe with the First Canadian Contingent was "missing". This statement we published from the official casualty list handed out by the Department of Militia at Ottawa. We have just received a letter from Mr. Morely Reid, of Ivanhoe, in which he states that Ward from Private Holland. The card was written from Giessen, Germany, under date of May 30th, and is as follows,—

Dear Cousin,

No doubt you will be surprised to get a card from me here in Germany. I was captured on the 24th of April. I am well and living in a kind of a way. I have a good place to sleep. Under present conditions I think it unnecessary for you and me to talk about the war. Wishing you all the best of health, I will close. Write soon.

George Holland.

IMPROVING THE CEMETERY

A wonderful improvement was made in the appearance of the cemetery as a result of the bee which was held last Saturday. All the rubbish small trees was cut down and drawn away or piled up ready to burn. The grass was also cut and all the old loose stones removed. About forty or fifty joined in the bee. While a great deal was accomplished it was only a beginning of what will be done. If a competent man was employed for a couple of months fixing the monuments, straightening the moving stones and other necessary work the cemetery would be a credit to the village. A large number who were present yesterday declared it should be willing to help in this work. The Trustees should also take steps to have the additional ground added as soon as possible, and have it laid out in plots so that those who desire to do so may purchase them. It is hoped that the matter will not be allowed to rest until the necessary improvements are completed.—Hamora Herald.

THE REEVE HAS RESIGNED

On Wednesday last, Mr. David Darling handed in his resignation as Reeve of Gananoque to Mr. S. McCammon, Town Clerk. The action on the part of Mr. Darling is the result of bickerings at the Council meeting and has not been found with some of his work. He says he retired from business to get rid of petty worries, and he does not propose to stay in the Council and have them increased. We do not know, of course, what the result will be when the matter comes before the Council, but it will be a difficult matter to find a man who will give the same time and attention to the work on streets that Mr. Darling has done.—Gananoque Reporter.

HOT TACTICS IN ACT

Reason for Windows Failing Toward Disturbance Rather Than Away

When there is a violent explosion in the open air, the shock is felt with sudden force in air waves that are powerful in proportion in which the explosion is violent and powerful. The explosion acts in all direct ns at once with equal force, and the air particles is forced out, and surrounding parts rush in to fill the vacuum created. When ever the air waves are run suddenly, there will be decidedly more pressure on the exterior surface.

An unusual thing about the effects of these waves at a distance is the reversed direction of force. Sometimes, as a result of a big explosion, the front windows of a building several miles away will be blown out and the other building on the block damaged, in such cases the air suction is apt to affect buildings at different points along the street.

The destructive power of explosives is reckoned with as a most important factor in modern warfare. Projectiles thrown from big guns do more damage by their explosions than by their striking force. It is the explosion after they reach their destination that is expected to do most destruction. Well protected forts are not taken merely by forcing their entrance, but by dropping into them projectiles that cause explosive havoc.

"DISTRESS OF NATIONS" FOLLOWED BY ARMAGEDDON

"A Time of Trouble Such as Was Not Since There Was a Nation."

Conflicting Prayers Ascending to God —Prevailing Confusion of Thought Directing Prayer—Present Conditions Foreshadowed in Twenty-third Centuries Ago—All Nations to be Involved—The War the Prelude to Armageddon—Lasting Peace Only Attainable Only Through Messiah's Kingdom, Soon to be Established.

The Griffin theater was crowded last evening on the occasion of the lecture of Pastor Russell. Mr. Joseph Emery of Stirling was chairman and Mr. Dorner, formerly of Belleville, conducted the musical program. The large proportion of the audience stayed until twenty minutes to eleven when the meeting was brought to an end. The address of Pastor Russell lasted about two hours and fifteen minutes.

Pastor Russell's discourse on the Battle of Armageddon he based upon the words of Jesus respecting the distress of nations with perplexity.—(Luke 21:25, 26.) He referred to the literal Armageddon, where many great battles were fought in ancient times and where the Messiah in Israel's great triumphs. He pointed out that the word Armageddon is used symbolically in the Book of Revelation to refer to the great climax of earth's strife. He described it as the battle of the Great overthrow of the powers of darkness for the Messiah's kingdom for twenty-five hundred years God. He declared that the Bible foretold that this day of trouble with which this Age will end and the New Dispensation, the heralding of the glad tidings of the awakening the nations and enlightening the people; second, following the war, great revolution, symbolically styled in the Bible an earthquake such as never was since men were upon the earth; third, a period of anarchy, resulting from failure of mankind to be able to adjust themselves to the newly constituted order.

For twenty-five hundred years God, through the Bible Prophets, has been telling His people about this great war and concerning the more terrible Armageddon which will follow it; and we expect Him to reverse the program at our behest!—Revelation 16: 12, 14, 16.

The prayers of these millions praying for the prosperity of the cause and the extermination of the Allies, and the prayers of other millions for the success of the Allies and the annihilation of the Germans, are the prayers of the Head of our Precious and other good people that this awful war shall promptly cease, will all go unanswered, if I read my Bible aright. The war will not cease, and will eventuate in no glorious victory for any nation, but in the terrible anarchistic and universal disorganization of all. Next will follow the Armageddon of the text.

After that peace, lasting peace, may be looked for, and that shall be ushered in, as it will be brought in by Messiah's Kingdom, for which so long we have prayed.

God's Fuel in the Present War.

Dr. Lange says: "It will be attended with any declaration that their war and the resulting greater calamity and Divine judgment and arrangement. clearly predicated in Scripture. The gathering of the nations to the great struggle is referred to in the Apocalypse as a fact, and the forces are called upon to assert their strength and show all of which will be fulfilled in the Valley of Jehoshaphat—the Valley of Grace or the Judgment Day of the city of Jerusalem being used by the Prophet Joel to illustrate the coming struggle and now going on.—Joel 3:2-16.

Surely the war has brought upon us the grave than has any previous one; and it is only beginning. For years the nations, in harmony with God's prophecy, have been "beating their plowshares into swords and their pruning hooks into spears," in the sense that they have been spending their military purposes money which should properly have been spent in agricultural implements and developments.

Why God has permitted Sin and Death.

The Bible tells us how this world became rebellious. It tells us that God did not create mankind imperfect as we are today. Man was created perfect, an earthly being—in the image of his Heavenly Creator, in the sense of having a moral character, but limited to earthly conditions. This perfect man was placed in a perfect home, in every way adapted to his needs. This Eden was especially prepared for him and he was to enjoy it. He was king of the whole earth and therefore his Creator instructed him that as his family increased, he was to subdue the earth and develop it. His mandate remained in harmony with God, the whole world would have become as Eden.—Genesis 3: 17-19.

Of course you just what would occur, forever. He foreknew Adam's sin and fall, as well as the mental, moral and physical degeneracy which would result from the disobedience of our first parents. He foreknew our weakness and imperfection, our attempts at moral, religious, and mental reform and at mental and physical health. Yet He permitted all this to come to pass, to enter the world.

Redemption.

The problem was recognized as needing legislative attention, and the Ontario Government passed several acts on the subject, one being the Auxiliary Classes Act of 1914. This gives local school authorities wide powers in the organizing and maintenance of special schools or classes for backward or defective children not being idiots—idiots being fit subject for institutional training. Some large municipalities have, under former legislation, undertaken special classes, but the larger part of the provinces is yet without facilities for giving special aid to the unfortunate boys and girls.

If the boys and girls whose mental feebleness is congenital are not taken in their youth and trained to do some simple work that can make them at least partially self-supporting, what happens? They leave school without any real educational benefit, and drift about, until sooner or later they either have to be maintained by relatives or in public institutions. The jails, asylums, refuges, reformatories and charitable institutions get a large proportion of their inmates from these. They cannot help it. They are not able to guide or rule themselves as normal persons can. The first census of the feeble-minded in Ontario was taken in September, 1906, and 1,506 persons were enumerated. Of these 1,094 were adults and 411 were children. In the adults over 1,000 were supported by public charity, and all except a few of the children were born of parents who were very low-grade mentality, whose case is almost hopeless, but there may be others easily improvable by special care.—From The Mail and Empire.

TRAINING DEFECTIVES

Ontario Recognizes Necessity of Helping Feeble Minded Children

When medical inspection was introduced into the schools of leading Ontario cities it was intended to provide for an examination of the physical condition of the children, and to overcome the consequences of parents' ignorance or neglect. But the nurses inspectors and school nurses engaged in the work found themselves noting not only physical defects in the children, but also mental conditions. Though the lot of Ontario in respect of a mentally defective population is happier by far than that of most older countries, yet we have a considerable proportion of persons whose mentality is so far below normal that they can be designated as feeble-minded. It is not to be wondered at that where we have many adults who are mental defectives there should be in the schools a liberal sprinkling of children inheriting that mental feebleness. Not long ago the chief school teacher of Toronto reported that there were 250 or 300 mentally defective boys and girls in Toronto schools. In Ottawa, Hamilton, London and other cities the same condition holds true. As nearly three-fourths of such mental feebleness is hereditary, and cannot be "cured," but only carefully trained, the presence of children who, in street parlance, are only "half there" is a challenge to the school authorities.

The problem was recognized as needing legislative attention, and the Ontario Government passed several acts on the subject, one being the Auxiliary Classes Act of 1914. This gives local school authorities wide powers in the organizing and maintenance of special schools or classes for backward or defective children not being idiots—idiots being fit subject for institutional training. Some large municipalities have, under former legislation, undertaken special classes, but the larger part of the provinces is yet without facilities for giving special aid to the unfortunate boys and girls.

Brilliant Student Secures Fine Position

From the Canadian Churchman we copy the following reference to Mr. J. Bertram Collip, son of Mr. J. D. Collip, of this city, who has just completed an unusually brilliant course at Toronto University:

Trinity College—Mr. J. Bertram Collip, who graduated from Trinity College in 1912 with honors in the Physical and Biochemical Sciences, has been appointed lecturer in Biochemistry in the University of Alberta, with full charge of his department. Mr. Collip has just completed the work for his Ph.D., his thesis being published in the Proceedings of the Royal Canadian Institute. His thesis for the M.A. degree received two years ago, was so highly valued by Professor Macallum that he incorporated it in a paper which he read in London before the British Association.

Mr. Collip's preliminary training was received at the High School in Belleville, his home town.

He has a vacation appointment at the Government's biological station at St. Andrews, N.B.

The trial will be inexpensive and the result will be another customer for this excellent medicine. So effective is their action that many cures can certainly be traced to their use where other pills have proved ineffective.

CAPT. WILSON DESCRIBES VOYAGE

Of Minnesabie to England—Experiences in Submarine Zone—Description of England

The following letter was received by Mrs. G. H. Bolton from her brother, Captain Ronald D. Wilson, of the Canadian Dental Corps, which sailed on the Minnesabie with the 39th Batt from Belleville:

Wampach's Hotel Ltd.,
Folkestone, July 7, '15.

Dear ——

Well we are here quartered in this beautiful hotel awaiting orders. How long we will be here I do not know but we are in very comfortable, beautiful apartments, and board not too bad. All kinds of servants, a maid to get your bath ready, to bring you a drink, or turn off your light; so much different from Canada where every one waits on him or herself. Folkestone is a summer resort, and were it not for officers and their wives, this hotel would be rather dull. We have about fifty Canadian nurses here, to do the hospital work during the day. One hospital, which in fact is only a temporary one, has something over 600 hundred patients, so they are quite busy. Yesterday I took a taxi and went over the camp ground where about forty thousand Canadians are quartered. It is some sight. The 39th have a beautiful spot. Caesar's hill. I saw some of the forts that Caesar built in 54 B.C., some historic spot, England is certainly beautiful, from in the part we came through, and I am told we came through the best, so, from the fields are divided by the most beautifully hurst hedges, and all along the trail, and at every station there are flowers and beautiful rose bushes, something we can never hope for in Canada on account of severe winters. We are less than 56 miles from the firing line, and when the heavy guns are working, they can be quite distinctly heard. Coming over on the boat of course all port holes were covered, and lights out, so that the ship was in absolute darkness. Well here at nights the street lights are out, and the whole dream was covered with heavy draperies, for fear of an attack from aircraft. Last night one of our boys was fined ten pounds for leaving his shade up, and the hotel fined one pound. Just three weeks ago tonight since we left Ottawa, and some experience. We had rather an uneventful trip the sea being very quiet, and the proportion seasick small. When we entered the submarine zone, of course everyone was anxious. We had had life-boat and life belt drill, in case of an emergency but thanks to Providence we did not need it. Of course these drills and the constant talk of submarines, as mother would say, got on our nerves, and many slept in, full marching order with their life belts either on them, or for pillows. Somehow myself I felt very safe, and went to bed every night sleeping like a top, enjoying the old Presbyterian belief, that what is to be will be. We were very fortunate in having a very comfortable boat, also for a cargo ship, and to him is due our safe arrival, at least without being sent, as you know the Germans made their brag that they would get us, and two submarines were in waiting in our path. The captain received a wire from the Admiralty that a destroyer would meet us at a certain latitude and longitude and knowing that the Germans would also catch the message, and instead of going straight, we took soldier volunteers to help the stokers, and went in a semi-circle going about 60 miles out of his course. The orders were that the destroyer would meet us at 3 p.m. Friday, and were we did meet, but, indeed, I cannot describe the feeling as the lump went from my throat, when the little dark streak came through the sea at 36 knots an hour, just flying. The one that went up you could hear in Germany. Round and round our ship she circled as if we were afraid of her, and the test on the ammunition laws when the following were sponsored—E. Guss, Forster, K.C., M.P., president in the chair, W. C. Mikel, K.C., secretary; H. L. Ingram, treasurer; Col. Lazier, Col. Stewart, Col. Ketchesson, Col. Marsh, J. F. Wills, K.C., J. O. Herity, Lieut. McCagar, Dr. MacColl and others.

The president suggested that the city should be organized by wards and that by means of the Letter Carriers and ward committee lists of available men should be obtained who could then be approached. On motion the president was requested to arrange with the Letter Carriers and committee consisting of J. F. Wills, J. O. Herity, Col. Ketcheson, Col. Marsh, Gen. Dulmage, Alex. Walker, Jack Carr, and H. L. Ingram was appointed to select ten persons from each ward to meet at the armouries Friday night, July 23rd at 8 p.m. to form a general organization and the secretary was directed to notify them.

A motion was also unanimously passed that a Honor Roll be prepared of all Belleville residents who volunteered for service in this war and kept among the official records of the municipality.

It was also decided to have certificates printed to be given by the Medical Inspector to any who had volunteered and been rejected and that they be also supplied with a button showing that they had volunteered. A big meeting is expected Friday night.

Appreciates Gift of Tobacco

A card has been received by a Belleville lady from a soldier at the front to whom a box of tobacco cigarettes and gum was sent from London, England, by the Union Bank. The lady contributed a sum of money at the Belleville branch to send sundries to the soldier and as her name was on the gift, she received the card of thanks. The message reads—

Somewhere in France.
Dear Miss ——

In these few inadequate lines may I express to you my thanks for the gift of sundries. Nothing out here is more enjoyable than smoking materials and you may be assured your kindness is appreciated.

Sincerely,
J. R. McKay,
C. Co. 13th Batt.

For every 25c contributed 60c worth of sundries is sent to the soldiers.

To Fly From Toronto to Montreal

TORONTO, July 20.—The longest aeroplane flight ever recorded in Canada is planned by W. A. Dean, the head of one of the Montreal Aviation Schools. Mr. Dean is negotiating with the Canadian National Exhibition for a place on their programme and if engaged he will bring two machines from Montreal to the City, flying the entire distance. So far as known no Canadian birdman have done more than about 100 miles in a straightway flight. The distance from Montreal to Toronto, in the bird flies, is about 300 miles. Mr. Dean formerly had a school in Toronto and one of his men made daily flights at the Fair a year ago.

Most infants ar unesser by worms, which cause great suffering, and if not promptly dealt with may cause constitutional weaknesses difficult to remedy. Miller's Worm Powders will clear the stomach and bowels of worms and will so act upon the system that there will be no recurrence of the trouble. And not only this, but they will repair the injuries to the organs that worms cause and restore them to soundness.

Oshawa Girl Saved Child from Drowning

Miss Jean Trull, daughter of Thos Trull, King St East, who with her mother and sister is visiting at her grandfather's summer home, Ivey Lake, Parry Sound, proved herself to be quite a heroine last week at considerable peril to her own life. She succeeded after repeated attempts in rescuing a child, which had wandered into deep water, after bringing it to a place of safety, she recovered it to be in a comatose state of exhaustion, and as there was no doctor near by she herself administered first aid, and brought her to consciousness, after which she carried it to its mother, who was oblivious of the great danger her little one had been in. Congratulations to Miss Trull, who showed such presence of mind and capability in presence of emergency. Miss Trull is a member of the Girl Guides of Oshawa, and no higher tribute could be paid to the training she has received as a Guide than the rescue she accomplished.—Oshawa Reformer.

The Two Piece Suit

This is the time of year when a man wants to wear as little as possible. If you wear one of our cool Two-Piece Suits, it's certain you won't "wear a worried look."

But there are two considerations in a Two-Piece Suit which call for the most competent tailoring. In the first place, the coat must be so tailored as to obviate the need of a vest. In the second place, as the fabrics are extremely light in weight, the tailoring must be done with the greatest skill.

Fabrics of carefully selected Sun-Proof Serges, Worsteds, Homespuns, etc., etc.

If you'll step in and try on one of these cool Suits and then take a look in the mirror, you'll be surprised to see what a swell and comfortable looking fellow you are.

We've everything in wearables for a man's summer comfort.

THE BEEHIVE

CHAS N. SULMAN

AT BRITAIN'S GREATEST HYMN

France has signally honored the memory of the author of "Le Marseillaise," the song that is supposed to be the greatest expression of a nation's soul that ever was composed. It is a song that can thrill audiences who have no French blood in their veins, and who know nothing of the French Revolution. It is a wonderful supporting of power, but in our admiration for this great national hymn we ought not to forget that we have great songs of our own. We have indeed two of the greatest songs ever written, and in "God Save the King" we have music which, according to H. E. Krehbiel, the noted musical authority who writes in the New York Tribune, is "the supreme example of perfect model of a national hymn," and one whose melody has been adopted by half the civilized people of the world. But Britons have a greater song, and one which does not fear comparison with the "Marseillaise," generally supposed to be the greatest patriotic song ever composed. This is "Rule Britannia."

A Wonderful Hymn.

In his review of the patriotic songs of the warring nations Mr. Krehbiel gives to "Rule Britannia," first place. Robert Southey said that it would be the political hymn of the country so long as we maintained our political power. Beethoven thought the tune worthy of variations from his hand. Wagner said that the first eight notes typified the British national character, and wrote an overture to it, and Thomas Atwood, one of Mozart's favorite pupils, used the melody in a coronation anthem. "The finest national song possessed by any nation," was the verdict passed upon it by the Barclay Squire, a competent judge. "Rule, Britannia," is the real national song of the British Empire, for it is Neptune's evident claim in Britain's sceptre, and a song of the sea is the real song of the nation. Upon August 1 an anniversary of the first public rendering of "Rule, Britannia," will occur, for it was upon this day of the year 1740 that it was first heard. Whether it made any impression upon this occasion we do not know, but it was not long afterwards that the people had adopted it, for we find from then till now it has remained the great of British war hymn.

Words by Thompson.

The occasion of its presentation was a fete in Clivedon, Bucks, to the Prince of Wales in honor the accession of the House of Hanover to the British throne. Among other performances was presented a masque called "Alfred," the authors of which were James Thomson, remembered as the author of "The Seasons," and David Mallet, a Scotchman, not remembered at all. In the course of the play, if such it might be called, there was a piece sung by a bard. There were six verses of it, four of them being as follows:

When Britain first, at Heaven's command,
Arose from out the azure main,
This was the charter of the land,
And guardian angels sang this strain:

Rule Britannia, rule the waves,
Britons never will be slaves.

The Nations not so blest as thee
Must in their turns to tyrants fall;
While thou shalt flourish great and free,
The dread and envy of them all.

Rule Britannia, rule the waves,
Britons never will be slaves.

The muses, still with freedom found,
Shall to thy happy coast repair,
Blest isle! with matchless beauty crown'd,
And manly hearts to guard the fair
Rule Britannia, rule the waves,
Britons never will be slaves.

An Unrecognized Genius.

So came "Rule, Britannia." The Prince in whose honor the entertainment was given has long been forgotten; if ever he was remembered. It is recorded to a Spanish dancer who enlivened the proceedings, but he as well as the other distinguished guests was unaware that they listened that afternoon to a song which British people will never forget. Indeed, it was not until some years later that anyone took the trouble to find out who had written the music of the song. It was then discovered that the honor was due to a Dr. Arne, a young English musical genius, who later won contemporary fame by his musical settings of several Shakespearean plays, as well as Milton's "Comus." Some of his songs are still sung, but never before or afterward did he produce anything like "Rule, Britannia." For the words credit is due to Thomson, though Mallet, when the song grew in popularity, tried to claim a joint authorship.

Britain's Great War Hymn.

In the course of time there occurred corruptions or variations of the simple words of Thomson, although the music, of course, remained unchanged. What was originally an invocation to "Britannia, rule the waves," because the assertion, "Britannia rules the waves"; and the song had not been sung long before the words sung long when the word "never" was repeated which helped to raise the song to greatness. In the course of time "Rule, Britannia," crossed the Atlantic and was seized by an author who applied the music to "Rise, Columbia." It was also grabbed by writers of hymns and has been parodied countless times. Let us all be proud, however, that it remains the finest national song possessed by any nation, as Squire said, and the great war time hymn of the British Empire.

Man Mysteriously Disappeared From Motor Boat

The upper Scugog claimed its second victim in the short space of three weeks Monday night, a few minutes after six o'clock, when John Martin, a well known resident of the town went to his death by falling out of a launch. The fatality occurred at the point where Gulry's Creek enters the river between the Riverside Cemetery and Mr. P. Burn's farm.

As to how the drowning actually occurred will forever remain a mystery. It appears that the unfortunate man and Mr. Wilfrid Hall were up the river in a launch on a fishing trip, and when a short distance south of the cemetery Hall was observed to turn round in the launch and discovered that Martin had disappeared. There was no sign of him in the river, and the supposition is that when the man went overboard he sank immediately and never rose again. Hall shouted for help, and his cries attracted Caretaker Sabin at the cemetery and Mr. Alex Murphy, who immediately proceeded to the scene. Hall could give very little information regarding the disappearance of Martin. Mr. Sabin telephoned Dr. Blanchard, coroner, from the cemetery and then assisted Mr. Murphy in searching for the body. They were soon joined by Mr. Cam. Wilson and C. Doyell and several other workers who were later joined by Mr. Jesse Farrin, who arrived on the scene in his launch. His search was in vain, until nearly 5 o'clock, when Mr. Perrin located the body at a point in the river almost at the mouth of Gulry's Creek. The weeds were very thick at this spot, and it was with much difficulty that the body was discovered.—Lindsay Post.

In each of the schools of the incorporated villages, the teacher of the Entrance class had, in addition, a Senior Third and a Junior Fourth class.

The careful examination and consideration of the foregoing list should prove interesting and instructive to trustees, parents, and taxpayers. The employment and retention of well-qualified and efficient teachers give large returns in education. It pays to engage and retain such teachers.

MIND READER WINS BY FEATS IN THE COURT

Mr. Bert Reese Readily Quotes text of Hidden Writings by Judge Rosalsky.

W. Bert Reese, whose "mind reading" powers have mystified many scientists, including Thomas A. Edison and Dr. William Hanna Thompson, author of "Brain and Personality," was discharged yesterday by Judge Rosalsky in General Sessions on his appeal from a conviction by Magistrate Barlow of disorderly conduct under a section dealing with fortune telling. Reese convinced Judge Rosalsky, Asst. District Attorneys Bowick and Flint and two reporters by demonstrations in court that he was not a disorderly person, but a man with apparently unusual powers.

Reese was arrested at 220 West Ninety-ninth street on Feb. 26, on complaint of Detective Adele Prime, who said she had paid him $1 to have her fortune told. Reese denied that he had told her fortune or accepted money. He was found guilty and held in $1,000 bonds to keep the peace for one year.

When the case came before Judge Rosalsky yesterday on appeal, Reese asked permission to demonstrate his abilities to the court. He told Judge Rosalsky to write something on each of three pieces of paper, and to fold them so that he might not be able to read what had been written. Judge Rosalsky put the papers in different pockets after he had mixed them up so that he could not distinguish them himself. Then Judge Rosalsky produced one of the folded papers and pressed it against Reese's forehead.

"Now, ask me how much money you have in a certain bank," Reese said.

"Fifteen dollars is the answer."

Judge Rosalsky admitted that the answer was correct, and produced the second piece of paper.

"This piece contains the name of one of your old school teachers—Miss O'Connor," Reese said.

The third question, which he read correctly but did not answer, was: "What was the rule in Sheller's case?

Reese performed similar demonstrations for the benefit of Mr. Bostwick, Mr. Flint, and the reporters. His last feat was to give the maiden name of the mother of one of the reporters. All of the questions were written on General Sessions stationery, which Judge Rosalsky supplied.

"I do not consider you a disorderly person," Judge Rosalsky said, when the demonstrations were finished. "You are honorably discharged."

Reese, who is more than 70 years old, said he had appeared before several of the crowned heads of Europe. It was not his fault, he said, that he had abnormal powers.—New York Times.

Men Wanted for the 8th Mounted Rifles

The 8th Canadian Mounted Rifles now in camp at Barriefield in training there sent a draft of 1150 men overseas last Friday and are now recruiting up to their normal strength Belleville and district has not so far contributed as much as some other localities to the mounted service and the opportunity is now at hand for men now wishing to go into this branch.

The 8th Mounted Rifles is one of the finest corps in the Dominion and the draft just sent speaks for their efficiency as the men going overseas have been fit to take their place along side of those who have been in training for almost a year.

The local recruiting officers Lieut.-Col. Ketchenon and Lieut. D. M. McCargar will accept candidates for the Mounted Rifles and other branches of the service. Those wishing to join the Mounted Service should apply before Thursday morning, when those joining will report to the regiment under an officer detailed for that purpose.

It is expected that Belleville and district will furnish about 75 men. Young men of Belleville this is your chance, lay down that pool cue, put on the King's uniform. If you don't want to walk you now have a chance to ride.

Men's $20 Suits For $15

In the face of the heavy advance in all lines of cloth, the above sounds strange, don't it?

BUT—the most people this season are buying $15.00, not $20.00 suits—and we have a lot of money locked up in this better line.

These lines are broken in sizes, but we have your size in some of them.

All are hand-tailored, bench-made Suits and it you are thinking of a suit, think of these—

ABSURD TO SAY THAT SUCCESS IS NOT A TEST OF MERIT

Success in thn Panama-Pacific Contest Will Demonstrate Your Capacity to Plan, to Organize, and to Achieve--A Little Talk to the Army of Canvassers Which Anyone May Read--Result of Vote to Date.

Never before in the world's history was competition in every pursuit and calling so fierce as it is now. The path to success is steeper and more thorny today than ever before. Never did success in more than a moderate degree demand for its attainment such a union of physical and intellectual qualities—of prudence, alertness, activity, persistence, boldness and decision—as in the year 1915.

Carlyle truly said of his day,—"The race of life has become intense, the runners are treading upon each other's heels. Woe be to him who stops to tie his shoestrings."

What would Carlyle say if he were living in this age of aeroplanes, automobiles and wireless telegraphy?

It is the height of absurdity to say, as some do, that success is not as a general thing a test of merit. In spite of the occasional triumphs of mediocre men and charlatans, the rule still holds—that the men who have made their way to the front, becoming rich or famous by force of their personal characters, must have something more in them than mere impudence.

Is anyone so foolish as to imagine that Henry Ford or Sir John Eaton would have won their positions in the business world without sterling qualities of mind and character?

It cannot be denied that there is an element of chance in human affairs to which success or failure is sometimes due. But, while circumstances may make or mar a man, it is equally true that a man may often make his own circumstances. It is easy to show that in nine cases out of ten luck is a mere bugbear of the idle, the languid and self-indulgent.

Two men may seem to adopt the same means to attain the same end, and, because one succeeds and the other fails, we say that the one is more fortunate than the other.

But the one succeeds and the other fails because they do not really adopt the same means towards the same end.

It is not enough to do the right thing, but we must do it in the right way and at the right time, if we would achieve great triumphs in life.

There is a right and a wrong way to work in this Great Voting Contest. The successful will try to enlist the support of as many friends as possible will do one street or neighborhood thoroughly before starting on to the next, and not waste a lot of unnecessary energy in travelling or flitting about, to forestall some other canvaser, will not devote valuable time to the collection of coupons when the expenditure of a few cents for postage will answer the same purpose, but not go forward aimlessly without plan or organization.

We have from day to day given hints as to the methods that will bring success in this great vote-getting campaign. It rests with the workers only to apply those hints and methods to their own peculiar circumstances and environment.

Success in this campaign will be a supreme test of your ability to plan, to organize and to achieve. It will show your capacity to make your way in the world if left to your own devices and resources.

The most of you are young and quite without experience in any line of independent effort. This will demonstrate whether you are made of the right kind of stuff to stand upon your own merits, and if you are made of the right kind of stuff it will develop your abilities as could almost no other line of experience.

Candidates will find that their campaign will be greatly assisted and promoted if they will have a cut published in the paper. If any of the candidates who have photos of themselves will forward same to The Ontario office we will procure a photoengraving and publish it without cost to the candidate. The photo will be carefully looked after and duly returned. If the candidates have no satisfactory or recent photos if they will go to the studio of Mr. W. S. Clarke, Belleville, he will take for them a cabinet photo and The Ontario will pay the cost.

Those who have already responded to our suggestion will have the satisfaction of seeing the cut appear in a few days. People like to know the person for whom they are working, and this is a good way to make them acquainted. The Ontario hopes that all candidates will respond to this suggestion, but this matter should be attended to at once in order to have the proper effect. It takes several days to get the cut made and returned from Toronto.

The poll today shows a number of changes in the relative standing of the candidates and very general activity on the part of many contestants or friends working in their behalf.

In District 1, Miss Hurley still maintains the lead and the lead of all districts as she has done from the beginning. Miss Bland, who is waging a most successful campaign is also mounting up in a most creditable way. Mr. Wm. Morrison, although only a few days in the field, already has several thousand votes to his credit and will prove a strong competitor for the highest prize.

In District IV. a most interesting situation is developing that affords some surprise. Miss Pearl Honeywell of Canniton has by several days of very effective work reached the head of the list, but is very closely followed by Miss Adams. Half a dozen others follow in close succession and a two-year subscription to the daily would give the lead to any one of the first nine.

Practically the same keenly fought campaign is being carried on in District V. and nearly a dozen energetic workers are within a few votes of one another's total.

District VI. sees Miss Maud Bailey, of Harold, in the lead today and Miss Margaret Murray of Springbrook second, but a number of other active and hopeful young ladies are pressing closely for, that honor. District VI. will have its own sensational features to record as the campaign develops.

The relative positions of the leaders in Districts VII. and VIII. are virtually the same as in Saturday's report. Nearly all the workers indicate that they are meeting with the most gratifying success in their canvass.

We would repeat our suggestion that the candidates make sure to have to their credit every other day a sufficiency of votes to place them well along in the count. The people like to assist a worker or a winner.

Following is the result of the polling at last night's count—

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

RUSSIANS HAVE DEVELOPED A STRONG OFFENSIVE AND STAYED THE GERMAN RUSH ON WARSAW

Germans Have Made Slight Gains Near Riga and in Galicia, But Have Not Otherwise Made Material Progress--Great Coal Strike in Wales Ended--Flotilla of Turkish Sailing Vessels Destroyed--Sidelights on the War Situation.

GERMAN RUSH SLOWS DOWN.

LONDON, July 21.—Rumors of the fall of Warsaw are in circulation today but the latest communications received here from both sides indicate that the Austro-German rush has slowed down.

Berlin despatches admit the Russians have developed a strong offensive on the Dniester and along the Bessarabian front but claim continued successes in their advance on Warsaw which the Kaiser plans to enter within two weeks.

On the other hand a despatch from Petrograd, while admitting that the Germans have drawn their lines closer to the Russian port of Riga on the north and that at the borders of Galicia they have extended their forces slightly on the right bank of the Bug, declare that elsewhere on the battle front they have not made material progress.

COAL STRIKE DEFINITELY ENDED.

LONDON, July 21.—The South Wales coal miners have accepted the terms agreed upon yesterday, and the strike is therefore definitely at an end, throughout th coal fields there was an overwhelming majority in favor of the settlement.

"A PLAIN INVENTION," SAYS BERLIN.

Berlin, July 21.—The statement attributed in the foreign press to Emperor William that the war would end in October is stamped by the Tageblatt as "a plain invention." The Tageblatt says it has learned that competent official circles know nothing of such a declaration.

PEACE DISCUSSIONS IN PRESS FORBIDDEN BY BERLIN.

NEW YORK, July 21.—A cable from Zurich, July 20 via Paris to the Tribune says the ever increasing volume of discussion of peace conditions by the socialist press is embarrassing the German government which is taking vigorous measures to stifle it. Evidence of this, according to the despatch, is found in the fact that a number of small newspapers publish the common declaration that they cannot take part in a discussion of peace as the censors before publication strike out all reference to it.

ITALIAN REPORT OF FURTHER SUCCESSES

ROME, July 21.—Today's despatches report further success in the operations against Coritz, where five hundred prisoners and many lines of trenches were taken yesterday. The early capitulation of th city is expected.

TURKISH FLOTILLA OF SAILING VESSELS DESTROYED.

PETROGRAD, July 21.—Official communication from the headquarters of the Russian army in the Caucasus says our destroyer flotilla destroyed a fleet of 69 Turkish sailing vessels laden with flour.

A battle is raging in the direction of Mush ..Asiatic Turkey, 83 miles southeast of Erzerum), we captured Nazykin in the course of the fighting.

SERIOUS RIOTING AROUND STANDARD OIL WORKS.

NEW YORK, July 21.—Serious rioting occurred around the paint of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey at Bayonne, where a strike is in progress. Earl today when a mob encountered the guards there three rioters were wounded by pistol shots fired by the guards.

STRIKE OF AMMUNITION WORKERS IN STATES.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., July 21.—Only 175 ma... chinists at the Remington arms and ammunition plan... responded to the strike call today. The labor mes... however, claim the reason all the machinists did no... go out was because of misunderstanding, and the... strike will go forward as planned.

AIRCRAFT MENACES MONTREAL

Fire in Powder Factory Said to be Connected With Nocturnal Trips.

MONTREAL, July 21.—An investigation has been conducted into frequent reports of the appearance of aeroplanes in this neighborhood. Acting upon instructions from Ottawa and at the instigation of Mr. G. G. Ogden, K.C., the registrar of the Allen Enemy Bureau, Inspector Hocut, was sent to Rigand to investigate. His report has now been handed in to Mr Ogden and will be despatched to Col. Sherrold at Ottawa.

A fire occurred in the nitro-glycerine department of the powder works at Rigand recently and is now generally connected with the visit of aeroplanes to the vicinity at that time and for some nights previously.

"There seems no doubt that some sort of aircraft have been operating in the neighborhood of Montreal during the past few days and nights," said an officer of the Intelligence Department today.

"In all probability it was from one or other of the aircraft schools which have been established on both this side of the border."

French Dirigible Bombs Arsenal

Railway Station and Ammunition Depot Visited at Vigneulles-Les-Hattonchatel.

LONDON, July 21.—Dirigible balloons are now being employed by the French army in aerial attacks. The first exploit of one of these new French Zeppelins was a successful bombardment of the German military railway station and ammunition depot at Vigneulles-les-Hattonchatel last night. Twenty-three bombs of heavy calibre were dropped on the arsenal with great success. The airship returned unharmed to the French lines.

$40,000 WASTED; NOW DEAD

Charles Rowe, Who Was Sought for Years, Said to Leave Wife in Detroit.

LONDON, Ont., July 21.—Charles Rowe, Great Lakes sailor, who made his home in Detroit and for whom a search was conducted through the columns of newspapers throughout the United States and Canada, for years, that he might receive an estate estimated at $50,000 left him by Lake Rieplh of this city, died here yesterday afternoon.

Rowe, it will be remembered, was sitting on the dock at Detroit when he picked up a paper containing the advertisements seeking his whereabouts. The estate was settled a few months ago, and since then Rowe has been boarding here. It is stated that a wife of his resides in Detroit. At the time of his death it is estimated that he had $10,000 of the estate left. The question arose in court when the estate was being settled as to whether Rowe was the long lost Charlie Rowe, but Rowe denied to the best of his knowledge that this was true.

Italians Open Fire on Fort Hermann

Several Lines of Austrian Trenches Captured on Carso Plateau.

ROME, July 21.—The following official communication was issued yesterday:

"The Italian offensive on the Carso front in the Faiazego district and in the upper valley of the Assio has continued to develop favorably.

"In Carnia we have opened an effective fire against Fort Herman, northeast of Plezzo, and are inflicting notable damage daily.

"With our occupation of the Carso Plateau several lines of trenches, solidly armored and protected, were successively assaulted and captured. Two thousand prisoners, including thirty-six officers, and six machine guns, 1,500 rifles and a large quantity of munitions were captured.

AVIATORS DESTROYED TAUBES

Three Hostile Aircraft Reported Disposed of Off Eastern Coast --Spectacular Fight.

LONDON, July 21.—Three big German Taubes were destroyed in a battle in the air with 12 fast British aeroplanes off the mouth of the Thames in the early day, according to circumstantial stories circulated here.

The German birdmen are reported to have crossed the North Sea, intending to raid the English coast. Approaching shore they manoeuvred in wide circles, giving observers time to telegraph warnings to English aviators, who rushed to the scene by twos and three and immediately gave battle.

The Germans tilted upward to a great height, hotly pursued. Thousands of feet below watchers gathered on the shore, saw the machines darting back and forth silvered in the sunlight, heard the faint sputter of motor exhausts, and the crack of rifles and pistols. Four British planes first came in contact with the Germans, and as others joined in the battle the Germans were cut off in their attempt to retreat seaward.

First the foremost Taube was seen to fall. Then the second shot downward in a mass of flame, plunging beneath the waves. The fight by this time had moved so far seaward that spectators along the coast could no longer trace the tiny specks among the clouds.

The following day naval boats found one of the German planes floating on the water, its occupants strapped to their seats with bullet holes through their heads. The third Taube is reported to have been lost.

ALLIES PREPARE TERRIBLE BOMB

LONDON, July 21.—"An explosive bomb of greater power than anything hitherto used in the war is being investigated by the greatest scientific of Great Britain," Arthur Lynch, a speech in the House of Commons this afternoon.

"If it is found practicable it will be invaluable to the Allies," he added

WEDNESDAY, JULY 21, 1915.

A COSTLY FAILURE.

Frank H. Simonds, who is perhaps the most competent commentator on war operations, who writes for the American press, reviews in the New York Tribune, the Austro- German campaign in Galicia. It is interesting to note that Tribune writer is in agreement with the view expressed in these columns, that so long as the Germanic forces were unable to destroy the Russian main army as a fighting force, the mere recovery of territory from the invaders did not constitute a victory. In fact, as Mr. Simonds intimates, such a great and costly effort to slacken so far short of its own, might even be argued a failure.

He compares the Galician drive with the other great German campaign of the war, the advance to the Marne. He points out that the Russian armies like those of the Allies, not only were not destroyed but were withdrawn intact. After the initial defeat there was a rally and a backward thrust along the San, comparable with that made by the French about Guise, last August. The Russians were compelled to surrender Przemysl and perhaps even Lemberg, just as the French had to abandon Rheims, Soissons, and Laon. However, the Russian resistance instead of weakening, was stiffening, and now after six weeks, during which the Teutons have put forth their greatest effort, it is announced that the campaign is at an end.

The campaign in Galicia ends just at the point at which the battle of the Marne was fought in France. At last, Russia's armies are standing with railways at their rear, and along their front, with the bases for supplies and ammunition near at hand. In a word, then, as Mr. Simonds puts it, the Austro-Germans have abandoned hope of obtaining a decision in battle. Russia's army has not been destroyed; the main Russian line in the East has not been forced, and presumably there is no prospect of such an operation being pressed successfully.

So far, then, the second great German operation has failed as did the first. They succeeded in conquering territory but this time it should be remembered, the territory taken is Austrian, not Russian. Today Russia stands on precisely the lines her high command, long before the war had planned she should. Not a single one of the forts in her whole defensive system has fallen. The writer points out, however, that Germany has been able to stand off the Anglo-French effort upon the West, while attacking Russia, but, as he says, eventually Germany must lose, unless she can completely rid herself of the enemy on one front. She has failed to do that in the Eastern theatre. And in the meantime, Italy has been coming up in the South—now foe to be dealt with, which must presently claim the attention of new German armies.

The Tribune writer's conclusion, then, is that "the Galician drive as the dash to the Marne has failed to accomplish its chief, its essential purpose. All the accumulated store of ammunition, all the new troops from the winter training camps have not availed to dispose of Russia. The victory has not even prevented a new foe from coming in. Once more the parallel is with 1813, but 1813 so far without Leipsic and without any immediate promise of such a disaster."

THE CAMEROONS CAMPAIGN.

The operations in the large theatres of war are so overwhelming in magnitude that little attention is given in the daily news service to the progress of the campaign in the Cameroons, which for normal times would be regarded with very lively interest. The arrival in England of some of the wounded soldiers, who have been engaged in that campaign focussed attention for a moment on the combined Anglo-French attack on this 200,000 mile German colony, whose rich coffee and rubber plantations and pasture lands stretch from Lake Chad to the sea between the British and the French Congo. Some idea is gained from the accounts of the wounded, and letters, of the terrible difficulties of the advance made by the Allied forces, in places, through thick brush and grass ten feet high, where it is not uncommon to have a wild elephant charge the line.

It appears that the colony has been invaded in three sides; from the sea where an Anglo-French naval division has occupied the ports and marched inland, spreading out like a fan; from the French Congo on the south, whence an expedition has penetrated to the heart of the German colony; and thirdly, from Nigeria on the north. Special importance is given to French aid in the attack on the Cameroons, by the fact that the projecting southern extremity of the colony which almost separates the French Congo from the French Sudan, was extorted from France by means of the Agadir threat of 1911.

Splendid success has been made by the Allied forces. The ports, the capital, most of the railways, and one, at least, of the chief military ports are now in their hands. When the rainy season ends, and movement of troops is less hampered, it is believed that is should not be difficult to compel the surrender of the German forces and complete the reduction of the colony. When this is achieved, Germany's overseas possessions, with the exception of its foothold in East Africa, will have vanished.

The British war loan was the greatest success in the history of the world. Subscriptions have reached a total in excess of $3,000,000,000, the Government announced. Of this sum $750,000,000 came from 57,000 persons through the Post Office and these subscriptions have not yet closed, while about 550,000 subscribed through the Bank of England—an aggregate of more than a million subscribers.

THE PREACHER'S VACATION.

The old man went to meetin', for the day was bright and fair,
Though his limbs were very tottering and 'twas hard to travel there;
But he hungered for the Gospel, so he trudged the weary way;
On the road so rough and dusty, 'neath the summer's burning ray.

By and by he reached the building, to his soul a holy place,
Then he paused and wiped the sweat-drops off his thin and wrinkled face;
But he looked around bewildered, for the old bell did not toll,
All the doors were shut and bolted, and he did not see a soul.

So he leaned upon his crutches, and he said "What does it mean?"
And he looked this way and that, till it seemed almost a dream;
He had walked the dusty highway, and he breathed a heavy sigh,
Just to go once more to meetin' 'ere the summer came to die.

But he saw a little notice tacked upon the meetin' door,
So he hoped along to read it, and he read it o'er and o'er,
Then he wiped his dusty glasses, he read it o'er again
Till his limbs began to tremble and his eyes began to pain.

As the old man read the notice, how it made his spirit burn,
"Pastor absent on vacation; church is closed till his return."
Then he staggered slowly backward, and he sat down to think,
For his soul was stirred within him, all the thought his heart would sink.

So he mused aloud and wondered, to himself soliloquized:
"I have lived to almost eighty, and was never so surprised,
As I read the oddest notice stickin' on the meetin' door:
Pastor off on a vacation; never heard the like before.

Why when I first joined the meetin', very many years ago,
Preachers travelled on the circuit, in the heat and through the snow,
If they got their clothes and victuals, 'twas but little cash they got,
They said nothing 'bout vacation, but were happy with their lot.

"Would the farmer leave his cattle, or the shepherd leave his sheep?
Who would give them food and shelter, or provide them food to eat?
So it strikes me very sing'lar when a man of holy hands
Thinks he needs to have vacation, and forsakes his tender lambs.

"Tell me, when I tread the valley and go up the shining heights,
Will I hear no angels singing—will I see no gleaming lights?
Will the golden harps be silent—will I meet no welcome there?
Why the though is most distractin', 'twould be more than I could bear.

"Tell me, when I reach the city over on the other shore,
Will I find a little notice tacked upon the golden door,
Tellin' me 'mid dreadful silence, writ in words that cut and burn,
'Jesus absent on vacation, Heaven closed till His return?'"

WHICH FIGHT BETTER—MEN OR WOMEN?

A singular contrast in the point of view adopted is presented by the action of the women seeking the franchise in England under Mrs. Pankhurst, and the Welsh miners seeking better wages and conditions economically. It may be granted at once that both sides have grievances. The merits of the cases are perhaps open to discussion, but that there exists a basis for complaint in each instance is undoubted.

While the Empire was at peace the women waged an uncompromising campaign on lines which they argued was making progress for them. The miners have also had several campaigns, notably the big strike of three years ago. When war broke out the militant women were among the first to declare that the nation and the empire, the cause of democracy and liberty, came before every other issue and that local and factional quarrels even the so important as the women's suffrage question, must be held in abeyance until the great issue had been declared.

The miners, on the other hand, have regarded the war as an opportunity to carry their own point, independently of the existence of the nation, the empire or anything else. It is apparently nothing to them whether Germany triumphs if they win their wages dispute. It is of no consequence to them if there should be no Britain left to pay wages if their own temporary affliction be recognized. It may be that the coal miners' strike may be settled in a short time, but even a few days' suspension of the production of coal, so vital to the effectiveness of the navy, Britain's only bulwark, might have wrought irretrievable disaster.

By no possible line of reasoning can the action of the miners be regarded as other than treasonable. Had the soldiers in the trenches thrwn down their arms and struck for higher pay, as God knows is comparison with the miners they would be well justified in doing, there would have been nothing more treasonable in their conduct.

It is no excuse to say that the owners may be making greater gains than they are entitled to make. This question could be settled and must be settled, when war is ended. But to force an issue of this description in the middle of the direst conflict in which the human race has been engaged, indicates a lack of consideration, a weakness of mental power, a failure of the sense of proportion, and a total disregard of everything that has heretofore been considered as essential to true citizenship.

The contrast between the suffragists and the miners is very striking and cannot be ignored. The men have a vote, and in the hour of trial they are willing to risk the whole national fabric to gain their own ends. The women have no vote, altho they believe it to be the most important thing the state could give them for their social, economic and political welfare. Yet they have voluntarily postponed all their claims until the war is over.

Which are the better fighters for Britain and the cause of civilization in this crisis—the men of Wales with their votes, or the women of England, disfranchised on account of their sex? —Toronto World.

SHOULD ATTEND CHURCH.

Sunday visiting, autoing and lounging cause the small church attendance. Too many people are indifferent in religious duties. Sunday last we read in many papers of large audiences in church, especially where a new minister was conducting his initial service. Why can't the same interest be maintained in church services? The minister will be there with the messages and the people should be on hand to hear it. The country needs the churches and the ministers and the people are all the better for attendance on the Sunday services. Church attendance in this country is optional, for while the freedom of individual action on Sunday is still restricted in Canada and various statutes prescribe that what is lawful on other days of the week is illegal, on the first day, only those who desire to do so of their own volition go to the churches. Compulsory attendance at religious service has not been enforced on the voice of the Christ since the creation days. In England, however, the freedom to remain away from church is comparatively recent, and it was not until the middle of last century, when Queen Victoria was on the throne, that all penalties for non-attendance at church were abolished. But altho it sometimes requires some effort and considerable self-denial to attend church one invariably feels better when they participate in the services. Get the habit and keep it and you will never regret it.—Bowmanville Statesman.

PRINCE OF WALES' FORTUNE

The Prince of Wales, who passes that birthday on June 23rd, 1915, now one of the richest princes in Europe. He then came into the unrest ed possession of the revenues of from the Duchies of Cornwall and Lancaster, which were settled on h by Act of Parliament at his father accession. These revenues do not at her present level exceed £70 a year leases on the London estate have ex ired. They increased enormously

The Duchies are said to-day o produce $750,000 per annum, an ag o about $500,000 per annum in the ri d of the late King. The Duchies ha no definitions trust for the Prince since his father's accessi and as the expenditure on the Prince's account has not probably exceeded a few thousands a year since then, a very large sum of money has been saved out of the revenues of the Duchies, which have been judiciously invested for the Prince's benefit. The annual income of which the Prince of Wales will from now have the control will probably exceed $1,000,000 a year, and he will thus be considerably wealthier than was either his father or the late King as Prince of Wales.

The Prince, however, will not require anything like this income for his personal expenditure, as he has no expensive tastes or habits.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and for a great many years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Medicine manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

CITY NOT LEAVE OFF YOUR BIG EFFORT TO THE CLOSING DAYS

Time to Win the Great Voting Contest is Now—Do Not Hesitate to Canvass Those Who Have Been Canvassed Before, You Will Profit by the Work Already Done and Probably Close the Bergain—Another New Candidate.

The Ontario's Great Panama-Pacific Contest will soon close. Some of the candidates are postponing effort and expect to do much work next week or in the last few days of the campaign. That is the wrong course and one that will inevitably lead to disappointment.

The time to do the hardest work is NOW. Work hard yourself and get all your friends to work and put forth their best efforts right at once. Great generals win their victories by doing the careful planning ahead, and by weeks, months, and even years of preparation.

Victory in this voting contest cannot be achieved by idling away all the preceding time and then putting forth a mighty effort the last week. The candidates who keep steadily and persistently pegging away, doing a good day's work with every passing day is going to win the better tours. Those who try to do a month's work in the compass of a day will certainly encounter defeat.

One pretty canvasser was feeling a little despondent when she called around to our office yesterday with a good bunch of ballots and coupons. Other candidates were all around and seemed to be cutting off on every side slices of territory that was properly hers.

The only advice we can tender in a case of that kind is to go over the territory again even though some rival canvasser has preceded you. The houses are not yet all supplied with this great Journal. In the town-ships surrounding Belleville not one family is five is receiving The Weekly or The Daily Ontario, and this is a outstanding the fact that a lot of household necessity. If you don't believe this statement ask any of our old subscribers.

So dear discouraged one, do not hesitate to canvass any party even though he may have been canvassed two or three times by your competitors. The chances are that the work they have done, by way of showing what they are about, has merely prepared the ground for you to come in and finally land the order.

It often turns out that way among rival agents selling life insurance, automobiles or machinery, so why does the rule not hold good in reference to a good newspaper which is more essential to the happiness of the family than any machine or automobile possibly could be?

If other contestants come into your neighborhood, then have about you a sense of reciprocity. Go over into their territory. Carry the war into Africa. You will bring home lots and lots of subscribers that the others couldn't touch.

Miss Imogen Palen has entered the contest as a candidate in District III., and will be strongly supported and assisted by a multitude of friends. This will insure a keen and vigorous contest in this division where the other candidates had been finding it somewhat uphill work owing to lack of spirited opposition.

The expiration date for the next lot of coupons is July 26th, be sure to have them returned to the office in time.

Center your attention on subscriptions, and treat coupons as only incidental. In this way you will be thousands of votes ahead.

Be sure to have a lot of votes placed to your credit every day now so as to keep well to the top. There is no better way to interest your friends in your candidature.

The friends of Miss Agnes Lawrence of Tweed are showing increased activity in her behalf and next report will show a fine total to her credit. There is no one else working in Tweed or vicinity and therefore her opportunity to win a fine tour is exceedingly bright.

Miss Ruth Sinclair, Victoria Ave., has been nominated and became a candidate in District II. Miss Sinclair is a bright and active high school girl who will become a very popular candidate in the second division.

Mr. C.R. Scott to be Congratulated

Mr. C. R. Scott of the Palace Theatre, has closed a contract with the Famous Players Film Co., to show their famous photo plays, known as Famous Pictures, at his theatre commencing Monday, Aug. 2nd.

Those who are not acquainted with these great productions will be glad to learn that they are being shown in the big cities in the U. S., prices up to $2.00 per seat. They are also being shown at the Strand Theatre, Toronto, as well as all the leading theatres throughout the Dominion.

The motto of the Param Pictures is not only showing the play but the star who made the play famous as well; such as Cinderella, with M. Pickford, who is drawing a salary of over $200,000.00 per annum. The Goose Girl, with Marg. Clark, known as the Mary Pickford rival. Arigon—Edna Mason with the famous John Barrymore, who also appeared in that great comedy, "The Man from Mexico."

These are but a few that will be shown at the Palace every Monday, Tuesday and Friday matinee.

Mr. Scott deserves congratulations by bringing these wonderful productions to Belleville and we are sure the public will appreciate same.

Exhibit of War Trophies

The free exhibit of war trophies at the Canadian National Exhibition Toronto, is expected to be one of the most popular features of the big Fair this year. In addition to the guns and other armament captured on the field of battle and loaned by the British Government there will be a large number of articles on view from private collections throughout Canada made by citizens who have friends at the front and by officers and government officials. Major Leonard of St. Catherines, has contributed a very interesting collection, while Surgeon General Ryerson just lately returned on the Lusitania, has also turned over his extensive collection of souvenirs. Brigadier General Hodgens has many relics captured in past wars and the present conflict, and these too, will be shown in this unique exhibit which will be located in the Government buildings.

It will Cure a Cold.—Colds are the commonest ailments of mankind and if neglected may lead to serious conditions. Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil will relieve the bronchial passage of inflammation speedily and thoroughly and will strengthen them against subsequent attack. And as it eases the inflamation it will stop the cough because it allays all irritation in the throat. Try it and prove it.

WESTERN PRESS ON MR. ROWELL

Comment on His Canadian Club Speeches

Special to The Ontario.

TORONTO, July 20—Port Arthur "Chronicle"—Mr. Newton Rowell is being welcomed into Port Arthur to-day not as the leader of a political party, but as a representative leader of public opinion. Mr. Rowell occupies a highly responsible position, and at a time of great stress like this it is the duty of men in such positions to inspire and encourage and enlighten the nation. It is by this conception of his duty that Mr. Rowell is now guided."

In Winnipeg Mr. Rowell's address to the Canadian Club on "Britannia vs Germanic Ideals," and to the Women's Canadian Club on "The Holy War and The Holy Land" attracted large audiences and aroused widespread favorable comment.

Regina Standard (Con.) —"Seldom has a speaker been better received and so enthusiastically applauded as was Mr. Rowell, K.C., M.P.P., of Toronto, last evening."

The Regina Leader"—"But if there is any one thing which will stir the pulse of the Canadian people and lead to action commensurate with our population and resources it is such addresses as that delivered by Mr. N. W. Rowell before the Canadian Club last evening. The address is one that should be heard by thousands of young men in this Province."

Saskatoon "Special"—The magnitude of interests at stake in the war and the boundlessly far-reaching effects of its outcome, were outlined in a manner unforgettably graphic and distinct."

Moosejaw "Star" (Con.)—"It is hard to keep Mr. Rowell off his favorite topic—the urgent need of more men for the service of the Empire."

Edmonton Journal, (Con.)—"The fire of patriotism imbued the clear and fervid address at the Canadian Club by Newton W. Rowell, K.C., M. P.P."

Edmonton Bulletin—"An inspiring address on the economic aspects of the war as they affect Canada."

Calgary News-Telegram — "Thrilling and fervid address."

Calgary Herald (Con.) — "A most eloquent, patriotic and educative address, in a wonderful climax he brought his audience to their feet with loud and prolonged cheers."

FATE OF SERGT. THOS. MAHONEY

London and Ottawa Know Nothing of Him Except as Wounded and Missing

(Mr. Thos. Mahoney of this city recently received communications from Ottawa and London stating his son, Thomas Mahoney, formerly of the 21st Battalion, has been reported wounded and missing. No other information has been received and the Militia Office and departments know nothing of the matter that he was killed, although a Belleville officer writing home from France said he was among the fallen.

The family have now some reasonable grounds to believe that he may be a prisoner in a German hospital and unable to communicate with his parents

Most infants ar inlester by worms, which cause great suffering, and if not promptly dealt with may cause constitutional weakness difficult to remedy. Miller's Worm Powders will clear the stomach and bowels of worms and will act upon the system that there will be no recurrence of the trouble. And not only this, but they will not do the injuries to the organs that worms cause and restore them to soundness.

ENGLISHMEN FEEL DISGRACED IF FAMILY NOT REPRESENTED IN THE WAR

Interesting Letter From Corp. A. L. Johnson to His Former Teacher, Mr. E. F. Milburn

Mr. E. F. Milburn of Belleville High School Staff has received the following grateful and appreciative letter from his old pupil, Corp. A. L. Johnson, son of Mr. J. W. Johnson, M.P.P., now with the 21st Battalion C. E. F. on active service in Europe, Sandling Camp, June 24, 1915.

My dear Mr. Milburn,—

Your good old-time, warm-hearted epistle of the 6th inst. reached this one of the twenty-one recipients of E. F. M's handwriting and I can assure you I was pleased immensely, for the news you, but more for all that lies beneath, between and round each line; and I wish I could write adequately to have you know that that underlying feeling is reciprocated. It's mighty good of you to bother with so many of us.

Not keeping a diary, I do not remember just what I have written you but it cannot be of much interest compared with what you are receiving from the real soldiers at the front. I often think how much more fortunate we have been than the fellows at the 1st. Instead of mud and rain, continuous fair weather has prevailed since our arrival. We're quartered on high grounds, in sumptuous huts, compared with the "Pond-ridge Works" in Kingston. Sanitation fine and everything exceptionally clean. Food good and particularly so now that our own company cooks are looking after us. Then too, we are benefitting by the 1st's experiences and taken all through we're a mighty fine outfit. Sometimes—while marching, a pride swells up in mes I would not swap for the pleasures so many chaps are enjoying over in Canada. This is no hardship and come what may we'll try our best to carry on the good work that the 1st. have started. If this sounds Irish (the coming sentences) don't blame me, it's in the blood; but I don't really intend writing what I'm about to. A person feels disgraced in this country if there is not one or more of their family over the way. They are bricks these Englis. If there's sorrow in their hearts, there's pride also, rich and poor they are game. I only wish the chaps at home could come over here and have a touch of it, they'd realize that a good job or aught else was a poor thing compared with a British uniform. Never again will I in my heart insult an Englishman, no matter how much of a blighter he may be, there's a whole of a lot behind that. But enough.

Scores and scores of camps are around here, some three hundred and fifty thousand troops in all. Em and I were over at Shorncliffe for a review in machine gun work. Returning here I ran into a quarantine in my but for many. Here's but also was unfortunate, so we've had the lid on for nearly three weeks, however, tonight finishes it. While at Shorncliffe we ran across Will Casey, fact is we were attached to his battalion while there. He is fast recovering from wounds and gas, you will be glad to know, and has also now obtained his commission and maybe of to the front again by this time. Newton Alford was in to see us Sunday and Tuesday evening Em and I met a Mr. McPherson, whose family live just across from the Open homestead at home. Ah! there's some of us here all right, Mr. Milburn.

There's so much I might write about I scarce know where to start. England was in the midst of its springtime freshness, when we arrived and just now millions of roses are every-where to be seen. Trellises of beauties covering villas and cottages from foundation to eave while gardens are abloom with them.

Historically interesting are many of the places nearby. I'm much afraid I'm too much of a modern to truly appreciate it all and much of my English history has been forgotten by this never-adept scholar. I had intentions of walking over to Saltwood castle (about ten minutes' walk from here) this evening, but it's cold and misty out of doors. It was here that the conspirators crossing from France, planned their deed and spent the night previous to its successful accomplishment at Canterbury Cathedral the next day I refer to the assassination of Cardinal Thomas A'Becket. Lymp Castle is a little over two miles distant from here, we passed it the other day while marching. I anticipate going over to Canterbury Sunday next, only some sixteen miles from here. Churches of antiquity are all about here, many of them with records on file going back to the early hundreds of English history. But again enough.

June 28.

Did not get over to Canterbury yesterday, as I was shoved on as orderly sergeant for the present week, much to my chagrin. It's another week fast in camp. Saturday afternoon and evening I spent in Folkestone, and a most gorgeous afternoon it was. Toward six o'clock three dirigibles of the Parseval type, were manuevering about and at times dropping to the hundred foot level. The usual assortment of destroyers were about, sometimes we will see twenty-five or more at once.

Goen and I saw Tom Fennell, Saturday afternoon, has been over here for a week today. He is looking fine and is camping in an old camp occupied por by Caesar's army.

I think I have told you previously in a most inadequate way, how very much I think of England. My regard for it grows constantly. Probably the oldness of it, is some of the allurement. Could some of the chaps at home have seen me Saturday afternoon, I'm mighty sure patronizing in that vicinity would have increased abundantly. Down by the sparkling Channel, with two charming girls reading to me, and afterwards tea in a rose garden. Ah, this "King and Country needs you" is not all borne by any means.

Have written now, till I'm fairly certain further perusal would become boresome, so wishing still, to hold your regards, I had best desist from lengthening this.

My kindest regards to Mrs. Milburn and the girls, my very best respects to yourself.

Believe me,
Sincerely
Arthur Johnson

A number of gentlemen appeared before the council and spoke regarding various matters.

Mr. F. E. O'Flynn spoke on behalf of the contractors Messrs. Foley & Gleeson for paving Pinnacle street. He thought a good pavement was necessary. Front street is congested by reason of the poor condition of Pinnacle street. The contractors will agree that the city shall not suffer by reason of the debentures being put upon the market at the present time. Be G.T.R. line, no trouble had ever arisen with the G.T.R. The contractors would allow the contract, conducted upon the G.T.R. being satisfied. The pavement should be extended across Victoria avenue

Pinnacle street pavement is the one most required in Belleville today.

Mayor Panter said that no doubt existed, whatever that Front street has become congested more than ever since the street was paved. The council however would not do anything for the points mentioned were cleared up.

Personally he would be glad to see all these pavements go down, but this is an unusual year.

Mr. R. W. Adams said parties in town were ready to take up the city's debentures for Foris and George Sts

Mr. T. Blackburn advised council C. P. R. engineers were surveying out the property below Commercial street

Three Italians Were Sentenced

Three Italians, Frank Belli, Joe Friscci and Antonio Carmine, were before Magistrate Ponton this afternoon found guilty of breaking into and robbing Mr. Jonas Bargman's store on June 5th of about $600 worth of jewelry, including 6 gold watches, rings, pins, chains, etc.

The first two were given three years each in the penitentiary and the third, Carmine was sentenced to one year in the Ontario Reformatory.

The Italians pleaded not guilty. Evidence for the prosecution was given by Mr Bargman, Sergt. Naphan, Detective Newton of Toronto, Acting Detective McConnell and Lorenzo Lagoffary, broker, Toronto, with whom one of the trip had pawned an article.

The Italians all went into the country and the arrests of their movements prior to coming to Belleville, during their stay here and after leaving town. They one and all denied the charge. Belli admitted having served a term at Montreal and so did Friscchi Carmine had once been charged but had got off. Lorenzo Lagoffary, who was here with Pierson's shows says he went to Kingston with them and left them on Monday. Going to Toronto he met the other two There was no question of the guilt of Belli, nor of that of Friscchi. There was not so much evidence against Carmine but was explained how he came by an enamelled watch and pawn ticket and the coincidence of the meeting in Toronto was rather suspicious. Carmine was inclined to deny having been in Bargman's until the rest claimed all were there.

All were accordingly found guilty of both charges

Mr. W. B. Deroche for the prosecution suggested that some arrangements might be made with the Italian Consul whereby the young men would refuse to serve in the Italian army.

The county judge stated that he would willingly allow all or either if he were possible, but is not allowed to recruit Italians into the Canadian forces since Italy went to war. If either scoundrel they were able to bring sufficient weight to bear upon the department of justice, he (the judge) would give the full sweet of the arrangement for enlistment being made.

Mr. P. J. M. Anderson appeared for the prisoners, Mr. W. D. M. Sherry for the accused.

British Take Trenches East of Hooge Chateau

Mine Exploded and About Hundred and Fifty Yards of New Ground Occupied and Consolidated.

LONDON, July 21.—Field Marshal Sir John French today made the following announcement in a report to the War Office:

"Yesterday evening, after successfully exploding a mine just west of the chateau of Hooge, east of Ypres, our troops occupied about 150 yards of the enemy's trenches. This gain has since been consolidated.

"We captured 18 prisoners, including two officers, and also two machine guns. Two other German machine guns were destroyed by the explosion

"Elsewhere on the front there is nothing to report."

The withdrawal of British troops from Hill 60, in Flanders, news regarding which operations several newspapers complained was kept so long from the British public, was explained by Charles E. Hobhouse, his postmaster-general, in the House of Commons today.

At the time the hill was abandoned he said, the "withdrawal of the troops had to be considered a necessity and it was conducted with singular success. When it became expedient to make the matter public it was no longer of any military importance. Hence the silence of the War Office."

This is the time of year when a man wants to wear as little as possible. If you wear one of our cool Two-Piece Suits, it's certain you won't "wear a worried look."

But there are two considerations in a Two-Piece Suit which call for the most competent tailoring. In the first place, the coat must be so tailored as to obviate the need of a vest. In the second place, as the fabrics are extremely light in weight, the tailoring must be done with the greatest skill.

Fabrics of carefully selected Sun-Proof Serges, Worsteds, Homespuns, etc., etc.

THE WEST AWAKENING FROM BUSINESS DEPRESSION

Toronto, July 21.—It is evident from reports on trade conditions in British Columbia which have just been received by officers of the Canadian Northern Railway Company here that the war in Europe was not the entire cause of the business depression from the effects of which people in the coast province are now recovering. Representative business men from Vancouver and Victoria almost unanimously advance the opinion that speculations of the boom period in real estate, account for the greater portion of their troubles. They add that the European conflict has had the effect of complicating conditions of trade, but contend that the slowing down of provincial commerce may justly be attributed to the economical British Columbia were compelled to resort to in order to meet the payments for the real estate they had purchased long before, in the hope of obtaining a prompt and excessive profit. But it also seems from the reports, that the days of discipline have resulted in the formation of a new perspective towards business generally, and the revival which now seems to be imminent will find a people without illusions and with a more intelligently directed energy waiting to take advantage of its opportunities. These reports to the C.N.R. are supplementary to those published recently in connection with the survey of trade conditions in Canada, which was conducted by that company. . .

"In British Columbia," the worse effects, commercially, of the war overseas, have been experienced by the men engaged in the lumbering industry. The demand for building material from the people in the Prairie Provinces fell off sharply almost immediately after the outbreak of hostilities, and has not yet returned to its former volume. This undoubtedly adversely affected a number of smaller operators, or at least those enterprises lacking adequate backing, but the larger concerns which were well financed have been able to easily weather the re-adjustment period. At present, it would, appear that the mills in British Columbia would be doing a much larger business if ships were available to move the product to its destination. A shortage of bottoms as a matter of fact, appears to be the chief handicap. While prices have eased off somewhat, the shrinkage has been taken up, possibly more than taken up by better, and in fact a manufacturer describes as "more tractable" labour. A remedy for the price trouble is being sought in plans for the organizing of a central selling agency, similar to that operating in the State of Washington.

The mill men on the coast say that the stocks of lumber on hand which are badly in need of new supplies. If from the confidence engendered by the harvesting of a good crop, building resumes its former activity in the Prairie Provinces, and vessels are able to clear to newly developed markets in Great Britain, the West Indies and the American Atlantic Coast States, they expect a business which will tax all their available facilities. In the meantime, it is stated that the mill in Vancouver is working overtime on new orders, which will keep it busy for a considerable period, and other lumbermen are in daily expectation of orders for large tantities of building materials for reconstruction in Europe. There are evidences that the clear spruce of British Columbia is meeting with favour for the construction of aeroplanes and several small supplies have been delivered.

The credit situation in the province is improving, and it seems to be the general opinion that obligations have been well met when conditions are considered. Lumbermen report that their collections are satisfactory. The weaker dealers are not in the market, to any extent, and the stronger firms are able to meet demands made upon them. Export lumber is sold on a basis of cash on delivery.

The Department of Agriculture for British Columbia, reports by wire that the agricultural situation is distinctly encouraging, and that weather conditions are favorable for growth. Increases are reported in land clearing, and in the areas devoted to crops of all kinds. The crop of poultry raising have been reduced to some extent owing to the high price of grain, but there has been satisfactory increase in dairying. In small fruits, there is a fair crop. The selling organizations have been improved, and prices have been maintained on the Truck farming is increasing, and the British Columbia produce is largely displacing imports from the United States. The price for the 1915 contribution are good and likely to so continue. There is a satisfactory increase in hog raising. The establishment of public markets is improving very satisfactory, and is reducing the cost of living. Unskilled labor at low prices is plentiful; and skilled labour is difficult to obtain, and fairly good prices are paid. The report adds, that consequently little produce will be imported from the Prairie Provinces this year on account of the larger area sown. The tendency appears to be for city people to exchange town properties for farm lands, and many appear to be anxious to leave the town and engage in agricultural work. A large increase in production is looked for in the next few years.

The Cedars of Lebanon

The "cedars of Lebanon" now exist only as a little grove of about 400 trees on a high plateau of Mount Lebanon. They are protected from goats by a stone wall and saved from the axe by the traditional reverence of the Syrians, who believe them to be the tallest trees in the world and almost sacred. It is probable that many times this number of trees and finer examples might be counted in Europe, especially in England.

Trial is inexpensive.— To those who suffer from dyspepsia, indigestion, rheumatism or any ailment arising from derangement of the digestive system, a trial of Parmelee's Vegetable Pills is recommended, should the sufferer be unacquainted with them. The trial will be inexpensive and the result will be another customer for this excellent medicine. So effective is their action that many cures can certainly be traced to their use where other pills have proved ineffective.

A Government Problematical Problem

To invest the situation of the Kelly combination
On this present obligation it requires some explanation
On that unconsumated calssed and the depth of its foundation
And the true and just formation, as is proved by excavation.
That is don't strike rock location, as down in specification,
It may last this generation, but the dome's sweet elevation
Is too much for its foundation. If the act of saturation,
Would subside the mighty caisson the Kelly combination;
Yes, and Rook-Salt meditation, and Omaha jubilation.
Will not solve the situation, until the commissioner's consternation
Is aroused to indignation, when to Stony mountain station
They will order their vacation, for a twenty-year duration,
And will close up perforation, so not even a relation
Can hold a conversation, during their incarceration.
Just think, a milk relation, got a fourteen days' vacation
At Bonny Castle station, for a ten cent valuation;
An act of reservation, which I blame, for retaliation.
This mail-fist administration, it would meet with admiration,
Just let Simpson's boc donations be followed by publication
For the benefit of a nation, that's not void of education
Now, since Montague's coronation, and Coldwell's altercation
From Jeremiah's Lamentation to the Book of Revelation
There ne'er was such sensation as this confounded caisson,
That stands without foundation, a disgraceful situation
When we find the evaporation in the treasury excavation.
What, English speculation, can they buy us as a nation.
To swift at observation, they'll hold their big donation.
And still starve our population, as say R. Fee legislation,
Now, I ask a week's cessation, to prepare for the cremation
Of the Kelly combination, for their lasubordination
As the Grit and Con. coalition, in its purely recommendation
Is to probe the situation, to its very deep foundation
If it please this mighty nation, it may save the situation.

SYNOPSIS.

Sanford Quest, master criminologist of the world, finds that in bringing to justice Mackonal, the murderer of Lord Ashleigh's daughter, he has but just escaped a life-and-death contest with a mysterious master criminal. Engaged by Professor Ashleigh, Lord Ashleigh's brother, to recover the stolen skeleton of an ancient monster, Quest finds Mackonal, the kidnapping, whose name Quest has been torn from her throat by a pair of hands without a body, in which the latter disappears from nowhere in his rooms and a note convinced it, signed by the same hands, sarcastically suggests that the Rheinhold Museum and Quest, scientist, may be hidden together. While Laura, Quest's ward, is visiting Lord and Lady Somers' estate, Quest and Lenora, his assistant, find the skeleton in a hut in the Professor's garden, and discover that the inhuman creature, half monkey and half man. As the Somers' establish, the hut is set afire and the monkey-man and skeleton are destroyed. Mackonal, Quest's rescuer from the Rheinhold Museum, is found murdered, and in his hand a black box with a note signed by the threatening hands.

FOURTH INSTALLMENT

AN OLD GRUDGE.

CHAPTER X.

Sanford Quest was smoking his after-breakfast cigar with a relish somewhat affected by the uneasiness of his perplexities. Early though it was, Lenora was already in her place, bending over her desk, and Laura, who had just arrived, was busy divesting herself of her coat and hat. Quest watched the latter impatiently.

"Well?" he asked.

Laura came forward, straightening her hair with both hands.

"No go," she answered. "I spent the evening in the club, and I talked with two men who know Craig, but I couldn't get on to anything. From all I could hear of the man, respectable. He is his eighth cousin."

"That's the professor's own idea," Quest remarked grimly.

"We've failed up against it, boss," Laura sighed. "The best thing we can do is to get on to another job. When has anything human been hid from jewels back, or will have at seven today. I bet she won't count with the thief. Then the professor's moldy old skeleton was returned to him, even if it was broken afterwards. I should take on something fresh."

"Can't be done," Quest replied absently. "Look here, girls; your average intellects are often apt to hit upon the truth, when a man who sees too far ahead will overlook it. You've got it out. Any other possible person occurs to you? Speak out, Lenora. You've something on your mind, I'm sure."

"I'm afraid you'll laugh at me," she began tentatively.

"Won't hurt you if I do," Quest replied.

"I can't help thinking of Mackonal," continued Lenora, "because he—he has never been recaptured. I don't know whether he'd dead or alive. He had a powerful friend, you know. If he is alive, he would be desperate and would attempt anything."

Quest shook his head once for a moment.

"I guess the return of the jewels squelched the Macdougal theory," he remarked. "He wouldn't be likely to start in the stuff when he'd got what was his hands on it. However, I always meant, when we had a moment's spare time, to find out what Hadley knew about absurd. We'll take it on straight away. Can't do any harm."

"I know the section boss on the railway at the spot where he disappeared," Laura announced.

"Then just take the train down to Mountways—that's the nearest spot—and get busy with him," Quest directed. "Try and persuade him to have one to the gang's handcar to go down the line. Lenora and I will come on in the automobile."

"Take you longer," Lenora remarked as she moved off to put on her hat. "You've care de la quarter of an hour."

"Can't help it," Quest replied. "Mrs. Rothsholdt's coming here to identify her jewels at twelve o'clock, and I can't run any risk of their being so much back. Yord's better be making good with the section boss. Take plenty of hints from me."

"Sure! That's easy enough," Laura promised him. "I'll be waiting for you."

She hurried off and Quest commenced his own preparations. From his safe he took one of the small black lumps of explosive to which he had once before owed his life, and fitted it carefully in a small case with a coil of wire and an electric lighter. He looked at his revolver and recharged it. Finally he rang the bell for his confidential valet.

"Rose," he said, "what else is there on today besides your feet?"

"No, today, sir."

"Just as well, perhaps," queen observed. "Listen, Rose, I am going out for an hour or two, but I shall be back at midday. Remember that. Mrs. Rheinhold and inspector French are due to here at twelve o'clock. If by any chance I should be a few minutes late, ask them to wait. And, Rose, a young woman from the Salvation Army will call too. You can give her this check."

Rose frown, who was Quest's secretary-valet and general factotum, accepted the slip of paper and placed it in his memory.

"There are no other instructions, sir?" he inquired.

"None," Quest replied. "You'll look out for the wireless, and you had better switch on through cable and telegraph communication on to headquarters. Come on, Lenora."

They left the house, entered the waiting automobile, and drove rapidly towards the confines of the city.

By Quest's directions the automobile was brought to a standstill at a point where it skirted the main railway line. On the one side was the house which he had appointed for his rendezvous with Laura. She was apparently not seen their approach, and she calle out to meet them at once, accompanied by a short, thick-set man whom she introduced as Mr. Horan.

"This is Mr. Horan, the section boss," she said.

Mr. Horan shook hands.

"Say, I've heard of you, Mr. Quest," he announced. "The young lady tells me you are some interested in that prisoner they lost off the cars near here."

"That's so," Quest admitted. "We'd like to go to the spot if we could."

"That's easy to fix," the boss replied. "I'll take you along on the handcar."

The section boss turned round and whistled. From a little side track two men jumped down to a handcar, and brought it around to where they were standing. A few yards away the man who was travelling for a great, overheaded Irishman—suddenly ceased his efforts. Leaning over his pole, he watched Quest, a sudden frown darkened his coarse face. He gripped his mate by the arm.

"Look at those there!" he asked, pointing at Quest.

"The guy with his linen collar?" the other answered. "I see him."

"That's Quest, the detective," the Irishman hoarsely. "He's looking for the man who got me five years in the pen, the beast! That's the man I've been looking for. You're my mate, Jim, eh?"

"I guess so," the other grunted. "Are you going to try and do him in?"

"Now then, you fellows," Horan shouted, "what are you hanging about there for, Red Gallagher? Bring the carriage up. You fellows can have a smoke by and by. I'm going to take her down the line for a bit."

The two men obeyed and disappeared from the neighborhood of the house. Quest looked after them curiously.

"That's a big fellow," he remarked. "What did you call him? Red Gallagher? I seem to have seen him before."

"He was the most troublesome fellow on the line once, although he was the biggest worker," the boss replied. "He got five years in the penitentiary and that seems to have taken the spirit out of him."

"I believe I was in the case," Quest declared suddenly.

"That's so! Now then, young ladies," Mr. Horan advised, "hold tight, and here goes!"

They sambled down the line for about half a mile. Then Horan brought them to a standstill.

"This is the spot," he declared. "Now, if you want my impressions you are welcome to them. All the search has been made on the right-hand side here and in New York. I've had my eye on the left all the long time. My impression is that he hid there."

"I'll take your advice," Quest decided. "We'll get out and take a little exercise in hill climbing."

"Good luck to you!" the boss exclaimed.

They searched carefully and deliberately for more than half an hour. Then Laura suddenly called out. They looked around to find only her head visible. She scrambled up, muddy and with wet leaves clinging to her skirt.

"Say, that guy of a section boss told me to look out for caves. I've been in one, sure enough! Only just saved myself."

They hurried to where she was. Quest peered into the declivity down which she had slipped. Suddenly he, gave vent to a little exclamation. At the same time Laura called out. An arm or two of trees was clearly visible through the stream above, and, flat on his stomach, crawled a little way down, took out his electric torch from his pocket and brushed the stuff away. Then he clambered to his feet.

"Our search is over," he declared gravely, "and your troubles, Lenora. That is Macdougal's body."

Lenora's face sank into her hands for a moment. Quest stood on one side while Laura passed her arm around the other girl's waist.

Quest glanced at his watch.

"I'll have to go," he said, "but I'll send someone along. Come up, Lenora," he added kindly. "Look after her, Laura."

Quest hastened along the road to the spot where he had left the car. The chauffeur, who saw him coming, started up and climbed to his seat. Quest called out:

"Drive to the office," he ordered.

The man slipped in his clutch. They were in the act of gliding off when there was a tremendous report. They stopped short. The man jumped down and looked at the back tire.

"Blowout," he remarked laconically. Quest frowned.

"How long will it take?"

"Four minutes," the man replied. "I've got another wheel on. That's the queerest blowout I ever saw, though."

The two men leaned over the tire. Suddenly Quest's expression changed. His hand stole into his hip pocket.

"Get on the wheel," he said. "That wasn't a blowout at all. Look here!"

He pointed to the small level hole. The man looked at it curiously. The unsubtle flushed upon the revolver clutched in his right hand.

"Get on the wheel," he continued. "Someone fired at that tire. Tom, there's trouble about."

The man looked nervously around.

"That's a rifle bullet, sure," he muttered.

"Get on the wheel as quick as you can," Quest directed. "Here, I'll give you a hand."

He stooped down to unfasten the straps which fastened the spare wheel. There one of his keen hopes, realized a moment too late. Almost in his ears came the hoarse cry:

"Hands up, Quest! Hands up this second or I'll blow you to hell!"

Quest glanced over his shoulder and looked into the face of Red Gallagher, raised a little above the level of the road. A very stiff revolver was also pointed directly at Quest's heart.

"My mate's got you covered on the other side of the road, too. Hands up, both of you, or we'll make a quick job of it."

Quest shrugged his shoulders, threw his revolver into the road and obeyed. As he did so, the other man stole out from behind a bush and sprang on the chauffeur, who, under cover of the car was stealing off. There was a short struggle, then the dull thud of the railway man's rifle falling on the chauffeur's head. He rolled over and lay in the road.

"Pitch him off amongst the bushes, Red Gallagher ordered. "You don't want anyone who comes by to see. Now lend me a hand with this chap. I'll show you what we propose to do with me!" Quest asked.

"You'll know soon enough," Red Gallagher answered. "A matter of five minutes' talk, to start with. You see that handcar boom?"

"The guy with the linen collar?" the other answered. "I see him."

"That's Quest, the detective," the Irishman hoarsely. "He's the man who got me five years in the pen, the beast! That's the man I've been looking for. You're my mate, Jim, eh?"

"I guess so," the other grunted. "Are you going to try and do him in?"

with your cursed prying into other people's affairs. Don't you remember me, eh? Red Gallagher?"

"Of course I do," Quest replied coolly. "You garroted and robbed an old man and had the spree of your life. The old man happened to be a friend of mine, so I took the trouble to see that you paid for it. Well?"

THE HORRORS OF CONSTIPATION

Bowels Almost Paralysed "Fruit-a-tives" Relieved

Dr. Boniface De Brawnheim, P.Q. Chief of Police, writes:

"After suffering with terrible Constipation for over 2 years, 'Fruit-a-tives' relieved me. While a student in Berthier College, I became very ill and was forced to leave. Severe pains across the abdomen continually tortured me and my digestion became paralyzed. Some one advised me to take 'Fruit-a-tives' and at once, I felt a great improvement. After using only three boxes, I was completely relieved and have never had any return of this trouble."

BOILING WITHOUT A FIRE

It is possible to make a pail of water boil without one putting it on the fire and without applying external heat to it by any means. In fact, you can make a pail of water boil by simply stirring it with a wooden paddle. The feat was performed in the physical laboratory of Johns Hopkins University, in Baltimore, Md., and anyone may do it with no trouble and no appearance. All you have to do is to place the water in a pail and stir with a wooden paddle. The water will at it long enough it will certainly boil. Five hours of stirring with a rapid motion are sufficient to perform the feat successfully. The water will, after a time, grow hot and then it will grow hot—so hot, in fact, that you cannot hold your hand in it for a moment. Professor Ames, of Johns Hopkins, annually lectures on this phenomena of heat by having one of his students perform the trick in front of the class. It is a wonderful thing. It is perfectly feasible.

The point is this. Professor Ames wishes to illustrate in what is known as the kinetic theory of heat. In order it requires just as many foot-pounds of work to develop a given quantity of heat, by friction, as it does to heat water at a regular speed it is possible to heat water at a regular speed it is required to raise the temperature of water a certain number of degrees Fahrenheit so far made; and, in fact, the one which is accepted as the standard all the world, is that which was measured in Johns Hopkins College.

Heat is developed in almost any manner which is known, whether by collisions or very violent action. It is a solid trick for a blacksmith to forge his red hot iron instead of using the violent hammering on two pieces of wire will heat them just as well, so that they can be welded together.

ABOUT BANTAMS

Plymy Fowls are Great Layers and Splendid Table Bird

Bantam fowls are generally looked upon as mere pets, but as a matter of fact they have many strong economical points which are worthy of notice. Bantams can be kept in the space required for two hens, and they are one of the small sized breeds. Leghorns are Mediterranean, Dorkings are a fair good meat, and are great layers as a rule. The Black Africans rival the Dorkings in size, and are also good. Cochins are very large, but a poor table bird. Brahmas are specially good eating, and Plymouth Rocks are "game" and cooked as quail should be, while the Wyandottes are a fine worthy bird. It is said that some Bantams are also good sitters. One sitting room for, say 20 hens only would do well to occupy it with the Bantams. The Bantam is generally not setters in many cases, but a Bantam hen will sit on 15 eggs and will help out hers. For small back yards Bantams are of great value. Cochin Bantams are the largest of the eggs, and are the most docile of any of the birds, for the reason that they are easily tamed. All the varieties of eggs include Bantam eggs, and cover their yards, for they can fly like quail.

If you want to cut the wings off your fowl so that it will not disturb your neighbor's flower beds, neighbors uncut and when the wing is folded it will be no danger of it. The effect as to flying will be the same as the old ugly way.

Hogs and Dairying

The hog fits in exactly as well upon the farm where the dairy is run, or where there is no beef cows in the farm. Perhaps the real value of a pig is high rated by breeders is caused as the pig is no feed of a better quality than dairy by-products. It is worthy of note that the man who has a dairy is the man who makes pigs than the man who has no dairy, for the reason that it is to find a satisfactory substitute for milk for young pigs just

A PEACE RIVER PIONEER

Tells of Rapid Development of the Great West

Mr. M. L. Propst, of Vanrena, Alberta, who made the first shipment of wheat out of the Peace River country on the Winnipeg Grain, is one of the pioneers of that great fertile district which now being linked up with the main line of the Grand Trunk Pacific by the building of the Edmonton, Dunvegan and British Columbia Railway.

"When grain reached a good price," said Mr. Propst, "I saw where it was possible to haul the grain and just as soon as the steel was laid to end of grade I started my teams. In crossing the Peace River the gorge is some 700 feet deep, and it required doubling on the hill, and it required seven teams to get the heaviest loads up the hill, which is one and one-half miles long. It took seven days for this trip from Vanrena to Peace River Landing. Though wheat realized about cents per bushel all clear, after expenses were paid.

"Four years our nearest railroad station was Edmonton and all our supplies we were compelled to haul from that point, 500 miles distant, and it took us 30 days to make trip. Now we have all the modern conveniences here, despite the long transportation by teams, we have made money. We have all connected by telephones belonging to a local company. There are several automobiles in the country, of which I own one. Our country is going to be more adapted to grain growing than most other parts I have been in, as the crop is sure. I am confident the quality of wheat will get better each year with the development of the country As it is now, however, it will not bring the top price to their crop they should on account of long transportation by team and the homestead improvement work to be done."

Facts About Fruit

Although a great number of popular-priced furs masquerade under names that no actua. animal claims as its own, there is no particular secrecy about the fact that they are rabbit furs, for instance, publishes a catalogue to inform customers just what they are actually buying. Alaska bear, for example, is the name of Minnesota raccoon colored a dark brown. Adelaide chinchilla is the fur of a selected, softhaired and delicately colored Australian opossum. Arctic coney is the fur of the white hare of France; Baltic fox is the fur of a large hare of Northern Europe; Iceland white fox is white rabbit fur; Japan mink, until the hair is straight; Kamchatka fox is the fur of the Northern timber wolf; Manchuria lynx is the fur of a variety of half-wild dog from Manchuria; Yorkshire lynx is Canadian wild-cat; Baltic lynx is a species of Northern European wild-cat; Russian sable is selected Russian cat-skin; Hudson seal is muskrat skins of selected quality; and lamal seal is the skin of selected French white hare.

Fifty Thousand Eyes

There is a most astonishing diversity among animals in the form, size, number and location of their eyes. In mammals, birds, reptiles, and fish they are limited to two, and are invariably placed in the head. In some of the lowest forms of the animal kingdom they may have where up to 50,000, and they seem to have been placed anywhere that seemed handy.

The dragon fly possesses eyes composed of an aggregation of about 50, 000 smaller eyes, and the common house fly has about 6,000, which may be seen by the aid of a magnifying glass of even small power.

In spiders and scorpions there are usually eight eyes, and one or two more clusters on the back and top of each of its five rays, drawn close to gether.

A New Fireproof Material

It is claimed to be a new material, the basis of which is cotton, that it is both fire and waterproof, that it can be manufactured into tiling for floors and shingles for roofs, and that its use will render bungalows, garages and like structures fireproof. It is also said to be made into shoes that are superior to leather so far as wearing and lasting qualities are concerned, and cheapness production, as it requires neither rubber nor stitching, but can be attached with cement. It can also be used in the making of toys, automobile tops, furniture, rugs, saddles, horse collars, tires, and the like. In fact, it is good for so many things that one can naturally look to see who is exploiting it, and find the name of an ordinary mortal who is said to be a manufacturer; but of what is not stated.

The Emperor of Japan is the representative of a dynasty which claims to have possessed the throne since B.C. 660.

Prince Edward's Good Farmers

To the Editor,

Dear Sir,—Last evening in your daily edition I saw mention of Mr. Anderson's cherry orchard, which is certainly beautiful, but on the trip from Bloomfield to the Sand Banks one can travel for several miles along a road bordered by hundreds of trees laden with the same beautiful fruit. Cherry Valley and the progressive farmers who live in Prince Edward county are well known and admired by all lovers of the best agriculture.

Fell Off Smoke Stack Fractured His Ankle

Mr. Joseph Maher, Gilbert street, who follows the occupation of painting suffered painful injuries to his ankle yesterday by a fall while engaged in painting a smoke stack at the Dodson Factory about 4.30 yesterday afternoon. Mr. Maher had just completed the job and was being hauled up in a sotter by his brother-in-law, when the rope broke. Mr. Maher fell a distance of about 40 feet on the roof of the boiler house. His ankle-bone was fractured and he was rushed off as soon as possible to the general hospital where Dr. Mather looked after his treatment. Fortunately no internal injuries were sustained.

Mr. Maher has been used to this work for years and has never before had an accident. In the past he had painted the same stack. It was thought the tackle was sound, but apparently there was a weak portion in the rope.

A Full Measure of Health is the reward of those who live right and eat right.

And as fresh air, exercise, and good food are the principal factors, it is important that food be selected which contains the essential nutritive elements in well-balanced, easily digestible form.

In making the famous wheat and barley food,

Grape-Nuts

the malting of the barley brings out the diastase (the digestive element) while the long 20-hour baking breaks down the starch cells of the grains. Thus Grape-Nuts does not tax the digestion, but actually assists in the assimilation of other foods.

Messrs. Henderson and Company's monthly circular issued from Colombo, Ceylon, states: "A feature of the market was the record prices paid for flavory teas The oldest members of the tea trade in Ceylon could not remember such high prices being realized before." The Shiels Tea Company have determined that no matter to what price tea goes, the public will get exactly the same quality in their packets. They will, of course, be compelled to charge the enhanced prices that teas fetch, but they will keep to their standard of quality.

City Notes

Residents of East Belleville are complaining of horses and cattle running at large in the vicinity of the city boundaries.

The annual G.T.R. picnic is being held today at Massassaga Park.

The police are after dog-tax delinquents. The usual excuse-crop for not paying Fido's share of the city burden is mature. Harvesting in police court may begin shortly.

The Smith Hardware Company are collecting old razors for, soldiers at the front. They agree to ship any given here to London for sharpening, whence they will be issued to the troops.

A Belleville nurse in France writing home of her experiences in hospital work tells the story of a Highlander who was brought in with a compound fracture of the leg and leg-operations. It is the custom to cut the clothing from the soldiers so as to not disturb them unduly by removing them over. This method was performed with a number of wounded, while the Highlander watched. Then his turn came. When told that the doctors would have to cut his kilt off he said "Never. I'll die first. Who created of a sport having his kilt cut off!"

Police circles are quiet these days. There were no arrests yesterday and no court was held today. There was a call to Mill street but the disturbers had fled.

BUSY TRENTON

TRENTON, July 19—We learn today that Dr. Edward Kidd has been successful in obtaining a commission in the Army Medical Service and will leave for Ireland tomorrow. For some time we have known that the doctor was making every effort to get to the front and we have great pleasure in extending our congratulations.

It has been intimated to us that the Canadian soldiers from this town and district look forward to the receipt of a copy of The Ontario. Knowing this, we feel sure that many will be glad to subscribe for the paper and have it sent to them while they are away. For some time we have known that the doctor was making every effort to get to the front and we have great pleasure in extending our congratulations.

Farewell to Bible Class Teacher

On Tuesday evening, June 29th, the Senior Adult Bible Class of the King St. Methodist Church, Oshawa, met at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Mitchell, Agnes St. to bid farewell to their retiring pastor and teacher, Rev. A. C. Moore. A very enjoyable evening was spent, and many pleasant memories were brought to light. It was also called to mind that when the class was first formed by Mr. Moore, there were about eight names on the roll, now they number nearly 60. As the hour for parting drew near an appreciative address was read and Mr. Moore was presented with a Schofield Bible—after which refreshments were served.

The Cheerfulness of the British Soldier

A special correspondent with British Headquarters in the field., writing on June 1st comments on the cheerfulness of the British soldiers. He writes:—

"The more I see of the British Army in the field the more I am impressed by its cheery optimism and unquenchable good spirits. It works and plays with the same good-humored zest; nothing can dishearten it. Until the gas-poisoners began their work it was anyarmy that regarded the foe facing it impersonally. Killing was the business in hand. but killing without malice: Flower-covered graves for dead enemies and cigarettes for live prisoners. Now the business of killing is full of bitterness and there are no flowers. Yet even the manner of the new death has not choked the spirit of cheerfulness. Men take their turn in the gas zone with a grim resolve to avail the enemy's casualty list with their own, but they can jest even when they are gasping for breath. "Another pea-soup fog" said a North Somerset lad to a comrade in the trenches, when he saw the wall of gas vapour stealing towards him. "I ain't safe to be out in the night air."

"It's a bad day for the Lord Mayor's procession," said a London rifleman when the fog swept over his trench. He lay in a dug-out for ah hour, his face buried in a respirator, and then staggered into the open air, dizzy but practically unhurt. "Reminded me of the Thames Embankment on a November morning," he said to me when I saw him in hospital, "except that it was much safer. No trams."

"Another gassed soldier I saw was breathing painfully, but able to talk. "Takes all your lung power to keep alive," he gasped. "Haven't breath enough even to curse the Kaiser properly. A man ought to be given extra lungs for trench work."

The chaplain attached to this clearing station was going among the newarrivals as they lay on stretchers in the open air after having their wounds dressed, and was giving each man a regulation postcard—one of the sort which is prepared for the post by scratching out some printed sentences and leaving others. He came to a victim of gas—a mere boy who stared at the card suspiciously. "Would you like to send your people a postcard, my boy? said the chaplain, and went on to the next stretcher. "Dose, does this mean that I am going to die?" asked the lad, as he tried to scrawl a name across the front of the card.

"Nonsense," retorted an orderly who was passing. "There's no use wasting the card. Besides, it says, 'I am wounded.'" I am not wounded. I'm only full of blood and gas, and as soon as the chest is clear I'm going back to 'do' for some of those Germans. Give us a drink!"

The cheerfulness of the wounded is very marked. A man who has been shot in the leg or arm after severe shelling, and then carted for perhaps twenty miles in a slow-moving ambulance, could be forgiven if he took a pessimistic view of the immediate future. Ten to one he arrives at his destination hiding his suffering behind a mask of gaiety.

I sat in the grounds of a casualty clearing station one afternoon watching the endless procession of Red Cross motor cars discharging their doleful burdens under the trees. I heard very few cries of pain. These men had been brought direct from the battle-field with only a halt at the dressing station where first aid is rendered. Many were, of course, badly disabled but those who could use their legs pluckily tried to walk.

They joked with each other as they sat, or lay around the garden, waiting for the doctor's verdict—a verdict which sent them to the coast. One of our aeroplanes was sighted overhead, sailing back from the German lines with enemy's shrapnel bursting in its wake and every man who could do so hobbled himself upright in order to watch the battle.

"Fifteen shots," said a Durham miner, whose left arm was bound to his side, "they never hit anything."

"It's a sinful waste of ammunition," said the Canadgnid, "but they hit you."

"They must've aimed at something else," growled the miner. "I could shoot better with my eyes shut."

Two men beside him paid no heed to the conversation. They were eagerly turning over the tattered leaves of an old copy of a London illustrated paper. Three hours before they were struck down by shrapnel, which killed men around them. Now, with their wound dressed, they were intent on photographs of "Kit" battalions and scenes from a new London play.

Cheerful in the trenches; cheerful under fire; cheerful on the march!

My motor-car halted at a cross-roads to let a famous battalion of infantry pass. Big men they were—some of the pick of England's manhood. They had been tramping for hours through a blinding cloud of dust, and faces, uniforms, caps, were thickly powdered with it. They sang, coughingly, a weird song about being very dry—dry—dry—how dry! Tunics were unbuttoned and thrown back, perspiration streaked in rivulets down their grey cheeks, and they were tired—dog tired. Yet they sang

The column halted beside me. "A sergeant-major came out of a cottage with a maple sitting solemnly on his thumb. Instantly a volley of questions. "Go's your friend, Bill!" "Mind your packets, boys, there's a black thief around!" "Does he talk French?" "That's a German magpie; watch him." Cries just maybe, but they served their purpose.

"How long have you been on the march?" I asked one paper-quarrifier.

"A thousand sanguinary years," said a hoarse voice. "We do this for fun. Got a match?"

And the battalion moved on and disappeared in a whirling cloud, while the magpie, cocking his head wisely, listened to the dying chant: "Still dry; still dry; still dry."

I saw another famous battalion—shorn to a third of its original strength by German shells, resting in billets in a village near my quarters. For a fortnight these men had endured all imaginable horrors in the salient of the British line beyond Ypres. Scarecrows they were, and men with the shadow of death still across their set faces, but as they came down the narrow street, where friendly villagers smiled at them from their cottages, you could see the old spirit coming upon them again.

"Baths," cried one man as they passed a slime-covered pool beside a shell-hole.

"Billiards," exclaimed a second as he glanced through the open door of the little estaminet.

"Omelettes," said a third, as he saw a tiny shop window crammed with boxes of English cigarettes. . . . They sat around that night, in the open doors, in fields and along hedges, smoking and writing letters home or watching the crimson sunset, with an air of utter contentment such as I have seldom seen. Three of them were giving an impromptu concert to some admiring youngsters with a mouth organ and an accordeon. Another was chasing a reluctant cow into her night quarters, to the delight of the venerable person who owned her.

"It's a good old world," said a corporal (who in a barrister when he is at home), sitting with his two comrades near my gate. "This place beats our dug-outs, what's Wonder that we're gaited back.

"Don't care," said his companions, "It's all in a lifetime.

FAMINE AND TERROR REIGN AT TRIESTE

Advance of Conquering Italians Causes Inhabitants to Vacate City.

ZURICH, July 22.—Refugees from Trieste state that the city is in a terrible state of terror and that famine reigns. Supplies of vegetables and provisions brought in daily by peasants constitute the sole resource of the population, as all stocks of provisions have been seized by the military authorities. These are now seized at the gates of the city, where supplies are brought by the peasants.

The starving population is now given daily a ration of flour and a little fruit. All the civil authorities have abandoned the city on account of the attacks by an Italian aeroplane. The military authorities have ordered the workingmen's quarters of San Dionysono and Servola to be evacuated by their inhabitants.

The thunder of Italian guns can be heard day and night. Fears are felt that the Austrians may destroy the city rather than allow the Italians to capture it.

Pierce Austrian Front on Isonzo

Italian Troops Break Through at Tolmino, St. Lucas and St. Avre.

GENEVA, Switzerland, July 22.—A despatch to The Tribune from Vijlach gives the following:

"The Austrian losses since July 18 along the Isonzo have been 9000, of whom 1100 are prisoners. On the Tarlovo front 1600 prisoners have been taken, and in the Carnic Alps, 2300.

"The Austrian front on the Isonzo has been pierced at three points—Tolmino, St. Lucas and St. Avre.

"The Italians continue to progress in Val Sugana.

"With the aid of aeroplanes, the Italians located several Austrian batteries near Rovereto and succeeded in destroying them.

"The provisioning of Gorizia is becoming a serious problem, as the Italian artillery dominates the line north of the town. Previously four trains arrived daily. Now there is only one, which comes in at night.

"The Italians are consolidating the position they won on the Carso plateau."

COL. ROOSEVELT SPEAKS FOR WAR AT FRANCISCO

Condemns Hotly-Coddlers Who Are Not Prepared to Help Country.

San Francisco, Cal., July 22.—"This is "Roosevelt Day" at the Panama-Pacific Exposition. Theo. Roosevelt, former President of the United States is on the programme to make two addresses, and be the guest of honor at a reception.

Mr. Roosevelt's first address of the day is for the members of the army and navy. His second address was to be on "War and Peace," which he said on arriving here last night, might just as well be called "Damn the Mollycoddles."

READY FOR THE CROWN PRINCE

First Division is in the Trenches Again "Ready for Anything." After Period of Rest—Officers are Having Leave.

LONDON, July 22.—The German Crown Prince has no terrors for the Canadian Division. A lengthy period of comparative rest has done wonders for the men. When the Division is reinforced to full strength it will be ready for anything, offensive or defensive.

An officer, writing to a friend, says: "We are in very good trenches and things are quiet, so really it is rather pleasant as the weather is quite fine. We hear rumors that the Crown Prince's dash for Calais. We really are eagerly waiting for his coming. We have a good position to defend and have nothing to fear.

"Artie, quite an easy, slack time things are quite as like once more. I have just come in, 6.50 a change, to my palatial dug-out, as I got weary walking up and down the trenches. We had our first issue of rum in three weeks today, so am feeling a bit backed up.

"Unfortunately we lost a splendid officer a few days ago. He was shot by a German sniper. Orders strictly prohibit the mention of any names. We have started to get leave now and a few have already been away. Col. —(deleted) has had his men looking much better for it. With a bit of luck I hope to get mine soon."

RUSSIANS MAKE NEW STAND AGAINST VON MAC KENSEN

Grand Duke Nicholas Manoeuvres His Armies so as to Throw Superior Forces on Either Side of Enemy--Admissions of Berlin, Vienna and Petrograd--Russian Complaints of Heavy War Burden--Italian Assault Continues With Great Vigor--Washington Note on Way to Berlin--Botha's Triumphal Return.

SITUATION ON EAST FRONT

LONDON, July 22.—Von MacKensen's drive from Warsaw on the south has broken the Russian line at points but Vienna says the Russians have made a new stand south of the Chelm - Lublin - Ivangorod railway, while Berlin admits that between the Upper Vistula and the Bug the Russians have again entrenched against Von MacKensen's army.

Petrograd however admits a strong German attack towards the village of Rejovets which is only a mile or two from the railway west of Cholm, but reports the Germans were repulsed from some sectors.

A Petrograd despatch to the Morning Post says Grand Duke Nicholas has manoeuvred his armies so as to bring the enemy into positions which will enable him to throw superior forces upon either side.

RUSSIA'S COMPLAINT.

LONDON, July 22.—A Petrograd despatch to the Daily Telegraph says complaints are beginning to be heard that Russia is being compelled to bear practically the entire burden of the war.

TWO STRIKERS SHOT.

NEW YORK, July 22.—Two men were shot this morning in an attack by a large crowd on the plant of The Tidewater Oil Co., in Bayonne, N. J., where several thousand oil workers had been on strike against the Standard Oil Co. The men were said to have been shot by company guards.

Four fires which were started in or near the oil plant late yesterday were under control today. A few small buildings and a number of box cars were destroyed.

WASHINGTON NOTE SENT VIA COPENHAGEN.

WASHINGTON, July 22.—The United States Note was sent forward from Washington to Berlin at 9 o'clock last night, state department officials unexpectedly announced today. The note was sent via Copenhagen and will be decoded and translated in Berlin by Ambassador Gerard today for presentation to the German Foreign Office probably Friday morning.

BOTHA RETURNS IN TRIUMPH.

CAPETOWN, South Africa, July 22.—Premier Botha arrived here today from the campaign which ended on July 9 with the surrender of German Southwest Africa and was received with wild enthusiasm. Business was suspended and the city was decorated.

AUSTRIANS WEAKENING.

ROME, July 22.— A general action is being carried on vigorously along the entire Isonzo front although at some points there are more violent engagements than at others, there are signs that under the continued forward pressure of Italian army the Austrians are weakening and that their lines are breaking. The vigor of the Italian assaults is almost unprecedented.

ALBERTA VOTES TWO TO ONE TO BANISH LIQUOR

Thirty-Nine Thousand For, Twenty-Nine Against, Prohibition.

EDMONTON, Alta., July 22.—By a majority that will run about two to one the province of Alberta, in a plebiscite vote under the new Direct Legislation Act, today pronounced in favor of the proposed liquor act prohibiting the sale of liquor throughout the province. Returns received up to 10 o'clock last night showed 39,000 in favor, and 20,104 against, with half the polls heard from.

The biggest majorities in favor of the prohibition were piled up in the country districts in the southern parts of the province, while in some of the northern constituencies, where liquor is now partially barred, the majorities were against prohibition.

All the cities, with the exception of Lethbridge, went dry. Edmonton showing a majority of 3600 and Calgary about 2300.

The new liquor prohibition act goes into effect July 1916.

ASQUITH SCORNS TO MAKE REPLY

Request for "Casualties" for Which Britain Fights Leaves Him Cold.

LONDON, July 22.—A request by Sir William Byles, Liberal, in the House of Commons this afternoon that Premier Asquith restate more definitely the essential objects for which the nation is fighting, in the hope that peaceful influences might result in those objects being attained by other means than warfare left the Premier cold.

"I stated these objects with as much definiteness as I am capable of at the beginning of the war and at the Guildhall," the Premier said "and I am unable to add anything to those statements."

Pressed to take under consideration the peace movement of the German Socialists, Premier Asquith reiterated: "I have nothing to add to the statements I have already made."

"A Fool and His Money" read about it in Saturday's Ontario.

COMMANDER HORTON WAS LUCKY MAN

Had the Good Fortune to "Bag" His Second German War Vessel.

LONDON, July 22.—Rear Admiral or Mad Horton falls the credit of having sunk the German battleship which was torpedoed in the Baltic on July 9 by a British submarine. Thomas McNamara, Financial Secretary of the Admiralty, informed the House of Commons today that a communication to this effect had been from the Russian Government. The German battleship which was sunk is believed to have been the Pommern. Commander Horton previously was in command of the submarine which sank a German destroyer off the mouth of the Ems last October.

The children brought the suit case home and on being opened was found to contain the young infant. Though the child was only a day or two old, it is thought it will survive as it has shown remarkable vitality. The baby was taken to the matron in the Central Police Station.

German Unrest Grows Peace Strongly Urged

War Weariness Becoming Strikingly Evident, Especially Among Poorer Classes, Says Message Which Reaches Holland.

STOCKHOLM, July 21.—A private message to The Stockholm Tidningen from Berlin, which curiously enough passed the censor, states that war weariness in Germany is becoming strongly evident in wide circles of population, especially amongst the poorer classes. Great excitement prevailed, and a proclamation of a state of siege is expected.

The Stockholm Dagblad commenting on this, says that even if it is suggested that this is merely the beginning of the end, it is encouraging for peace workers.

THURSDAY, JULY 22, 1915.

A REGRETTABLE EPISODE.

The strike of the Welsh miners is the most regrettable happening from a British point of view, since the outbreak of the war. The troubles have now happily been arranged, but the strike should not have been allowed to occur.

What could any war-time Government have hoped to do against a determined striking army of 150,000 miners? An army of half a million soldiers might possibly force the miners into the pits, but the whole of Kitchener's troops could not compel them to work. Wild talk about shooting them or any of them, is mere nonsense. Martial law has not been proclaimed in the United Kingdom, and, if it had been, is it conceivable that volunteer civilian soldiers of a few months standing could be induced to fire on their fellow workmen for exercising their rights under the Civil Law? Under the Civil Law still in force and as recently fortified by the Munitions Act, only fines, and in default, imprisonment could legally be imposed on the strikers. But where to imprison 150,000? And to what purpose? Prisoners could not work the mines; and the mines must be worked.

The Government might have seen the strike coming, and known that they could not deal effectively with it. The mine-owners have been making fancy profits ever since the war began. The miners have had no increase in wages. The cost of living in the meantime has nearly doubled. How well the mine-owners have been faring is indicated by the fact that a few days ago, after the passage of the Munitions Act, the Government decreed that mine-owners must not hereafter pocket an extra profit and extra profit of more than four shillings (one dollar) a ton on coal. The Government knew at the time that the miners were demanding an increase of sixpence per ton (12 cents) on their earnings—a very moderate demand considered the increased cost of living. Why did not the Government when regulating the profits of the mine-owners regulate at the same time the earnings of the miners by decreeing either that sixpence out of the four shillings of extra war-profit should go to the miners, or that the mine-owners should be allowed a profit of four shillings and sixpence on the additional sixpence to go to the miners? Had they done this the strike might have been avoided, and the Germans would have been deprived of the opportunity which has now been offered them of gloating over British disorganization, and the lack of interest in the war by British workman?

It is a very discreditable episode in the war that this strike should have been allowed to occur at this time. The discredit goes mainly to the account, the London Chronicle says, of a few hundred extreme syndicalists and stop-the-war-Socialists, and partly to those in authority. If the miners had been pure patriots they would perhaps have been content to let the mine-owners go on rolling up huge profits while they struggled along, "doing their bit" in spite of the ever-increasing price of food, clothing and all the necessaries of life. But miners, after all, are only human. The Home Government is evidently far from superhuman, in spite of its present non-partisan composition.

Germany is trying to bribe Bulgaria and Rumania with huge slices of territory which she does not possess, a sort of promissory note to be met after the Teutons have conquered. They will probably prefer the hard cash of the Allies to taking chances with Germany.

Mr. Fisher, the Premier of Australia, in a recent speech, made the notable statement that Australia had sent away more well-equipped troops than any Dominion in proportion to its population. He approved the demand for the effective mobilization of all the nation's forces. Australia may well be proud.

Mr. Bryan has emerged from his self-inflicted oblivion to remark that "the most important question now is, "How can peace be restored?" Whereupon, the New York Herald retorts: "It is not. The most important question is how best can victory for the right be brought about." And that is not a victory for Bryanism and Kaiserism.

Kaiser Wilhelm has written to his sister the Queen of Greece that he has already paralyzed Russia, and that very soon there will be big things to report from the western front. Well, well! Let it be remembered that last September the Kaiser promised his soldiers that they would be back in the Fatherland before the leaves fell.

"The next American Note," says the New York World, "might properly contain an inquiry in business-like terms as to the German attitude toward treaties." That is entirely unnecessary. The civilized world knows that Germany regards the most solemn treaty as a mere "scrap of paper," and has no regard for the laws of God or man.

For twenty years we have been informed countless times by persons in authority that Ontario nickel could not be refined in Ontario. Now the provincial government has appointed a commission to enquire into the question whether Ontario nickel can be refined in Ontario. It would not be at all surprising to learn from this commission that, after all, Ontario nickel can be refined in Ontario.

Basing his statements on an inventory supplied by Government officials, Dr. Ernest Bicknell, American Red Cross Director, just home from the war zone, declares that Germany has plenty of food, and that there is no fear of a shortage even in the distant future. This is confirmatory of the assertion frequently made of late in German reports that the nation was not suffering from the British blockade. On the other hand the German Government is almost frantic in its demands that America should insist upon the British removing the barrier of ships in the North Sea, because otherwise the people would ultimately be starved. But every soul in Belgium depends entirely on outside help Dr. Bicknell says, while Serbia and Poland still require considerable aid.

A correspondent of the Westminster Gazette takes issue with a recent statement of an Italian statesman who calculates that 862 million men are engaged in the war at present. He points out that the total population of the world was recently estimated at 1,700,000,000, almost equally divided into males and females, the former slightly preponderating in America, Australia, and Asia, and the latter in Europe and Africa. Accepting these figures, there are less than 900,000,000 males of all ages in the world today, and if every country was involved in the great war there would certainly not be a third of that number—i.e., 300,000,000—"engaged in the war." The total population of the belligerent countries (including all the Colonies, Japan and Egypt) is some 993,000,000, and of this number the males in any way "engaged in the war" cannot be much greater than 150,000,000. Considerably more than one-half of the land area of the globe, however, is in the potential war zone, actually 32,500,000 square miles out of a total of 55,500,000 square miles, 13,000,000 square miles of which comprise the British Empire.

IN HOSPITAL.

(Mortally Wounded.)

My bones are strung on a wire of fever,
And my tongue, like steel, on my teeth clacks dry,
But I hear them say: "He is near the river!"
A lie—Oh God!—what a hellish lie!

Yet it sets my dreams to a slower measure,
And my hair with a whiff of peace is stirred.
I can think—or think that I think—at leisure,
Since I heard the lilt of that murmuring word.

Through a wood—at home—runs a babbling river,
And the trees join hands o'er a grassy track.
Could I bathe there I'd be healed forever—
No scar—no singe—from this red-hot rack.

'Tis a deep, cool bed, where a river's running,
And the primrose-clump's like a clot of cream,
And the willow leans, like a sick man sunning
Himself, new-waked from a noisy dream.

Shall I ask what name they may give their river?
No! The same things, still, to the same laws keep,
And the Lord himself from his rules don't sever,
A river's bound to be cool—and deep.

I can see it plain, though my eyes are blinded,
I can hail it loud, though my throat's gone queer.
I would clutch it, too—were I only minded
To stretch the hand that's no longer here!

Ah! The nightfall's back; and the mounting fever.
And the red-hot rack will its grip renew,
But I've heard them say: "He is near the river!"
And thank God—kind God!—that I guess it's true.

Lesson IV.—Third Quarter, For July 25, 1915.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES

Text of the Lesson, I Kings viii, 22-30. Memory Verses, 23, 24—Golden Text, Isa. lvi, 7—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

In some respects the art of Noah, the tabernacle of Moses and the Jewish of Solomon were the three most remarkable buildings in the history of the world, for God Himself was the sole designer of each, and each was intensely typical of things to come concerning the Saviour, salvation and the kingdom. The great truths of our redemption have been made more plain to me by tabernacle studies than in any other way, and I most earnestly commend to all readers a little book, coming only 25 cents, entitled "The Tabernacle" or "The Gospel according to Moses," by George Rodgers. (Am. S. S. Union, 1816 Chestnut, Philadelphia.) The spiritual lessons from the temple are very similar, but with more of the dispensation outlook.

Solomon began to build the temple 480 years after the Exodus (I Kings vi, 1). If you add up the figures in Acts xiii, covering this period, you will make it 573, but if you subtract the 93 years of the oppression of all Israel in the days of the Judges, the accounts will agree perfectly. Out of fellowship with God means lost time, whether with a nation or an individual (Num. vi, 12; Job xxiv, 1). Solomon's temple was finished in the eleventh year of his reign, and it was plundered just thirty-four years after, in the fifth year of Rehoboam (I Kings vi, 37, 38; xiv, 25, 26). This was just the time between the birth of the Messiah, the true temple, and His death. Zerubbabel built the second temple after the return from Babylon. At the time of Christ's ministry Herod had been rebuilding that temple forty-six years (John ii, 20). The last eight chapters of Ezekiel tell of a temple yet to be builded when Israel shall be restored. Both tabernacle and temple were sacred dwelling places for God in the midst of Israel. God was in Christ. Every true believer is now His temple (I Cor. vi, 19, 20). The church, His body, now be builded, is the temple in which we are for the present most interested (Eph. ii, 19-22). All the materials for tabernacle and temple were willing offerings (Ex. xxv, 2; xxxv, 29). Christ (see Isa. xxix, 3, 9, 17). Christ gave Himself willingly for us (Heb. x, 5-9; John xix, 30). We must be willing offerings, keeping nothing back.

Remember the only foundation (II Chron. iii, 1) spoken of in a previous lesson, the great atonement suggested by Moriah and Ornan's threshing floor and the silver sockets of the tabernacle boards and see I Cor. iii, 11. If we are truly in Christ we are living stones in the temple now being builded (I Pet. ii, 5), but as in the temple of our lord soon every stone was made ready in the quarry or somewhere for its particular place in the building (I Kings vi, 7), so, while the believer is a stone by the precious blood of Christ, we are living made fit for service in the build ing by the daily training here. When the temple was finished and the ark set in its place by the "glory of the glory" of the Lord filled the house, so that the priests could not stand to minister (I Kings viii, 6-11). It is our privilege thus to be Spirit filled, so that self may have no place. Our special lesson verses are a little part of Solomon's great prayer at the dedication of the temple, in which he glorified God, saying, "Lord God of Israel, there is no God like Thee, * * * who keepest covenant and mercy with Thy servants that walk before Thee with all their heart" (xviii). He also praised God for fulfilling His word to David and asked Him to continue to do so (verses 24, 25). Then he asked the Lord that His eyes might be open night and day toward the house he had builded for His name (verses 29, 30).

He presented seven separate petitions concerning different matters, saying each time "Hear Thou in Heaven." "Hear Thou in Heaven Thy dwelling place" (verses 30, 32, 34, 36, 39, 43, 45, 49). He pleaded that He would do this for Israel, as His inheritance, whom He had brought out from among all the people of the earth, and that He would maintain their cause at all times, as the matter might require, or, as in the margin, the thing of a day in his day (verses 51, 53, 59). This expression is found also in the story of the manna (Ex. xvi, 4, margin) and elsewhere, reminding us that His care is sure day by day as He has taught us to pray. His desire was "that all the people of the earth may know that the Lord is God and that there is none else" (verse 60). So it was also with Joshua and David and Hezekiah (read xxiv, 24; I Sam. xvii, 46; II Kings xix, 19), and nothing less should be our desire.

Before he began to build he said, "The Lord my God hath given me rest on every side, so that there is neither adversary nor evil occurrent" (verse v, 4), and now he says, "Blessed be the Lord, that hath given rest unto His people Israel; * * * there hath not failed one word of all His good promise, which He promised by the hand of Moses, His servant" (verse 56). So also is it written in Josh. xxi, 45; xxiii, 14, and so it will be until the kingdom comes and we shall find that not one word has failed of all that God has spoken. He shall not fail nor be discouraged, and He shall see of the travail of His soul and be satisfied.

THIS WAR IS NOT LAST, SAYS MAXIM

Growth of Nations Must Make More Clashes.

WARFARE OF EXPLOSIVES

Eminent Inventor Says He Cannot Believe That Present Encounter Will Be the Last in Which the Scream of Projectiles Will Be Heard in the Battle Field.

"THE slaughter which marks this war is not more than one-tenth as great for the hours of actual battle in comparison to the number of men engaged as that of the American civil war, and it is not more than one-one-hundredth as great in relation to the number of men involved and the hours of battle as that of ancient wars," said Hudson Maxim in a recent interview in London.

"As the years have passed and human knowledge has increased, military men have introduced many methods which are comparable to the labor-saving devices of industry, and they are impressive, for they make each month of effort more effective or are at least designed to do so.

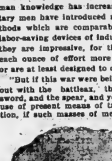
"But if this war were being fought out with the battleax, the broadsword, and the spear, and not had the use of present means of transportation, if such masses of men as now around Trenton without good cause. Dr. Kidd, though exempt by many years, could not rest until he got away. What will the young and physically fit men say when they find that Dr. Kidd has felt it his duty to go to the front? A Trenton boy, who is with the army, writes and asks if the boys of Trenton realize that they is a war on, and expresses surprise that they do not enlist.

We often see some fine, big stapling fellows from Belleville who look as if they would make good soldiers. Trenton is not the only town in Canada that is not responding freely.

Mr. Howard Vandervoort will soon occupy his fine new residence.

A Trenton baseball team played the Ontarios of Belleville here today.

It appears to be a favorite pastime just now for strangers to run into towns and attempt to induce merchants to endorse cheques for them on out-of-town banks. We would advise our citizens to give them the cold shoulder and be on the safe side. There was also a forgery epidemic in the district, which will require careful watching. One man got a few years for his offence a few days ago in the Belleville court.



HUDSON MAXIM.

"Thus the slaughter is not a game of football; we cannot play at it, or put it aside as something to be thought of casually after we have consulted our own humor and convenience. It is a time of self-sacrifice; we owe the best of all we have to our country. We must give, not only ourselves, but those we love, to the country's service. In time, these fortunate islands, mercifully protected by the sea, we have not as yet experienced the horrors of invasion; but invasion may come, and will come, if we are not prepared, alert and watchful. We must grudge nothing to prevent such disaster. We must put aside our own concerns entirely and think of what this great war means. It means wider freedom for the whole world. It means an end to the tyranny and savagery of Prussian militarism; it means greater progress and broader civilization. And, being such a war, every man should be proud and eager to bear his part in it.

"Any man physically fit who hesitates or hangs back at such a crucial moment in his country's hour of trial is a coward. And any woman who holds him back is also a coward, and a selfish one. We love our men—yes—but love is not true love if it hinders a man from doing his duty. There is danger—there is chance of death in the field of battle, but death comes to all of us sooner or later, and we may question whether it is not better to pass away gloriously with honor than to creep lackuldy out of existence in bed, surrounded by doctors, like a soldier must face all possibilities, and a brave man must be willing to take his chance of the game of winning the best. As Shakespeare tells us:

"Cowards die many times before their deaths;
The valiant only taste of death but once."

If I had the right, the eloquence, or the power to plead with you, I would ask every man here present who can join the colors, but who has not done so to do it now. And I would also ask every man whose skill and strength are needed in the manufacture of war material to work steadily, cheerfully, and ungrudgingly, in the full consciousness that by urging on the necessary output he is helping to save hundreds of the lives of his countrymen. He, the worker, is as necessary to Dr Empire as the soldier, he also is fighting the King's enemies

And if I had any force to persuade I would pray every woman in this audience to urge her husband or men belonging to her by inspiring them to do their duty by their country, although by sending them away to join the army, with all good blessing and trust in God for their safety, or by heartening them up to their work in the munitions and other trades as difficulties in their path of honor.

For every man that hangs back from military service there is shirks his work, refuses to help his brothers, and every woman that keeps a man away from the great fight, or encourages him to grudge and shorten his hours of labor, is a worse other women's husbands and sons. In this great war we are fighting for something of us most fall. In the war as in work we must all put our shoulder to shoulder, to win the victory which must and shall be ours.

They were on the outskirts of the gas columns that swept over the trenches, and they escaped with their lives because they did not have to breathe the poisonous fumes in their full strength.

Many of them have as yet not been able to establish communication with their families in far-off Canada, and do not know whether mothers, wives and sisters know that they have escaped death.

Taking Precaution.

Every precaution is being taken at Sarnia to catch any persons who might be setting fire to any buildings or plants working on shells for the army. An armed guard is in waiting at the Armories to be called to, and part of the city, if needed, in an auto at a moment's notice. Nothing is expected, but the authorities are taking no chances. A few nights ago unknown parties broke off the electric light from one of the shell manufacturing plants.

To Refill Cartridges

It is learned, from a good source that many Germans have been arriving at Constantinople. It is believed that this has reference to the installation of a factory for the refilling of used cartridges, picked up on the battlefield.

MARIE CORELLI'S APPEAL.

Famous Novelist Has Turned Recruiting Agent for Britain.

Miss Marie Corelli, the celebrated English novelist, who has been actively engaged in a recruiting campaign, recently urged the necessity for recruits in a speech from which the following are extracts:

"This fearful war is not a game of football; we cannot play at it, or put it aside as something to be thought of casually after we have consulted our own humor and convenience. It is a time of self-sacrifice; we owe the best of all we have to our country. We must give, not only ourselves, but those we love, to the country's service. In time, these fortunate islands, mercifully protected by the sea, we have not as yet experienced the horrors of invasion; but invasion may come, and will come, if we are not prepared, alert and watchful. We must grudge nothing to prevent such disaster. We must put aside our own concerns entirely and think of what this great war means. It means wider freedom for the whole world. It means an end to the tyranny and savagery of Prussian militarism; it means greater progress and broader civilization. And, being such a war, every man should be proud and eager to bear his part in it.

"Any man physically fit who hesitates or hangs back at such a crucial moment in his country's hour of trial is a coward. And any woman who holds him back is also a coward, and a selfish one. We love our men—yes—but love is not true love if it hinders a man from doing his duty. There is danger—there is chance of death in the field of battle, but death comes to all of us sooner or later, and we may question whether it is not better to pass away gloriously with honor than to creep lackuldy out of existence in bed, surrounded by doctors, like a soldier must face all possibilities, and a brave man must be willing to take his chance of the game of winning the best. As Shakespeare tells us:

"Cowards die many times before their deaths;
The valiant only taste of death but once."

If I had the right, the eloquence, or the power to plead with you, I would ask every man here present who can join the colors, but who has not done so to do it now. And I would also ask every man whose skill and strength are needed in the manufacture of war material to work steadily, cheerfully, and ungrudgingly, in the full consciousness that by urging on the necessary output he is helping to save hundreds of the lives of his countrymen. He, the worker, is as necessary to Dr Empire as the soldier, he also is fighting the King's enemies

And if I had any force to persuade I would pray every woman in this audience to urge her husband or men belonging to her by inspiring them to do their duty by their country, although by sending them away to join the army, with all good blessing and trust in God for their safety, or by heartening them up to their work in the munitions and other trades as difficulties in their path of honor.

For every man that hangs back from military service there is shirks his work, refuses to help his brothers, and every woman that keeps a man away from the great fight, or encourages him to grudge and shorten his hours of labor, is a worse other women's husbands and sons. In this great war we are fighting for something of us most fall. In the war as in work we must all put our shoulder to shoulder, to win the victory which must and shall be ours.

CHRONIC SKIN DISORDERS NOW OVERCOME QUICKLY

"There is no hope of getting rid of disfiguring skin troubles until the blood is purged of every trace of unclean matter."

Wonderful results follow the use of Dr. Hamilton's Pills which provide the blood with the elements it needs to become rich and red.

Quickly indeed the blood is brought to normal strength, is filled with nutrition, is given power to drive out of the system the humors that cause rashes, pimples, pasty complexion and kindred ills. Don't delay. Get Hamilton's Pills to-day; they go to work at once and give prompt results. Most efficient, safe for men and women or children. Get a 25c. box to-day from any dealer.

They Got a Scare.

Several thousand residents of the City of New York, who have been regaled for several weeks past with the stories of an impending raid of German-American, who, according to the detailed reports furnished, were to cross the Detroit River in small boats, armed with all kinds of man-killing apparatus, were given a bad scare early in the morning of the fourth of July.

The distance separating Detroit from Windsor is less than half a mile, and soon after midnight residents along along the river front and adjoining streets were, awakened by sounds of heavy and continued firing.

First there was a spattering of shots, then a mixed fusilade followed by a deep explosion. Then came more quick, sharp staccato reports, everything in a realization of the oft predicted "invasion" and the people came in hundreds to see the "enemy" land on alien shores. Everybody apparently ignored his or her toilet, and safety first seemed to be the motto. The crowd waited a long time, it seemed hours, and although the firing kept up, no sign of the enemy could be discerned. Then somebody remembered that it was "the Fourth" and that Detroit was celebrating in the usual way. The citizens went home and back to bed, but many were distinctly disappointed, because the expected "raid" had failed to materialize.

Sergt. Cookson's Valor.

A member of the Princess Patricias, signing himself "One of Them," has written to the London Times to call attention to Sgt. Cookson's gallantry during the fierce fighting in May. This man, he writes, "deserves the greatest honor for his unflinching and conspicuous gallantry during the whole of those terrible days, as it was mainly chiefly owing to his coolness and indomitableness that Lieut. Niven, after Major Gault, D.S.O., had been knocked out, was able to save the entire position; it was Sergt. Cookson who got the vital despatch through for reinforcements and brought them up when volunteers were called for this perilous task, and it was in connecting to tell the tale of those days of real hell will ever deny the justice of honoring this brave man who so fought as a Gordon Highlander in South Africa with those you have given prominence to."

Districts Well Governed.

A Havas despatch from Rome by way of Geneva says that in 70 communes organized by the supreme commandant of Austrian territory occupied by the Italians, life has again become normal. Business is being resumed, the markets are going on regularly, and physicians are proceeding with the work of disinfection. The authorities make daily distribution of food to the population.

The Italian Government, in the despatch states, has granted the families of those mobilized into the Austrian rank a continuation of the subsidies the Austrian Government had paid.

Busy Trenton

THE latest news of the town and surrounding neighborhood is given in an interesting manner.

July 29.—Geddes Thomson is the Trenton leader in the Ontario voting contest, but active ballot getting in the County are determined that he shall not go to the Pacific coast if they can help it.

Mr. A. D. MacIntyre is taking two weeks holidays at the "Grove."

Mr. W. B. Powers is negotiating for a portion of the "Drift" property. If he succeeds in securing the land he will erect a fine residence at once.

Mr. and Mrs. Terrgwiller,, of Toronto, spent the week end in town.

Dr. Edward Kidd received a splendid send off at the hands of his fellow citizens today, and had the notice not been so short it is safe to say that hundreds more would have assembled at the G.T.R. station to wish him good-bye. The Council presented him with binoculars, revolver and compass, and the Daughters of the Empire with a gold address and a wrist watch. On both occasions the Doctor replied in the kind words spoken and read, feelingly. Again we say we are proud of him and are glad that he has succeeded in getting the position he longed for. There should be no room, who before the war was connected with the militia, hanging

G.T.R. MOST INTERESTING AND CRITIC PERIOD IN THE GREAT CAMPAIGN NOW APPROACHES

Easier Now to Secure Subscriptions--Knock the Knockers--Honorable Business and Honorable Methods--Look at the Bright Side--The Vote Up to Date.

The Ontario's Great Panama-Pacific contest is now rapidly approaching its most exciting period. Interest is already at fever heat in many sections. Nearly all the candidates realize that one of the Grand Tours is now within their grasp, and that it is a question of results the next few days whether any candidate is a winner or not.

The contestants are only now beginning to understand properly how stupendous an offer The Ontario has made, and how desirable and valuable are the magnificent tours offered to the workers.

Tell your friends about your success and where you stand now in the great contest and enlist their support. They can and most of them will help you.

Subscriptions now Come Easier.

It is fa reasier to secure subscriptions now than it was even a week ago. That is the unanimous opinion of the great majority of the candidates who are actively working.

The spirit of rivalry is extending to the people themselves and they too are beginning to realize what a marvellous offer The Ontario has made.

The candidates who expect to win must be up and doing their best for the next few days and work as they never worked before. Remember, business-like way. Has a newspaper no right to try to extend its circulation because a war is being waged? Is it because these people feel that you are not able to look after yourself and need their assistance? Is it from experience that they speak? Have they ever taken such an interest in you before?

Every fair-minded candidate will ascertain that every knocker has some grouch or some axe to grind.

Honorable Business.

The business of securing subscriptions for a newspaper is just as honorable as securing goods over a counter or counting other people's money in a bank.

The principal involved in a voting contest is exactly the same as that upon which prizes are given at an agricultural fair. At a fair two or three win prizes while a dozen may look. In Our Panama-Pacific contest we go a degree better than a fairboard for there are no losers in our contest. Those who do not win a prize are paid a cash commission.

The person who pays a subscription to a candidate does not place the candidate under any obligation. There is a fair exchange of values. The man pays the regular subscription price to the candidate and receives the paper in exchange. The transaction is perfectly business-like, honorable and straightforward.

Look on the Bright Side.

Look on the bright side of things. Go out tomorrow morning determined to win. Talk about the splendid crops, the recent showers, the better business outlook. Conditions are bound to be good in Belleville district notwithstanding the war.

Determine to win, no matter who says you cannot. It is the thing that looks impossible that stirs the virile young Canadian blood.

If the winning of one of our Grand Tours were such an easy matter we would not have such a high class of candidates.

Make up your mind to win and you will win. But it is better to fail after trying, than not to try at all.

Our Busy Workers.

Today's report shows by far the biggest general gain in the total vote so far recorded. Some of the candidates and friends of the candidates are achieving remarkable results.

District I finds Miss Hunter still in the lead with Miss Bisland following very closely. Mr. Morrison, the new candidate, has been so generously helped along by his friends that he now occupies third place.

In District II Miss Gauthier again asserts the honor of the leadership but her energetic young rival, Jack Orvill is not very far behind. Miss Shorey, Thompson, Ameliasburg 7460

A cough is often the forerunner of serious pulmonary affections, yet there is a simple cure within the reach of all in Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, an old-time and widely recognized remedy, which if resorted to at the inception of a cold, will invariably give relief, and by overcoming the trouble, guard the system from any serious consequences. RECRUIT MEETING

You are Proud of your pals at the Front, of course. Make your pals Proud of You.

The Belleville Branch of the Speakers' Patriotic League have issued the following notice of a meeting at the Armouries and it is hoped that there will be a good attendance.

Dear Sir,—

The title to our home, our precious blood bought liberties, the very personal safety of our families, are hanging in the balance in this great War. Our enemies both before and during the War have openly avowed their intention to be to destroy our Empire, if each person does his bit, we can win, and the League now appeals to you to do your bit. It is proposed to organize each ward in the City of Belleville to stimulate recruiting, and the names of ten persons have been selected from each ward to meet with the Executive of the League at the Armouries on Friday evening, the 23rd of July, 1915, at 8 p. m., the purpose of forming a general organization to assist recruiting. You are one of those selected for your ward and the League Executive believes that your hearty co-operation will sufficiently pressing to justify you putting every other matter aside to attend this meeting.

While no names have been selected, the League will be glad to have you bring everyone in your ward who is willing to do his bit in this great War. We want everyone in Belleville to have the honour of doing something to help achieve success in this the greatest War of our history. What you do may be the richest heritage you will bequeath to, and the proudest boast of your posterity. Come! You are proud of your pals at the Front, of course. Make your pals at the Front proud of you.

E. Guss Porter, W. C. Mikel
President. Secretary.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally, acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

MISS LENA BATES.

The popular candidate in Avondale who now leads in District V. Miss Bates is carrying on a remarkably successful campaign, largely by her own splendid personal efforts. Her success is but another evidence of what can be accomplished by a young lady of energy and spirit who sets out with an earnest determination to win.

the winners in each district must have votes instead of promises.

Why not the Ontario?

The friends of all the candidates value their paper, why not the Ontario? Whatever paper they take they must pay for some time. By securing the subscriptions of their friends and paying for it in advance they will not be bothered having to pay another year for a subscription. And when they help some hard-working candidate with a subscription, they may be responsible for that candidate securing the first greatest success in their life.

It is not the money value of the offers that all the candidates are working for. It is the honor and distinction of being first in their district, and to demonstrate that one has the friends and the personal energy to win the foremost place in this great competition.

Don't Listen to Knockers.

Don't listen to the person who comes up and tells you that some other candidate has hundreds of thousands of votes in reserve. Don't pay any attention to the stories that are brought to you, if you expect to win one of the Grand Tours.

In a proposition of this kind there are always plenty of people who are always trying to discourage the person who is trying to promote what is to nothing more nor less than a straight business proposition.

Why do these people do it? Why do they tell you that a newspaper has no right to put on a voting contest during the time of war? Why do they try to make out to you that some one else is sure to come ahead of you in the end?

Look at the matter in a straight thousand votes in her list.

Districts IV., V., and VI. are becoming virtual storm centres of interest. Miss Adams of Foxboro again arises to the leadership, while Miss Keitha Henderson of Latta has by good work on the part of her friends won 2nd place in Dis. 5. Miss Honeywell is following very closely in third position. But so close is the rivalry that a three-year subscription to the Daily would change any one of the first nine to the top of the list.

A situation almost identically similar exists in District V. where Miss Bates again is at the head of the column with Miss Lowery second, while Miss Foster of Trenton has arisen to third place.

District VI. again finds Miss Bailey in the lead with a big gain over last week and Miss Murray of Springbrook second, while Miss Evelyn Salisbury of Moira who has entered upon a very active canvas now holds third place. Miss Agnes Lawrence of Tweed and Miss Jean Thrasher of Stirling are also showing votes that are rapidly increasing. The contest in District VI. will yet be a most interesting one.

In Prince Edward, Mrs. Bass of Mountain View is today in the lead and Mr. Thompson not very far behind in second place. Miss Belnap and Miss Wess follow closely.

In District VIII, Mr. Vincent Cox has today arisen to first position and is carrying on a most active campaign in his own behalf.

G.T.R. PICNIC WAS MOST SUCCESSFUL

Good Water Sports, Baseball, Dancing and Social Enjoyments Made Annual Railway Holiday one to be Remembered

A moster crowd gathered at Massassaga Park yesterday for the annual Grand Trunk picnic. The Brockville and "Say When" had been chartered for the day. The boats were crowded on the occasion of every trip from nine in the morning until evening.

The day was ideal on the grounds, except for a downpour of rain which lasted in the afternoon for an hour or more. All society on the grounds ceased during the rainfall. The sun came out strong about 4.30 and the grass and ground drying up quickly, the enjoyments of the outing were resumed.

The proceeds from the picnic this year go to the Women's Branch of Patriotic Society of the G.T.R.

Dancing was indulged in during the entire day. A large revenue was derived from the sale of badges permitting dancing in the pavilion. These brought $5c each.

In the afternoon a series of games were run off for the children, young people and older people. The water-sports were most enjoyed. The only competition was closely contested. This was featured on the verandah of the hotel.

Throwing a baseball through a hole in a screen was the new game in which the young ladies indulged.

Baseball.

The baseball match between the G T. R. Belleville and the G.T.R. Toronto was interrupted by the rain, but when the sky cleared, the players came out and played an excellent bound of the national game. Belleville G.T.R. team defeated the visiting Toronto brethren of the mogul by the score of 4-1. Toronto indeed did not get a man to first base until the eighth innings. The standard of ball exhibited was a high one for Toronto while only wearing one run, still held the Rosin down.

H. Tugnutt Had His Nose Broken

Harry Tugnutt, a boy, who lives with his mother, Mrs. Wm. Tugnutt, corner of Catherine and Wickett Sts, had the misfortune yesterday afternoon of having his nose broken. The accident happened on the baseball diamond at Massassaga Park. A thrown ball struck the lad full in the face. Blood poured from the upper part of the nose. He was given first aid on the grounds and sent to Belleville by boat at once. From the Belleville wharf he was removed to the General Hospital where the fracture was set by a physician. He will be unable to leave the hospital for over a week.

Tasty Window Decoration

The Show Windows of the German Shoe House are attracting a great deal of attention, all the newest creations in fall Foot-Wear are on display in their windows. The German Shoe House have taken particular pains in buying their Fall Foot-Wear and from the showing now on display, it is evident that such handsome foot-wear has never been shown in this city or vicinity before.

The attistic manner that these windows are dressed is a credit to the German Shoe House.

The alterations that have been going on in this store for the past 10 days are nearing completion and we feel safe in saying that it will be hard to find a more up-to-date Shoe Store with a better assortment of up-to-the minute Foot-Wear that is now carried by this progressive store.

So effective is their action that many cures can certainly be traced to their use where other pills have proved ineffective.

Piper D. McIntosh of the Johnstons Pipe Band will be much missed in Belleville. His ambition is to get to the front as piper.

Military Notes

A suggestion is being made that a number of the young men in this city or others for that matter, contribute to a fund for the purpose of providing a machine gun for the use of the Canadian troops. One of these weapons costs from $700 to $1000 and will do the work of fifty men.

Some young men in the city are willing to go to the front. The only drawback is the condition of their teeth. The authorities will accept them if the teeth were put in a satisfactory condition. But some of those who are willing to go have not the money for dental work and it has been suggested that a small fund be raised for that purpose. One possible recruit says he would go if he could find any one to pay for the necessary work on his teeth.

Mr. and Mrs. Spangenberg left on the afternoon train for Ottawa, for a few days. They will reside in Toronto. The many friends of the bride and groom in Belleville wish them a long and happy wedded life.

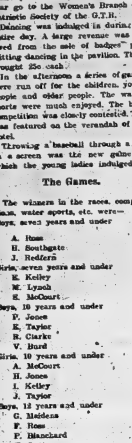
Different and Better Clothes

The Two Piece Suit



This is the time of year when a man wants to wear as little as possible. If you wear one of our cool Two-Piece Suits, it's certain you won't "wear a worried look."

But there are two considerations in a Two-Piece Suit which call for the most competent tailoring. In the first place, the coat must be so tailored as to obviate the need of a vest. In the second place, as the fabrics are extremely light in weight, the tailoring must be done with the greatest skill.

Fabrics of cerefully selected 'Sun-Proof Serges, Worsteds, Homespuns, etc., etc.

If you'll step in and try on one of these cool Suits and then take a look in the mirror, you'll be surprised to see what a swell and comfortable looking fellow you are.

We've everything in wearables for a man's summer comfort.

The BLACK BOX

by E. Phillips Oppenheim

SEE THE MOVING PICTURES CORRESPONDING WITH THIS INSTALLMENT IN PALACE THEATRE, FRIDAY AND SATURDAY, THIS WEEK.

"Five years of 'em, isn't it, was a fine," the man continued, his eyes flashing, his face twitching with anger. "Five years, going to have a little bit more than five years. This shed's been burnt down twice, sparks from passing engines. It's going to be burnt down for the third time."

"Sounds remarkably unpleasant," Quest admitted. "You'd better shoot or the boss will be back."

Gallagher finally slammed the door. Quest heard the heavy footsteps of the two men as they turned toward the section. He drew a little case from his pocket.

He opened what seemed to be a little mahogany box, looked at the ball of black substance inside, closed it up, placed it against the far wall, untwisted the coil, stood back near the door and touched the button. The result was extraordinary. The whole of the far wall seemed blown out with some distance in front the ground was furrowed up by the explosion. Quest opened the instrument in his pocket, sprang through the opening and ran for the tower house. Behind him on the road to New York he could see a freight train coming along. He could hear, too, Red Gallagher's roar of anger. It was less than fifty yards, yet as soon as he reached the shelter of the tower the thunder of the freight sounded like a mere echo in the background. Red Gallagher and his mate were reading about it in the New York papers now. He rushed up the narrow stairs into the signal room, tearing open his coat as he ran. Somebody was

"Stop the freight," he shouted to the operator, "Quick. I'm Sanford Quest, detective—special powers from the chief commissioner."

The man moved to the signal. Another voice thundered in his ear. He turned swiftly around. The Irishman's red head had appeared at the top of the staircase.

"Drop that signal or I'll blow you into bits," he shouted.

The operator hesitated, dazed.

"Walk towards me," Gallagher shouted, "walk here, you fool, or will show you whether I'm in earnest or not!"

A bullet passed within a few inches of the operator's head. He came slowly across the room. Below they could hear the roar of the freight.

"This ain't your job," the Irishman continued savagely. "We want the coin, and we're going to have it my way."

Quest had stolen a yard or two nearer during this brief colloquy. Gallagher's mate from behind shouted out a warning just a second too late. With a sudden kick, Quest sent the revolver flying across the room and before the Irishman could recover he struck him full in the face. Neither, standing his huge size and strength, Gallagher reeled. The operator who had just begun to realize what was happening flung himself bodily against the two thugs. A shot from the tangled mass of struggling limbs narrowly past Quest's head as he sprang to the window with fists overhead like a track. The freight had already almost passed. Quest steadied himself for a supreme effort, crawled out on the little steel bridge and poised himself for a moment. The last car was just beneath. The gap between it and the precarious one was slipping by. He set his teeth and jumped on the smooth top.

Back behind the tower Red Gallagher and his mate bent with horrified faces over the body of the signalman.

"What the hell did you want to fling him for?" the latter muttered. "He ain't in the show at all. You've done us, Red, he's cooked!"

Red Gallagher staggered to his feet. Already the horror of the murderer was in his face as he glanced furtively around.

"I never meant to drop him," he muttered. "I got mad at seeing Quest get off. There's a devil."

"What are we going to do?" the other demanded hoarsely.

"There's the section," Gallagher shouted. "Come on, old man! I can fix the wheel. If we've got to swing for this job, we'll have a grandstand of our own back first."

They crawled to the side of the line. Quest's strength, hairy fingers were still trembling, but they knew their job. In a few minutes the wheel was fixed. Clumsily but successfully, the great Irishman turned the car round and away from the city.

"She's a hummer," he muttered. "I'll make her go when we get the hang of it. Sit tight."

They drove clumsily off, gathering speed at every yard. Behind, in the shadow of the tower, the signalman lay dead. Quest, half way to New York, stretched out on his stomach, was struggling for life with knees and hands and feet.

CHAPTER XI.

Mrs. Rhelnboldt welcomed the inspector with a beaming smile as he stepped out of his office and appraised her ostensible.

"How nice of you to be so punctual, Mr. French," she exclaimed, making room for him by her side. "Will you tell the man to drive to Mr. Quest's house in Georgia square?"

The inspector agreed and took his place in the luxurious limousine.

"How wonderfully punctual you are!" she continued, glancing at the clock.

"Inspector, I am so excited at the idea of getting my jewels back. Isn't Mr. Quest a wonderful man?"

"He's a clever chap, all right," the inspector admitted. "All the same, I'm rather sorry he wasn't able to lay hands on the thief."

"That's your point of view, of course," Mrs. Rheinboldt remarked. "You can think of nothing but having my diamonds back. I feel I ought to go and thank the professor for recommending Mr. Quest."

The inspector made no reply. Mrs. Rheinboldt was suddenly aware that she was becoming a little tactless.

"I suppose you are sighed. "It is disappointing not to be able to lay your hands upon the thief. That is where the professor comes in, and the interference of an amateur like Mr. Quest a little troublesome. Nevertheless I am back the property, which is what the private individual wants, but he doesn't concern the thief. You see, of course, the real end of the case from your point of view."

"It's a queer affair about these jewels," the inspector remarked. "Quest hasn't told me the whole story yet. Here we are on the stroke of time!"

The car drew up outside Quest's house. The inspector assisted his companion to alight and rang the bell at the front door. There was a somewhat prolonged pause. He rang again.

"Never knew this to happen before," he remarked. "That sort of secretary-valet of Mr. Quest—Rose Brown I think he calls him—is always on the spot." They waited for some time. There was still no answer to their summons. The inspector placed his ear to the keyhole. There was not a sound to be heard. He drew back, a little puzzled. At that moment his attention was caught by the fluttering of a little piece of white material caught in the door. He pulled it out. It was a fragment of white embroidery, and on it were several small stains. The inspector looked at them and looked at his fingers. His face grew suddenly grave.

"Seems to me," he muttered, "that we have been some trouble here. You shall have to take a liberty. If you'll excuse me, Mrs. Rheinboldt, I think it would be better if you waited in the car until I send out for you."

"You don't think the jewels have been stolen again?" she cried.

The inspector made no reply. He had drawn from his pocket a little pass key and was trying it in the lock. The door swung open. Once more they were both conscious of that peculiar odor, which seemed to have in it some unnamable quality. He paused for the foot of the stairs and shouted:

"Hello! Anyone there?"

Silence and a faint echo. He opened the doors of the two rooms on the right-hand side, where Quest, when he was interviewing any widespread affair, had a stenographer and a telegraph operator. Both rooms were empty. Then he turned towards Quest's study on the left-hand side. French was a man of iron nerve. No power on earth could have kept him from that which broke from his lips.

A few feet away from the door was stretched the body of the secretary-valet. On the other side of the room, lying as though she had slipped from the sofa, her head fallen on one side in hideous fashion, was the body of Miss Quigg, the Salvation Army young woman. French set his teeth and drew back the curtains. In the clear light the murderer of the room was fully revealed. There had been a terrible struggle. Between whom? Even the inspector's nerve suddenly gave a piercing shriek. The inspector turned quickly round. Mrs. Rheinboldt, who had disregarded his advice, was standing on the threshold.

"Inspector," she cried. "What has happened? Oh, my God!"

She covered her face with her hands. French gripped her by the arm. At that moment there was the sound of an automobile stopping outside.

"Keep quiet for a moment," the inspector whispered in her ear. "Pull yourself together, madam. Go to the other end of the room. Don't look. Stay there for a few moments longer."

She obeyed him meekly, pressing her hands to her eyes, shivering in every limb. French, stood back inside the room. He heard the front door open, he heard Quest's voice outside. "Where the devil are you, Rose?"

There was no reply.

The front door banged open. Quest entered, followed by the professor and Craig. The inspector stood watching for them with a pistol in a stand.

Quest, young and over the body of his valet for a moment. The man was obviously dead. The inspector took his handkerchief and covered up the face. A few feet away was a heavy paper weight.

"Killed by a blow from behind," French remarked grimly, "with that little affair. Look here!

They glanced down at the girl. Quest's eyebrows came together quickly. There were two blue marks upon her throat where the man's thumbs might have been.

"Strangled again," he muttered.

The inspector nodded.

"Can you make anything of it?"

"Not yet," Quest confessed. "I must think."

The inspector glanced at him curiously.

"Where on earth have you been to?" he demanded.

The inspector made no reply. Mrs. Rheinboldt was suddenly aware that she was becoming a little tactless.

"I suppose you are sighed. "It is disappointing not to be able to lay your hands upon the thief. He Set His Teeth and Jumped.

Laura, you had better telephone to the police station and for a doctor. That's right, sent in, inspector."

"Yes!" the latter assented thoughtfully.

Lepora, white to the lips, staggered a few feet back into the hall. Laura set her teeth and lingered.

"Is that Quest?" she asked.

"It's his body," Quest replied. "He's been murdered here, he and the Salvation Army girl who was to come this morning for her check."

Laura turned away half dazed.

"I'd have trusted Rose with my life," she confessed, "but he must have been along there to know when the coast came.

Do you suppose it was the usual sort of trouble?"

Quest nodded, stooped down and picked up the paper-weight. Across it was stamped the name of Sanford Quest.

"This yours, Quest?"

"Of course it is," Quest answered. "Everything in the room is mine."

"The girl would fight to defend herself," the inspector remarked slowly, "and the murderer, in order to snatch a blow as your valet died from."

Quest nodded and turned up a small clock. It had stopped at eleven-fifteen. He looked at it thoughtfully.

"Queer," he went on, "I'll have to ask you a question."

"Why not?" Quest replied looking quickly up.

"Where were you at eleven-fifteen?"

"On tower No. 10 of the New York Central, scraping for my life," Quest answered grimly. "I've reason to re-

EATS GILLETT'S DIRT CLEANS LYE

Something in the inspector's manner caused Quest to look at him a little glad with a new idea. He came a step forward, a little frown upon his forehead.

"Say, French," he exclaimed, "you don't—you don't suspect me of this? French was unnerved. He looked Quest in the eyes.

"I don't know," he said.

TELLS GERMANY TO STOP PIRACY

Final Note of President Wilson States More Outrages Will be Unfriendly.

WASHINGTON, JULY 22.—President Wilson and Secretary Lansing, conferring in the White House last night, completed the new note to Germany, warning her that the repetition of a piratical act such as that visited upon the Lusitania, or any violation of American rights on the high seas resulting in loss of Americans lives, would be regarded as "unfriendly." It will be despatched today.

The note is in the nature of a final statement by the United States of the interpretation that will be placed by this government on future transgressions of American rights, and repeats that the American Government will leave nothing undone to stand by the position it has previously declared.

Among the points in the new note are:

"The assumption by the United States that Germany, by declaring her submarine warfare to be a retaliatory measure against the alleged unlawful acts of her enemies, has admitted that the destruction of unresisting merchantmen without warning is illegal.

"German submarine commanders have already proved that they can save the passengers and crews of vessels and can act in conformity with the laws of humanity in making war on enemy ships.

"The United States cannot allow the relations between the belligerents to operate in any way as an abbreviation of the rights of neutrals, and, therefore, any violation of the principles for which the American Government contends, resulting in a loss of American lives, will be viewed as 'unfriendly.'"

"The representations which the American Government has made in previous notes for disavowal of the intention to sink the Lusitania, with Americans aboard, and the request for reparation, are repeated with renewed insistence.

"The proposals made by Germany to give immunity to American ships not carrying contraband, and to four belligerent ships under the American flag, are repected with the emphatic assertion that to agree to such a suggestion would be to admit Germany's right to set aside the American contention based on fundamental principles in international law—that neutrals may travel anywhere on the high seas on unresisting ships of any nationality, even if carrying contraband."

The note is about 1900 words long. While nowhere in it is there any direct intimation of the course which the United States will pursue in the event of another disaster similar to the Lusitania tragedy, there are emphatic statements throughout the communication pointing out that the discussing of the principles involved has been virtually concluded, and that future conduct of German submarine commanders will determine the responsibility for the continuance of friendly relations between the two countries.

CLEVER CANADIAN CAUGHT SPY

Pretended to be Friendly, Leading the German to Talk Too Much.

LONDON, July 22.—Thanks to the smartness of a Canadian soldier, a German spy has been discovered and sentenced by a British Magistrate to six months hard labor. Carl Amundus, a native of Hamburg, was charged with failing to register himself as an alien and with attempting to elicit information regarding the movements of troopships. He left Hamburg last year and went to Boston. After some months he shipped as a trimmer on a steamer bound for Gothenburg. The vessel was stopped by a British cruiser as a carrier of contraband and brought to Avonmouth. Amundus obtained a military pass to Bristol docks made out in the name of Charles Stephens, and the prosecution contended that he would be able to despatch by this means letters which would be free from censorship.

Lance-Corporal B. Stanley, Canadian, told the court that he met Amundus at Bristol and after some conversation, Amundus said, "I am sorry to see you in that uniform. Germans are sure to win in the end." Stanley encouraged him to talk and Amundus added that he was born in Hamburg; that he was a German citizen; that he had sent two messages containing information to Germany by way of the United States and Norway; and that since his letter had gone 6 ships had been torpedoed. To lead him on, Stanley asked if there was anything he could do for Germany. In reply Amundus said that information as to the date when troopships left would help and the number of drafts going to the front from camp would also be useful. Stanley then communicated with the police and had him arrested.

LIEUT. DR. M'CULLOCH WITH B.A.M.C.

Popular Physician Remembered by Medical Fraternity and Church Societies

Lieut. R. J. P. McCulloch, physician of this city had gone to join the British Army Medical Corps and expects to reach the front, where he will carry on his work of mercy in the hospitals.

Lieut. Dr. McCulloch was kindly remembered by his medical associates on the eve of his departure on active service. The physicians of Belleville presented him with a number of useful gifts including gold and safe hair Cedegood.

As the doctor has been a most active worker among the young men of the city, particularly in Bridge St. Methodist Sunday School and the Y M.C.A., he was not allowed to leave before Bridge Street Sunday School and his young men's Bible class, known as the "Ever-Readies" had in some manner manifested their appreciation of his work in Belleville and their hopes for beneficient service and a safe return. A handsome wrist watch was the gift of the school, while the class also honored him in no uncertain way.

FRENCH OCCUPY LINGE SUMMIT NEAR MUNSTER

Stubborn Fighting Gains Joffre's Army Another Peak in Alsace.

GET IN SIGHT OF THE RHINE

German Aviators Make Unsuccessful Raid on Chalons Camp Depots.

LONDON, July 23.—French offensive operations today were chiefly concentrated on the Schlucht in Alsace, where, after a stubborn engagement they occupied the summit of Linge and gained a foothold south of this peak in the Schratzmannle quarries and the Barrenkopf wood. These positions are on the heights dominating the valley of the northern branch of the Fecht River, north of Munster.

The progress here brings the French armies within sight of the Rhine.

German aviators attempted a raid on the village and railway stations of the Chalons Camp, where French supply stations had been established. Incendiary bombs were dropped, but the French official statement says that they caused no damage.

Shells of heavy calibre were fired today in northern Woevre and Priest's Wood, between the Meuse and Mozelle Rivers today, in a violent bombardment of both French and German positions. A strong German reconnaissance was repulsed in Lorraine.

In the sector north of Arras only artillery actions have been recorded for some days. The Germans bombarded a suburb of Arras today.

On the rest of the front quietness prevailed, save for sniping, which is always going on.

A cable to this effect was received here yesterday afternoon.

There were 900 horses on board.

GIRLS TO TURN DOWN BOYS NOT IN UNIFORM

Hamilton Discusses Dollar Week Tax on Bachelors—City May Insure Its Soldiers.

HAMILTON, Ont., July 22.—Vigorous efforts are being put forth by Hamiltonians to induce single men to go to the front. The president of the new recruiting league, J. H. Collinson, principal of Highfield College, is urging in public speeches the young girls of the city to discourage the attentions of young men unless they intend to serve their country. He advises the formation of a girls' guild with this purpose in view, every member to agree to frown on their suitors until they enlist. The executive has also arranged to take a census of the young men in Hamilton with a view to personally approaching those who are in a position to go.

The scheme to tax single men a dollar a week each for patriotic purposes is reaching a head. Last night Mayor Walters and W. H. Davis, secretary of the Federal Life Assurance Company, now municipal auditor, leave for New York and other cities in the States to try and arrange for the insurance of all Hamilton soldiers. If the trip is successful the government will be applied to for authority to issue twenty-year debentures for a local civic insurance fund. The dependants of those already killed will be helped out of civic finances.

No British Ships Sunk During Week

LONDON, July 23.—So far as British vessels are concerned, the German submarines drew a blank during the week ended yesterday. Not a single British, neutral ship or fishing craft was sunk.

This was the first week since the commencement of the war that some loss to British shipping has not been occasioned by either German cruisers mines or submarines. During the week under review, 1336 vessels of more than 300 tons each arrived at or departed from ports of the United Kingdom.

"A Fool and His Money" read about it in Saturday's Ontario.

HIGHLY CRITICAL SITUATION DEVELOPING IN GREECE

Majority of the People Favor Intervention on the Side of the Allies, but King and Staff Obdurate.

MILAN, July 23.—The situation in Greece is becoming more critical daily. The great majority of the people favor intervention on the side of the Allies, but the King, Court and General Staff are more pro-German than ever. Their influence has succeeded in getting the meeting of Parliament postponed until August 16, the last delay allowed by the Constitution. The General Staff is also taking measures to suppress any interventionist manifestations which might influence Parliament.

Bit by bit large bodies of troops are being concentrated in and around Athens. The struggle between Parliament and the army may lead to grave incidents in Nationalist and Democratic circles. Great anxiety prevails. The interventionists, including Venizelos, do not conceal their discouragement at the long delays and hesitation of the Gunaris Cabinet have greatly compromised chances of success if Greece intervenes in the war. At the same time, the delay in the meeting of Parliament is not altogether unfavorable to the Venizelos party, as it gives it time to agitate and reorganize its forces.

RUMORED ZEPP. ATTACK ON LONDON.

GENEVA, July 23.—Fresh rumors of an impending Zeppelin attack on London were brought here today from the German air base at Friedrichshaven and with them reports of a remarkable new invention by which it is declared the Zeppelins will make their attack unseen and unheard.

WARSAW IS STILL SAFE.

LONDON, July 23.—Petrograd despatches this morning report the Austro-German forces no nearer Warsaw. Ivangorod is reported still safe and the enemy have so far failed to get possession of the Lublin-Cholm Railway.

The Austrians have been driven from their positions on the right bank of the Bug River.

A despatch from Vienna, however, declares the final attempt of the Russians to stop the advance of their opponents in the critical battle on the new line southward of the Lublin-Cholm railroad southeast of Warsaw has ended in failure. The capture of Lublin and Cholm is said to be a question of only a brief time.

ITALIANS AT ISONZO CUT OFF AUSTRIAN SUPPLIES.

ROME, July 22.—Italian forces it is announced have crossed the Isonzo three miles above Gorita and maintain their position blocking the transport of munitions to Austrian forces at Plava.

BRITISH CABLE SCHOONER LOST IN PACIFIC.

HONOLULU, July 22.—The British cable schooner Strathcona en route from Auckland, New Zealand to the Fanning Islands and Honolulu has been lost in the South Pacific near the Fiji Islands. Several of her crew have been saved, but one boat-load is still not accounted for.

INCESSANT DEMAND THAT COTTON BE CONTRABAND.

LONDON, July 23.—The demand for cotton to be declared contraband is increasing in force. Sir William Ramsay declares in London today that had cotton been declared contraband at the outset the war would have been over by last April. A similar statement is made by Hillaire Belloc in "Land and Water." Paul Coudurier, London correspondent of the Paris Figaro, asserts that early in the war the French government requested the British government to put cotton on the list of contraband but that Great Britain refused to do so for fear of offending neutrals.

STEAMERS RELEASED BY BRITISH.

LONDON, July 23.—The Danish steamer Florida from Baltimore and the Norwegian steamer Skogland from New York have been released by the British authorities. The Danish steamer Louisana from Boston has been detained at Kirkwall. The British government in response to a formal note of protest has expressed regret to the Norwegian government at the violation by British warships of Norway territorial waters especially by the seizure by an auxiliary cruiser of a German steamer inside the three-mile limit.

NO HOPE FOR CHARLES BECKER SAYS GOVERNOR

Cursed Story of Prisoner's Statement Fails to Change Whitman's Opinion of His Guilt.

ALBANY, N.Y., July 23.—Governor whitman said last night that a careful study of the statement of former Police Lieutenant Charles Becker, now under sentence of death, had not changed his opinion of the guilt of the convicted man.

"There is only one thing new in the statement," the Governor said. "That is the allegation that the late Alfred Henry Lewis told Becker he was to be 'framed up.' That would have been an important part of the statement if true. But if it were true why was not Lewis called to the stand during Becker's second trial? Now, with Becker under death, we hear of this matter after Lewis is dead."

NEW YORK, July 23.—The story written by Charles Becker in the death-house at Sing-Sing in an attempt to escape death in the electric chair for the murder of Herman Rosenthal, was corroborated in many respects by Harry Appelbaum, former secretary to "Big Tim" Sullivan, whom Becker named in his long statement. Appelbaum said Becker never that he would help the condemned ex-lieutenant of police to obtain clemency or a new trial.

Kaiser to Punish Germans Making Shells for Allies

Subjects Working in Munition Factories in U.S. are Guilty of Treason Declares Berlin.

BERLIN, July 22.—An official declaration is published here calling attention to the fact that "Germans working in factories in neutral countries, particularly in the United States producing war supplies for the enemy render themselves liable to prosecution for treason, under Paragraph 89 of the Penal Code, punishable with such sentence to an enemy, with a maximum of ten years' imprisonment."

Another paragraph of the Penal Code authorizes prosecution in the case of such offenses, even when committed abroad, and it is understood that the German courts will proceed against offenders.

BRITAIN LIKELY TO ADOPT FORM OF PROTECTION

Premier Hints at Increase of Tariff on Foreign Products.

SAYS MORE REVENUE NEEDED

Imports Must be Diminished and Exports Must be Increased.

LONDON, July 22.—"Under the present exceptional circumstances the question of further taxation on imports needs serious consideration, and the government and chancellor of the exchequer will give the matter early attention," said Premier Asquith today to a deputation of bankers and merchants which interviewed him for the purpose of urging greater national economy and increased taxation on imported goods as well as a tax on similar incomes.

The Premier fully concurred in the suggested wider application of the income tax, and in the above quantitative form endorsed the idea of broadening the basis of direct taxation.

Premier Asquith said he was in full agreement with the deputation, that the country had not gone far enough in providing additional resources from taxation for carrying on the war. He for a long time had been of the opinion that the present income tax was very arbitrary in its incidence, and that it ought to begin at a lower scale.

As to indirect taxation, it was obvious that if credit was to be maintained and the pecuniary resources needed for the effective conduct of the war procured, consumption of imports must be diminished, and export trade maintained on an increased scale, he said.

The whole question would be dealt with as a whole, and not by piecemeal in the budget, the Premier added.

SIGNIFICANT.

It is some comfort in connection with the Welsh mining strike to learn that Germany is having still more threatening labor troubles. The report, of course, came by way of Geneva, but the Swiss are certainly not hostile to the Germans nor disposed to magnify their troubles. The Krupp military munitions works are the offensive and offensive heart of the German Empire. Serious trouble there would mean speedy disaster for the German armies.

The Geneval report is that the Krupp workmen have become greatly dissatisfied, and are seriously threatening in their attitude. Their enjoyment is reported to be headed by the workers in metal, and the association of mechanics. They are said to be demanding higher wages because of the increased cost of living, and shorter hours, because of the strain to which they are being subjected. They are asserted to be in an ugly mood and threatening to destroy machines if their demands are not conceded. There must be something in the Swiss reports, if it be true, as stated, that the Frankfort Gazette has warned the Krupps of the seriousness of the situation and advised them to grant the demands of the men. It is still more significant if, as alleged, several German regiments have been moved to the vicinity of the Krupp works in anticipation of disturbances.

Signs are multiplying that all is not working smoothly within Germany. There was the hostile demonstration of the women of Berlin against the war, at the opening of the Reichstag. Reports of it were suppressed in Germany but got within a few miles of Berlin, at least, in a very tell-tale straw. Then, a fortnight ago, there was a Socialistic outbreak in the German Parliament. Word of that too was suppressed but the London Times secured a reliable report of what took place, which is highly suggestive. There were, it appears, very violent scenes and stout throwing demonstrations. The Socialists are a power to be seriously reckoned with in Germany. Coming on top of these incidents the mutterings of the Krupp workmen are not lightly to be considered of no importance.

Everything indicates that the German people are beginning to lose confidence in their rulers, and hope of their success in the war. When they finally reach the point of despair, as they must before long, the end will speedily follow. They are now accepting the products of the Government printing presses as money. When they lose confidence in the ability of the Government to redeem its paper, the financial crash will come. Economically Germany must now be in an exceedingly bad way. Her commerce has been suspended. Her shipping is suppressed. Her factories are closed except for the producing of goods for home consumption. The whole energies of the nation are being devoted to producing necessary food adn munitions of war.

How long can that last? Is the end not already within sight? However valiant the German armies may be—and there is nothing to indicate that they are more valiant or more capable than their opponents—they cannot fight on empty stomachs and empty purses. They may continue for a time to make an imposing showing in the field. But the collapse behind their armies in German civil life must inevitably come before long. The word about the Krupp works is only one indication among many that it is approaching.

SHOW THE WAY.

We are naturally so much absorbed with the fortunes of our own forces that not much attention is given to the services rendered by Australia and New Zealand. Only the other day the Premiers of the State Parliaments of the Australian Commonwealth met in conference in Sydney, and with a view to further assisting the Imperial Government in prosecuting the war, passed the following resolution:

"That in the opinion of this Conference the deep indignation felt throughout Australia at the sinking of the Lusitania should find immediate expression in increased participation in the war; that with a view to affording practical help to the Federal Government, the States undertake to utilize the resources at their command for any further effort in recruiting which the Federal Government may deem to be desirable, and in providing all such military requisites as it is within the power of the States to supply; that the various State workshops and State employees be placed at the disposal of the Federal Government for the manufacture of any equipment for which they are adapted; that the States join in an offer of skilled mechanics to be sent to Great Britain to assist in the manufacture of war material.

New Zealand has shown no less eagerness and determination to utilize the maximum of its resources in the Empire's services. Mr. Massey, the Prime Minister, laid before Parliament not long ago a proposal to form a National Military Ministry until the close of the war with a view to concentrating the full energies of the country on the prosecution of the war.

A recent despatch from Melbourne tells us that the military authorities are displaying posters showing that every man who is physically fit is wanted. Our kinsmen in Australasia seem to have gone about the recruiting campaign in a systematic and very effective way. There is great need for similar action on the part of the Canadian Government, for after all it is the business and duty of the Government to take the lead. Australia and New Zealand have shown us the way.

The case of the Orduna, as the London Chronicle says, makes mincemeat of Germany's flimsy excuses for the sinking of the Lusitania.

In his appeal to the electors of Manitoba, Premier Norris serves notice upon his opponents that the house-cleaning which his Government has undertaken will not end with the Parliament Buildings million dollar "grab." It is to be extended to all departments of the public service. No wonder Hon. "Bob" Rogers is nervous.

Mr. Asquith's reference to the change in the wording of the vote of credit which empowers the Government to make advances to countries not included in the Allied group, seems to forecast action on the part of some of the Balkan States. When they are ready to take the field, Britain will be ready to provide the "silver bullets."

Since the outbreak of hostilities the business of marine underwriters at Hamburg and Bremen has, for all practical purposes, come to end, and their position is almost as serious as that of German ship owners, many of whom are now faced with absolute ruin. To add to the troubles of the former, they are now, the London correspondent of the Manchester Guardian notes unable to obtain orders in the United States as a result of the sinking of the Lusitania. Nearly all the American shipowners and shippers who dealt with them, largely in consequence of the lower premiums which they quoted, have transferred their accounts to Lloyd's or to the British marine insurance companies which have branches at New York. And in well-informed quarters the opinion is that the close of the war will not end the boycott.

THE OLD HOME.

An old lane, an old gate, an old house by a tree;
A wild wood, a wild brook—they will not let me be;
In boyhood I knew them, and still they call to me.

Down deep in my heart's core I hear them, and my eyes
Through tear mists behold them beneath the old-time skies,
Mid bee bloom and rose bloom and orchard lands rise.

I hear them, and heartsick with longing is my soul
To walk there, to dream there, beneath the sky's blue bowl;
Around me, within me, and weary world made whole.

To talk with the wild brook of all the long ago,
To whisper the woodwind of things we used to know
When we were old companions, before my heart knew woe.

To walk with the morning and watch its rose unfold;
To drowse with the noontide lulled in its heart of gold;
To lie with the nighttime and dream the dreams of old.

To tell to the old trees and to each listening leaf
The longing, the yearning, as in my boyhood brief,
The old hope, the old love, would ease me of my grief.

The old lane, the old gate, the old house by the tree;
The wild wood, the wild brook—they will not let me be;
In boyhood I knew them, and still they call to me.

WORLD PEACE OR BARBARISM.

Unless this war does help to bring about a lasting peace in the world, it is idle to pretend that it will have been anything else but a monstrous experience of evil. If at the end of it we cannot bring about some world-wide political synthesis, unanimous enough and powerful enough to prohibit further wars by a stupendous array of moral and material force, then all this terrible year of stress and suffering has been no more than a waste of life, and our sons and brothers and friends and allies have died in vain. If we cannot summon enough good will and wisdom in the world to establish a world alliance and a world congress to control the clash of "legitimate national aspirations" and "conflicting interests," and to abolish all the forensic trickeries of diplomacy, then all this will be neither the last war nor will it be the worst, and men must prepare themselves to face a harsh and terrible future, to harden their spirits against continuing and increasing adversity, and to steel their children to cruelty and danger. Hereafter will become the burthen of history. That is the price men will pay for clinging to their little separate cults and monarchies and complete independencels now. The traffic and wealth of our great and liberal age will diminish the arts will dwindle and learning fade, science will cease to advance, and the rude and hard will inherit the earth. The War Path or the World State; that is the choice for mankind.

The lesson of the submarine which destroys much and achieves nothing has ample support in history. There never was so blind a superstition as the belief that progress is inevitable. The world has seen the great civilization of the Western Empire give place to the warring chaos of the barbarial cuatoms of the ninth and tenth centuries; it has seen the Eastern Empire for five hundred years decay and retrogress under the rulinteen of the Turk; it has watched the Red Indians, with rifles in their hands, grimly engage in the last extermination. Is it still a blind world doomed to blunder down again from such light and order and hope as we were born to, toward such another mincture of barbaric hate and aimless wars? That is no more possibility; it is the present prebibility unless men cert themselves to make it impossible. It is quite conceivable that ours is the last generation for many generations that will go freely about the world, that will have abundance of leisure and science and free speech and abundant art and much beauty and many varied occupations. We stand about in our old haunts and try to keep on with our old ways of living and our business when the war will be "over" and when we shall be able to get back to everything just as it was, before the war. The war and its consequences will never be "over" and we have not even begun to realize what it has cost us. The counsel of a mad history is forward and every dark inflood unless our race can give mind and will, now unreservedly, to unprecedented abundance, to the stern necessities that follow logically from the aircraft bomb and the poison gas and that silent, invisible, unattainable murderer, the submarine.—H. G. Wells, in the New York Times.

NOT DR. MONTAGUE, BUT DR. MONTAGUE'S DR. SHOULD GO TO THE FRONT.

Is Hon. W. H. Montague the practitioner who should go to the front? No! the Empire needs not Dr. Montague, but Dr. Montague's doctor. Think of the possibilities of medical questions open to the physician who served as medical director of the lightning change in the state and condition of Dr. Montague. One week Hon. W. H. Montague was an invalid trembling on the verge of the tomb. Dr. Montague had to be examined in the privacy of a hotel apartment because the doctor could only appear in the witness box at the risk of physical collapse. The next week Hon. W. H. Montague was so completely restored to health that a short stay at Kenora will permit him to report for active service on the medical staff at the front. The Need of the Hour is not for the services of Dr. Montague at the front, but for the services of Dr. Montague's doctor, the practitioner who wrought such a miracle of healing in the case of Dr. Montague.—Toronto Telegram (Con.)

Fatal Injuries From Falling Down Cellar

As we go to press we learn that Mrs. John C. Roseveare, is slowly sinking from effects of the terrible injuries which she sustained on Saturday night when she fell to the foot of the cellar stairs striking, her head with great force against the cement floor. Mr. Roseveare was sitting on the verandah at the time and at once rushed to her aid. Physicians were summoned, but it was soon found that her injuries were of a very serious character, her skull being fractured, it is believed, in three places. She has not since gained consciousness and is now rapidly sinking. Mr. and Mrs Roseveare have no family. A nephew, Mr. Hector Roseveare, who is with the C.P.R., was called here from Winnipeg where he had gone on a trip with his wife and family. Mrs. Roseveare before her marriage was a Miss Armstrong. She is a most estimable lady, and the keenest regret is felt by citizens generally over her terrible accident.

Belleville Notes.

From the Chicago-Belleville News.

The Fifteenth Regiment Band is doing yeoman service in playing sacred concerts each Sunday night in the Opera House. There were some objections to these concerts on the part of some who really thought such things were in the nature of Sunday desecration, but it appears as though the entire city has taken kindly to these Sunday night concerts, and there is no doubt they have done a world of good. Good music will never do any harm to anyone, whether on Sunday night or Monday night.

A Colborne man claims that the first agricultural fair in Ontario was held at Colborne in 1828. We believe that Shannonville holds the palm a visit to the World's Fair at Shannonville this year will convince any skeptic, At the Shannonville Fair one may see the same crazy-quilts, knitted blankets and preserved pears that have been on exhibition constantly since Terrence the Greek humorist, started to write his comedies.

At last reports, Sergeant Charlie Gibson of the first over-seas contingent was doing nicely and had kept out of the way of all bullets, straight or otherwise' This is Charlie's fourth war. He is a soldier of tortune for fair.

Word has come that Lieutenant John A. Diamond, son of the late Abraham Diamond, former police magistrate of Belleville, has been injured in action in France, "Duster" went over with the first western continSent and has been in some heavy fighting. We certainly hope that his wound is not serious.

A big Fireman's Tourament will be held in Belleville toward the end of July.

Residents along Victoria avenue (formerly Hotel street) from Front to Pinnacle street from Victoria avenue to Dundas street are petitioning for an asphalt pavement. Progress!

W. C. Mikel, K. C. conducted the prosecution in behalf of the Crown at trial of Emil Nerlich, a Toronto merchant of German lineage, who was placed on trial for treason at Toronto. During the days of the trial the "Count" was guarded by secret service men, who feared an attack would be made on the Crown counsel's life. But they did not need to be frightened. The "Count" is some fighter himself.

Hard and soft corns both yield to Holloway's Corn Cure, which is entirely safe to use, and certain and satisfactory in its action.

Wilson Attacked in Pirates' Press

LUGANO, July 21.—The violent attacks on the United States in the government inspired German press, which had died down, have broken out with renewed violence. The semi-official Rheinische - Westphaelische Zeitung, the organ of the coal and iron magnates of the Rhine Province, says:

"The possibility of war with America has recently been discussed in German political circles, and this has produced a calming effect on the presumptuous threats of the United States. We certainly did not seek a quarrel with America, but if the American Government protects with its buckler England, in search of defenders, and if it threatens to oppose our means of attack, our honor forces us to strike at this buckler with our mace of steel.

"We see clearly what our fellow-countrymen abroad have to suffer on this account, what political effect it may have and what material losses we may have to endure, but what are such considerations in the presence of our aim, the encirclement of the British Isles by war?

Submarines Still.

"Our submarines are sending ship after ship to the bottom until the English are fired of such a struggle. We now know that our submarine war can have a very different consequence if we want to push it to its furthest limit. When the day comes for us to decide to push the submarine war to the extreme, neither London nor Washington will try any longer to impose conditions on us by diplomatic notes."

The German papers print without comment letters and press despatches of President Wilson's forthcoming note. Occasionally a paper remarks that the world is gradually becoming accustomed to the attempts of the British press to act as America's mentor, and to prescribe for the president the tone and text of his notes

Germany is working night and day on submarines of all sizes and types and training scores of crews.

$8,000 Fell Overboard

Brockville Times:—A peculiar story comes from Lansdowne concerning a package containing eight thousand dollars which is said to have caused considerable trouble and anxiety to officials of the post-office department and the Grand Trunk Railway recently while in transit between Montreal and Toronto on a G.T.R. express. The story as related by a person who claims to know the circumstances is that the mail clerk on the train left his car at Lansdowne on the trip in question and wired headquarters that eight thousand dollars had blown out the car door between Escott and Lansdowne and that he was leaving the train to go back over the track and look for the money.

Railway detectives were at once sent to the locality where the package disappeared and in company with the mail clerk a thorough search was made for the missing money. After a search of two days the package was found alongside the track by the clerk in whose charge it had been, and peace again reigned in official circles.

A Miraculous Escape

Gartley Family of Tweed Thrown Out When Train Hits Auto

Tweed, July 21.—Mr. Edward Gartley of the Tweed Pump Works and his family had a miraculous escape from death this afternoon, while crossing the C.P.R. tracks here in their auto. Just at the moment he was crossing the track a train shunted and the van struck the auto with the seven persons in it, turning it completely over twice and all were thrown underneath the car but Mr. Gartley who was driving, he being thrown into the ditch. He jumped up and lifted the auto partly up and got the family out. They escaped with a few bruises, but the car was a complete wreck.

Rose Day at Wellington

The Women's Institute of Wellington, Ont., have been particularly active in Red Cross work, but perhaps their greatest success was scored when Rose Day realized $300 for that cause. Throughout the day rose-bedecked girls sold roses from beautiful baskets. Automobiles and cabs were decorated for the occasion and made profitable tours through the surrounding country. In the evening an open-air concert was given in the park by local and outside talent. Ice cream and cake was served from artistically decorated booths in the lawn and everyone had the satisfaction of doing something for the boys who are fighting our battles.

OUR daily news letter from this thrivingtown furnished by The Ontario's special representative.

Busy Trenton

THE latest news of the town and surrounding neighborhood is given in an interesting manner.

Mrs. M. W. Murdoff, while driving with a party of lady friends along the Belleville road yesterday afternoon, in turning the carriage had the misfortune to upset it, with the result that Mrs. Clark, of Bowmanville, had her leg broken just above the ankle. The other ladies and two children miraculously escaped serious injury.

The Presbyterian Sunday School motored to Weller's Bay Wednesday morning to enjoy the annual picnic.

Mr. Adam Brown, postmaster at Hamilton, recently called the office staff together and told the single men of service age that they should enlist, with the result that nine men have left to go into training.

A rumor that the Bank of Commerce intending letting out all single men in order that they might enlist, is declared by a prominent Head Office official to be ridiculous.

The engagement of Miss Leona Bell of Wooler, to Mr. Allan G. Austin, of the same place is announced. The wedding will take place first week in September.

Mrs. Stewart Hooey and Don are spending their holidays here with friends.

Your King and Country needs you. A reader of the Toronto Globe states that the constant reading of this sentence is making him nervous. It is time that the nerves of a good many people were affected. Young men of service age are not yet falling over themselves around here in their effort to reach a recruiting office.

Mr. Harry Whittier, when in Toronto yesterday, ran up to the General Hospital to see Mr. Irvin Gains. He reports that he found the patient enjoying a cigar and showing great improvement. The operation was a complete success.

Mr. R. H. Spencer and a few comrades go to Madoc shortly to assist the I.O.O.F. brethren of that place in putting on the Oriental Degree. We are sure the Mad ocbrethren will be edified. The Trenton degree team has not many wrinkles to learn.

By the end of August the new bowling lawn is expected to be in shape.

Sam Finger has moved into more commodious premises on Ridgeway street.

They have pronounced action upon the liver and kidneys and by regulating the action of these organs act as an alterative in preventing the admixture of uric acid and blood that causes this painful disorder. They must be taken according to directions and used steadily and they will speedily give evidence of their beneficial effects.

Too Nervous To Drive a Car?

That's too bad, old man, but you know nervousness if you would quit tea and coffee and use Postum your is largely due to wrong habits of eating and drinking. nerves would steady up.

Postum has a delicious, snappy flavour and there's no drug in it—that's where it's got tea and coffee beat a mile.

Sound advice.

More and more, people are waking up to the harmful effects of caffeine—the drug in tea and coffee—a frequent cause of nervousness, heart flutter, dizziness, headache, and other ailments.

Instant Postum

is the soluble form of the original Postum Cereal. A level teaspoonful of the crystaline powder in a cup of hot water makes a delicious food-drink instantly. 30c and 50c tins.

The convenience of Instant Postum is seen at a glance, but some prefer the original Postum Cereal which must be thoroughly boiled—15c and 25c packages. Grocers sell both kinds and the cost per cup is about the same.

A change from tea or coffee to Postum has been a good thing for thousands.

CORP. FERGUSON OF THE 39TH BATT. WRITES

The following are extracts from letters received from Corporal J. A. Ferguson, of the 39th Battalion:

July 3, '15

Here we are at the end of our sea journey and safe and secure in Plymouth Harbor and we are now awaiting high tide to get us in some enough to land. We were accorded a rousing reception from the people on shore and all the ships blew their steam whistles. A canal boat, pulled out from shore and took two of all the mail. I should judge nearly 2000 bags. We were chased all night by German submarines but as we changed our course often and ran at full speed, they were unable to come up with us. A big liner which crossed our bow yesterday afternoon was torpedoed and sunk half an hour after passing us, by a German submarine disguised as a torpedo boat.

Shornciffe, July 4th, 1915.

We left Plymouth Sunday morning about 9 a.m. arriving here about 4 p.m. nearly starved as we had nothing to eat since 6 a.m. The scenery was grand all the way. We passed on the outskirts of London and were disappointed as I had figured on passing directly through London. Nearly 40,000 Canadians are camped in Kent, most of the 2nd still being here.

July 6th, '15

We are now fairly settled down in our new encampment. It is far better located than our old one on the island and is more up to date in every way having all kinds of modern conveniences, which our old camp was sadly lacking in. We are within a stone's throw of where Julius Caesar is supposed to have landed on his first visit to Britain. Our tents are all nicely floored and slightly larger than our old ones and the ground on which they are erected is as smooth as a lawn, adding greatly to our comfort. The only thing which I object to is the board which is 100% worse than what was served out in Canada. We are getting the same fare harder than formerly and we N. C. Os have far more duties and harder ones than ever before. No man is allowed out before 6 p.m. and must be in not later than 9.15 p.m. we last post sounds at 9.30 p.m. We were out last evening having a look around Folkestone. It is a quaint little village. Its streets are of the narrowest. I ever saw and not one runs straight, making it very hard for a stranger to find his way around. Prices of goods Love goes up so high on account of the soldiers being here, that nothing can be purchased for less than three times its actual value. At a modest looking hotel room we were soaked 35c each for what we could have got in Canada for 15c each. Over one million men are in training around this part of the country and soldiers are going out and arriving every day, some on pass but most of them wounded. The 2nd contingent are still in training about three miles from us.

The old historic Abbey of Canterbury is about 8 miles from camp, but under a hundred and one places of more or less interest. We are within a mile of the coast and on a clear day can see the coast of France and if unusually calm can hear the roar of the big guns as they pound away at one another.

The living line is so close at hand that soldiers crossing the channel early in the morning often return in the evening of the same day wounded, and others never return. I met and talked with several fellows back from the front suffering from gas poisoning, and believe me they are not at all anxious to return. A big hospital has been located near here and not a day passes without seeing a few of them lying over our heads, flying over the ground and others so high as scarcely to be seen.

CURT REPLY GIVEN TO THE HIGHEST WAR LORD

French Sergeant, a Prisoner, Told Kaiser, to Face, What He Thought

Paris, July 23—Albert Averlue, a member of the Paris Opera Company, has just returned from Germany, having been taken prisoner while acting as a stretcher-bearer. He tells of a colloquy which he says occurred between Emperor William and a captured French sergeant. Perceiving the number of the sergeant's regiment on his collar, the Emperor praised the regiment, saying: "I know it very well and I think most highly of it."

"Not more than I do," replied the sergeant.

The Emperor then asked what the sergeant thought of the food supplied to the prisoners.

"We are given absolutely unobtainable stuff'at present," the sergeant responded. "Later on I suppose William II. will give us nothing but bricks."

The Emperor's smile, was horrified at the remark but the Emperor, unperturbed, passed on.

TRADE AFTER THE WAR

Germans Are Anxious Since They May be Boycotted

LONDON, July 23—The Morning Post's Amsterdam correspondent says: "In German industrial circles great uneasiness prevails about the suggestion in the allied states to exclude German exports from the world market after the war.

"One result is that the formation at Berlin of a central expert office to promote the interests of German export trade after the war is being suggested by the industrial union and central association for German industry."

Captured German Gun at Toronto Ex.

TORONTO, July 23—Some idea of the tremendous and destructive power of the celebrated Germain gun which the British War office is loaning to the Fair as part of the war display may be gleaned from the fact that for purposes of crating, a box 16 feet long, 8 feet high and 8 feet wide was required. This is just about the dimensions of the modern steel room of the average dwelling.

The Exhibition's representative in England in sending along the information that the gun is now on its way to Toronto writes that "of the hundreds of guns in possession of the British this is the only one that is complete." When unlimbered, he says "it will take up one whole side of your exhibit."

The ugliness in the shape of destruction will be shown complete with carriage, limbers, wheels, breech block, sights, covers, ammunition wagon, cases, piece, etc.

After that awful three days' fight at Ypres on April 22, 23 and 24, the 48th Highlanders of Toronto had only one drum left and the head of that was riddled with bullets and shrapnel. The shell torn plan has been received at the Exhibition offices and is a most interesting relic. Traced in pencil and ink is a complete record of the movements of the Kilted Regiment from the time they first went into training at Long Branch until the bloody engagement at Festubert, Julien and Langemarck; the continuity of the story being interrupted here and there by great, ugly holes where the shrapnel and other death dealing missiles went through.

FRENCH PREPARE FOR 18 MONTHS

Must Contract Until End of Next Year "Or Till End of War"

PARIS, July 23.—The purchase by the French army of 120,000 tons of refrigerated meat annually until the end of the war, or until Dec. 31, 1916, has been agreed upon by Minister of Agriculture, Daudd, and Eugene Mauclere, head of the army administration. Companies doing business with the Government will be permitted to import their products duty free.

Most infants ar nterester by worms, which cause great suffering, and if not promptly dealt with may cause constitutional weaknesses difficult to remedy. Miller's Worm Powders will clear the stomach and bowels of worms and will act upon the system that there will be no recurrence of the trouble. And not only this, but they will repair the injuries to the organs that worms cause and restore them to soundness.

Acknowledged With Thanks

"The following letter has been received by Miss Mallett, Hon. Sec. I. O. D. E., Belleville, Ont.

Dear Miss Fraleck,

We beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of June 15th enclosing draft for $500 contributed to the funds of the Red Cross Society. We wish that it be the desire of the Ladies who have contributed, that these funds be used, if possible, in Red Cross work carried on in the firing line. We shall, therefore, have pleasure in devoting this in whole or in part to the equipment of Field Ambulances which are being fitted out for service on the firing line to furnish imperative surgical attention to soldiers who are not so severely wounded as to require their return to the Base Hospital.

With our best thanks for our splendid contribution.

Yours faithfully,

C. E. Bryson.

WHAT SEEDS PRODUCE

Two Thousand Carrots Grow From One Ounce of Seed

One ounce of broccoli, cabbage, cauliflower, savory, or kale seeds will produce 2,000 plants each.

Of other vegetables that must be reared from seeds sown in the garden, one ounce of seed of each will produce the following numbers of plants: Carrots, 2,000; leeks, 1,000; lettuce, 3,000; onions, 1,000; parsnips, 1,500; peas, 300; radishes, 1,000; spinach, 2,000. One ounce of carrot seed will suffice to sow a row 100 feet in length; leeks, 200 feet; lettuce, 200 feet; onions, 150 feet; parsnips, 150 feet; parsley, 100 feet; radishes, 100 feet; and turnips, 200 feet.

Again one pint of seeds of French beans will suffice to sow a row 50 feet in length; half a pint of runner pea seeds a row of 60 feet; and one pint of broad beans a row of 40 feet; and one bushel of potato tubers a row of 150 feet.

...Trial is inexpensive.—To those who suffer from dyspepsia, indigestion, rheumatism or any ailment arising from derangement of the digestive system, a trial of Parmelee's Vegetable Pills is recommended, should the sufferer be unacquainted with them. The trial will be inexpensive and the result will be another customer for this excellent medicine. So effective is their action that many cures can certainly be traced to their use where other pills have proved ineffective.

Economic Value of Birds

The insects that destroy our fruit crops attack every portion of the tree and its fruit. The woolly aphis attacks the roots; the trunk and limbs are preyed upon by millions of plant-lice, scale-insects and borers; the leaves are devastated by the allied scouring leaf-worms, canker-worms and tent-caterpillars, and the fruit itself is attacked by the curculio, codling-moth and apple-maggot. By the actual expenditure of about $2,000,000 in cash in the spraying of apple-trees, the destructiveness of the codling-moth and curculio have been greatly reduced, but of course that expense must be set down as a total loss to the farmers and consumers. In addition to a shrinkage of $12,000,000 in the annual crop from insect ravages that could not be prevented.

Now, in view of the foregoing, is it, or is it not, worth while for our combined men to do their very utmost, continuously, to protect from foolish and brutal slaughter man's only ally in the insect war, the insect-eating birds?—William T. Hornaday in "Wild Life Conservation."

Boys at Shorncliffe Can Hear Roar of the Guns

Mrs. Clarence Ramsey, College St has received the following interesting letter from her husbandmy, Pte. Clarence Ramsey, who left with the 39th Battalion for Shorncliffe a month ago.

Folkestone, July 7, 1916.

Dear Wife and Mother,—

I am writing to let you know I arrived safe and had a fine voyage. During the eleven days we were on the boat we saw whales and icebergs after we got on the ocean. Plymouth has some lovely scenery.

We are only sixty miles from London and were on the train eight hours coming from Plymouth to Shorncliffe. The firing line is fifty miles from here and we can see the flash of the guns and hear the cannon's roar. Aeroplns are flying over us almost continually. Bert Tapp and I are going to get a pass and go up to London. I saw Joe Belch and Harry Hagerman and they expect to leave for France soon. They went up a high hill which was formed of chalk and we had to rest three times going up. From the top we could see over Folkestone and Shorncliffe, the Channel and France. The boys are having a good time but think of home also. Am included.

Well I must close with love to all

From Clarence Ramsey.

WHAT MAKES THE RAINBOW

The rainbow is made by drops of rain, says "The Human Interest Library." It is due to the refraction of sunlight from drops of water hanging in the sky. As the sunlight passes through the raindrop, it is reflected from the inside of the back of the raindrop, it is broken up into its various parts, which correspond to the various colors of the rainbow.

White light, we know, is a mixture of many colors. The light waves corresponding to these colors differ in the extent to which they are bent by passing through such a thing as a raindrop, and so, when they come out of it, they are sorted out, so to speak, and what was white light on going in, comes out as a band of several colors. Thus, what we see in the rainbow is really a natural spectrum of sunlight—the light spread out in a band of the various colors that make it up.

It will Cave a Cold.—Colds are the commonest ailments of mankind and if neglected may lead to serious conditions. Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil will relieve the bronchial passages of inflamation speedily and thoroughly and will strengthen them against subsequent attack. And as it eases the inflamation it will stop the cough because it allays all irritation in the throat. Try it and prove it.

Different and Better Clothes

The Two Piece Suit

This is the time of year when a man wants to wear as little as possible. If you wear one of our cool Two-Piece Suits, it's certain you won't "wear a worried look."

But there are two considerations in a Two-Piece Suit which call for the most competent tailoring. In the first place, the coat must be so tailored as to obviate the need of a vest. In the second place, as the fabrics are extremely light in weight, the tailoring must be done with the greatest skill.

Fabrics of cerefully selected Sun-Proof Serges, Worsteds, Homespuns, etc., etc.

It you'll step in and try on one of these cool Suits and then take a look in the mirror, you'll be surprised to see what a swell and comfortable looking fellow you are.

We've everything in wearables for a man's summer comfort.

"SWEEPER" IS ACTIVE.

Sinister Apparition is Again Reported at Kaiser's Palace.

A sinister report has come to us from Germany. The "sweeper" has been seen in the Imperial Palace at Berlin, an apparition that always portends trouble to the home of Hohenzollern. For the sweeper is an apparition, a spectre, just as La Dame Blanche of the Louvre, who used to promenade the corridors before any event of importance to the Royal House. Memoirs of the past say that it was in this disguise, and wearing a white mask, the Duke of Buckingham designed to penetrate the oratory of Anne of Austria.

The sweeper of the Martin Palace is not so poetical, but she is much more financial. When a Hohenzollern is threatened with death the phantom appears at night, in the clear moonlight, and sweeps under the galleries or the open court. It is ever the symbol of the death of the Hohenzollern. The ghostly sweeping is heard in the silence of the night—the swish of the broom over the flagstones—and the warning has come to a Hohenzollern that the hour of his death has been struck on the dial of destiny. Who of that numerous family must answer the summons? Young child, the Emperor or a son, which of them must now respond to the last spectral call?

The sweeper has already been slain, it is said, and three have barely escaped the fatal summons this terrible Prussian conflict. Is it for one of these that the phantom has appeared, or is it the father, the chief, the Emperor, that the sweeper is now brushing into oblivion with her funereal broom? Or may not the prophetic sweeper presage the end of the Empire itself?

People of Berlin, when you pass the Palace at midnight hearken well! You may hear the swish of the fateful broom. Hitzing, then, and seek your own safety, for the ingenious charwoman is working at her task of death.

To Berlin and Back.

Captain W. M. Hart, of the C.A.M.C., Winnipeg, boasts that he is the only Canadian who has been to Berlin and back since the war started, but he admits that his impressions of the Kaiser's capital were only fleeting, though sufficient to make him detest the Teutons.

Together with a territorial medical officer, he was one of a party of British exchange prisoners who recently reached England. During the Ypres attack at the end of April, Capt. Hart was attached to the 5th Battalion, Western Cavalry, and had care of the wounded. With the commanding officer he went to procure ambulances, which they were unable to obtain locally, but a blocked road rendered passage impossible. Captain Hart went forward alone to rejoin the wounded, but was taken prisoner on an open plain by a group of Germans.

He was first sent to an internment camp at Maiza, and afterwards to Dahlitz, a small island in the Baltic. The conditions at Maiza were wretched, the bread being much inferior to the war bread used by the population, while the meat supplied seemed to be horseflesh. Captain Hart and his companions chiefly subsisted on food parcels from England, and one parcel of corned beef was brought back by Captain Hart, and is now displayed at the ministry of the Canadian Immigration Department in Trafalgar Square, London.

His Hospital Experience.

From the Northern General Hospital at Leicester, Eng., Private Fred Leitch, of the 15th Battalion (48th Highlanders), wrote to his mother, Mrs. C. A. Leitch, as follows, under date of June 6:

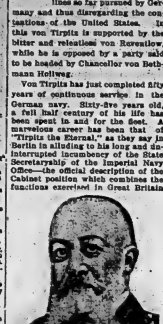
"I arrived here last night at 11 p.m., after a dull journey. We left Le Trefort by motor car at 6 and arrived at Dieppe, 20 miles, at 7.30 a.m. We took 12 hours to boat to Dover across the English Channel, a 14 Condition hour run. It was heavy-train, passing through London. I am the only Canadian in this ward and don't know the other patients. The nurses can't compare with the Canadian nurses. I went to bed after this afternoon for shortening the sleeves of my shirt. It sounds more like a woman's job, doesn't it? But it is funny to me. I can't get used to the idea of being sent to bed for punishment.

Famous Zeppelin Gone.

The Zeppelin L3, which has been destroyed, had covered 60 miles of Germany on board. Compared with the 30 metres (one) world's aeroplane record of 25,760 ft., this does not seem astonishing, but it was then the best height reached, and, so far as one can hear, it remains the best. On the 22nd of the same month the L2 set out for a long-distance trial, and reached a height of 6,125 metres (over thirty-odd hours, covering a distance of 1,240 miles, and again rising to a height of 10,000 ft.

Schoolboys Make Munitions.

The boys of Oundle School, Northamptonshire, are taking on the manufacture of munitions of war. By the courtesy of a neighbouring firm of engineers, the school is supplied with work of a varied character connected with mines, torpedoes, and torpedo-boats. Boys give one full day per week to the work, and work in batches of twenty-five in thirty, so that about 180 boys (the great majority between the ages of fourteen and seventeen) are thus employed.



GRAND ADMIRAL VON TIRPITZ.

by the Secretary of the Navy and the Kaiser.

Von Tirpitz has always been a confessed admirer of English naval traditions and institutions, and has caused them to be imitated in the German fleet almost down to the exact size of the brass buttons on its uniforms. His wife and two daughters were educated at Cheltenham college in England, and his son spent two years at Oxford. The latter is now a naval prisoner of war in Wales. Previous to von Tirpitz's request for the might and skill of the British navy always was, he has never doubted the ability to defeat it when the time came. He planned his faith to Krupp steel and guns and to submarines.

He was fond of assuring skeptical Reichstag members who doubted the advisability of keeping up an armament beyond the British standard, obviously determined to maintain her lead, that those arms and guns would decide the issue, not mere superiority of numbers of ships. He told them that the German navy had surprises up its iron sleeve which would more than overcome numerical odds.

TIRPITZ IS STRONG FOR "SUB" PIRACY

German Grand Admiral Refuses All Advice.

REVENTLOW IS WITH HIM

Most Fanatical of the Home Are Dead to the Protests of Those in Germany Who Demand That Warfare on Peaceful Ships Cease—Tirpitz Is Called "The Eternal."

GRAND ADMIRAL VON TIRPITZ is credited with being fatally in favor of continuing submarine warfare on the lines so far pursued by Germany and thus disregarding the contentions of the United States. In this von Tirpitz is supported by the bitter and relentless von Reventlow, while he is opposed by a party said to be headed by Chancellor von Bethmann Hollweg.

Von Tirpitz has just completed fifty years of continuous service in the German navy. Sixty-five years old, a full half century of his life has been spent in and for the fleet. A marvellous career has been that of "Tirpitz the Eternal," as they say in Berlin in admiring tones but not uninterrupted inconsistency of the State Secretaryship of the Imperial Navy Office—the official description of the Cabinet position which combines the functions exercised in Great Britain by the Secretary of the Navy and the Kaiser.

Von Tirpitz has always been a confessed admirer of English naval traditions and institutions, and has caused them to be imitated in the German fleet almost down to the exact size of the brass buttons on its uniforms. His wife and two daughters were educated at Cheltenham college in England, and his son spent two years at Oxford. The latter is now a naval prisoner of war in Wales. Previous to von Tirpitz's request for the might and skill of the British navy always was, he has never doubted the ability to defeat it when the time came. He planned his faith to Krupp steel and guns and to submarines.

He was fond of assuring skeptical Reichstag members who doubted the advisability of keeping up an armament beyond the British standard, obviously determined to maintain her lead, that those arms and guns would decide the issue, not mere superiority of numbers of ships. CANADA ABLE TO DO MORE WORK

Limit of Munition-Making is Not Yet Reached.

MANY FACTORIES ARE IDLE

W. W. Butler, Who Has Just Returned From Petrograd With a Contract for Five Million Shells, Not Yet Satisfied That the Dominion is Getting Its Share.

W. W. BUTLER, contracting engineer of Montreal and vice-president of the Steel Foundries of Canada and the Canadian Car and Foundry Company, who has arrived on this side from Liverpool, had in his pocket one of the largest war contracts held on this side of the Atlantic, calling for the making of 5,000,000 high power shells for 185,400,000. Mr. Butler said he obtained the contract in Petrograd, and that his plants in Canada would begin manufacturing the shells at once.

"There are many plants idle in Canada," Mr. Butler said, "which could make vast quantities of munitions. I myself have eight which can produce highly efficient shells. What the British need at the front is not shrapnel, but high powered shells to smash the re-enforced concrete and steel trenches the Germans have built building all winter. Shrapnel is ineffective for such work.

"England cannot manufacture anything like the quantity of high power shells necessary to insure victory for the allies. Canada can do the work swiftly."

Mr. Butler said his companies would rush work on the Petrograd shell contract, which he called the most stupendous of its kind ever undertaken. Red tape had sadly hampered the British War Office in the work of obtaining munitions, he asserted, and Lloyd George would have the problem of his career in straightening things out.

They Want Papers.

Sir George H. Perley, acting High Commissioner for Canada, in a cable communication to Sir Joseph Pope, Under Secretary of State for External Affairs, points out that one of the chief wants of wounded Canadian soldiers in the hospitals of the United Kingdom at present is news from home. The men are always looking for Canadian newspapers, and to meet this natural desire it has been decided to utilize the services of the Canadian Red Cross Society in London.

The request is made to Canadians of all classes to desire to meet the wishes of the wounded men to send them copies of daily and weekly newspapers addressed to Lady Drummond, Canadian Red Cross Society, 14 Cockspur street, London, S.W.

Canadian newspapers so forwarded should not be more than a week old and preferably should be put up in bundles and mailed twice weekly, the ends of the packages being left open. The postage rate on Canadian newspapers is one cent per pound for four ounces, provided the packages are inscribed "By Canadian Steamer."

When the bundles of newspapers have been received in England they will be sent, under Lady Drummond's direction, to the general hospitals throughout the United Kingdom, where the Canadian soldiers are under treatment.

They Want Vatican Moved.

It is asserted that the question of the Pope accepting the invitation of the Spanish bishops to transfer the Holy See to Spain is causing animated discussion at the Vatican. It is recalled that after the troubles in Rome in July, 1881, during the transfer of the body of Pope Pius IX. from St. Peter's to its last resting place, and when the coffin was almost thrown into the Tiber, Leo XIII. was appointed a commission of cardinals to study the question of flight.

Some of the cardinals favored the immediate transfer of the Papacy elsewhere, but the majority agreed that the transfer should take place only if the safety of the Pope were threatened, or he was hindered in the exercise of his spiritual ministry. The commission agreed, however, that the Pope should be left free to decide when it was necessary to take such a step. At this time Emperor Francis Joseph offered the Pope his castle at Salzberg.

is due to the PATENTED and EXCLUSIVE COLUMBIA PROCESS of Manufacture.

Columbia Records are BUILT UP. Instead of, economizing and using one mixture for the whole record, Columbia records are made in THREE LAYERS, using the cheaper material in the centre only where it doesn't count in the reproduction. The best and most expensive material the world can provide is used on the outer surfaces on which the sound wave or music is engraved.

THAT'S WHY COLUMBIA RECORDS SOUND BETTER and WEAR LONGER—the same difference in value as there is between an ordinary pine and an expensive built-up oak door.

All Columbia records are double, a different selection on each side.

Belleville—Its Beginning and Early History

Maurice D. Lynch in Chicago-Belleville News.

PART VIII.

In the early seventies the lumber industry was the leader in Belleville. It was quite an important one for nearly ten years longer, but it was in the heyer of its glory in 1873, the year in which the large mills of the Rathbun Company were destroyed. Those mills were on Mill Island, in the mouth of the harbour, on the site of what is now known as Queen Victoria Park. The biggest single industry of Belleville went up in smoke on that morning in 1873 on which the fire started. Many people think that Belleville never did recover from the setback it received when the Rathbun Company transferred its business to Mill Point, a miles down the bay. The company offered to re-establish its plant under certain conditions of lease and taxation, but the city fathers of that day would not assent to the proposal, so the Rathbuns took their business to Mill Point, where they also had large mills, and that little village throve amazingly. Mill Point later was rechristened "Deseronto," the beautiful Indian name by which it originally was known.

To give you some idea of the importance Mill Point assumed after the accession of the Rathbun Company's Belleville business, let me point out that in the late seventies the output of lumber was 32,000,000 feet per day. The docks had a frontage of nearly two miles, and in one year nearly 400 vessels cleared with lumber products from October 1. You can readily see what a crimp the loss of the Rathbun Company put in Belleville. The Rathbuns also had a mill at Rossmore, commonly known as Ferry Point, but which properly was Point Hennessy.

The old Mill Island was neglected entirely and quite useless up to the time it was filled in and converted into a park. When I was a kid; in the early eighties, the island was in many spots full of what you might term "second-growth timber," for you had to be careful or you would go right down through the sawdust into the water. This was caused by the actions, of the waters of the bay, which made inroads through the extensive piling.

A picturesque feature in the life of Belleville passed away with the death of the lumber industry. I refer to the annual "drive" when thousands—yes hundreds of thousands—of logs and immense numbers of great square timbers were floated down the Moira from the great lumber camps, 50 to 100 miles back, to Belleville. There they were sorted out at what was known as "The Gap." Floating platforms, known as "Mullinets," with stands built upon them of heavy timbers for the shantyman to stand upon, made what was technically "The Gap." With their big pikepoles the men pulled through these platforms some 20 or 30 cm. the logs that had been floated down the river. All summer long they pulled them through and the tally clerks checked and credited them to the mill whose brand appeared upon them. I can close my eyes now or and hear the shantymen's "Ha-ha-hup a log!" and they actually did sing it; there were many light-hearted Frenchmen among them—"Rath-a-bun a log!" "Star-a log!" "Flint & Hol-ton a log!" "Bucks a log," and so on. The logs were made into rafts for the different mills and them were towed away. Some rafts went to the mills of Belleville, others to Mill Point, Ameliasburg, Shannonville, Ferry Point, and Trenton, while many were towed all the way down the bay and through the St. Lawrence River. A great boom, made of timbers about 2½ feet wide and more than a foot thick, the ends secured to each other with great chains, was stretched across the mouth of the river at its widest part and securely anchored on each side, and for miles and miles back, away, away back, the saw-logs filled the Moira from bank to bank.

The shantymen were a picturesque crew. Hard drinking, hard working, rough, out-of-doors men they were, every man of them ready to take—and actually taking—his life in his hands whenever ordered to loosen the logs which would release a "jam." And how some of them could "ride a log!" Often in a spot of clear water before a jam ree would see a big shantyman, with his pikepole carried like a rope walker's balance pole, riding down the river on a single log, which was spinning and twisting in every imaginable way. But the shantyman didn't mind the spinning; no cat was surer of its footing than he. The small boys of Belleville were expert log-riders, too. We played "tag" and "follow the leader" on the logs, and the leader was sure to pick out a spot where the logs were smallest and where there was the most open water between them.

Late in the summer, when the "end of the drive" arrived, great numbers of the Knights of the Spike Soled Boots were in evidence along Front and adjacent streets, and when "pay-off" came they always had one grand blow-out—and that was a good time for a peaceful man to keep away from them.

PICKED UP HERE AND THERE

(Chicago-Belleville News.)

Billy Sunday, the "hell-fire evangelist," says that when he goes to Heaven he is going to walk up to our Lord and say, "Hello, Lord! Here I am." "Wouldn't he have a funny joke if our Lord told him" to go to?

According to a dispatch in a Belleville paper, an officer's life was saved by a bullet striking a tin in his pocket and being deflected. How many of our readers remember that Charlie Kemp was killed in the Northwest Rebellion of 1885, when he bullet struck a Bible in his breast-pocket. Old time scholars will remember that the good tailors of the Y.C.T.U. furnished each man of the Belleville contingent of "85 with a small testament.

Every time we lamp the title "Not Like Other Girls," by Rosa Nanchette Carey, which heads a serial story now being published, we breathe an apology to our old-time entertainer, Rosa Nonchette Carey, the dear little French lady who has helped us to pass many a pleasant hour, reading her stories, in by-gone days.

According to the Belleville "Ontario," from February 9, 1915, to June 10, 1915, 20,738 vessels have arrived at or sailed from British ports with supplies for the allies, and engaged in sinking 51 merchant ships and 37 fishing trawlers. What the hotel Bill?

The Ontario takes exception to the fact that some Chicago woman thinks it all right for a Chicago bank to refuse a customer a loan because the head of its employes who is not earning at least 1,000 plunks per year. But why should a friend borrow from a friend who's a thousand a year among friends?

A Norwood, Ontario, man, in sawing through a ceiling to make a hole for a stove pipe, found a bird's old-fashioned ledger between the rafters. He has been puzzled, trying to account for the missing page. Next place Reynolt—it's the Book of Fate.

They had a heavy frost in Lindsay this month; we have seen many a heavy frost in Lindsay in July.

We are at a loss to understand why Canadian newspapers publish broadcast the fact that certain munitions clothing concerns have succeeded in securing contracts to furnish war supplies for the allies. Every time one of these facts is published, the agents who are scattered throughout Canada immediately proceed to get in their work and the consequence is that there's been forthcoming since the first of August, last year. It is our idea it would be a good thing for the Empire to keep a keep still about what manufacturing concern receive these contracts. Let the other people find it out.

According to Belleville papers, Professor Lack of Belleville, who was a civilian prisoner in Germany when the declaration of the war broke out addressed German and Austrian civilian prisoners in confinement at the various internment camps in Germany, Kingston, and told them how much better off they were in comparison with the lot of the soldiers in the battlefield. What we want to know is, Why should Professor Lock waste his time telling them something they don't want to know and something they won't believe anyway?

Some Belleville excursionists were detained four hours at Kingston. We consider that a cruel and unjust punishment. Think of it! Keeping any one in Kingston six hours longer than they wished to remain there! Ye gods!

Grand Duke Nicholas.

Personally Directing with Compassable Skill his Twelve Separate Armies on a Battle-Front of 1,000 Miles.

The Famous Campaigns of Hannibal, Julius Caesar and Napoleon seem comparatively Trivial.

Alexander the Great probably never had more than 80,000 men in his army. Napoleon started the Alps with 102,000 men—80,000 foot and 12,000 horse. Julius Caesar had about 40,000 in his Roman legions during his memorable campaigns in Gaul, and Napoleon never at any time had more than 400,000 troops.

The Grand Duke Nicholas, commander-in-chief of the Russian armies, has seven million soldiers under arms. He is manoeuvring twelve separate armies along a battle front of 1,500 miles. No military commander anywhere in the history of the world ever attempted to carry on a campaign even remotely approximating the magnitude of the Grand Duke's undertaking.

Not only were the armies of the great generals of history much smaller, but the problems of commissary and transportation supply were much less complicated. Alexander the Great, Caesar, Hannibal and Napoleon were excellent strategists—and so is Nicholas.

Grand Duke Nicholas is fighting three enemies—the Germans, the Austrians and the Turks. Each of these armies he is confronted by the most minutely perfected trained and equipped military organization the world of man has ever conceived. And yet this great Russian commander has repeatedly out-manoeuvred them and outfought them. They have the best German Generals, with enormous masses of the best German troops, forced to force their way into Russia, and twice have the Russians fought them to a standstill and buried them back.

The tide of battle has ebbed and flowed in Poland and in Prussia and in the Carpathian Mountains. This is not surprising, but it is surprising, probably continue until something decisive is accomplished. The surprise of this war is that the Russians have been able to hold their own against in the world and have been able to hold their own.

Out of the twelve Russian Armies there are about 250,000 men, or about 2,000,000 on the battle line. There are 1,000,000 soldiers reserves in the rear of from, waiting to fill gaps. There are 3,000,000 troops under arms in barracks and army reserves, and 1,000,000 in communication points throughout Russia.

All the movements of this enormous force of 7,000,000 men are directed by Grand Duke Nicholas from his headquarters in a schoolhouse in the little town of Brest Litovsk, one hundred miles east of Warsaw.

All day long and all night long the telegraph instruments are clicking in his headquarters. He receives reports every hour of the day and night in the average—more than 1,400 telegrams of reports, communications and requests—a load for ordinary human power to on him every twenty-four hours.

The Grand Duke is a remarkable personality—grim, silent, determined and six feet seven inches in height. He is a singularly modest man. Unlike nearly all other generals, his chest is not embellished with ostentatious display of ribbons, crosses and medals. He never poses for a photograph—occasionally he is caught by a snapshot camera. He never welcomes publicity, never gives interviews, never boasts of success. He drinks no wine, eats plainly and moderately and his talk, spare figure contrasts strikingly with the fat double-chins and round stomachs of other pompderous and puffy and medalbedecked commanders.

ENEMY DRIVEN BACK BY ITALIANS

Both Gorizia and Tolmino in Grip of Great Turning Movement.

ROME, July 23.—The situation of Gorita, practically enveloped on all sides by the Italians, is hourly becoming more precarious. The great turning movement of our allies is simply sweeping all before it with irresistible dash. The Italian troops so far have driven the enemy from their path wherever he has been encountered. A fresh gain of ground is today recorded in favor of General Padorna's forces, who, under the heavy artillery fire of the enemy and continued impress forward, wrenching the country from the enemy part by part.

While Gorita in the south is being hard pressed by the Italians, Tolmino in the north, hardly less important from a strategical standpoint, is practically surrounded. Gen. Padorna, owing to the superior organization and skill with which he has manoeuvred his armies, has been able simultaneously to attempt the reduction of Tolmino and Gorita.

The fight for Gorita continues with unabated vigor. The progress of the Italians is slow but sure. Heavy artillery is battering to pieces the Austrian defences. Throughout last night the struggle between the two armies was of a desperate and sanguinary nature.

INQUEST REVEALED A SAD STORY

Rebecca Yonde Committed Suicide According to Verdict of Jury at Madoc

It was a sad and distressing story that the evidence brought out at the coroner's inquest at Madoc on Wednesday night to inquire into the circumstances surrounding the death of Rebecca Yonde, a seventeen-year old Barnardo girl employed as a domestic at the home of Mr. Frank Smith. Coroner Dr. W. S. Herpar presided at the inquest and a considerable number of witnesses were examined.

The evidence revealed that the girl had handed herself to be in a delicate condition and in a spirit of remorse and melancholy she had decided to make an end to herself by taking carbolic acid

The post-mortem examination showed that her apprehensions were baseless.

The jury after some deliberation, brought in the following verdict. — That Rebecca Yonde came to her death on the 13th day of July, 1915 at Mr. Frank Smith's residence in the Village of Madoc by carbolic acid poisoning administered by her own hand, evidently while laboring under a false impression as to her physical condition.

John Hodgins, inspector for the Barnardo homes, was present at the inquest, as was also a sister of his unfortunate girl from St. Louis, Mo.

When teas make the enormous advance that they have during the past few months, the general inclination is to lower the quality and put in more dust. The Geleda Tea Co. give exactly the same quality and freedom from dust as in the past. They would prefer going out of business to downgrading the quality they have served the public with for 23 years, but they must charge the higher prices they are compelled to pay for fine teas.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. USING AEROPLANES TO TAKE OUT ALIENS

German Officer Living Near Montreal Vanishes Over Night.

MONTREAL, July 23.—The disappearance of a German officer who resided at Chateauguay, coupled with the appearance over that town on Tuesday night of an aeroplane has given rise to the theory that the airship method is being used to spirit away people out of the country. The German officer is said to have made his will on Tuesday and to have stated that he was going to New York. When it was pointed out that the last flight had gone the officer said: "Nevertheless, I shall go."

The officer was not in Chateauguay to-day.

A number of Chateauguay residents say the aeroplane sighted is a field and then rose again and flew away.

Other reports received in Montreal quote people as contradicting that aeroplanes have been seen in Montreal and near the Vickers plant during the past two nights.

It is believed by some militia officers here that the aeroplanes have been making reconnaissances with the object of learning their way over this district and that one plane is to drop bombs on the bank and locks so as to put them out of commission when the western harvest starts to come down. This would be at a time when closing the canals or locks for a week or so would mean an enormous amount of damage and delay in getting out the wheat.

Young Wanderers

Two boys aged eleven and fourteen years were taken in charge in the Grand Trunk yards last evening by a constable. They had come from Toronto and were handed over to Mr. W. H. Wrightmyer, Children's Aid Agent, who is communicating with Toronto. The boys spent last night at the Shelter. They claim they were on their way to Montreal. They have even so early in life appeared in the Juvenile Court, Toronto.

Activities of Public Works

Street foreman J. S. Henderson has completed the work on North Front street road from the G.T.R. bridge to College street. The roadway is now in excellent condition.

This is the best road to be built this year in Belleville, except for minor repairs which will require only the use of the repair wagon.

Two motor cars with city officials and a deputation of the public works committee as occupants passed over the streets this morning on a tour of inspection of the sidewalks.

Messrs. Bumbeon and Wilde have not begun the Catherine street sewer because they have not completed a contract elsewhere

The Weather

Light or moderate winds, fine and warm today and on Saturday. Thunder storms in a few localities.

OUR FOREST RESERVES

Immense Tracts Set Aside in All Canadian Provinces

Considerable advance has been made in Canada in the selling apart of forest reserves. At the present time there are forest reservations throughout the Dominion as follows:

Quebec	107,997,513
Ontario	14,430,720
Manitoba	2,804,000
Saskatchewan	4,185,706.6
Alberta	18,813,376
British Columbia (in Railway Belt)	2,417,633.6
British Columbia (outside Railway Belt)	2,474,340, making a total of 152,935,593 acres. Besides the areas given for British Columbia, all the lands west of the Cascades bearing more than 8,000 feet, board measure, of timber per acre and all lands east of the Cascades bearing over 5,000 feet, board measure, per acre of merchantable timber are reserved from entry.

These areas have been selected with considerable care with the object of including in such reservations only lands which control watersheds, or which owing to the nature of the soil, topography or altitude, are not suitable for agricultural purposes. The determination of what lands are absolute forest lands and what are agricultural lands is a matter of great importance, and it is one into which a good many factors enter so that the decision that any land is absolute forest land may have to be altered with conditions of climate, or markets and of agricultural and forest development.

HINT TO DO SOMETHING OR RESIGN, GIVEN CLERKS

Member of Parliament Will Henceforth Give the Preference to Invalided Men.

OTTAWA, July 24.—Mr. E. N. Rhodes, M.P. for Cumberland, has adopted a plan which it is believed will be followed by other members of Parliament and by the Government. Mr. Rhodes, who is in Ottawa at the present time, announces that as far as his constituency is concerned he will, in recommending add making appointments, give the preference to soldiers who have been invalided home from the front. He points out that a man who has lost an arm or leg is just as capable of looking after a lighthouse or postoffice as any one else and he believes the patriot who has gone to the front and been disabled in action should be recognized.

In some of the departments there are many able-bodied young men filling positions as messengers, and if they show no inclination to enlist they may find their positions suddenly vacant to be filled by returned soldiers. In the Militia Department alone it is claimed there are a couple hundred of young and staple men holding positions which are not technical nor responsible.

It is understood that the Government has under consideration the whole problem of securing employment for returned soldiers and is considering the best method to follow. It is possible a small committee or commission will be appointed to take the matter in hand. There will be an attempt to locate returned soldiers on the land.

YOUNGEST V.C. TELLS RECRUITS THAT AGE DOES NOT COUNT

"You always shouted out at the top of your voice before the war that you were British. There is no excuse for any of you not joining. I said to a fellow the other day, 'Why don't you join?' and he replied, 'I am only sixteen.' Well, I was only sixteen when I ran away from home to join. I told the recruiting officer that I was eighteen years and one month. I didn't look at him while I said it; I was looking at a paper on the wall.

"Age is nothing. If there's brother fighting in the Dardanelles, and he is only seventeen. He 'joined' as a man. Doesn't it shame you? Or at the front there are grey-headed men; doesn't that shame you, young fellows?"

The speaker was Lance-Corp. Dwyer, of the East Surrey Regiment, the youngest V.C. in the army, who, before he enlisted, was a grocer's assistant at Feltham. He has been home from the front on a fortnight's leave and dressed in khaki and wearing the V.C. on the left breast of his tunic, he was a much-observed person as he walked at the head of a recruiting march through the West-end and the City of London the other day.

At one point of the route a Belgian soldier ran into the ranks and kissed young Dwyer on the cheeks.

Dwyer's leave has not been all a holiday, for he has done a little work on recruiting most of the time, and he has been so successful that as effort is being made to secure an extension of his furlough so that he may continue the work.

Military Notes

All recruits who enlist at Belleville except those for the 8th Canadian Mounted Rifles will according to order be held here until the mobilization of the 77th Battalion. When that will take place is not known. It is expected to mobilize within two or three weeks

Hard and soft corns both yield to Holloway's Corn Cure, which is entirely safe to use, and certain and satisfactory in its action.

U.S. to Ask Germany About the Orduna

One American Aboard Declares Sub. Attacked Without Warning.

WASHINGTON, July 24.—The United States will make diplomatic inquiries of Germany regarding the attack on the Cunard liner Orduna at a time when she was bringing a score of Americans home.

A report of an investigation conducted by Customs Collector Malone at New York, presented today to the State Department, emphasizing affidavits of officers, crew and passengers on the liner, confuting the sworn statement of at least one American passenger that the ship was attacked without warning.

All officials refused to discuss the report or its contents, but it is known that the United States probably will ask the Berlin Foreign Office for its version of the affair, and developments will depend on the reply.

Cooking Lessons for Tommy Atkins

LONDON, July 24.—Next week will see an innovation in the British military methods—the recognition of women's clubs as means of giving them the rank of non-commissioned officers. Some hundreds of London school teachers whose specialty is instruction in domestic arts are going to spend their holidays in giving cooking lessons in the camps of Britain's new armies. Those women will be given the temporary rank of Corporals and Sergeants. Their initiative is taken as the result of reports of waste in the camps. The War Office has arranged for one hundred to begin work next week, and if the results are good the scheme will be largely extended.

Punish a Workman for Writing a Letter

PARIS, July 24.—The Geneva, Switzerland, correspondent of the Havas Agency sends the following:

"The Criminal Court at Constance (Germany) sentenced a factory workman named Nadelfeil, nineteen years old, to three weeks in prison for giving 'false' information concerning the economic situation in Germany in a letter to his parents in the United States."

STR. EASTLAND CAPSIZES AND MANY LOST

Terrible Disaster in Chicago River This Morning—Said to Have Been Overturned.

CHICAGO, July 24.—From 75 to 300 persons are believed to have been drowned by the capsizing of the steamer Eastland at her dock in the Chicago River this morning. The steamer had been chartered for the day by the Western Electric Co. employees who had planned an excursion to Michigan City, Ind. It is said 2500 persons had been crowded aboard shortly before eight o'clock the hour it was to leave, when the boat slowly tilted toward the middle of the river, the officers shouted warnings but it was too late. The heavily loaded steamer continued to roll on till the hawsers which held it to the dock snapped. A moment later amid the screams of passengers, the steamer turned over on its side and floated out into the middle of the river. Apparently scores of women and children in the cabin were drowned without a chance to escape. Hundreds of other passengers were able to climb on the bottom of the boat which is above water and were taken off later by rescuers.

British Sub. Smashes Station and Train

Latter Was Loaded With Wheat Ammunition Worst Also Bombarded.

ATHENS, July 24.—Further information has reached here from Constantinople concerning the action of the British submarine which bombarded Ghereh station near Turkis. The station, building and a train in the station loaded with wheat were destroyed. The submarine then bombarded Turkish ammunition works at Zeitun Burun, and caused several explosions.

It is realized in Turkish military circles that command of the Inner Seas and the Black Sea has been lost to them.

The Turks are preparing for another general attack against the British position on Gallipoli.

Ruse of Britain to Fight Pirates

Gunboat Distinguished as Trawler Intercepted and Sank Submarine.

JOHNSTON, Penn., July 24.—A letter received here yesterday by Andrew McAtee, a prominent business man, from a relative in Scotland, throws a light on the defensive measures being used by England in submarine warfare waged by Germany.

The letter is in part as follows:

"Two of the enemy's submarines were cleverly discarded the other week, each off Peterhead and the other Aberdeen. At Peterhead an innocent-looking trawler, in reality a government gunboat, left the harbor and was soon spotted and hailed up by a submarine. The gunboat did not give the submarine time to approach, but opened fire at once, smashing the periscope with the first shot, whereupon her crew rushed upon the deck. The second shot disturbed the conning tower, and down she went like a stone.

"All the officers and crew were rescued, and, curiously enough one of the rescued men turned out to be German who for several years previous to the outbreak of the war had been engaged in the fish trade at Peterhead. He must have been a spy."

"In the Aberdeen fight, a British submarine submerged followed in the wake of some trawlers as they put out to sea. When the trawlers were approached by the German submarine they diverted their course a little. The British submarine then came to the surface, and with the first shot the shell nearly split the German boat in two. All the officers and crews of the German boat, with the exception of two, were drowned."

The letter which was mailed July 9 also speaks of the kronpass with which the people of Great Britain are awaiting President Wilson's arrival in the Lusitania case. According to the records given out by the British Government, a submarine was sunk by "a trawler" in the early part of July. At the time this statement was given out, no other details were made public.

CONTRACTS PLACED THROUGH GOVERNMENT.

LONDON, July 24.—The Times says today it is able to state on the authority of David Lloyd George, British Minister of Munitions that no Canadian contracts for munitions have been placed through the Canadian banking firm of J. P. Morgan and Co. Virtually all such contracts it is stated have been placed through the Canadian government.

KINGSTON WILL DONATE MORE THAN FOUR MACHINE GUNS

Patriotic Merchants Have United Together and Will Equip the Fifty-Ninth.

KINGSTON, Ont., July 24.—It is predicted that four machine guns will be secured for the 59th Battalion and probably this number will be exceeded. Kingston merchants have taken hold of the idea of having the 59th equipped in a way that even the most hopeful never expected. Officers of the 14th Regiment are canvassing their friends, and it is learned that the cost of two guns has already been subscribed.

There is no doubt but that Kingston will be proud of the record of the officers in the line of the officers. They are greeted on all sides by donations. In every case where a merchant has been approached the amount subscribed has been splendid. The officers are enthusiastic over the more so now."

SATURDAY, JULY 24, 1915.

MR. REDMOND AND THE WAR.

At a banquet given in Dublin a few days ago Mr. John Redmond, M. P., told for the first time how he was offered a position in the new Coalition Cabinet. It is a very amusing story of an all-night search for the Nationalist leader, and besides, it touches an event of considerable importance in political history which makes it worth while printing here:

"Late in the evening a cypher telegram came along. It was intended, it appeared, for me. It came to 'Dublin Castle,' or rather 'care of Dublin Castle.' (Laughter.) A young English gentleman who who entrusted with its ultimate delivery ascertained that I was at the time at an eagle's eyrie in Wicklow County, and to that interesting spot he departed at half-past ten o'clock at night. And there he found that I was away. (Laughter.) He was told by my old housekeeper that 'He is stopping at his house in Dublin.' (Laughter.) The young man went accordingly to a neighboring telegraph office where the proprietor or proprietress thinking he was a German spy — (great laughter) — promptly refused to give him any information, and shut the door in his face. (Great laughter.) He then, this young gentleman, at eleven o'clock at night, it would be then, started to find me in my 'country house in the neighborhood of Dublin.' After some no doubt interesting adventures he arrived somewhere, knocked up the local police office, got a policeman out, got my address, got into a motor, and arrived in fact at my house at, say, half-past two in the morning.

"After knocking vigorously at the door my old cook came to the front. (Laughter.) She was a Wexford woman, who was a grand old friend of my family. She took in the situation, and, looking out at the door, saw the policeman and the other young man, and when she asked what they wanted, the reply was that they came from Dublin Castle. (Laughter.) Yes, and they added that they 'wanted Mr. Redmond.' (Laughter.) Well, her old recollections were all unfavorably associated with remarkable episodes not remotely connected with the police and Dublin Castle and others in the good old times when such messages were the preliminary to going to prison, and so the good soul slammed the door in the faces of the emissaries, saying that 'There is no John Redmond here.' (Great laughter.) A friend of mine, appreciating the circumstances, went to the door, was told the true facts, brought in the policeman and the nice young emissary, and then, at three o'clock in the morning, I was, as solemnly as possible, presented with the complimentary offer of a place in the Cabinet. I think, gentlemen, the story is interesting, suggestive, and somewhat amusing. You all know the result."

Mr. Redmond, of course, as is well known, declined to enter the Cabinet because he did not believe a Coalition Government was necessary. He affirmed, however, that nothing that had happened had jeopardized the certain coming into operation of the Home Rule Act as soon as the war was over. The most important part of Mr. Redmond's speech dealt with Irish recruiting. He stated that over 120,000 men had come from Ireland to join the British Army, and these, with the Irishmen in other lands who enrolled, made the total contribution of Ireland to be 200,000. This included a splendid response, which shows how grossly the Kaiser and his advisers deceived themselves when they imagined that the Irish people would not respond to the Empire's call when the day of battle came.

Of the 120,000 Irishmen who have gone from Ireland to the front or to Kitchener's New Army, 71,494 are Catholics and 49,247 are Protestants. No fewer than 24,871 were National volunteers. But, perhaps, the most hopeful and heartening feature of the figures of Irish enlistment is that, despite the passing of a Government which brought Irish hopes in sight of fruition, and despite the lack of fact displayed by its successor in the proposed appointment of a Lord Chancellor the flow of Irish recruiting continues from week to week. There has been nothing finer in the whole conduct of the British communities in this war than the fine response which all sections, all classes, and all creeds of Ireland have made at this time of crisis. Ulsterman and Nationalists have stood shoulder to shoulder, and are fighting side by side in upholding the cause of human liberty.

Ireland's highest interest, Mr. Redmond said, in the speech from which we have been quoting, was the spirit and patriotism which she has displayed will make all the stronger the determination of the British democracy to see to it that when the war comes to an end, faith will be kept with Ireland and Home Rule will become an accomplished fact.

The settlement of the Welsh coal strike is the best news of the day. The concessions made to the miners on the whole, appear to be fair and reasonable. They are entitled to share in the war profits of the mine owners.

The London Lancet, discussing the statistics of British casualties, says that of the total losses in the army the killed numbered 3327 officers and 47,015 non-commissioned officers and men, a greater loss of life than ever before occurred in a similar period of time. Throughout the Crimean campaign the British losses were 2755 killed and 12,094 wounded and the Allies lost 8250 killed and 39,868 wounded. In the France- German war of 1870-71, the Germans lost 17,570 killed and 51,180 wounded. In the Russo-Turkish War of 1877 the Russians lost 32,780 killed and had 71,268 wounded. In the South African War there were 5256 killed in action and 26,286 wounded. The ratio of killed to wounded and missing was at 1 to 4.25, or 23.5 per cent. In the Crimea the ratio of killed to wounded and missing was 1 to 4.4, or 22.7 per cent; in the Franco- German War of 1870 it was 1 to 5.70, or 17.53 per cent; in the Russo-Turkish War it was as 1 to 2.17, or 46.98 per cent; in South Africa it was as 1 to 5, or 20 per cent. The proportion of killed to wounded has, therefore, so far been similar to, but slightly in excess of, British experience in the Crimea and South Africa. Among officers the proportion of killed to wounded has been in the present war much higher than in the case of the men—namely, as 1 to 2.3, or 43.61 per cent; it forms the main cause for anxiety in England.

THE OSTRICH AND THE TORTOISE.

An ostrich, filled with self-conceit
And giddy ostentation,
One day a tortoise chanced to meet
In casual conversation.
The tortoise, though extremely plain,
Was, like the ostrich, rather vain.
As all of you, no doubt, have guessed,
In noting this allusion,
The ostrich was, of course possessed
Of feathers in profusion.
The tortoise had a useful shell
Wherein it was his rule to dwell.
The question they discussed was made
A theme for disputation;
What is the best way to evade
Unwelcome observation?
As each had fixed ideas, you see,
They were not likely to agree.
"My scheme is this," the ostrich said:
"If any one pursues me,
I'll dig a hole and bide my head—
They cannot fail to lose me.
The plan's so simple, I'm surprised
That it should be so criticized."
"Your plan," the tortoise said, "is quite
Delusive and fallacious;
To draw the head in—out of sight—
Is far more efficacious.
Till I have cause to change my view,
That method I shall still pursue."
In this dispute they persevered,
With vain vociferation,
Till suddenly two men appeared,
Commercial by vocation.
One gathered ostrich-plumes to sell.
The other dealt in tortoise-shell.
The ostrich, showing no dismay,
Was busy in a minute;
He dug a hole without delay,
And placed his head within it,
And thought, with egotistic pride,
That he is the only way to hide."
The tortoise said, "I still protest,
Though scorn enriches Jenny H.,
My method is the very best—
At any rate, I'll try it!"
And with sarcastic smile withdrew
His silly head from public view.
The traders came, as you surmise,
And made an easy capture.
The feather-merchant viewed his prize
With nothing short of rapture.
"I didn't want his head," said he;
"His plumes are quite enough for me."
The other man was pleased as well,
And after brief inspection,
Removed the tortoise from his shell
In spite of all objection.
"The tortoise not a penny brings,
But shell," said he, "makes combs and things."
Of morals there are nine or ten,
But this one is selected:
Don't wear your shells and feathers when
You go out unprotected.
The other lessons taught hereby
I leave for others to apply.

Other Editors' Opinions

THE NEWSPAPER'S INFLUENCE.

A few days ago in the office of the Pittsburg Leader I was introduced to a member of Congress. Almost immediately he asked me who owned the New York Times. I replied that Mr. Ochs was the principal owner, and that most of the remainder of the stock was owned by members of the staff, like Mr. Miller, the editor in chief; Mr. Van Anda, managing editor, I asked him why he was interested in the ownership of the Times. He said he thought the Times must be controlled by English capital to account for its pro-English, anti-German policy.

I reflected how strange it was that a man capable of such absurb ideas should be regarded as being fit for Congress.

But the belief of this Congressman in regard to reasons for the policy of newspapers is held in various forms by many people.

Mr. Bryan, speaking at San Francisco, seemed to have been obsessed by a similar idea. From the brief report telegraphed to New York we quote:

Experience in the State Department, Mr. Bryan said, had convinced him that the public welfare would be benefitted by a law compelling editors to tell what pecuniary interest, if any, they had in government policies they advocated, so that the public might know what weight their editorials deserved.

I wonder if Mr. Bryan could name one newspaper, or weekly, or monthly that has peculiary interests in any government policy it advocates.

Some years ago, in its wisdom, Congress passed a law compelling publishers to state the ownership of their publications, including bondholders, etc. This was for the purpose of revealing, if it existed, secret control by individuals or corporations inimical to the public interest. All publications have complied with the law. Has there been a single sinister revelation?

I have had close personal and business relations for many years with editors of the leading newspapers and periodicals in the United States and England, and a fairly intimate touch with editors in France, Germany and Italy.

I know the editorial business, and I know newspaper men especially well, in the United States, and I can say that I have never known a single instance of the influence of a newspaper or magazine being bought.

A newspaper is absolutely the creature of all the industrial, social, commercial, political forces and life of its surrounding population, influenced to a certain extent by the personality of the controlling mind that directs its policies.

But no paper can live that is got an integral part, and in a peculiar sense a product of its environment. There is no institution of civilization that is so nearly an expression of the resultant of all the forces of civilization as the newspaper.

I have known of a newspaper being bought to enable the purchaser to carry through certain policies harmful to the public welfare, but the influence of that newspaper was not secured with the purchase of the paper, and, needless to say, the purchaser failed in his purpose.

It is possible for a man or group of men to purchase a newspaper, or other periodical to enable them to carry out some purpose inimical to the public welfare, but it is impossible to secure the influence of a newspaper or periodical by such purchase. Such purposes reveal themselves inevitably, whether the fact of ownership is known or not, and generally the fact of ownership is known.

The influence of a newspaper can not be purchased. It is destroyed by the very act of purchase for a sinister purpose.—S. S. McClure, in the New York Mail.

THE THAW VERDICT.

Let no one rashly say that the finding of Thaw sane by a jury, with his probable execution to freedom, proves that justice can be swayed or even corrupted by wealth. A rich man, indeed, has in his power to exhaust the dus process of law as a poor man cannot. But the question of legal rights is not alleged by that circumstance. If Thaw was put in prison chiefly because he was thought insane—and that was substantially the fact—he was entitled to show to the satisfaction of judge and jury, that whatever was the case at the time he shot Stanford White, he is not suffering from incurable insanity. This right has been freely recognized in his previous applications to the courts, though they failed. Whether a mistake has been made by the jury —whether the alienists are right or wrong about Thaw—it is not for us to say. All that we urge is that his going free, if he does go free, will not be a trampling upon the law. It will be in pursuance of the law, for such cases duly made and provided.—New York Post.

A FOOL AND HIS MONEY

BY GEORGE BARR McCUTCHEON.

PROLOGUE.

"Who is she?"

"How did she get there?"

These are the questions the Fool asked of the caretaker of the venerable castle of that high handed old robber baron, the first of the Rathhofers.

And these are the questions the interested reader starts to ask and keeps on asking while Author McCutcheon develops one of the most mysterious, humorous and sprightly stories that ever came from his pen.

"Who is she?"

"How did she get there?"

Read on and you will find much entertainment as well as the answer to these pertinent queries.

CHAPTER I.

I Make No Effort to Defend Myself.

I CAN'T quite say it was my Uncle Silas who said that I was a fool.

If memory serves me well he repeated the statement on a number occasions in the presence of my mother—whose brother he was—at a time when I was most conscious of acknowledging his wisdom and most arrogant in assertion of my own. I was a feminine child accidentally, and while I am now convinced that he must have felt as Uncle Silas did about it, he was one of those who suffer in silence.

I assume, therefore, that it was Uncle Silas' who orally corrected me. At the assumption justified to some extent by putting two and two together, after the fine old gentleman was laid away for his long sleep. He had been very emphatic in his belief that a fool and his money are soon parted. Up to the time of his death I had been in no way qualified to dispute his statement in theory, no doubt, I was the kind of fool he referred to, but in practice I was quite an unfilled curve. It is very hard for even a fool to part with something he hasn't got. Not until Uncle Silas died and left me all of his money was I able to demonstrate that dead men and fools part with it.

In my stunt Uncle Silas did not leave me his money until my freshmen days were far behind me. He left me then the solace that he may have outgrown an optimism while I was going through the same process. At forty-two three I confessed that all freshmen were insufferable and immediately set to work and, my degree and went out into the world to convince it that seniors are by no means wholly wise.

My uncle's original estimate of me as a freshman, of course—was uttered before I was out of eighteen picked out my walk in life, so to speak. After considering everything I decided to be a literary man—a novelist or a playwright, I hadn't much of a choice between the two, or perhaps I somewhat limited a generalization, was preliminary, a sort of muckrabbit. At any rate I was going to be a writer. My Uncle Silas, a hard headed customer, who had read Scott as a boy, and the Wall Street News as a man without attention, all results guaranteed. Office and Residence, 17 Bridge St. Bleecker and Victoria Avenues. Real Belleville, Telephone 198.

He said that I would outgrow it, and was some consolation to that. He even admitted that when he was seventeen he wanted to be an actor. There you are said he.

I argued that novelists make a great deal of money and playwrights, too, for that matter. He said in reply that as ordinarily vigorous weatherwoman as ever took more money than the average novelist, and she always had a stocking without a hole to keep it in which was more to the point.

Now that I come to think of it, it was Uncle Silas who ordinarily put Jocked me and not Uncle John, who was by way of being a sort of literary chap himself and therefore inherently unqualified to smile me in any course whatsoever, especially as he had all he could do to keep his own wolf at bay without encouraging mine and who besides resembling good English loved it wisely and too well.

My mother felt in her heart that I ought to be a doctor or a preacher, but she wasn't sure. She was positive I would succeed as a writer if I set my mind to it. She was also sure I would be president of the United States by perhaps even a bishop. We were ambitious.

When I was twenty-seven my first short story appeared in a magazine of considerable standing. She let the advertising pages, but my Uncle Silas didn't read it until I had convinced him that I had honestly earned a check for it. Even then I was obliged to promise him a glimpse of the check when I got it.

In course of time my first novel appeared. It was a love story. Uncle Silas read the first five chapters and then skipped over to the last page. Then he began it all over again and set up nearly all night to finish it. The next day he called it "trash," but invited me to have luncheon with him at the Metropolitan club and rather notably introduced me to a few old cronies of his.

A month later he died. He left me a fortune, which was all the more staggering in view of the circumstances that had seen me named for my Uncle John and not for him.

It was not long afterward that I made a perfect fool of myself by falling in love. It turned out very well as I can't imagine what got into me to want to commit bigamy after I had already persuaded myself to be respectably wedded to my profession. Her estheism I deliberately covered the affair and would have attained it, so it so doubt had it not been for the young woman in the case. She seemed to be none of me, but, with considerable to dependence of spirit and, I must say, noteworthy acumen, elected to be the splendid looking young fellow who clerked in a jeweler's shop in Fifth Avenue. They had been engaged for several years, it seems, and my small son fortune failed to disturb her sense of fidelity. Perhaps you will be interested enough in a girl who could refuse to share a fortune of something like $200,000 (not counting me, of course) to let me tell you briefly who and what she was. She was my typist —that is to say, she did pierework for me as I happened to provide substance for her active fingers to work upon when she wasn't typing my books for the regular sort of grind. Not only was she an able typist, but she was an exceedingly wholesome, handsome and pretty young woman.

Somehow I was able to attribute the

Was Female Ills—Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Belleville, N.S., Canada.—"I doctored for ten years for female troubles and did not get well. 'I read in the paper about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and decided to try it. I write now to tell you that I am cured. You can publish my letter as a testimonial."—Mrs. SUVANNE HARDEN, Belleville, Nova Scotia, Canada.

Auburn, N. Y.—"I suffered from womanly ills for two years, and had such awful pains that sometimes I would lie in bed four days at a time, could not eat a thing and did not want anyone to talk to me or bother me at all. Sometimes I could suffer for seven hours at a time. Different doctors did the best they could for me until four months ago I began using Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial and now I am in good health."—Mrs. WILLIAM H. GILL, No. 18 Hoard Street, Auburn, New York.

OVER NINE HUNDRED MEN ELIGIBLE FOR ENLISTMENT IN CITY OF BELLEVILLE

Says Mr. E. Guss Porter Last Evening—Grand Gathering of Committees and Ward Workers at Armouries—Arrangements Made For War Meetings—Inspiring Addresses.

The public meeting to stimulate recruiting which was held last evening in the armouries' lecture hall was a very large and enthusiastic one. Nearly one hundred and fifty workers in the cause and young men ready to enlist were present. Mr. E. Guss Porter, K.C., M.P., presided.

The president explained the purpose of the meeting, which was to organize the wards of the city. It had been felt that Belleville was not doing all that was necessary.

"It has never been believed that the young men of Belleville were cowards, or that they were afraid to enlist or unwilling to volunteer but it has been felt that the recruiting of the occasion have not been brought home to the young men for enlistment in the cause of the integrity and safety of the Empire."

The letter carriers of Belleville had asked to provide a list of the eligible young men or married men who could answer the recruiting requirements on the various letter routes of the city. "I have been furnished with those lists. I have consigned the letter carriers have taken such an interest in the work. These lists give the names of men, their street numbers, whether married or single and contain the names of over 900 men in the City of Belleville capable of performing this service.

"There are 900 men upon whom the committees may operate and with whom they may use their best endeavors to persuade them to go and serve their country."—(Cheers.)

It is proposed to hold a public meeting in each ward and confine that meeting to the ward as much as possible and then set that ward to work. Speakers and workers will be provided.

Then when all the wards are organized it is purposed to hold a grand rally and public meeting of citizens, the committees and recruits, on which occasion prominent speakers will deliver addresses. By this way we hope to show such a result in recruiting in Belleville that we will show the rest of Ontario what we can do.

Lt.-Col. W. G. E. Gwillim, of the 49th was next called on—"I feel it an honor," he said "to address the gathering of men I see before me. They have business in their faces."

The Colonel explained the requirements of age and consent.

"It is very pleasing to see the number of men coming forward, not young men only but older men. Yesterday we had a man of 55 years of age from Stockdale with the 8th C.M.R. Now I have started recruiting I have taken on 515 men and 24 officers with the regiment to which I belong. We have two recruiting stations the 15th and 49th. We do not care which you join. All we want is that you enlist.

"I want to go with the men. My application has been in for some time."

Capt. Dr. A. E. MacColl, medical examiner said, "Like Col. Ketcheson I have suffered myself for any position I like to fill." The doctor dealt with the height requirement of 5 ft 3 in. "I do not stick to the height if the recruit is well built." Chest, sight, feet, fingers, joints, and so forth were considered.

"I think there are not enough of the Canadian born visiting. The great majority that have volunteered are Old Country men. For instance from July last out of 57 enlisted, only 19 were born in Hastings or Belleville."

Dr. MacColl suggested the publication of a pamphlet explaining what the country was ready to do for soldiers and their dependents in the matter of pay, separation allowances, possible fund assistance, and pensions.

"You will have to break down these conditions," he said speaking of a minor's requirement to furnish a certificate of his mother's consent. 'This is the reason Canadians are not enlisting." "For the county of Hastings and Belleville I have examined since January 1st nearly 900 men."

Mr. Porter said that certificates and badges would be presented to the men who volunteered and are not accepted. "Those who do not wear the badge or cards will not be met with the same smile by the citizens. This is an opportunity to serve. Those who do not go will not be able to hide behind it and they have of themselves or that their neighbors have of them."

Mr. W. B. Northrup, K.C., M.P., referred to the patriotic meeting in Kingston and gave some reasons why Canadians should enlist. The German had planned the war for about 1920 but a set of circumstances arose to convince them that 1914 was the opportune time. There never was such a delightful looking expedition laid up before a nation as Germany held before her people. At this time Canada should come and by her united effort prove to the German states the fruitlessness of the war for Germany. "We must rise to be counted or be called the lowest mean people on the face of the earth."

The meeting then resolved itself into ward committees for organization purposes

G. T. R Employees Encouraged to Enlist

Up to the 1st of June 892 employees of the Grand Trunk Company have enlisted and are now in active service.

The Grand Trunk has been most generous with its employees obtaining insmuch as during their period of service in the war the insurance upon each man in the Insurance Branch of the Railway as well as full pay to each man for his first six months, half pay for the next three months and quarter for the following three months is paid by the Railway Company and his position on the railway reserved for him on his return.

This is a most commendable action on the part of this Railway Company, both towards its employees and the Empire, and the same treatment is assured to all its employees who may now enlist. The Railway man now enlisting is also entitled to his regular army pay, the separation allowance, if married, for his wife and family and the pension allowances in case of misfortune. It should be a very encouragement apart altogether from his patriotism for Grand Trunk Railway employees to get into the ranks and do his bit.

Everything Ready

Everything is in readiness for the heavy-weight boxing bout that is to take place in the armouries on July 28th between Silas Green and Cleve Hawkins. The interest that is being taken is shown by the sale of reserved seats yesterday, thirty being sold in the afternoon. But the main bout warrants the sale of all the tickets, as there two are surely the best that ever visited Belleville. Green is one of the cleverest boxers in the ring today. He has two hundred fights to his credit and has never been knocked out and only four decisions given against him on points. Hawkins is also clever as he has a wallop in either hand if he lands on his opponent that ends the bout as the saying is among the fans. He is also no slow customer. The management had a phone message from Trenton last night asking if they could arrange to let Sid Wart of Trenton box Degroat also as these two men can have a chance to decide the championship between Belleville and Trenton. Seat tickets are on sale at Doyle's Drug Store.

WAR IS THE CURE RATHER THAN CAUSE OF HARD TIMES

Belleville District Bound to be Prosperous—Depression That Exists Only in the Mind—A War-Time Contest—Today's Vote in the Grand Campaign.

Some of the canvassers, and particularly in the rural districts, inform us that their appeals for subscriptions are often turned down because of the piles of hard times and the war.

We thought it was pretty well understood by this time that the war came to us as a life-saver as far as concerns hard times. Had it not been for the war Canada would probably have passed through a period of almost unprecedented financial stress, due to over speculation and to unemployment. But the war came along just in time to keep certain industries going, to relieve unemployment, and to create an era of high prices.

There is a sort of psychological depression in certain sections of the Belleville district. That is to say the depression exists only in the minds of the people.

In the face of the crops that are abundant beyond all previous records the prices for cheese that have reached unknown high levels, the values for almost all other farm products more remunerative than they have been for years, rich pasturage and all that that means to the dairyman, the farmer ought this year to be the happiest and most prosperous individual on earth.

The farmer who talks hard times in this year of abundance and high prices must surely be a humorist.

And this rural prosperity cannot fail sooner or later to be reflected in the city. The money that flows into the farmers' coffers will eventually find its way back into the channels of trade, and general prosperity will result. This is inevitable.

We need a little more of Mary Baker Eddy's philosophy just now—believe that depression does not exist and it is gone. It is all an unhealthy state of mind. We need the enlarged outlook, the spectacles of the optimist.

Therefore, candidates in our Great Contest, everywhere that you go preach the gospel of optimism. Spread the glad tidings of returning good times. Enthuse the others with some of your own enthusiasm.

If any one should not be the opportunity of a newspaper contest during the time of war, ask him why not?

The war should not be the occasion for a newspaper to close its doors. Neither is there any greater impropriety in a newspaper extending its business or circulation during a war period than at any other time. "Business as usual," or "Business better than usual," should be the motto.

People require a newspaper more during the war period than at any other time. The Ontario at great cost provides its readers with a daily telegraph service giving all the latest news from the seat of war.

Today's report is not quite so good as Thursday's, many of the workers holding coupons will report on Monday when the date of expiration falls due.

We regret that so many of the contestants still too largely adhere to the policy of collecting coupons and are neglecting the immensely easier way of getting votes by getting subscriptions. A little of the effort spent in soliciting subscriptions would have produced better results.

All candidates who desire cuts made should hand in the photos at once or get them taken for us at Clarke's studio. The Ontario pays for the cost. The work of canvassing would be greatly facilitated in this way.

Talk about experience being required to secure subscriptions. One young canvasser who never had any experience whatever in work of this kind started out and in a few hours of her first day landed subscriptions enough to count nearly 15,000 votes.

A rather humorous mistake occurred in the heading of the report of day's special write up for the contest. The heading had it that the Ontario party would be given a tour of 75,000 miles—pretty large order. Instead of travelling three times around the earth the Ontario tourists will cover rather less than one-third of the earth's circumference or 7300 miles, but in this they will not be doing so badly.

There are a number of changes in the relative positions of the workers today.

Miss Jessie Morrice, one of the corps of volunteer Canadian nurses whose ability landed in England, has sent the following realistic description of the scenes she has witnessed at the Folkestone Canadian military hospital to her brother Alex. Morrice, Charlotte St.

In this letter Miss Morrice makes mention of the craving of the wounded and the sick soldiers for fruit and delicacies other than the plain fare served at the hospital.

It seems to us that it would be a most praiseworthy undertaking for someone in Belleville to institute a movement to provide fresh fruit and such other light foods as invalids need and crave. Any person who has passed through a serious illness will appreciate how important and beneficial a thing it is to give to those in a state of convalescence such a diet as appeals to their reduced condition. Who will set the movement going?

Folkestone, England,
June 21st, 1915.

My dear Alex,

Am not sure whether or not I have written you since the letter I began on board ship.

If you will possibly know by this time, we reached Plymouth or the harbor on Sunday night, June 13th, anchored all night in the harbor and came up to London the next day.

We were divided into two parties, the matron and myself in one, the same people and right near the British Museum.

Tuesday a.m. we had to go to the office of the Matron-in-Chief and report and skin more papers.

Our uniforms were found to be not correct, and we were also sent to get new hats, that took all of Tuesday. Some of the nurses were told they were to be sent away on Wed. p.m. at dinner on Tuesday the acting matron told me she thought it possible I also might be sent, but to report to her at 9 a.m. next day. I did so and was then told to report at lunch at 1.15. Then I was told I was to come down with a draft of a party of 18 nurses, (that meant nothing but some work and trouble) and to at once take my uniform to be altered. We were not to leave till Friday. That meant I had to wear service dress and could not go to any place where I'd need to be dressed up at all.

We were sent down here leaving London at 11.15 Thursday morning reaching here at 4.45 and started work on Friday at this hospital.

It is called Moore Barracks, Military Hospital; the place is an old regular army barracks, turned over about a month ago.

If we could only get in touch with a few people who have been wasting time all winter and could get them to send small sums to buy fruit and flowers, especially the fruit. When one thinks of the growing in the hospitals at home, and then see men who have fought all winter in the trenches and who have just left every comfort at home—see them when not well enough to eat much given a slice of bread and butter and a cup of milk and know they shou'd have fruit etc; they get custard and pudding occasionally, but they need a milk diet.

I must say the men who have been fighting make no complaint, they are glad of a meal and food and care. It is we nurses who feel it knowing a little what they came through and what they should have.

Miss Jessie Morrice.

At first we nurses wanted to go at once to France, now we feel how much wiser to be here for a while.

We could not bear it to get at once in touch with the horrors of war. Now when men come in with wounds healed, with nerves all shattered, with stories of their friends who fought and died or are prisoners, when we see young men with grey hair, boys of 17 with a leg off, one of 23 in my ward who since April has been suffering from gas, he is partly deaf, his throat is still sore, he is still spitting blood, and can take very little food even milk.

Then have a boy or man come with glee and a letter in his hand unopened, saying a letter from home sister—then comes the sad feeling you it is news of another brother dead in the trenches. We go around all day and have a burden of grief, that it seems we could not possibly bear anything more.

Do not think me more unhappy, they laugh and sing and joke, smile when we go to them, share their joys and sorrows with us, and make us long for letters to be able to give them what we would, when we are the only women here who have a real personal interest in them. It is hard for us to be here as many may not speak to a private or a noncom. only the officers, and the nurses have brothers, cousins, personal friends in the ranks, and we are all there on this side of the ocean.

When they frankly say we will never get back, what an officer calmly says—the average life of a lieutenant is 17 days—when this place is filled and overflowing and there are hundreds of hospitals like it, it is better to face this before we get to the awful horror of it all.

Folkestone is 2½ hours journey from London, is just across from France and about 40 miles from the firing line. We can hear some of the troops hard here on their return, and all the Canadians are in this vicinity Shorncliffe Camp being their headquarters.

We stay at the hotel as yet, but we or the nurses, will be moved out near the hospital where there will be as soon as it is in condition for us to live there.

Thursday a.m. got up to finish this as mail goes out today. You will be pleased when I tell you I received your letter yesterday. The first home letter since I came to England.

One of the boys said yesterday, sister is it not strange, you sit down to write a letter home and have so much to say and when you have you did not say it all." That is the way I feel.

Ten of the 50 nurses sent came down here yesterday. We had not time to rest at all in London. All they needed ship nurses badly. Four hundred cases in hospital and only twenty-six nurses. The nurses have only been here 3 weeks and things were in pretty bad shape when they came. The men had been here for a long time with just orderlies and the place had been an old regular barracks. They are one story brick some here for quite a while, and one in our ward who was an Yorse, he was an ambulance corps man and got transferred to the fighting line, was the only Toronto man left in his company.

He is down with enteric and its after effects. It is impossible to write. I do not know when to begin.

Jessie.

Different and Better Clothes

The Two Piece Suit

This is the time of year when a man wants to wear as little as possible. If you wear one of our cool Two-Piece Suits, it's certain you won't "wear a worried look."

But there are two considerations in a Two-Piece Suit which call for the most competent tailoring. In the first place, the coat must be so tailored as to obviate the need of a vest. In the second place, as the fabrics are extremely light in weight, the tailoring must be done with the greatest skill.

Fabrics of cerefully selected Sun-Proof Serges, Worsteds, Homespuns, etc., etc.

It you'll step in and try on one of these cool Suits and then take a look in the mirror, you'll be surprised to see what a swell and comfortable looking fellow you are.

We've everything in wearables for a man's summer comfort.

KILLING OUR MEN BY COTTON

WHAT GERMANY DOES WITH IT.

WHERE THE EXPORTS GO.

Cotton means shells. More than half of every propelling explosive, whether for rifle bullet or for gun shell, is just cotton chemically treated. Germans and Austria are said to be firing 5,000 bales of cotton a day. They are getting those bales through neutral ports, as Great Britain has not declared cotton contraband of war.

The above is the substance of the arguments of distinguished chemists like Sir William Ramsay and engineers who are urging the Government to declare cotton contraband. There are more cotton ships in Gothenburg (Sweden) harbor just now than have ever been seen in the whole history of the port, said a Swedish captain yesterday. Every one of them is stuffed with cotton for Germany—to make shells to kill our soldiers and our Allies. Other neutral ports have their cotton ships for Germany. Holland, Denmark, Greece, have all played their part, not necessarily illegally or in an unfriendly spirit in supplying Germany with the articles.

"Conditional Contraband."

As early as October the announcement was made that there was no intention of putting cotton on the list of contraband. On February 5 Sir Edward Grey stated that the proportion of cotton imports used in the manufacture of explosives was very small, and the requirements could be supplied from the stocks of goods in the warehouses of the countries of the war.

"The advantage of treating cotton as contraband of war is consequently not apparent."

By March 11, however, under the Order in Council instituting the block ade of the German ports, cotton became "conditional contraband." If a British cruiser stopped a cotton ship proceeding to a neutral port and came to the conclusion that the ultimate destination was the enemy it could be stopped, but the onus of proof would rest with the British.

On April 27 the net was drawn a little tighter by an order prohibiting the re-exportation of cotton from Great Britain to European ports, with certain exceptions; and on May 20 Mr. Lloyd George declared in the House that the action taken was "in every respect effective in preventing cotton from reaching Germany.

Belated Admissions.

By June 5 the Government confessed through Mr. Runciman, that evidence "to which they could not shut their eyes" made it plain that cotton going to neutral countries was leaking through, to Germany. Figures quoted by the Board of Trade in reply showed that in March and April this year 273,427 centals of cotton had been imported by Sweden, Norway, Denmark, and the Netherlands, as compared with 9,917 centals in March and April, 1914—in other words a thirty-fold increase.

To make 100lb. of ammunition for propelling a shell or rifle bullet you need 60 lb. of cotton. To make the million shells that Germany fired on one single day during a few days not long ago there would be needed 1,750 tons of cotton—an average steamer load. This is assuming 10-lb. of the shells to have been more field-gun shells of three inches and the remaining tenth to have been shells of 42 inches. To fire a big gun, such as a 15 in. gun of, say, H.M.S. Queen Elizabeth, you need a whole bale of cotton—480 pounds.

In addition to using vast quantities of cotton for making ammuplitions Germany is now clothing her troops in cotton. It has been stated that fears of offending America, the big cotton-growing and exporting country are the reason for any hesitation in our action, but Manchester alone has offered to negotiate the purchase of the whole American cotton crop at an excellent price. America could come to no commercial harm if that were done.

Mr. Runciman's Admission.

Mr. Runciman, President of the Board of Trade, in the House of Commons last Thursday said that in one direction they had found evidences to which they could not shut their eyes that cotton going to neutral countries was leaking through to Germany. In the opinion of the Department best informed Germany was not finding the cotton necessary for the manufacture of explosives, for she had already stocked herself very well with cotton for that purpose, and it therefore became necessary to place it among articles which were prevented from passing to Germany.

Mr. Lloyd George in the House of Commons on May 19 stated that action taken since March 11 was in every respect effective in preventing cotton, an essential element in all modern explosives, from reaching Germany. Figures showing a thirty-fold increase of British exports of raw cotton to Sweden, Norway, Denmark and Holland were given on Thursday by Mr. Runciman.

STOP THE SUPPLY.

Sir William T. Dupree writes to The Daily Mail:

"A friend of mine landed in Bombay last Christmas, where he met a German he had known for years before. The first question my friend put was, 'Well, how long will the war last?' The reply came, 'It will last two months if you stop our cotton. It will go indefinitely if you don't.'

"Every soldier and sailor knows that cotton is the basis of all high explosives and that every round that has been fired by Germany on their extensive frontiers for the past three months has been fired by the 'good will' of England in letting them have cotton.

"The President of the Board of Trade now proposes to 'check' the supply by granting licenses for its removal. We must go further. We must stop cotton to all countries except our Allies."—London Eng., Daily Mail.

AUSTRALIAN INDIGNATION

Raises to High Point by Mr. Lusk's Letter Describing Recent Treatment of Joseph Vial.

Mr. Elmer L. Lusk, M.A., has just received the following interesting letter from Mr. J. Edwin Vial, 737 Hunter St., Newcastle West., N.S.W. Australia, father of Joseph Vial, the brilliant nineteen-year old violinist, who is now slowly dying in St. Catherine's Hospital, Ramsgate, England as a direct result of brutal treatment received at the hands of the Huns. On March 29th special arrangements were made by the British Foreign Office to send back to Germany two German consular officials in exchange for Mr. Lusk, his two small children, and Mr. Vial, who were the first Colonial or British subjects to be exchanged since the beginning of the war. The letter reads in part:

My Very Dear Friend,—

I address you so because of your great kindness to our boy, although a complete stranger to us. Plainly your Joseph would have died in that cursed cooking pot for your son, he said. Indeed we were extremely anxious about our dear son, for we could get no word of him no matter how we tried, and try we did. I can assure you. Your letter from Rotterdam, dated April 2nd which took two months to get here was received the first news we had had of him since war began. Little did I think my son was going amongst barbarians, when he left home three years ago, so full of life and promise. We have much to thank us and, God yet could to be thankful for to the good God of Heaven for raising up such kind friends as yourself and Mr. A. Van-Hoogeny to get our son out of the hands of those fiends. Poor Joe was loved by everybody here, and the people are more than interested in your account of the brutal treatment meted out to him, just because, as you say, he was a Britisher and for no other reason; and they heartily wished funds to send his mother to England to bring our boy home if he can travel; it seems more selfish of us to see the last of him there. Mrs. Vial will leave for England on July 3rd, by the "Saxonia," travelling via San Francisco and New York. We thank you for all the trouble and expense you went to to get our poor dear boy over to England in the most comfortable way; words can never express our thanks fully for your kindness to the son we think the world of. When we posted to Lobejal at the beginning of the war, just fancy getting the following reply: "Joseph Vial in prison Lobejal since Sept. 11th, best of health NO COMPLAINTS TO MAKE." Seeing how we treat the Germans here in Australia as Christians, letting him have a two mile radius to exercise in, and our boys cooking for them (and getting plenty of impudence back in return.) I supposed poor Joe would get at least fair treatment even if he had some hardships. Your letter to me, telling the true story of Joe's brutal treatment has been published far and wide here, and most of the thriving Germans in business forwarded from the Imperial German Foreign Office. At the city hospital in Rotterdam the British doctors who examined Vial stated that his larynx and one lung were almost entirely gone, and that a few months longer would be the utmost limit of his life.

Mr. Vial's tragic experience is only one of many; there will be still more sadder stories. But many are already dead, and the others still in confinement in Germany have no way of conveying to us the information which they must certainly be burning to tell. It was announced a few weeks ago by the London "Times" that we had been learned from a most trustworthy source that thirty of the British civilians in the concentration camp at Ruhleben have died since November as a result of lack of proper food, care, and medical attention. Facts like these call for a swift and speedy vengeance. German "Kultur" that can defend and even boast of such things is surely the foulest blot on civilization that the world has ever seen.

Happenings at the Y.M.C.A. Boys' Camp

Important business called Chef Baldwin home last Saturday, so Herman Van Wetten became chief cook and bottlewasher. He accepted the position on the condition that Tennis Tansberry would be appointed assistant. They assumed their respective portfolios at the same salary, but unannounced to all salaries in camp are to remain the same until the war is over.

Sunday morning we held Divine service at the Y.M.C.A. Rev. conducted the service and spoke on "Men of Decision." In the afternoon we heard the report of Billy Sunday's famous address on "Amusements." In the evening "Pop Golford" conducted a very interesting discussion on "Weaknesses and Strength in Character." At this meeting we were delighted to have with us Mrs. Roberts and daughters, also Dr. Marshall and his family.

On Monday evening there was a big event in Camp. The boys were invited to visit the natives on the East Shore of the Lake as the special guests of the Hitchon family. The kids first of all entertained the invaders crowd with some remarkably clever stunts. People who couldn't get near enough to see it all sat in the boats and fished. When darkness set in we gathered around the porch of the house and sang songs and sang college songs. Dusseberry sang a solo, Twig Woodley danced a Highland fling, Ed. Hall sang "Annie Laurie" (he couldn't respond to an insistent encore). Jimmie Ketcheson brought down the house with a clever dance. Simmie Lawrence and his big sister sang in fine voices, "O Canada" Miss A. T. C. M. sang two beautiful solos to our great satisfaction. Then we all sang some more college songs. Pop Gifford then put his megaphone next the mouth organ whilst Mrs. Hitchon played very capably as the accompanist at the piano. The doors of the spacious dining room then opened wide and we saw a table littered with "Apple Pies." A beautiful lady said "Boys please come in and help yourselves." Every boy said he was pushed in by his opposite. We never knew before how far a fellow's mouth could stretch. Twig Woodley's mouth fell in a big hole the last pie disappeared, so he expressed himself in splendid voice how grateful he was for "one more."

Mr. Max emphatically seconded the motion. After three lusty cheers, the War Canoe took the boys with their fiery hearts back to the Old Camp.

Tuesday noon another surprise came to our dock, a boat load of ice cream. We were just in the middle of our dinner when Mr. Hess landed with the ice cream. We actually dropped the rest of our regular menu that we might do justice to the special. We decided to finish it for fear it might melt. Wednesday evening we have our minstrel practice.

Mrs. R. H. Liddle received the following interesting letter containing from her son Everett who recently went overseas with the 39th Batt.

Folkestone, Kent, July 5, 15.

My dear mother:—

Just a few lines to let you know that we are in camp once more, near the town of Shorncliffe, which has a population of about 45,000, a very pretty place along the sea, or the English Channel.

The city of Dover is just 8 miles distant, and the city of Calais, France about 25 miles across the Channel. We can see Calais and Cape Grisnez, all the way around us, some of them about 250 feet high.

Now we can see the top on a clear day see Calais and all the coast line and hear the guns roar when there is a big battle on. We saw two French aeroplanes last night when we were marching down to camp. They fly over here every day watching for German aeroplanes coming over.

This morning when we were drilling, I saw two aeroplanes flying over. They say their sheds are just a little way from here.

I cannot imagine that we are in England and neither can any of the Canadian boys. We are only 22 miles from home and within 80 miles of the firing line.

We certainly are lucky boys to get across here without being sunk as so many boats are being sunk all the time.

There was a big ship which passed us Friday afternoon at 2.15 and was torpedoed and sunk at 5 o'clock.

Our concert last night was a great flying around. The captain was quite uneasy when we were crossing the Channel. He ate his supper Friday night and was satisfied. Some were sing on the bridge, didn't leave his post. They could have got us easily enough on Sunday morning as it was heavy fog came up and we had to stop for awhile and had to keep the syren blowing all the time so that no ship would run into us.

We arrived at Plymouth Sound, Saturday morning at 11 o'clock at low tide, and laid there till 6 p.m. then moved up a little further and dropped anchor and laid until 8.30 Sunday morning.

Reporting Everett gave a description of the train trip to Folkestone, the beautiful scenery and the funny little cars.

In closing he writes: "I am well as usual and did not get a bit seasick."

Angry Passenger (casting newspaper aside with disgusted gesture): I'm sick of reading about the way Britain's been too proud not to. We could not stand by and see little Belgium overwhelmed by the Germans, by Toucan took on calmly and see your own women and children slaughtered by the Huns. Because you are too proud to fight! It would make me laugh if it did not make me sick.

Yankee Passenger: See here, mister, we could'nt do any good if we came in. Our army aint ready.

Angry Passenger: Neither was ours when the war started. But in six months we raised and trained two million men. Our population is 66 millions. Yours is double that. Who could you do in six months?

Yankee Passenger: We haven't got enough ships to transport a big army.

Angry Passenger: There are all those German merchantmen interned in your harbors. Besides, your navy has swept the seas of German warships, as much for your benefit as our own, so you would have a mile thousand men. But they are overkoss on your coming in, mind you. We shall win through without.

Yankee Passenger: Well, the President said we air too proud to fight, and I guess he's measured up the situation.

Angry Passenger: You were not too proud to fight Spain, were you? You boasted no such sentiment when you went to the Philippines. And you had not received such provocation from them as you have from the Huns. Look at Theodore Roosevelt, was one of your national heroes, was he not? He stuck a feather in his cap, if I remember rightly. It must have been a well one, for he went to fight! Good lord! And good-day! —From John Bull.

TO THE STAY-AT-HOMES.

You cheer the war of the football field; your rout at the scene of ball, But your sporting blood runs thin as milk when you hear your country's call.

Are you so dull to your country's need or are your hearts afraid,
Or do you think that cheers will help when the game of war is played?

The game of war is a bloody game, with a heavy toll to pay,
Are you content to sit in the stand and watch your fellows play?
Are you content to clap your hands, while others bear the brunt,
And thank your stars you've jobs at home instead of at the front?

Stand up and show your blood is that which runs in the lion's veins;
Get into the game which calls for men with pluck and thews and brains,
Lest your girls shall sneer and say, "Give us the men who are not afraid;
Our hearts are with the khaki crowd not with the petticoat brigade."

—Walter Lecky.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

Too Much Rough Talk in Bars

In police court yesterday afternoon Magistrate Hanna was dealing with a clause of five charges of assault and abusive language alleged to have occurred on a ticket said, that there is too much rum and abusive talk around hotels and in barrooms. He was pleased to learn that proper steps are to exert more control over the language of men in the bar-room. Were cases of the kind brought before him in the future, he said, the offences would be severely dealt with.

The Ontario Road Race

The annual Ontario Road Race for the beautiful Silver Cup donated by Messrs. Morton and Herity will be held, according to previous announcement, on Belleville's Civic Holiday, that is to say on Wednesday next. Already a number of inquiries have been received from those who propose to enter.

Last year the runners who entered were Jas. Alexander, Belleville; Percy Sherman, Trenton; Stanley Hurst, Belleville, and Chas. Sherman, of Trenton. The finish of the race was in the order mentioned.

James Alexander, Belleville's speedy marathon runner has now dead the race five two years in succession. We understand that he will again be a competitor this year, and if he wins the cup becomes his personal property. But as several other ambitious distance runners are in the field, a fine contest is looked for.

The course is for three miles and will be the same as in previous years, start is to my start in front of The Ontario Office at 10, o'clock a.m. July 26th. Up Front street to Bridge, along Bridge to Albert down Albert to Dundas, along Dundas a point below House of Refuge, and one and a half miles from Ontario office. Returns by same route.

The race is open to all amateur runners in Hastings or Prince Edward Counties, City of Belleville or Town of Trenton.

Other prizes for those in 2nd, 3rd and 4th places will be donated by Belleville merchants.

ATHENS, July 26.—Advices reach here from Constantinople today that a British submarine has again entered Constantinople harbor. The submersible it is stated torpedoed a Turkish transport in the Sea of Marmora and proceeding to Constantinople, sank a gunboat and an ammunition steamer near the wharf. Cotton Situation Featured in Press

London Times, Daily Mail and Daily News Complain of Inaction.

LONDON, July 26.—German military authorities, according to information received here, have announced that a census will be taken, beginning at midnight August 2nd, of all stocks of cotton in Germany. The census will apply to raw cotton, cotton waste, cotton wool and all cotton materials, especially those used by the army. A census will be made at the same time of wool and half wool of the underclothing for men and various other supplies such as packing and materials used in making rope.

The Times and The Daily Mail again urge the government to declare cotton contraband, and to undertake the scheme, purchase the textile as outlined by The Times Friday. This plan contemplates the purchase by the government from the southern cotton exchanges of the amount of cotton that would normally have gone to Germany and Austria-Hungary and also of the cotton exports to Holland Denmark, Norway, Sweden and Switzerland, at the same time declaring cotton absolutely contraband.

The Daily Graphic also complains of the inaction of the government on this question, and says the matter is becoming a grave danger to the country, unless something is done before the new cotton crop is available Germany will be able to get all the cotton she requires.

The Daily Mail in an editorial, says "it will be a gross public scandal if this matter is not dealt with, before Parliament rises, to save our soldiers."

Intercession services also were held in all the free churches of the kingdom."

Agent of Lloyd George Has Arrived at Ottawa

D. A. Thomas and Party Not in Canada to Place Orders, But to Look Into Possibilities of Getting Shells and Other Munitions.

OTTAWA, July 26.—D. A. Thomas the Welsh coal king, representing David Lloyd George Minister of Munitions, arrived in Ottawa yesterday. He is accompanied by R. H. Carr and Gen. R. H. Mahon, officials of the British War Office, and the purpose of his visit is to investigate and report to Lloyd George upon Canada's capacity for turning out munitions of war.

The spokesman of the party is Mr. Carr. "We are not in Canada to place orders for shells or anything else," he explained. "Our mission is to look into the possibilities of getting shells, and other war munitions.

"We will do our work through the shell committee. In the United States we are working in co-operation with J. Pierpont Morgan, but of course Mr. Morgan has nothing to do with Canadian orders, and all these will have to be placed through the Canadian government."

Mr. Carr said that since Lloyd George had taken the portfolio of munitions, Britain's output had already been more than doubled. Shells are now pouring into France.

The party are stopping at the Chateau Laurier and will be in Ottawa about two weeks.

Sugar Cargo of Freighter Lying in the Hudson River is a Total Loss

The Cragside, which was to leave here last night for an English port with a cargo of 100,000 bags of sugar, will be delayed a few days. Authorities are investigating to determine the cause of the explosion.

The fire and water damage to the steamer was estimated at $10,000, while the cargo of sugar, valued at $144,000, is believed to be a total loss.

Germany Was Behind Action by Turkey

ROME, July 26.—It is expected here that Turkey will reply within three days to the Italian demands for the immediate release of the Italian citizens who have been detained in Smyrna and Palestine, and that arbitrary requisition by the Turkish authorities of an Italian steamer. The Italian government also asked that assurances that Turkish officers will not proceed to Lybia, where it is feared they might foment considerable trouble.

If the demands are not heeded to without condition, hostilities will be instituted by Italy against Turkey and neutral governments will be informed of a war between Italy and Turkey, which however, will not be formally declared.

The Foreign Office has been confidentiay informed that the anti-Italianism in Turkey has been instigated by Germany.

HEROIC FRANCE.

A Scottish member of Parliament who is serving in the trenches in Flanders pays a generous tribute to the soldiers of France. The French, he says, are "fighting like lions on our right." Since the Spring the whole character of the war on the Western front has changed. The initiative has passed entirely into the Allies' hands." While we all know how magnificently the British soldiers have fought on their part of the line, too much praise cannot be given to the valor and heroism of our French Allies. In a speech which he made on the celebration of "France's Day" in London, Lord Curzon used a phrase which admirably epitomized the great part which France is playing in this war. He said that the alliance between France and Britain in this war was an alliance of the spirit as well as of the body, and that "the soul had put on its armor and had gone forth to conquer or perish."

No one, as the Westminster Gazette says, who has been in France since the war and seen the whole nation not only bravely enduring the sufferings and hardships of war, but penetrated with the sense of the moral and spiritual issues at stake will think Lord Curzon's tribute to our Allies to be in the least degree exaggerated. In past times there has been a popular but shallow idea throughout the English-speaking world that the French were a volatile, excitable people, who passed quickly from one mood to another; but the real France revealed to us by this war proves to have incomparable qualities of faith and hope, steadfastness and perseverance.

"We will not say and do not think," says the Westminster Gazette, "that the British people are inferior in these virtues, but it does sometimes occur to us, when we read the excited and agitated comments of some of our critics, that its outward appearance the comparison is not all in our favor. Here are we, with our seas under our great Navy growing in strength with every month, and such an Army as we have never had or ever dreamt of having, both for our own security and for the common cause—surely a position which justifies fortitude and composure, with however grim a determination to use it all for the winning of victory. And yet there are French Allies bear every German threat and German bluff with complete sangfroid, though the enemy is actually on their soil, there are some who would throw us into agitation and excitement at the remote chance of his reaching Calais and being able to throw a random shot into one of our coast-towns. This is not the English spirit nor the French constability, of which we heard in old days, is the spirit of France in this war. What we say to our Allies in these days is that we will be as steady and enduring as they, that we believe in our power, as they believe in theirs, that the pledge which we made together last year is stronger and firmer than ever, and that we have no shadow of doubt of our capacity and theirs to carry through to the end."

The example set by France is inspiring. There is much," the Westminster adds, "that we can learn of France both in the field and in the organization of war. The French army and the French people are quicker to adjust themselves to circumstances than the British. Their ingenious minds—more ingenious than the German, for all that is said to the contrary—are all the time at work inventing new devices, new tactics, new methods of economizing their strength and using it to advantage at selected points. They somehow give the impression to the onlooker that their military staff is more youthful, more alert, and keener to work out the problems of this particular kind of warfare than ours. They seem to have the right combination of experienced elderly commanders and active students-like young men, and, if all accounts are true, they have no hesitated to take any strong measures that were necessary to bring the competent young men to the top. Then, behind the fighting lines, we see the whole people seriously setting themselves to the life of economy and frugality which the occasion requires. Here is admirable Frenchwoman comes to her own, performing miracles of management, and taking into her own hands a hundred things which, in other countries, have to be prescribed by government order. Nothing last year was more impressive than the complete unanimity with which the gay life of the Parisian was put away, and the pleasure-seekers vanished from the scene to reappear as working-people. No preaching or scolding has been needed to effect these results. They come of themselves, and come inevitably when the invader is on the soil, but nothing could be more admirable than the spirit in which France accepted them and turned them to the best account for the great cause."

We salute heroic France! She has ennobled herself and will ever be exalted among liberty-loving nations—a worthy Ally of the mother and champion of free nations. It is a great and glorious thing that they are fighting side by side in the cause of liberty and honor between nations, and to rid the world of the spirit of Prussian militarism.

If any more American citizens are murdered by German submarine commanders, President Wilson will assume that the murders are "deliberately unfriendly" acts, the inference being that German submarine commanders who have already murdered American citizens on the high seas may have been moved thereto by the mistaken idea that they were performing an act of friendship towards the said American citizens.

The liquor men who fought prohibition in Alberta and got beaten last week made the mistake of hiring as their chief campaign orator a Chicago man named Windle. It soon became known that Windle publishes a weekly paper which is strongly pro-German in sentiment. Editorial extracts from his paper were copiously quoted by prohibition speakers during the campaign, and Windle's pro-Germanism had nothing to do with prohibition, but it "queered" him with the Alberta people, and he did his cause more harm than good.

Sir Leo Chiozza Money, says that when war broke out the aggregate incomes of the people of the United Kingdom amounted to £2,200,000,000. The estimated expenditure of £1,133,000,000 in the present fiscal year, he concludes, means spending publicly in a year a sum about equal to one-half a year's income. He estimates that in the last year of peace the rich and poor of Great Britain together spent on luxuries "from wines to tobacco, and from sumptuous dresses to four-ale, £600,000,000." He continues: "So that it comes to this: Terribly costly as the war is, it will not cost us twice as much in the present financial year as we spend normally in a year on alcoholic drink, temperance drinks, tobacco and motor-cars. We need not be frightened, therefore by the mere look of the figures. We are a great nation. There are forty-six millions of us to find the money. We are going to find it, and more if necessary, to see the thing through. But we may do the thing with many different degrees of wisdom."

On Friday night a large number of representative and influential citizens of Belleville met at the Queen's Hotel and decided to take concerted action to stimulate recruiting in this city and district. Strong committees were appointed for each ward to consider ways and means of assisting in this very necessary and laudable endeavor. Into their hands was given the duty of taking such action as would best achieve the unanimous wish of the meeting. The committees are thoroughly representative, well selected and fully competent to discharge the duty entrusted to them. They will have the backing of every citizen in any project they may undertake. Their duties are by no means light, and they will need every assistance that every one can render them, and they are entitled to whole-hearted assistance. So far as The Ontario can assist the committees in any way that to them may seem desirable, our modest services are at their command. We feel that every citizen worthy of the name will view the matter in the same light. Let us all get together and see to it that nothing is omitted that should be done to secure for Belleville further representation on the battlefields of Flanders.

AFFINITIES.

I'm fond of a stroll by the river's dank brim,
When the flowers are brilliant with dew;
I'm fond of the woods when the twilight is dim,
But the blooming mosquitoes are, too.

I'm fond of reclining at eve on the porch
When the stars are just coming in view,
And watching each firefly light up its torch—
But the prowling mosquitoes are, too.

I' fond of a round on the close-shaven links
Alone; or, still better, with you
When the afternoon sun toward the mountain top sinks—
But the knavish mosquitoes are, too.

I don't like mosquitoes; I'd fain let them be,
I hold that they're sordid and venial;
And I am convinced that they do not like me
But our tastes are acutely congenial.

IMMUNE RASCALITY.

Canada has had an unpleasantly long list of political scandals in which every note in the gamut of political vice has been struck. But probably in no single previous scandal has there been embraced such a variety of political shortcomings, nor any in which so many of the standard general evil forces so influential in Canadian public affairs, has been brought into play.

Probably the most striking incident in this sordid and sickening drama of incompetency, betraying trust, fraud and miscellaneous crime was the burning of the telegrams by the order of the president of the private company which controls a large portion of the telegraphic system of Canada. To the injury inflicted on the public interest by the destruction of what doubtless would have proved to be information of great public value, this man added insult, in the form of a cynically insolent "explanation" of his conduct. One day there is reference in the evidence before the Royal Commission to certain telegraphic correspondence. By midnight of the following day all the telegraphic company's copies of that correspondence are destroyed by the local manager of the company under instructions from its president in Toronto. This magnate has given two different explanations of these instructions, both about equally insulting to the intelligence of the people. He says that the burning was done under a new rule under which all copies or originals of telegrams were to be destroyed within a very short time. This rule was evolved and brought into operation with such suddenness that it did not apply to the whole of the company's system, but only to four cities. Still more curiously these four cities happened to be those between which this telegraphic correspondence wanted by the Royal Commission was carried on.

This president, Mr. Zebulon A. Lash, also explains that the reason why the telegrams were burned was the company's regard for the interests of its customers, whose confidence it was bound by law to protect. He quotes the statute which obliges the company to maintain inviolate this confidence and in quoting he garbles. He leaves out of his quotation the clause which demands that the company shall produce its records of telegrams when these are required by the proper legal authority.

Now this man was for long, and probably is still, chief legal manipulator for Mackenzie & Mann, those ardent but expensive Canadian patriots. He is an adept in the business of finding shelter or immunity behind legal technicalities for performances which could pretend to no moral sanction. As he is, probably, like most of his kind at bottom, somewhat of a coward, he doubtless feels very confident that he will find protection under the law for his glaring and insolent flouting of public opinion in the matter of these telegrams. Probably he will. But it is the immunity which such men can find, under shelter of the law, that brings law into contempt. Indeed The Tribune has heard of many honorable and moderate man who expressed the opinion that, in these strenuous times, it would not be altogether a bad thing to have recourse to the lash. He further avowed that he would like to be a military dictator just long enough to hang a few prominent Canadians, whom he had clearly in mind, and without whom Canada could get along very well. One of them, at least, is a man who will feel the embrace of the rope.—Was Mr. Zebulon A. Lash.—Winnipeg Free Press.

RECORD OF MR. NORRIS IS CLEAN

There is no evidence that Mr. Norris was a party to the dickering. It is exceedingly gratifying that his comes through the ordeal with clean hands, and with the confidence of the public. It remains for him to decide whether he shall retain Mr. Hudson in his Cabinet.

Manitoba today is in just the same position that Ontario was in after the collapse of the Ross Government. What the people want is a good big dose of plain, old-fashioned honesty, such as the late Sir James Whitney gave Ontario. If Mr. Norris will hand it out in large quantities, and frequently, he will strengthen himself with the electors. He cannot have a better model than the rugged old Tory knight who cleaned Ontario and kept it clean. His closest friends credit Mr. Norris with these qualities and predict confidently a period of honest administration for Manitoba.—Orange Sentinel.

A FOOL AND HIS MONEY

BY GEORGE BARR McCUTCHEON.

[illegible] to find here a nook about the place," said I, with a magnificent sweep of my arm to counteract the feeling of utter loneliness I was experiencing at the moment.

* * * * *

A day or two later the castle was swarming with workmen. The bang-ing of hammers, the rasp of saws, the pattering of mortar, the crashing of stone and the tunes of charcoal cruck-ians attended to the severest recesses. The lower of Babel was being recon-structed in the language of six or eight nations.

Poopendyke, in great distress of mind, notified me on the fortieth day of rehabilitation that the cost of labor as well as living had gone up appre-ciably since our installation- in fact it had doubled. He said all of my bills, so I suppose he knew what he was talking about.

"You will be surprised to know, Mr. Smart," he said, consulting his sheets, "that artificers are getting more here than they do in New York city, and I am convinced that there are more workmen. Today there are thirty new ones scrubbing the iogole on the gun room floor, and they all seem to be supervising the workmen under them. The carpenters and plas-terers were not so numerous today. I am sorry to say, Mr. Smart, that it may interest you to hear that their wages have gone up approximately seventy $700 in our money, to say noth-ing of materials and breakage."

"Breakage!" I exclaimed in surprise.

"Yes, sir, breakage. They break nearly as much as they mend. Well-well go bankrupt, sir, if we're not careful."

I liked his pronoun. "Never mind," I said; "we'll get rid of them in time."

"By the way," he said, "old man Schmick has had a fresh grievance. He has been paid for nearly two years. They have put in a claim. The late owner as-sumed that they'd get their money from the next"—

"Discharge them at once," said I.

"We can't get on without them," he tested he. "They know the ropes, so to speak, and, what's more to the point, they know all the keys. Yesterday I was beerty two hours in getting to the kitchen for a conference with Herr Schmick about the marketmen. In the first place, I couldn't find the way, and in the second place all the doors are locked."

"Please send Herr Schmick to me in the—in the—I couldn't recall the name of the administration chamber at the top of the grand staircase, so I was compelled to say, "I see the hall."

"If we lose them we also are lost," was his sententious declaration. I be-lieved him. We kept the Schmicks.

On the fifth day of our occupancy Britton reported to me that he had de-vised a plan by which we could utilize the submarine home power represented by the muscles of those lazy giants, Rudolph and Max. He suggested that we put a rope around the top of the log of the incline, with stout steel cables attached to it at each end, which could be hauled up the cliff by a thirteen wasted human energy, and so readily accomplished. I accepted feasible and I in-structed him to have the extraordinary railway built, but to be sure that the safety devices attached in the cog wheels were sound and trusty.

That evening, after the workmen had left the castle, deep silence fell on the world like an evacuating army. I brought a few moments of peace and quiet to the small balcony outside my bedroom windows. My room was in the western wing of the castle, facing the river. The eastern wing mounted even higher than the one in which we were living, and was topped by the softest watch tower of them all. We had not attempted to do any work over in that section as yet, for the simple reason that Herr Schmick couldn't find the keys to the doors.

Suddenly I found myself staring as if stupefied at the white figure of a woman who stood in the topmost bal-cony of the eastern wing, fully reveal-ed by the last glow of the sun and apparently deep in dreams as I had been the instant before.

CHAPTER III

I Defend My Property.

FOR ten minutes I stood there staring up at her, completely bewildered and out of his shaken. My first thought had been of ghosts, but it was almost in-stantly dispelled by a significant action on the part of the suspected wraith. She turned to whistle over her shoul-der and to snap her fingers peremptori-ly, and then she stooped and picked up a rather tiny chow dog, which prompt-ly barked at the across the intervening space, having discovered me almost at the same instant. I was pretty well away and quite snugly ensconced among the shadows. The lady in white muzzled him with her hand, and I could almost imagine I heard her reproving whis-pers. After a few minutes she stood gently forgot the dog and lifted her hand to a gesture something in her hair. He again barked at me, quite fero-ciously for a chow. This time it was quite plain to her that he was not barking at the now shadowy moon. She peered over the stone balustrade and an instant later disappeared from view through the high, narrow win-dow.

Vastly agitated, I set out in quest of Herr Schmick, marshalling Poopen-dyke as I went along, realizing that I would have to depend on his Ger-man, which was less halting than mine and therefore more likely to dovetail with that of the Schmicks, neither of whom spoke German because they loved it, but because they had to, be-ing Austrians. We found the four Schmicks in the vast kitchen.

"Herr Schmick," said I, "will you be so good as to inform me who the dickens that woman is ever in the seat wing of the castle?"

"Woman, mein herr?" He almost dropped his keys.

"A woman in a white dress, with a dog."

"A dog?" he cried. "But, mein herr, dogs are not permitted to be in the castle."

"Who is she? How did she get there?"

"Heaven defend us, sir! It must have been the ghost of"—

"Ghost, your grandpa!" I cried, re-lapsing into English. "Please don't best about the bush, Mr. Schmick. There ever that is the matter with you, which I haven't been allowed to penc-trate in spite of the fact that it belongs to me. You have not only lost the keys to that side of the castle. Will you explain how it is that it is open to strange women and—and dogs?"

"You must be mistaken, mein herr," he whined abjectly. "She cannot be there. She— Ah, I have it! It may have been my wife, Gretel! Have you been in the east—"

"Nonsense!" I cried sharply. "This won't do, Mr. Schmick. Give me that bunch of keys. We'll investigate."

The four Schmicks wrung their hands and shook their heads and then, re-pairing to the scullery, growled and grumbled for fully ten minutes before deciding to obey my commands. In the meantime I raised my apprehensions to Poopendyke and Britton.

"It would be like me, sir," said Britton, "that I found a rag doll in the court-yard yesterday, on that side of the building, and I should say castle, sir."

"I am quite sure I heard a baby cry-ing the second night we were here, Mr. Smart," said my secretary mere-cously.

"Come!" said I finally, grabbing the keys from the old man's unwelcome

Two Abreast We Filed Through the Long, Vaulted Hall.

hand. "And, Schmick, if that dog bites I'll hold you personally responsi-ble. Do you understand?"

Two abreast we filed through the long, vaulted halls, Rudolph carrying a gigantic lantern and Max a sledge. We traversed extensive corridors, mounted tortuous stairs and came at length to the sturdy oak door that sep-arated the east wing from the west—a huge, formidable thing strengthened by many crosspieces and studded with rusty bolt heads. Padlocks as large as horseshoes, corroded by rust and rendered absolutely impracticable by age, confronted us.

TORTURED BY RHEUMATISM.

Sunday School Supt. Tells How "Fruit-a-tives" Relieved

Toronto, Ont., Oct. 1st, 1913.

"I have lived in the city for more than 15 years and am well known. I suffered from Rheumatism, especially in my hands. I spent a lot of money without any good results. I have taken "Fruit-a-tives" for 18 months now and am pleased to tell you that I am well. All the enlargement has not left my hands, and perhaps never will, but the soreness is all gone and I can do any kind of work. I have gained 35 pounds in eighteen months."

"I have not the keys," said the ex-cited Schmick sourly. "This door has not been opened in my time. It is no use."

"It is no use," repeated the prisi-sons, leaning against the moldy walls with weary tolerance.

"Smash those padlocks, Max," I com-manded resolutely.

Very reluctantly Max bared his great arms, spat upon his hands and, with pitiful look at his parents, prepared to deal the first blow upon the ancient padlock. But his mighty arms fell after a few scabs of rust and rattled back into its customary repose.

"Ach, it is useless, triumphantly. "It cannot be broken."

"It is a very fine lock," cried old Conrad, with a note of pride in his voice.

I began to feel some pride in the thing myself. "It is, indeed," I said. "Try once more, Max."

But it seemed to me he struck with a great deal more confidence than be-fore, but without result.

"I am the engineer," I said in desperation. Max surrendered the clumsy, old fashioned instrument with a sigh of relief and backed off to stand back. Three successive blows with all the might I had in my body left their mark on the door, but otherwise my choler rose to heights hitherto un-known. I was very gold enamored, placid person and averse to anything savoring of the temperamental. I de-manded the sledge, and, administering it wock upon the broad oak panel of the door, regardless of the destructive-ness that it might have effected. If any one had told me that I couldn't splinter an oak board with a sledge hammer and a single blow I would have laughed in his face. But as it turned out in this case I not only failed to split the panel, but broke off the sledge handle near the head, putting it whol-ly out of commission for the time be-ing as well as stinging my hands so se-verely that I doubled up with pain

Herr Schmick looked pleased with her. Afterward Max informed me that the door was nearly six inches thick and studded with rivets—the acoustic of huge battering ramset back in the days of the Crusades. Britton, the mechanical genius, suggested the wooden hammer to work wonders in the end using which after it appears to have split to the core, simply fell to pieces.

As we trudged back to the upper halls defeated, but none the less in-dignant, Britton suddenly straightened, and was struck by the ac-tu. surroundings of the surroundings. Those words were his own that ran the shocking realization the "contents of the castle, as set forth either explicit-ly or by implication in the deed, had not been sold to reinsider them.

"Herr Schmick," I abruptly halting my party in the center of the hall, "what has become of the rugs that were here, my man, and what be-came of the pile of furniture we and back yonder?"

Old Conrad was not slow in answer-ing.

"The gentlemen called day before yesterday, sir, and they drove them all away. They will return tomorrow for the remainder."

"Gentlemen!" I gasped. "Remain-der?"

"The gentlemen to whom the ber-count sold the rugs and chairs and chests and"—

"What!" I roared. Even Poopen-dyke jumped at this sudden exhibition of wrath. "Do you mean to tell me that these thieves have been allowed to carried away without my knowledge or consent? I'll have the law"—

Herr Poopendyke interposed. "They had bills of sale and orders for re-moval of property dated several weeks prior to your purchase, sir. They had to let the articles go. You surely remember my speaking to you about it."

"I don't remember anything," I snap-ped, quite white in the mouth. "Who-ever they were, they've been guilty of the rankest kind of robbery! What the dickens do you mean by—by—"

I did choked back up my hands as if expecting to partly em. I sputtered out the rest of the sentence, while really astounded to nothing.

"The count has been selling off the lovely old pieces for the past six months, sir. Ach, what a sale. They have made here day after day, those furniture movers, to take it away. The most priceless of our treasures, to sell them to the poor rich at twenty prices. I could never forgive the scoundrels for it."

"Many of them, sir. Always with proper credentials, believe me. Ach, what a spendthrift he is! And—his poor wife! Ach, Gott, how she must suffer! Nearly all of the grand paint-ings, the tapestries that came from France and Italy hundreds of years ago, the wonderful old bedsteads and tables that were here when the castle was new—all gone. And for mere coupn. mein herr—the cheapest of coupn! Ach!"

"Please don't weep, now, Herr Schmick." I made haste to exclaim, seeing incipient symptoms in the bleu old eyes. Then I became firm once more. This scenery must cease to be. I know the rascals, and the next man who comes here to cart away so much as a single piece is to be kicked out. Do you understand? These things belong to me. Kick him into the river. By Jove, I'd like to write that rascal a check for a cent. Umph!"

"Ach, he is of the noblest family in all the land!" sighed old Conrad. "His grandfather was a fine man."

I tried to subdue my rage and disap-pointment and somewhat loudly re-turned to the topic from which we were drifting.

"As for those beastly padlocks, I shall have them filed off tomorrow. I give you warning, Conrad, if the keys are not forthcoming before noon to-morrow I'll file 'em off, so help me!"

Discussing the Merits of a Dingy Old Padlock.

"Yes, sir," said Conrad. "Thank you, mein Gord knows," said he dismally. "It is a pity to destroy fine old pad-locks"—

"Well, you wait and see," said I grimly.

His face beamed once more. "Ach, I forgot to say that there are padlocks on the other side of the door, just as on this side. It will be of no use to destroy these. The door still could not be forced. Mein Gott, how thank-ful I am to have remembered it in time!"

"Confound you, Schmick! I believe you actually want to keep me out of that part of the castle!" I exploded.

The four of them protested manfull-y, even Gretel. "I have a plan, sir," said Britton. "We can get down a ladder in the courtyard and crawl in through one of the windows?"

"Splendid!" I cried. "That will do!" I cried enthusiastically. "And now let's go to bed! We will breakfast at 8:30, Schmick. Then we will proceed to the worn you know."

"Will you see some American ladies and gentlemen who are coming tomor-row to pick out the"—

"Yes, I'll see them," said I, compress-ing my lips. "Don't let me oversleep, Britton."

"I shan't sir," said he.

But I did. "Get up, sir, if you please," Britton repeated the third time. "The sun is shining and it is be-low, sir, rummaging about the place."

"Where is Poopendyke?" I cried, leaping out of bed.

"Mr. Poopendyke is in despair, sir. He has tried to explain that nothing is for sale, but the gentlemen say they are onto his game. They go right on packing things about and putting their own prices on them and reserving them."

"I'll—I'll put a stop to all this," I grated, seeing red for an instant.

"And the ladies, sir, they are throw-ing them all from New York city, and they keep on saying they are complete-ly overdazed, sir. Your great sideboard is the finest piece in the room, sir. Ruby Wertheimer, and she half sent that she first bared need to throw this armor on when he came in from"—

"Great snakes!" I roared. "They haven't moved it, have they? It will fall to pieces!"

"No, sir. They are piling sconces and candelabra and andirons on it, regard-less of what Mr. Poopendyke says. You'd better hurry, sir. Here is your collar and necktie"—

"I don't want 'em. Where the dick-ens are my trousers?"

"On the face hall, sir. "Being pressed, sir! God forgive me!"

"Get out another pair, confound you, Britton! What are we coming to?"

He began rummaging in the huge clothespress, all the while regaling me with news from the outside world.

"Mr. Poopendyke has gone up to his room, sir, with his typewriter. The young lady insists upon working in the speaking with Jay at seeing an antique typewriter, and she has had it all away with it, poo my soul be did, sir."

I couldn't help laughing.

"And your golf clubs, Mr. Smart, The young gentleman of the party, la pe'ently carried away with them, sir. He says they're the real thing, the genuine thirteenth century article. They are a bit rusted, you'll remember. I left him out in the courtyard trying your golf balls and niblicus, sir, endeavor-ing to loft potatoes over the south wall. I succeeded in hitting the belle, sir. Just as I started upstairs I heard one of the new window panes in the banquet hall shake, sir, as I was told to, and I have sliced his drive a bit."

"Who let these people in?" I command-ed of incumbent upon the speaking tube of a sweater I was getting into in or-der to gain access to Britton's room.

"They came in with the plumbers, sir, at half past 4. Old man Schmick tried to keep 'em out, sir, but when they didn't understand German and walked right by, leaving their donkeys in the reaching order, sir."

"Couldn't Rudolph and Max stop them?" I cried as my head emerged, my arms still in my coat. "And I think they're at breakfast now."

"Good Lord!" I cried, looking at my watch. "Why, that's what sort of a rest cure am I conducting here?"

We hurried downstairs so fast that I lost one of my bedroom slippers. It went clattering on ahead of me, mak-ing a shameful racket on the bare stone, but I was unable to stop in time to save it from the clutches of the curio vandals.

Two goldish wearing fedoras were standing in the middle of the great hall discussing the merits of a dingy old padlock that had fallen off in the mu-sic room by two inky porters from the Ben Hur.

As I came up I heard one of the strangers say to the other:

"Well, if you don't want it I'll take it. My wife says it can be made into a writing desk with a little"—

"I beg your pardon, gentlemen," said I, confronting them. "Will you be good enough to explain this intrusion?" They stared at me as if I were a servant asking for higher wages. The speaker, a man with a bristly mus-tache and a red nose, drew himself up haughtily.

"Who are you?" he demanded, sta-ring me with a glare.

CHAPTER III.

The Real Owners.

I KNEW at once that he was the kind of an American I have come to hate with a set of fangs—with no moderation—the kind that makes one ashamed of the national waving pot. I gazed back at him.

"I happen to be the owner of this place, and you'll oblige me by clearing out."

"What's that? Here, here, none of that sort of talk, my friend! We've been to look over your stuff, and we mean business, but you won't get any-where by talking like"—

"There is nothing for sale here," I said shortly. "And you've got a lot of nerve to come bolting into a pri-vate house"—

Busy Trenton

TRENTON, July 23—Miss Phyllis Plaster of 68, Bloor, Bloor, Toronto, and Miss Mary Pickford of Brighton were town visitors to-day.

Mr. John D. Sharie of Wellington, son of Mr. J. P. Sharie of this town, has been elected D.D.G.M. of Prince Edward District A.F. and A.M.

Last evening about 6 p.m. a car came into town from the country, driven by one of the lady occupants. While the ladies were absorbed in one of the male members of the party, who was left in charge of the car apparently thought he would test a round a little on his own account, with the result that the fence between the Methodist Church and Trenton Electric building is in the morning a wreck. Before the operator succeeded in gaining control of the machine it made fair for the garage. Fortunately no one was hurt.

Today a drunken man in charge of a buggy occupied by a woman and child, as well, attempted to do the wild west act, on Dundas street. Chief Moffett remonstrated with him but he venture only succeeded in getting without further argument the unruly stranger was jerked out of the rig dragged gently on the sidewalk and escorted to our comfortable dungeon.

There are a lot of people from neighboring towns who fail to realize that the 669 wide-open days are a thing of the past in Trenton.

It has been suggested that the Girl Guides inaugurate a recruiting campaign. A good idea, but the date should be kept secret, or there will be no young men to be found.

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Bullock, of Brighton, were town visitors today.

The following Trentonians are at St. Anne de Beaupre this week—T. A. O'Rourke, Miss Jean O'Rourke, Mrs. Fulzer Connolly, Misses Bender and Gladys O'Rourke. Mr. and Mrs. Auger, Mrs. McCormick, Misses Rose, Flavie and Minnie Desjardins, and Rev. Father McFadden, of Wooler and Father Crowley of Auburn.

Miss Bernice Coyne has just returned from a two weeks' visit to Rochester.

Miss Aileen O'Rourke is visiting at Bay River, Rhode Island.

Mr. P. W. Fairman was in town, yesterday. He returned last evening to his camp in the north woods.

We regret to report that Mrs. W. H. Gill is still critically ill.

Barrister S. J. Young, we are glad to announce, is able to sit up for a short time each day.

A WORD ABOUT FIRE FIGHTING

Editor of The Ontario,—

Sir,—Just now while the subject is in our minds, on account of the big Firemen's Celebration, it struck me that a word about fire-fighting might be opportune. Take an average fire, for instance; from the first tap of the warning bell to the moment the fire is reached, conditions are unknown, but issues of tremendous import. Arrived at the scene a sort of flag-rush and plan of campaign against the swift and subtle enemy, Fire, must be made and put into execution with instantaneous, sometimes miraculous, exactitude. Not haphazard, mind you; but with a swift speedy yet scientific method in it.

I contend, where a man of extraordinary fire-fighting qualities can show his mettle the same manner as a military commander, perhaps—excepting that the military commander has, in most cases, a pre-conceived notion of conditions, and, mere, one-or-more of judgment in that instantaneous decision may mean tragedy and destruction beyond words, I may prove to how little one actually a matter that is rarely looked into deeply by the man who watches a fire from the outside; but I do contend that fire-fighting is one of the most exact of sciences and that the value of a good fire brigade is a continuous financial asset to a town, not the skill of the fire-fighter is his most conspicuous quality to the man in the street, but the quick and indefensible fireman lacks the glamour of romance that surrounds the soldier. Fire-fighting has been a fascinating hobby with me for a number of years while I have criss-crossed the continent, from Cape Breton to Key-West, from New York to Vancouver and San Francisco, and in every town of importance visited I have gleaned at least a sufficient idea of local fire-fighting conditions. I may then speak with a small measure of authority when I say that I firmly believe we have in Belleville a brigade, its also and equipment, in Canada, fight favor in Belleville. Fire after fire, ignited with the most grotesque conditions, have recently occurred in this city and have been handled with mastery skill. The splendid generalship of Chief Brown and his deputies the clock-work precision and magnificent esprit de corps of the men were worthy of a city the size of Toronto or San Francisco. The question is, do we appreciate all this? I fear not. Are we to be too big a man for this town," I heard a man remark at a recent fire. And, as much, as we appreciate the fact that he is and always has been, "Belleville's own," his special genius and efficiency are undoubtedly worthy of a larger field. Gentlemen, when the parade goes by on Wednesday, don't forget, after you have inwardly thanked the Lord that your lives and property are in such good hands, to tip your hats to "our laddies", the best fire brigade in Canada.

Joseph Nevin Doyle.

The Third Universities Company.

There are many men in Canada who are anxious to go and play their part in the Great War, who are willing to go as officers, but from want of adequate military training, or for other reasons are unable to obtain commissions. There are others also who would prefer to join the ranks simply because they feel that the greater responsibility of the wastage of life which results from the bad leadership of an improperly trained officer.

Some of these men hesitate to go in the ranks, merely because they are uncertain of finding the congenial companionship of men of similar training and tastes.

Now, there is an organization in Canada exactly suited to the requirements of such men and its existence should be brought clearly to the notice of every young man in Canada.

The Universities Overseas Corps are working loyally together to raise company after company, and to send them overseas to reinforce as units that famous regiment, the Third Canadian Eight Infantry.

Now, these companies are composed of the best young men of Canada, the friends of such men, and broadly speaking, from one end of that type.

It must be clearly understood that they are not to be specially raised, but there are bank clerks, lawyers, architects, engineers, ranchers and farmers, and it is understood that such men pull well together and enjoy military life. Therefore, the battalion will be a force was known throughout the length and breadth of Canada. There would be no difficulty in recruiting a full company within a week.

The Third University Company, under the command of an excellent leader, Captain Grant Barclay, has been for some time in England. An eminent military authority has declared this to be the finest company which has ever sailed from Canada.

The Second Company was composed of men of a splendid type and was embarked recently at Montreal.

The Third Universities' Company need note that the plural is deliberate is recruiting with fair rapidity and there is every hope that it will reach the high mark of success attained by the first two companies.

There is certainly no difficulty in obtaining officers, but it is hoped to find picked men. The Sergeant-Major Company Quarter-master-Sergeant, Platoon Sergeants and Section Leaders, on whom largely rests the success of the Company. If Canada needs are chiefly a training school for non-commissioned officers.

The general principle is followed of giving commissions to well qualified men from the University or from the district which furnishes the recruits.

The Universities Corps has great recruiting ground for the Universities Companies, and they have proved themselves to be good soldiers well disciplined and efficient, with the physique. It is hoped that the Maritime Provinces will rival the West in furnishing recruits. Indeed, in the Second Company men, doubtless Canadians, came from Montana, Arizona and Missouri.

A recruit can be examined medically and attested in his own district and transportation will be provided to Montreal.

All information can be obtained from Captain A. S. Eve, 392 Sherbrooke Street West, Montreal, the headquarters of successive companies.

The newspapers are publicity agents by classic voluntary and freely given, have shown themselves to be the most efficient means of furnishing recruits, but we ask every reader to help the men to join the Company they are looking for, and the Company to find the men required.

War Spectacle at the Exhibition

Grand Stand Show at Toronto of a Nation in Its Every Outbreak of Patriotic Fervor.

The mammoth war spectacle, "The March of the Allies" and the "Review of the Fleet" will be the big scenic production in front of the Grand Stand at the Canadian National Exhibition this year, and will be one of the most elaborate ever staged and a fitting climax to each day's entertainment in this "Patriotic Year."

The background is the ancient city of Calais, saved by the Canadians when they so gallantly stopped the German drive at St. Julien at such enormous cost. Its picturesque chateaux and historic environment adapt themselves admirably to reproduction. On the left-hand side frowning cliffs are seen military camps with the soldiers of the allied armies in all the bustle, bustle and action of war time. The brilliant uniforms of the Field Marshals, etc. add splendor to an impressive scene.

Suddenly the fleet appears over the horizon under full steam with the Queen Bess leading the line, battle ships and the Lion in advance of the others. The fleet has majestically appears with Admiral Jellicoe aboard, and as she passes between the watch dogs of the Empire lined up in battle array, the Admiral is greeted with salvos of broadsides.

It will be a faithful portrayal of the scenes just before war was declared last summer when the fleet had been mobilized on the orders of Churchill off the British coast.

The cannon-ding continues as the fleet passes in review the troops, which swing past the Grand Stand in the full regalia of battalion. It will be a panorama of Empire greatness, a picture of such striking reality as to evoke a veritable hysteria of patriotic fervor among the thousands who will nightly crowd the Grand Stand.

The cost of teas at the gardens in Colombo, recently reached the highest level in the memory of living planters. Salada tea at all times been the utmost value for your money, and at the Company will never allow the quality to vary, the price must advance at such times, but you still get the finest and freshest tea procurable at anything like the price.

Genealogical Tree of Military Terms

The admirable article by Lieut-Col W. N. Pearson in the recent edition of the Belleville High School Literature on the "Genealogical Tree of Military Terms" has been copied by the Canadian Military Gazette and by a number of regimental papers in Great Britain. This is an unusual honor for contributions appearing originally in any such school paper.

A man tried tearing off meat, potatoes, coffee, etc., and adopted a breakfast of Grape-Nuts with cream, some crisp toast and a cup of Postum.

He broth began to improve at once for the reason that a meat eater will digest food only once in a while where his system seems to become clogged with it. Consequently doesn't work smoothly.

The change of this kind puts shakin food that is slow to digest and takes up food and drink of the highest value and quality. The regular meal capable of being quickly changed into rich blood and strong nerves.

A most valuable feature of Grape-Nuts is the elements (especially necessary for the well-balanced rebuild of body, brain and nerves.

A few days' use of Grape-Nuts will show one exactly the physical and mental strength well worth the trial.

"THE LEAST WE CAN DO."

A great army has been organized Millions have placed themselves freely under the drill and stern military discipline, and the achievement of Lord Kitchener in that respect is one of the most brilliant in military organization. When there are millions of men who really, of their own accord, without compulsion, merely by an appeal to their instinct of patriotism, have placed their lives at the disposal of their country, I think we who are at home, who are facing no dangers, who are not going to confront the terrible horrors of the battlefield, the least we can do it with all our strength, all our skill, all our reserve, to help these brave lads to win. (Cheers). We stand or fall together. (Cheers.) It is either the common weal or the common woe, and it depends not merely on those gallant lads who are going to fight our battles in Flanders and the Dardanelles —it does not depend merely upon them. It depends just as much upon us who are at home, and especially upon those who are working in the great factories which can turn out munitions of war. (Cheers.)

That is why I am here. I want the troops to feel that they are going into action with every possible support. There is a very fine description in one of the Erckmann-Chatrian tales of the conscripts of 1813 before Waterloo. They had been fighting all day, fighting very bravely, as Frenchmen always will. (Cheers.) Suddenly in the evening they had a sense that there was nothing behind them; the field was empty; there was no support, and for the first time their hearts failed them. Our fellows—they are fighting. They are fighting gallantly. God alone knows what they have got to face. They are fighting as gallantly as men ever fought. (Cheers.) When they are told to go forward in face of the dread machinery of a scientific war they never have flinched. They never know any faintheartedness. Do not let them ever feel that the line behind them is empty and there is no support. Let them hear the ring of the forges of Britain and the hammers on the anvil, and that they will say, "Our fellows are behind us. Let us go forward." (Cheers.)

Our men are fighting a brave people for a great cause. Let us make no mistake. We are fighting a determined enemy. We are fighting an enemy that has been taught in its schools to subordinate everything to the Fatherland. Are Britons less patriotic! (Cheers.) Is Britain not a country you can love as much as any German can love his Fatherland? Is Britain not worth fighting for? (Cheers.) I ask every man, be his function what it may, to use his strength to fight for this beautiful land in the days to come.

But Germany had prepared for war You have only got to study now what has happened. You can see it in more. The whole organisation of their industry had its steel point directed to war—its every energy, its every thought, so organized that when war came they would be ready, its steel industries, its copper industries, above all its chemical industries, ready at a moment's notice to distil poison—subtle, deadly, cruel poison—in order to destroy the enemy with the greatest torture, pain and anguish. The steel point now has been unsheathed, and you can see it. Britain may not have been ready. Britain means to make up for lost time now. (Loud cheers.)

This is not the first time that the men of the west have been called upon to fight a great military empire organised for war, eager for war, determined to establish a military tyranny. It was the men of the west who overthrew the Spanish Armada. (Cheers.) I want you to repeat that to-night. You can do it. I want you to fill our wagons with the material that will enable our troops to break and shatter the German hosts. You can see what happened at Neuve Chapelle. (Cheers.) We rained shot on them, and our men got through. But then we had no pause. We want a deluge of Neuve Chapelles. (Loud cheers.) Let them rain forty days and forty nights without ceasing. Loud cheers. They have taught us a lesson. That is why the Germans have been able to succeed to the extent they have done in the east of Europe.

LR is by incessant striking, striking, striking. You only can do that by filling up our reserves with plenty of shell ammunition. Then you will hear the crack of the German steel barrier under the incessant hammering of the British guns. You will hear the cheers of the British infantry as they march through the gaps shattered by the enrichments to victory. And in that hour the engineers will know with a thrill that the workshops of Britain have won a lasting triumph for the righteousness that exalteth a nation."—(Loud and prolonged cheering followed, the audience standing and singing the Minister.)—Mr. Lloyd George at Bristol.

TWO HUNDRED DOLLARS IN GOLD FOR SPECIAL PRIZES

All Contest Workers Have an Opportunity to Win These Magnificent Special Prizes

In the centralizing of attention upon the twenty-four Grand Tours given by The Ontario in their Great Popularity Campaign, it is to be feared that many have entirely overlooked the amazingly generous set of special prizes also offered by The Ontario to those who put forth just a little special effort and work just a little harder than their neighbors.

Here is a list of rewards that will be worth some special and additional effort.

As we have previously stated it is not necessary for any candidate upon our California tours to have a cent of money with them on the journey, The Ontario has foreseen every contingency and has provided for ALL legitimate travelling expenses—including railway tickets, pullman fares automobile fees, meals on train, meals at hotels, hotel accommodation, bus and baggage transfer, admissions to expositions, admissions to side strips, tions car fares on side trips, and a hundred and one incidentals which every experienced traveller knows will well to amount to far more than railway tickets. On The Ontario Tours the first-class railway ticket to California are much the smallest part of the outlay.

The candidates do not need to take with them a cent of money, but for those who may wish to purchase souvenirs or some mementos for their friends we are providing an extra fund of Two Hundred Dollars which will be distributed among the best workers on the following plan.—

Of the eight candidates winning tours to California the four who obtain the highest number of votes will be paid cash prizes as follows,—

1st Prize	$50.00 in Gold
2nd "	25.00 " "
3rd "	15.00 " "
4th "	10.00 " "

Of the Candidates winning trips to New York City, the four obtaining highest standing will be awarded prizes as follows.—

1st Prize	$20.00 in Gash
2nd "	5.00 " "
3rd "	3.00 " "
4th "	2.00 " "

These prizes are open to candidates in all districts and will be awarded to those who obtain the highest number of votes in their respective classes.

The Ontario has received a number of photos of the Candidates from which cuts will be prepared as speedily as possible.

A number of others have gone to W. S. Clarke's studio and availed themselves of The Ontario's offer to secure a new cabinet photo for which we pay the cost.

Candidates who wish to have their campaign greatly promoted ahead will tend to this important matter at once.

Mr. Rowell Pleased at "Dry" Victory in Alberta

Special to The Ontario.

VANCOUVER, July 26—Among the hosts of people outside of Alberta who are delighted with the "dry" victory in that province, one of the most pleased, naturally enough, is Mr. N. W. Rowell, who at present is in British Columbia on a vacation. It must be an added source of satisfaction to him that he did his "bit" to secure the victory in the "freshlift" province. Not only was the example of its fight in Ontario admittedly a help to the Alberta workers, but Mr. Rowell also addressed two large meetings during the campaign, one in Edmonton, the other in Calgary, on "The War and the Liquor Traffic," Mr. Rowell in those addresses, did not discuss the actual details of the bill to be submitted, for he did not want to interfere in other provincial affairs, but he did point out the patriotic duty of getting rid of any force or any interest interfering with the personal and national strength, especially at such a critical time as during the war and the difficult period of readjustment and reconstruction which inevitably will follow.

Mr. Rowell must also feel satisfaction in the Saskatchewan situation. Premier Walter Scott has publicly acknowledged that his government and the people of his province had been influenced in their temperance course by the inspiration of Mr. Howell's courageous fight. The Ontario leader, while thoroughly agreeing with the Saskatchewan plan as far as it has abolished all drinking places, has definitely reserved judgment on the question of its government-owned liquor stores until time will have shown its results.

In Manitoba today both parties are pledged to prohibition. In British Columbia there is a more vigorous organization against the liquor traffic than ever before; an advance may be expected in the province. Alberta and Saskatchewan, at any rate, are definite examples of anti-liquor traffic hopes turned into actual accomplishment. Ontario's progress, when viewed in the light of what these two provinces have done, looks unfortunately small. Here, under the Commission, it is a question of retaining or cutting off individual licenses in specific localities; in Alberta and Saskatchewan the axe has been laid to the very roots of the traffic, and the abolition has been done in a wholesale thorough way. Mr. Howell, as the expocent of the abolition of all drinking places in Ontario, may well expect that the people of his own province will be influenced considerably by the example and initiative of their comrades in the west.

HAMMETT IS GUILTY OF MIS-APPROPRIATION

Confessed in Police Court This Morning—Had no Defence to Make—Case Enlarged.

Guilty was the plea which Stanley Hammett, treasurer of the local lodge of Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, No. 105, entered in police court this morning to the charge of having on different occasions in 1914 unlawfully and fraudulently converted to his own use certain sums of money to the amount of about $300 received by him as treasurer in violation of his duties.

Hammett was represented by Mr. W. Carnew and the crown by Mr. P. J. M. Anderson, County Crown Attorney.

The accused through Mr. Carnew stated that he had no defence to offer. He had enlisted with the Queen's Own, Toronto, on Friday and offered to resign his G.T.R. pay during service by appointing an attorney.

Magistrate Masson decided that as it was his first offence as he had acknowledged his error and as he desired to make restitution, a great part of the ends of justice was accomplished.

Crown Attorney Anderson stated that he had been informed by the vice president of the B. of R. T. who was present, that Hammett had elected men from the lodge and made some under pressure pay up and then appropriated some of the money to his own use.

Mr. Carnew after consultation with the prisoner said Hammett had no recollection of the. For a time he had been badly mixed up in his accounts and the methods he followed in collecting he believed were the regular ones. In a number of cases there had been considerable leniency.

Mr. Anderson suggested an enlargement for a few days if the accused desired.

Magistrate Masson said that the main trouble was that societies were never impressed upon their young men who are treasurers their responsibility. They collect money on the street from members, put it in their pockets and think it is their own.

It was finally decided to enlarge the case until August 3rd and bail was fixed at two sureties of $1000 each.

A Good Bout Promised

Word was received this morning from Hawkins' training camp in Lasalle, where he is training Frankie Fleming and Joe Gans, that all of his bouts in Montreal this last year, and Fleming admits that Hawkins is the cause of his improvement as he (Hawkins) is one of the cleverest big men in the ring at the present time. There isn't a man today that has the defence that he has; it is harder to land on him than it ever was on Jim Corbett in his palmy days, so says Gernsete after his bout with Hawkins in Montreal two months ago. Fleming stood beside the ring and watched every move of the big middle and every time he landed on Gernsetie Fleming would say I know how they feel as I have had to hoster for him to show up in our workouts, and if he doesn't beat Silas Green in Belleville on July the 29th I will miss my guess, although I have seen Green here in New York be a some mighty fast man and can take any chances with. They should draw a bumper house in Belleville as they are surely two of the best big men that ever boxed. In that part of the country and the fans will surely get a run for their money.

Austrians Paroled

Three Austrians were detained for a while on Saturday in order that they might give an account of their actions on Dundas street. It appears that the men were acting in a manner to excite attention to a certain important plant in Belleville and one appeared to be sketching. This was detected by the neighbors and sergeant Harmes went down to the scene. He questioned the men. They claimed to be Russians. They were escorted up to the police station where they were learned to be Austrians. One was from Point Anne, the others from Winnipeg. The latter had been sent for by the Lehigh Cement works plant and their fare here paid. They had been under parole at the western city. The men were admitted to parole here.

An interesting wedding was solemnized this afternoon, the bridegroom being Gunner Richard Feistead R.G.A., Heavy Battery, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. Feistead, Dixon street, of this town and the bride Dorcas Helen Dashwood, Southampton.

Gunner Feistead who is on a seven days' leave from the fighting in France had seen eleven years' service before the present war broke out; six years of which were spent in India. He was on the reserve in Canada and has been between nine and ten months at the front. The bride who wore a dress of old Indian lace with wreath and veil carried a bouquet of flowers and was attended by four bridesmaids. Her chief bridesmaid a niece, Mrs. M. Naylor. Mrs. Kate Spencer, Miss Olive Feistead and Miss Doris Spencer. The three former carried bouquets and the niece a basket of flowers. The bride wore an old Indian gold cameo necklet. The best man was Mr. Oswald Feistead brother of the bridegroom. The bride was given away by the bridegroom's father. The officiating Clergyman was the Rev. G. T. Roberts.

Avoiding the Tailor.

Holland's Great Cheese Mart.

At Alkmar, the principal cheese market of Holland, may be seen the quaint old weigh house, erected in 1582. Connected with the town clock in the tower of this building hangs one of those tinkling chimes which plays a melody even stranger than those heard in Amsterdam. It is in this building that all of the cheeses are brought from the square in front to be officially weighed before they are delivered to the purchaser and stowed away in the pockets or barges waiting near by in the canal.

"I am the utterly unconcerned person who doesn't care a single continental or Mexican dollar whether you print this or not."—Portland Express.

PHILOSOPHY.

Without philosophy we should be little above the animals that dig or erect their habitations against their food in them, take care of their little ones in their dwellings and have besides the good fortune, which we have not, of being born already clothed.—Voltaire.

The Two Piece Suit

This is the time of year when a man wants to wear as little as possible. If you wear one of our cool Two-Piece Suits, it's certain you won't "wear a worried look."
But there are two considerations in a Two-Piece Suit which call for the most competent tailoring. In the first place, the coat must be so tailored as to obviate the need of vest. In the second place, as the fabrics are extremely light in weight, the tailoring must be done with the greatest skill.
Fabrics of cerefully selected Sun-Proof Serges, Worsteds, Homespuns, etc., etc.
If you'll step in and try on one of these cool Suits and then take a look in the mirror, you'll be surprised to see what a swell and comfortable looking fellow you are.

EVIDENCES OF A TRUE HOLINESS

"If Any Man Have Not the Spirit of Christ, He Is None of His."

Different Meanings of the Word Spirit—Consecration a Definite Contract With God Completed With the Earnest of the Spirit—Fruits of the Spirit of God—Necessity of Knowledge of the Divine Character—Justice the Foundation Principle—How Love Fulfills the Law—Proper Balancing of Character Necessary to Joint-Heirship With Christ.

Hamilton, Ont., July 25.—Pastor Russell's sermon delivered here today. We report his discourse based upon the text, "God hath not given us the spirit of fear, but of power, and of love, and of a sound mind." (2 Timothy 1:7.) The Pastor spoke as follows:

PASTOR RUSSELL

Bible students have learned not to think of the different spirits mentioned in our text as different persons. When, for instance, an evil spirit or disposition is mentioned, we do not think of it as a person; and when a holy spirit or disposition is mentioned, we do not think of it as a person. A holy person has a holy spirit or disposition. The Holy Spirit proceeds from God. It is His spirit. It is sometimes called the Truth; it is not another person, another God. (1 Corinthians 2:11.) Likewise the evil spirit of fear is not a devil, a spirit being; and the spirit of a sound mind is not a God, an angel. Gradually we are getting the right focus on these matters, to see that God is a Spirit; and that as a Spirit He has an influence—just as a human being has an influence—which influences us according to the character, according to the strength, according to the power to exert: one's self.

Some have a power of evil-doing by which they could vanquish a hundred or a thousand; in one sense of the word they have a strong spirit. Others have a spirit of bitterness, and strive up evil in others. Some others have a spirit of kindness, gentleness, and love. But by nature we are all members of a fallen race; for we have many of the qualities that belong to the wrong spirit.

When the disciples came to Jesus after the Samaritans had refused to send them food, they said, "Lord, will Thou that we call down fire from heaven to destroy them, as Elias did?" Jesus replied, "Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of." You thought that was a holy disposition. The fact that they have ignored Me is a insignificant matter. If you desire to have My spirit, you must get rid of that disposition to render evil for evil, to do harm to others.

Our Lord was not talking about the Holy Spirit as a person, but as an influence. The Bible shows us that God, who is a Spirit Being, is not vindictive, is merciful, loving and just. Therefore He is a good Spirit, a holy Spirit. God's disposition is a holy disposition; He is not disposed to do anything wrong or unjust or unkind. All who receive His Holy Spirit receive the spirit of a sound mind, of justice, of gentleness. And so the Apostle, in speaking about this matter, says that the Holy Spirit is manifest—can be seen—in those who possess it.

St. Paul does not mean that we shall see another being get into a man and once we believe, that the Holy Spirit, as a God, divided Himself up and entered into millions of people. Those who have the Lord's that God can be divided amongst millions of people are very much confused in their minds. Whoever receives the Spirit of Christ, the spirit of Christ, receives the spirit of holiness. Our Lord Jesus gave up His own will to do the Father's will. Just in proportion as we give up our own fallen disposition and take instead God's way of thinking, God's way of viewing matters, God's spirit of love, to the same extent ours is a holy spirit, to that extent we have received the Holy Spirit.

All the human family are fallen; and when they received us into His family through Christ it was with a view to begetting us of the Holy Spirit in a newness of nature. The first start of the new nature leads us to view every subject from God's standpoint, to say to ourselves, "Is this the mind of God on this subject? I will study the Scriptures and do what God has said on this matter. When I came into the family of God I agreed to give up my own will altogether, to do the Master did."

No matter how good our Lord's will was, He gave it up in order to do the Father's will. "Not My will, but Thine, be done." "Lo, I come (in the volume of the Book it is written of Me) to do Thy will, O God," (Hebrews 10:7.) The Father had a certain will marked out. The Son, as an intelligent being, would have preferences of His own; but He surrendered all His own plans and thoughts in order that He might do the Father's will. The Father was pleased with this course; and as a result when our Lord Jesus gave up His own will He came right into line with God's providences. He was successful in His work because He was obedient to the Father.—Philippians 2:8, 9.

The invitation of the Gospel Age is an invitation to do the same thing that Jesus did. The Master said, "If any man will come after Me [be My disciple, My follower], let him deny himself, take up his cross, and follow Me." (Matthew 16:24.) To deny himself is to give up his own will. Whoever has given up his will has given his all to the Lord. As the Apostle says, we present our bodies a living sacrifice. (Romans 12:1.) We give up our wills entirely; our Lord Jesus accepts us and presents us to the Father. But before He can do this, He must impute to us of His righteousness, for by nature we are imperfect through the fall; and the Father will sanctify us only as we are perfect. As our Lord said, "No man cometh unto the Father but by Me," (John 14:6.) "Without Me ye can do nothing." (John 15:5.) "No man cometh unto Me I will in no wise cast out." (John 6:37.)

After we have given ourselves through the Lord Jesus Christ, He imputes the merit of His sacrifice—so as in such form that the Father can receive us as His children, as much in us the beginning of a new nature as in the creation. Now we are in a proper view of this transaction, we shall not think that we must repeatedly consecrate. We have merely to be concerned about living up to the contract which we have made and which God has accepted and sealed with His Holy Spirit. This seal is the earnest of our inheritance, unbinds the contract which we made when we presented ourselves for consecration. (2 Corinthians 1:21, 22.) We have signed a contract giving our all to Him. We have received the earnest, the hand payment; and through the coming days we are to keep giving ourselves without cessation, harmony with the Lord's will.

Daily we should search the Word of God that we may understand the Divine plans and get the Spirit of the Truth. We must see what is the real meaning of the Bible, so that we may have the mind of Christ, that as He sees how earnestly we are trying to be in harmony with Him and His Spirit will grow in us. More and more we may be filled with the Holy Spirit, with a Spirit of meekness, gentleness, long-suffering, patient experiences along the line of justice, love; it is the Holy Spirit of God; and the more we have of its fruits, the more we have of the spirit itself. But we cannot have these fruits, developed from the standpoint of the Lord, unless we have the Holy Spirit, the Spirit of God, the Spirit that influences us in all our acts, words, and thoughts.—Galatians 5:22, 23.

When we first entered the School of Christ, we were babes and acted like babes. But the Apostle says that we are not to remain babes. We are to put away childish things, to be no longer children, tossed about by every wind of doctrine. As babes we are not upon "the sincere milk of the Word," that we might grow thereby. (1 Peter 2:2.) But as babes we have a general desire to be as a steady diet, although we enjoy a little of the strong meat. (Hebrews 5:13-14.) We prefer to come to our Father's table, the table of the Lord, and partake of the fat things among meat that belongs to such as are of full age. Such meat is provided only strong in the Lord and in the power of His might.

The Holy Spirit is not a spirit of excitement. We have known people who got the spirit of excitement who did not seem to have the Holy Spirit at all. If we have the Holy Spirit, it will produce in us meekness, gentleness, patience, brotherly kindness, love.

What God has been doing for His people during the past forty years is wonderful. To every one of them the Bible has become a new Book. More and more they have learned the parallel way. It was not sufficient that we should believe in Jesus as our Savior; we must believe in Him. That knowledge was only the beginning of our blessings. Light shone upon us, and we saw that our sins have been forgiven. We have seen the evil of our sins, and assuring us of the merit of our dear Redeemer's sacrifice. But we are not to stop there. We are to go on to something stronger than the knowledge that our sins are forgiven. That is far from the end of the knowledge which God wishes the people of God.

Growing in grace, in love, in knowledge, we are learning more and more what is the Divine will in detail and what the Holy Spirit is. Things that we once thought very consistent and reasonable are now very inconsistent to us. As we receive more of the spirit of a sound mind, we see how foolish were many of the things which once we believed. We have a new light coming into our minds—appreciation of the lengths, breadths, depths and heights of the love of God, which passes all understanding. Our minds become filled more and more with God receives a begetting of love; for God is Love. Love worketh no injury to his neighbor. Therefore the Apostle says, "Love is the fulfilling of the law." Love is the law of justice; and, as the Scriptures set forth, when we receive the Spirit of the Lord, the Spirit of Love, will at least render justice to others. No one has ever received more than this. Whatever we do more than justice is that much sacrifice on our part. But we cannot do all that we would like to do; for in our flesh dwells no good thing. We are not able to do the full Law of God. But we can see to it that we do not fall short of rendering justice; and that if in anything we have failed in justice, or any thing we have infracted the Golden Rule, it has been contrary to our wishes, and we have not rested until we have made right the wrong act, word, or look—whatever was an infraction of the rights of others.

Should some one say, "This is a hard rule; we cannot see how we can be ready for the Kingdom unless you have the right spirit, my dear brother." This principle of justice, which is the foundation of God's Throne, is the foundation of His character. To do to others what we would have them do to us is the right thing to do—justice, if we cannot see that it is the right thing, it is at least do it in our minds. "With my mind I serve the Law of God," said the Apostle, even in a measure, and every occasion that it is exercised, so will the Lord's word.

Whenever we find that we have violated justice, repentance is the proper step; and every true repentance means an acknowledgment of the wrong to the one who has been wronged. To be sure this course is very humiliating. But such experiences are the best things that we can possibly have; for by these we develop humility, which in turn will help us to meekness and gentleness. Thus in the Divine arrangement the people of God are learning helpful lessons, that give them more and more of the spirit of a sound mind. They can think when formerly they did; they are able to build themselves up. And in all that time our character is weak and imperfect in their natural disposition, they learn to lay up their whole disposition in harmony with the spirit of justice. This work going on in their hearts is making them fit for the Kingdom.—1 Peter 1:6-11.

God is calling a very special class for joint-heirship with our Lord Jesus in His Kingdom. These must be very loyal to the Lord, very just in their appreciation of the rights of others, in order to be accounted worthy. The Father sees that our bodies are very imperfect; but He examines that if He finds our heads and our hearts right, will give us in the resurrection a right body, a glorious body. Then, with right hearts, fully consecrated to those principles of righteousness which represent the Divine character, the Holy Spirit of God, we shall be in the condition in which He will be able to use us.

The new body will not make the character, but will be merely the agency through which the character will demonstrate itself. If we do not develop the character now, the moral character of our Lord Jesus Christ, we shall not receive a place in the Messianic Kingdom. If we do not there will be fit for their position. God has had this long enough to find this class. He will not make any mistake. Every one who has developed the Divine has had just such experiences as you and I have had—experiences along the line of justice and righteousness. The two are similar; for righteousness is justice, and justice is righteousness.

But it is not the Divine will that we should have any mercy in the life God we must also have sympathy, love, kindness, influenced and others. God has that kindly feeling for His creatures. Away back in the beginning, knowing about the ransom for the creation of Father Adam, and Eve, and their resultant children in the world, and for the call of the Church, He had in His plan the arrangement of Justice God could not do less than justice to every member of the human family, but as mercy and love calls upon you and me to deal according to the Golden Rule, so God in all things according to the principles of justice.

Justice is the foundation of God's Throne. The whole superstructure of His Kingdom will be built on justice. He will not do less than justice, and this is what He requires of every creature. Nothing less than absolute justice will be permitted. But the great test upon the Church is more than this—that we should love as He has loved, and bid down life itself for brethren. While God demands nothing more than justice, yet, He says, nothing more than justice, we cannot reach in His Kingdom. The Father is seeking those who have the spirit of love —those who are kind, loving, forgiving, before they can be granted to have His Spirit.

The Christian knows that all things work together for good to them that love God. This knowledge is to him a source of strength in trying circumstances and conditions which would overwhelm him, if he did not know it would expect to have. But the child of God is courageous, knowing that the Father loves him and will not permit anything to come to him that will not be for his good. In proportion as he receives the spirit of a sound mind, the Spirit of the Lord, and in proportion as the Holy Spirit works in him, he will become more and more like our Lord; and this spirit will enable him to have more and more compassion on those who are out of the way. It will give him broader views of life, and more general sympathy for mankind as God sent His Son, and as the Son came and did things for the good of man at His own expense, so all who have His spirit will strive to bless mankind.

The spirit of a sound mind broadens and deepens the character, makes all its good lines. It helps its possessor not only to be more correct in his own disposition, but to be more sympathetic toward others. It helps him to have more full compassion of his own mind and body and his own need of mercy and more full correction, he recognizes the similar derangement of the whole world of mankind, and the general need of sympathy and assistance. As he learns to rectify the deficiencies and inequalities of his own mind, he sympathizes more and more with those who are striving after this ruling principle—this spirit; of power, of love, and of a sound mind. Thus he naturally becomes more patient, more sympathetic, more generous, more loving—more like the Redeemer, who is Godlike.

First Jitney Bus.
The first jitney bus appeared in London in 1826. It ran by steam power and carried twenty-eight passengers inside and twenty-two outside. Rail roads prevented its operation by securing the passage of a law requiring each bus to keep a man ten yards in advance with a red flag by day and a red lantern at night.—Indianapolis News.

A New Process.
Taking his visitor to the incubator, the chicken raiser removed the lid. A brood of little black Spanish chicks had just emerged from the shell.
"How did you manage to raise an entire brood all black?" asked the visitor, admiring the coziness with a dark lantern."—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Counts Up the Same.

Noble Dissatisfaction.
It is said that Tennyson was seventeen years in writing "In Memoriam." He wrote the little song, "Come into the Garden, Maud," fifty times before he published it. The wife of a distinguished painter said, "I never saw my husband satisfied with one of his productions." Self dissatisfaction lies at the root of our noblest achievements.—Christian Herald.

Mexican Etiquette.
There are some points of Mexican etiquette that to many foreigners appear ridiculous. Persons brought and buscomilke ways seem often affected and unnecessary—such, for instance, as the constant complimentary discussions as to which of two gentlemen shall enter a street car or doorway first or which shall be allowed to walk on the outside of the sidewalk. As a rule, however, most foreigners who live for any length of time in Latin country finally come to enjoy the more cordial forms of greeting.—Mexican Herald.

The Greek Flag.
The Greek flag is an unpretentious piece of linen containing nine strips of blue and white alternately, with a white cross on a blue ground in the top left hand corner. The navy flag has a golden crown in the center of the cross. Blue and white are the national colors of Bavaria and were adopted by the Greeks as a delicate compliment to the prince of Bavaria who accepted the invitation to ascend the throne of Greece when that country had succeeded in asserting her independence from the Ottoman empire.

RECRUITING AIR SQUAD.

Capt. Ross Hume Says Canadians Make Best Men.

Capt. Ross Hume has secured more than twenty recruits for the British Royal Flying Corps, the military wing of Britain's aerial squadrons, which he came to Canada a few weeks ago to recruit, and within a few days he is to Niagara to lay the prospects of a flying career before young Canadian military officers in training there.

Capt. Hume was an officer in the army himself before joining the Flying Corps some time before war broke out. Thereafter he was constantly in the wind in France and Flanders till April of this year when, making a forced descent, his biplane engine was shattered by a shot and he landed with such force that his observer was killed outright and he himself had both ankles broken and had to lay up in hospital for two months. It is about a month since Captain Hume left the hospital, and he is spending a period of convalescence in recruiting in the service of his country.

Capt. Hume is a modest hero and will not speak of his experiences, but Mr. A. J. Gourlay states that a record of achievement lies behind the above bare outline, and that the Captain's patriotism is perfervid, so much so that he would not stay in hospital as long as the doctors said was necessary if his ankles were not to be permanently injured, saying "He did not expect to come through the war, anyway." Capt. Hume bears the mark of a German bullet on his mouth, but speaks lightly of it. As soon as he is fit he will return to the flying line.

When such a gallant officer says that on this his first visit to Canada he has been struck by the wonderful intelligence of Canadians and their devotion to the motherland, it is a tribute to be pondered.

Capt. Hume and Mr. A. E. Pentos, as representatives of the British Army Council, will conduct the first squadron of flying men who have been training in Toronto, the full wing of which at Long Branch on Sunday morning, before they sail for Britain. The squadron who pass will go to Ottawa, where the Duke of Connaught will give them a commencement (or valedictory) in the British service. The airmen will then proceed to Britain and to one of the flying schools there, where they will receive from two to three months' further training.

Flying in an aerodrome, Capt. Hume said, was quite different from cross-country flying. In the aerodrome you had a fairly limited landing ground, but in cross-country flying descents had to be made sometimes in very small spaces. In France there were large fields, where landing can easily be made, but in Belgium and Flanders were small and made landing a ticklish business. "Anybody can fly," said Capt. Hume figuratively, "but it takes a flyer to land." Capt. Hume likes the life, and the conclusion of the war Canada will possess a body of men capable of her own for defence purposes. "She will then have available for that purpose," he said, "a force of Canadian pilots, possessing an experience of warfare that will be unequalled by any other aquadron in the world—a flying squadron without fear."

Capt. Hume explained the various flying duties which fall to military airmen, and in all of which he has had his share. Tactical reconnoitring is the most exciting, as the airman is constantly under fire. Strategic work is the exciting one, and consists of reconnoitring the troops behind the enemy's lines. "Artillery observation is the most dangerous work," said Capt. Hume, who seems to like flying best when the bullets are whistling round his head, "for when you are up on you at one position you can move to another."

The Speed of Light.

Light holds the record for high speed among all moving things that have been measured. It travels at the rate of 328,025,800 yards a second. This is faster than thinking even by the most quick witted person. Let any reader try to think the simplest thought and then with the aid of a stop watch note how long it has taken him to think it. He will then be able to understand how slow his mental operations are compared to the speed of light.

The Male.

The most courageous of all living things is, by common consent of naturalists, the male sparrow. Without any sense of fear whatever, the male will fight anything that crosses its path. Neither giving nor asking quarter, it tears away at its adversary until it kills it or is itself killed. The male's appetite is in keeping with its courage, and it thinks nothing of eating its own weight. In appetite the spider is a close second to the sparrow, but when it comes to fighting the male carries the palm.

Old Time Butterscotch.

Put three pounds of light brown sugar in an enamelled kettle with five-fourths of a pound of butter. Place over a moderate fire to melt; let it boil until thick, stirring all the while to prevent scorching. Take the kettle from the fire and pour the boiling hot liquid into buttered tins a quarter inch deep, mark in squares with a case paper. Butterscotch usually made will keep for months. It improves with age.

Sheppard's Plaid.

Of course everybody knows the popular black and white check patterned cloth "sheppard's plaid," but nineteen people out of twenty cannot ascribe the origin of this cognomen to some connection with the pastoral personage which is appropriately typified by the breed, the description is generally written erroneously by tailors as "shepherd's plaid, but" Sheppard was the manufacturer who first introduced this fabric, and he exhibited his invention at the great exhibition of 1851.—London Scraps.

Cheap Sheep.

Sheep could be purchased for fourpence each in England in the twelfth century.

Honolulu.

The proper regional address for a letter to Honolulu is "T. H.," territory of Hawaii.

French Military Law.

Every Frenchman not declared unfit for military service must on reaching the age of twenty serve three years in the active army, eleven years in the reserve of the active army (two trainings of one month each), all years in the territorial army (one training of two weeks), and the rest of his years in the territorial army. Part of the conscripts, drawn by second-day number of which is placed in a bag by the minister of war, pass into the reserve after one year of active service, if they can read and write, and after two years if illiterate. Those who are not able to bear arms on account of illness serve for a period less than three years have to pay a military tax of 6 francs ($1.15).

Why Italy Loves the Army.

The Italian soldier is not only so versy drilled, but he is also expected to perform in most many duties not usually regarded as falling within the requirements of military service. It is considered necessary that he shall meet wearing the king's uniform to give aid whenever and wherever it may be needed for the protection of life and property, against crime, accident or disaster, and when he is actually required for the protection of life and property, against crime, accident or disaster, and when he actually fails—such as an earthquake—the first move is always to send troops to assist the suffering. This is the reason why Italy regards her army with affection as her protector at home as well as her defender against foreign aggression.—London Chronicle.

Dueling in Futures.

"It is my firm belief," announced Jasper Knox, the sage of Thatown-on-the-Stink, "that in the dim and distant future there is a faint possibility or some hitherto unknown inventive genius accidentally stumbles on the scientific formula, the compounding of which, superficially, will be a liberal and proper administration of the same to teething infants, will impart to those necessary functionaries a sense of propriety which will enable them to comprehend the utter folly of keeping their overworked father on the anvil of the night, when the high cost of living forces the latter to be up and doing when the cuckoo clock proclaims the advent of another day of toil."—Judge.

METHOD.

Method is the very hinge of business, and there is no method without punctuality. Punctuality is impossible without the habit of the peace and good temper of a family. Calmness of mind, which it produces, is another advantage of punctuality. A disorderly man is always in a hurry. He has no time to speak to you because he is going elsewhere, and when he gets there he is too late.—The business or he must hurry away before he can finish it.

FORCEFUL POINTS FROM MR. SUNDAY'S SERMONS

Remarkable Word Pictures Which Stir the Imagination

WHY REVIVALS ARE NEEDED

Any boy can throw a stone and break a window, but it takes an artist, to build the house; any fool can build a fire and burn a building, but it takes a skilled mechanic to reconstruct it; a mob crucified Christ, but it took God to raise him from the dead; any fool can sneer at a revival, any fool can do that, and you are a fool if you do.

"Why is a revival needed?" a preacher said to me in lowa. "I thought I had done my duty when I held up the bleeding form of Jesus Christ and dilated upon his precepts, but I find that I must talk upon sin." You bet you must. Many an old sinner isn't fit for the balm of Gilead until he is given a good old-fashioned fly blister and the curryomb of the law, and some old sachyderms will sit in their pews and one shake, like a flat tailed sheep in the rain, one shake and they're off.

The spirit of God flees from the scenes of strife and discord. You might as well expect a mummy to speak and beat children, you might as well expect hell to sing the doxology. You might as well try to batter down Gibraltar shooting green peas with a popgun as to expect that.

A revival is needed when the worldly spirit is in the church of God. It isn't necessary to do something grossly inconsistent. A ship is all right in the sea, but is all wrong when the sea is in her. The church of God is all right in the world, but all wrong when the world is in the church. Some people come to church Sunday morning and Monday morning they take a header into the world, and the church never sees them again until Sunday morning. They squat and take up a little space in the pew and stay there and put a little money on the plate, but you never see them again until Sunday morning.

I tell you I believe half of the church members could die and the church would lose anything of its spiritual force; it would lose them in numbers, but it wouldn't lose anything in spiritual power. I tell you, my friends, we need a panic in religion; the world doesn't need informing it needs reforming. We are going to the devil over culture clubs, and the world needed informing. It doesn't need anything of the kind. There are people who go to church and go to certain denominations because their wife goes there. They get their religion and their property in her name. They go to that church

Look at the Sunday School. The Sunday school ought to be a constant feeder into the church. Why isn't it? Because we have Sunday school teachers who are absolutely good for nothing; they help nobody, but the publishers. They don't sit down and study. They don't prepare.

I want to say if a public school teacher knew no more about the work and methods of teaching than the average Sunday school teacher knows about the will of God, she would not be on the payroll fifteen minutes.

Go down to the dance halls, the nickledeons, the cheap skate dance halls—there you will find young girls with dresses to their shoe tops. I ask you why? I'll tell you; the spiritual destitution of the multitude Thousands never darken the church doors. A revival is needed when sinners are careless, licentious. A general revival of religion has got to sweep over the country or it will mean the dissolution of the church the home and the nation. I don't care a rap how you fortify your shores, how much you build; America has got to have a revival or it means the end of your religion.

ON WINNING SOULS.

God's plan was for every soul saved to be a soul winner. But the plan is perverted today. When travellers on an eastern desert exhaust their water supply the plan is for all members of the party to spread out, each as far from the other as his voice will carry. When one of the party strikes water, he cries, "Water, water," at the top of his voice, to the men at each side of him, and they to the men next to them, and so on.

What would you think of the man who found a cool, rippling stream of water and drank his fill and went on his way and allowed his fellow-travellers to perish from thirst? If you have any manhood or womanhood in you, you would say that he ought to be killed. Well, what are you doing? If Christ is worth anything to you tell others about Him. If He isn't, then deny Him, and get out.

The keynotes of the gospel are:

"Come unto me and I will give you rest," and "Go into the world and preach the gospel." Come and go!

You can't take anything to heaven but souls. You can't take money or culture. God will ask you: "Did you win anybody to Christ?"

It is said that the angels in heaven rejoice more at one winning of one soul than for ninety-nine that they don't need saving. It's my desire to keep heaven busy with rejoicing. I'm out to make hell mad and heaven sing.

It requires as effort to win men to the church. Everything requires an effort. You've got to do more than build your church and hire your janitor, to ring the bell and the choir to sing. You must work.

FALSE DOCTRINES.

I was going west one time, and they had two engines ploughing along and there was a woman with a little baby in her arms, and wanted to leave the train at a certain little flag station—they will stop the train if you come from a certain distance—and the woman wanted to get off the train. The brakeman came in and called the name of the station, and the woman said, "Dont forget me," and he said "sure."

There was a travelling man there, and he said, "Lady, I will see that the brakeman doesn't forget you, don't worry."

And she settled down, and after the train had gone on a while the travelling man said, "Now lady, we are getting near the place; you had better be getting ready—they won't stop long."

They had gone on a half or threequarters of an hour, and the brakeman came in and said, "Where's that woman?" The travelling man said, "She's got off." The brakeman said, "That's gone to her death. We stopped the train because there was something the matter with the engine and we stopped to fix it—she has gone to her death on the prairies."

They sent orders back, called for volunteers and went back and looked for her, and searched for hours, and they found her out on the prairie covered with a shroud of ice and snow woven about her by the pitiless storm, and with her little babe folded on her breast. She followed the travelling man's directions, but his directions were wrong.

That is the way, those preachers of false doctrines are robbing people of God.

CARDS AND THEATRES

I used to play cards. I never saw a card player that didn't cheat, and I did it like the rest of them.

He took away that desire, and I have not had a card in my hands for twenty-five years, and have never had a deck of cards in my home.

Tom Keene wanted me to be an actor and offered me a large salary. He said: "Bill you'd make a crackerjack of an actor."

In the Summertime the ball players have money and the actors and actresses are broke. In the Winter-time the latter have money and the ball players are broke. You never saw an actor who couldn't get a pass to a ball game, and you never saw a ball player that couldn't get a pass to the theatre. So they work a plan of reciprocity.

The last time I saw a play was Joe. Jefferson in "Rip Van Winkle." From that day to this I have never darkened a theatre door except to preach the gospel of Christ, but I never had to pay a cent to see a show. God has taken away the desire.

WHISKEY AND MURDER.

Two years ago in the city of Chicago a young man of good parents and good character, on Sunday crossed the street and entered a saloon, open against the law. He found three boon companions. There was laughter, song and jest and much drinking. After a while, drunk, insanely drunk, his money gone, he was kicked into the street. He found his way across to his mother's home. "He hungered for her money to buy more drink. She refused him. He seized from the sideboard a revolver and ran out into the street with the expressed determination of entering the saloon and getting more drink, money or no money. His little mother followed him into the street.

His fond mother followed him. She put her hand upon him in loving restraint. He struck it from him in anger, and then his sister came and added her entreaty in vain. And then a neighbor, whom he knew and trusted and respected, came and put his hand upon him in gentleness and friendly kindness, but in an insanity of drunken rage he raised the revolver and shot his friend dead in his blood upon the street.

There was a trial; he was found guilty of murder. He was sentenced to life imprisonment, and when the little mother heard the verdict of that little bit of a woman—she threw up her hands and fell in a swoon. In three hours she was dead.

In the streets of Freeport, Ill., a young man of good family became involved in a controversy with a woman of the town. He went in a drunken frenzy to his father's home, armed himself with a deadly weapon, and set forth in the city in search of the woman with whom he had quarelled. The first person he met upon the public square in the city, in the daylight in a place where she had a right to be, was one of the most refined and cultured women in Freeport. She carried in her arms her babe, motherless and babyhood in the streets of Freeport in the daytime, where she had a right to be; but this young man in his drunken insanity, mistook her for the woman he sought and shot her dead upon the street with the babe still in her arms. He was tried, and Judge Farand, in sentencing him to life imprisonment, said:

"You are the seventh man in two years to be sentenced for murder while intoxicated."

Last night in the city of Anderson, you remember the tragedy of the Blake's home. A young man came home intoxicated, demanding money from his mother. She refused it. He seized from the woodbox a hatchet, and killed his mother, and then went to bed and left the corpse where he fell. The officers of the law pursued him, brought him back. An indictment was found by the grand jury charging him with the murder of the mother who had given him his birth, of her who had gone down in the valley of the shadow of death to give him life, of her who looked down into his blue eyes and thanked God for his life. And he said, "I am guilty; I did it all." And Judge McClure sentenced him to life imprisonment.

Wounded Soldier Returns Home

Peterboro Review —Smiling and happy because he had been able to do his little bit for King and country and that he would soon be home again, Pte. Russell Perrin, who went to France with the First Canadian Contingent was in the city for a few hours on Wednesday morning on his way to Lindsay, he was accompanied from Quebec by Lieut. Bennett.

Pte Perrin was wounded in the early activities of the Canadians and suffered the amputation of one leg. He was first admitted to a hospitals in Boulogne, where he had four operations. Later he was sent to London, where he says nine operations were performed, finally resulting in the loss of his leg.

Pte. Perrin enlisted at Toronto with the 10th Royal Grenadiers, and at the front was attached to a motorcycle corps as a despatch rider.

He had very little to say when seen but he did remark that the people at home could form no idea of the actual conditions which the allied soldiers have been called upon to undergo at the front. Everything that could be done to aid in their comfort should have the united support, and assistance of everyone at home.

The Ontario Road Race

The annual Ontario Road Race for the beautiful Silver Cup donated by Messrs. Morton and Hently will be run off on the previous announcement, on Belleville's Civic Holiday, that is to say on Wednesday next. Already a number of inquiries have been received from those who propose to enter.

Last year the runners who entered were Jas. Alexander, Belleville; Percy Skewman, Trenton; Stanley Minns, Belleville, and Chas. Skewman, of Trenton. The finish of the race was in its order mentioned.

James Alexander, Belleville's speedy amateur runner, won last year's race for two years in succession. We understand that he will again be a competitor this year, and if he wins the cup becomes his personal property. But on several older ambitious distance runners are in the field, a fine contest is looked for.

The course is for three miles and will be the same as in previous years, the start in front of the Ontario Office at 10 o'clock a.m. July 28th. Up Front street to Bridge, along Bridge to and down Dundas to Dundas, along Dundas a point below House of Refuge, and one and a half miles from Ontario Office. Return by same route.

The race is open to all amateur runners in Hastings or Prince Edward Counties, City of Belleville or Town of Trenton.

Other prizes for those in 2nd, 3rd and 4th places will be donated by Belleville merchants.

Hard and soft coins both yield to Holloway's Corn Cure, which is entirely safe to use, and certain and satisfactory in its action.

GEN. VON. HINDENBURG SUFFERS GENERAL DEFEAT

German Plans to Capture Warsaw Still Blocked by Grand Duke's Skilful Campaign—Germans Advance Closer to Riga and to Petrograd-Warsaw Railway—British Naval Casualties Total 330995—Russian Torpedo Boats Destroy 40 Sailing Ships on the Black Sea—Italian General Among the Slain.

VON HINDENBURG SUFFERS DEFEAT.

LONDON, July 27.—Petrograd despatches say the attack on Warsaw is still blocked by Russian possesion of the Bug River line on the north and the Cholm-Lublin railway on the south. Hindenburg is reported repulsed between the Narew and the Bug Rivers at Ora south of Rozan and also southeast of Pultusk. Whether Ostralika has been lost is not made clear. Attempts to gain the Cholm-Lublin-Ivangorod railway appear to be making progress only at the extreme east end of the line southeast of Cholm. In the north it is admitted that the enemy have began an offensive towards Shlok which is only twenty miles from Riga and that guns from the gulf fleet are being used to drive back the foe. Further south north of the Neimen river, the German forces have been able to swing eastward as far as the district of Donevjesh Kledany which brings them appreciably nearer the Warsaw-Petrograd railway.

BRITISH NAVAL CASUALTIES.

LONDON, July 27.—The casualties of the British army and navy have reached a total of 330,995, according to a printed statement issued by Premier Asquith. The total naval casualties up to Tuesday July 20, were 9106 and the military casualties to July 13 were 321,889.

FORTY TURKISH SAILING SHIPS DESTROYED.

PETROGRAD, July 27.—An official statement issued last night said in the Black Sea on Sunday our torpedo boats operating in the coal region destroyed forty sailing ships laden with coal. They also destroyed a new coal shaft and a suspension bridge.

NORWEGIAN SCHOONER TORPEDOED.

AMSTERDAM, July 27.—The Norwegian schooner "Harboe" was sunk Sunday by a German submarine; the crew which has landed here received five minutes to get into the boats. The captain says he saw three other boats on fire near the spot where the "Harboe" was attacked.

BECKER TO DIE TOMORROW, IF—

Slayer of Rosenthal Has Legal Array Trying to Get New Trial.

NEW YORK, July 27.— With the date set for the execution of Charles Becker but one day distant, his counsel and representatives of the District Attorney's office were prepared to argue before Supreme Court Justice Ford today, the motion that Becker be granted a new trial. W. Bourke Cochran, chief of Becker's counsel, was to make the leading argument for the prisoner.

Numerous affidavits bearing upon the new evidence upon which Becker's counsel base his plea were ready for submission to the court by both Becker and the State. The decision as to whether these affidavits should be accepted or whether those making them should be called upon to testify orally, rested with Justice Ford. Should he decide to call for their appearance before him to testify, it was expected that the taking of oral evidence would begin today, as the hour set for Becker's execution has been set for Wednesday morning.

While the arguments for a new trial were in progress here, preparations for Becker's execution were being made at Sing Sing prison. Today it was planned to take Becker from the death house for a short time and during his absence to remove from his cell virtually all of his personal possessions, and anything from which a weapon might be fashioned. A black prison made suit which he will wear to the electric chair if a new trial is not granted, was to be furnished him when he returned to the death house. An extra guard was ordered at the cell door. Relatives said that Becker refuses to believe that he was to be executed, but was preparing for the worst.

Execution Stayed Till Friday.

NEW YORK, July 27.—Upon the request of Supreme Court Justice Ford for more time to consider the application for a new trial made by Charles Becker, under sentence of death for instigating the murder of Herman Rosenthal, gambler, the execution of the former police lieutenant has been postponed until Friday morning of this week.

Justice Ford heard arguments for and against the application. At their conclusion he reserved decision and gave counsel until noon to file briefs. The Justice telephoned to Warden Osborne of Sing Sing prison and requested that the electrocution be postponed. As the execution can take place legally any day this week at the discretion of the warden, this request was granted.

Justice Ford announced today that he would decide the case as quickly as possible. It is stated that he might not finish his deliberations before Wednesday.

WILSON'S NOTE PLACES GERMANY IN QUANDARY

Kaiser's Advisers Manifestly Sparring for Time, and Using Pretext to Delay Definite Announcement of Policy.

ZURICH, July 27.—The embarrassment produced in Berlin by President Wilson's note is indicated by the notice in The Lokal Anzeiger, stating that as the note is long some time must elapse before it can be translated into German. This probably is a mere pretext, the government trying to gain time to consider the whole situation and decide what instructions are to be given the German press as to the attitude it shall take.

By the time the text is made public the press will have prepared public opinion either for the abandonment of submarine tactics or a breach with the United States.

BALTIC SHADOWED BY FOE SUBMARINE

Liner Escaped by Zigzagging and Destroyer Chased Submersible

BELIEVED TO BE SUNK.

Passengers Saw Undersea Boat Disappear When Attacked.

LONDON, July 27.—After being shadowed by a submarine, which, it is believed was subsequently sunk by a British ship, the Baltic arrived safely at Liverpool at 9 o'clock this morning from New York. When the passengers reached London this afternoon they were full of the submarine story One, however, Arthur Plaskidd of New York, asserted that he actually saw it.

"I was on deck about 7 o'clock on Friday evening," he said. "We were then nearing Fastnet. I saw the submarine distinctly, about half a mile away from us, coming in our direction It must have been seen almost at once by the lookout, for our course was immediately changed. I believe we must have kept that course, zigzagging until we almost made Cornwall.

"A few minutes after I noticed the submarine I saw a British torpedo boat destroyer coming from the west. She seemed to me to be chasing the submarine. Anyhow, we saw no more of the latter."

Dr. Smith of Winnipeg said that most of the passengers were having dinner when the submarine was sighted and therefore scarcely any had the opportunity to see it.

"I was told about it later by ship's officers," he added. "They said it was heading straight for us, but the torpedo boat destroyer intercepted it."

News that submarines in the Irish vicinity was kept a secret as far as was possible by officers of the White Star Line. Some passengers knew nothing of it until the vessel docked today.

Other passengers confirmed Dr. Smith's story. Most of them seemed jubilant and all paid tribute to the excellent manner in which the ship was handled in view of the possibility of attack.

Russians Find Means of Driving Off Gas

LONDON, July 27.—The Russians have developed a simple but effective method of meeting German attacks with poisonous gases, according to The Post's Petrograd correspondent. The Russians dig a shallow gutter some distance in front of their position, filling it with moss. As soon as scouts report that a gas attack is being prepared the Russians pour a considerable quantity of petroleum into this gutter. The oil drenches the moss and sinks into the soil. When the gas cloud begins to appear the moss is set on fire and flames rise quickly, even the soil burning fiercely until the petroleum is exhausted. The effect is to change entirely the air currents for some distance, carrying the clouds above the troops.

A score of patients in the military hospitals had to be carried through the driving rain to the barracks quarters.

THE MARSEILLAISE.

Among the patriotic songs of the Nations, none has stood the test of time better, and one is worthier of immortal fame than "La Marseillaise," the great National Anthem of France. The composer of the Marseillaise was a French captain, Claude Joseph Rouget de Lisle, and last week his memory was honored at a great ceremony in Paris when his body was transferred from its resting place at Choisy-le-Roi to the historic Hotel des Invalides. President Poincaire and all the high officials of State marched in procession from the Arc de Triomphe to the Invalides where a military parade was held and an address was delivered by the President of the Republic.

The story of the Marseillaise is of romantic interest. When the Marseilles battalion of the army of the first French Republic entered Paris on July 30, 1792, they were singing a martial anthem unlike anything that had been heard before. When the soldiers broke ranks they distributed among the people leaflets upon which the words had been printed. Soon all Paris was singing the song, then it made its way into the provinces, and the entire nation sang it.

Questions were asked the soldiers from Marseilles as to who had written the song, which they called the "Chant des Marseilles." All they knew was that at a civic banquet held on the eve of their departure for Paris a singer named Mireur had sung it and that it had impressed the major that he had caused the leaflets to be printed which they had brought to Paris. Probably, some said Mireur had composed "The Song of the Marseillaise."

They were mistaken, however; the great National Anthem of France had a different origin and name, and when finally the truth became known the poet and composer was properly acclaimed and honored, and years afterwards King Louis Philippe conferred a pension upon him; but the song always kept the name it had received in the southern city.

Three months before, in Strasburg, on the Rhine, Dietrich, the Mayor of the city, had complained that the volunteers who were about to join Luckner's army had no patriotic song to sing as they marched out. A young Captain of Engineers, Claude Joseph Rouget de Lisle, heard him. He retired to his lodgings and during the night, with the aid of his violin, composed the music and the words of the song which was to render his name immortal. He called it, "The War Song of the Army of the Rhine," and the night on which he wrote it was April 24, 1792. It was first sung at Dietrich's house on the following day and then immediately arranged for the band of the Garde Nationale, which performed at a review on Sunday, the 29th, and a copy was sent by a member of the band to his friend, Mireur of Marseilles, who himself sang it at the banquet on June 25. On Aug. 10 the people of Paris sang it as they stormed the Tuileries.

In the course of time the music has been slightly changed and stanzas have been added. Some critics have asserted that Rouget de Lisle appropriated his melody from a German hymn—and yet that German hymn has never been produced. Later he wrote other songs, but nothing that it remembered, and some plays. One, entitled "Tom et Lucy," has its scene laid in America; but it is forgotten. Only "La Marseillaise" remains. He died at Choisy, at the age of 76, in 1836.

President Poincare, in his speech, characterized La Marseillaise as a hymn whose striking notes speak the universal language of men whose passion for independence prefers deliberate death to servitude. A Hymn like this, he said was need to interpret the generous thought of France today. Once more the spirit of domination menaces the liberty of the people, and in defending those liberties France has arisen "in ardent enthusiasm to the accents of the Marseillaise." It is fitting, then, that the ashes of the composer who has so faithfully expressed in immortal song, the spirit of the new France, should be laid to rest among others of her illustrious dead in the Pantheon.

LARGEST FINANCIAL TRANSACTION IN HISTORY.

The following remarks by Henry Clews, the well known New York banking authority on the success of Great Britain's huge War Loan will be read with interest:—

"The world is becoming accustomed to great events and correspondingly great transactions in financial affairs. The largest financial operation in history has just been completed, and its effect upon this market, the only free market of importance for the time being, proved quite inconsequential. The successful placing of the $3,000,000,000 4½% British loan will go down into history as the most remarkable financial achievement on record. The previous British loan was $1,750,000,000, making a total of $4,750,000 since the war began. During the same period Germany has floated loans amounting to $3,500,000,000. The total amount of loans issued by all the Allies is estimated at $10,000,000,000, while the total issued by all the belligerents is placed at about $16,000,000,000. These are figures almost beyond comprehension. Considering size and circumstances, the British loan was subscribed with remarkable promptness, much more promptly than has been the experience of other nations.

While the terms were attractive, the net results show that in the neutral markets British credit is on a 4½% basis, compared with Germany's credit on a 6% basis. As to how long the belligerents can stand such a terrific financial strain, no safe predictions can be made. Rumors of German weakness are current, but the facts are difficult to obtain. So far as British credit is concerned, it has suffered least impairment. Great Britain is not only financing her own war, but also to a large extent that of her Allies. Her resources are enormous, and up to date have proved quite equal to the stupendous strain. On account of her position in the world's affairs, Britain's financial abilities are of supreme interest. No suitable comparison is possible, except that of the Napoleonic wars a century ago. Since then Great Britain's population has trebled, while her wealth has increased tenfold, and it is estimated this war will cost about 5 per cent of her total wealth compared with nearly one-third during the Napoleonic war. Great Britain has enormous investments abroad estimated at $20,000,000,000 ,which provide her with a handsome revenue. To this must be added the profits upon her foreign commerce, the largest in the world; upon her shipping, representing nearly one-half the world's tonnage; and upon her domestic industries, all of which are highly developed. If it be true, as Lloyd George predicted, that success in this war would ultimately depend upon financial resources, the outlook for Germany is anything but encouraging.

Touching the wail from Wilhelmstrasse that "Germany is fighting for her life," the New York Post asks, "if that plea suffices to justify the Lusitania murder, why is it not good enough to cover any act of terrorism or savagery that will serve the same holy purpose?"

President Wilson does not say what the United States will do if Germany refuses to make the required amends and give the assurances demanded, but we all know what will happen, if, in face of its warning, a German submarine commander again murders American citizens upon the high seas. Our neighbors will not be "too proud to fight."

"Circumstances made it impossible to write sooner to express gratitude for the gifts collected on behalf of Belgium," says Cardinal Mercier, of Belgium, in a letter to Cardinal Bourne, recently published in the London Tablet. "I cannot now do justice to this wonderful outburst of charity, but what I can do is to tell how deeply grateful I am and to assure you that the memory of British generosity will live on amongst us for years, for generations to come. Let me end by telling you that, though laboring under some constraint, our hearts cherish the undaunted hope that, to apply England's proud motto, strengthened by God's help and confiding in the justice of our cause, the day will dawn when our united armies will restore peace and liberty to our land, and then without restraint we will be able to proclaim our heartfelt gratitude and show the world even as Belgium preferred mutilation and endless suffering to loss of honor, so also she will ever remember her debt to England." Noble words of a noble man!

SUMMER DAWN.

Pray but one prayer for me 'twixt thy closed lips
Think but one thought of me up in the stars,
The summer night waneth, the morning light slips,
Faint and grey 'twixt the leaves of the aspen, betwixt the cloud-bars,
That are patiently waiting there for the dawn;
Patient and colorless though Heaven's gold
Waits to float through them along with the sun,
Far out in the meadow, above the young corn,
The heavy elms wait, and restless and cold
The uneasy wind rises; the roses are dun;
Through the long twilight they pray for the dawn,
Round the lone house in the midst of the corn,
Speak but one word to me over the corn,
Over the tender, bow'd locks of the corn.

—William Morris.

Other Editors' Opinions

GERMANY AND PEACE.

It is no doubt true, as the board of directors of the German Socialist party asserts, that the German people want the war stopped; but probably not more true of the German people than of some other of the belligerent people. Indeed, it may be less true of the Germans, for they know less about the progress of the war than their allies or enemies, and have been taught to believe that up to the present time the German campaign has been one of almost uninterrupted victory. In the very circular issued by the Socialists there is the assertion that "Germany, who, attacked by greater superior forces, has thus far victoriously defended herself against all her enemies, brought their statesmen plan to nought, and demonstrated that she is unconquerable, 'should take the first step to ensure "peace." The Socialist appeal ought not to be interpreted as an admission of impending defeat; it is more like the arrogant demand of the conqueror, who, having attained the objects for which the war was waged, sees no object in further prosecuting it.

Every few days, and from time to time since, the opinion has been expressed from various quarters that when the German people understood that they had been made the victims of the Prussian war party they would rise against the Hohenzollerns and welcome the conquerors with open arms. But there is accumulating evidence that this awakening will not come until years after the war is over, that it is not the German army alone that it is fighting the Allies, but the whole strength of the German nation. Even when university president Lewis, a Socialist outsider tyler, the whole German people believes that Germany has been attacked, and that she had to defend herself against a world-wide conspiracy to destroy her. This being the case, those who believe that the German people will demand peace, on terms to be dictated by the Allies, as soon as the fighting is forced upon German soil, must suppose the German people to be far different from other people. We believe that the British people would fight with ten times the determination if Britain were invaded. There may be, indeed a sudden collapse of the German war machine, due to losses inflicted by the Allies, but as long as the German people believe, as they undoubtedly sincerely believe, that they are waging a defensive warfare, their resistance is certain to be stubborn. Such appeals as that issued by the German Socialists earth, not to be misunderstood as expressing a willingness of the German nation to throw down its arms, evacuate Belgium and France, and accept the role of vanquished in the peace negotiations.—Mail and Empire.

IRELAND DOING ITS DUTY.

Ireland is represented on the firing line by 120,741 men. Of these 70,000 are Catholics, and 24,000 are Protestant members of the Irish National Volunteers. These figures differ from those compiled by some speakers have been of late, and are convincing evidence that the statistics given out by the said speakers are badly in need of revising. The Home Rule question is not worrying the irishmen nearly as much as it is some of our Canadians. As soon as the war broke out that earnest, Irish Nationalist leader, John Redmond with true Irish abandonment set to work securing recruits for the service of France in defence of the motherland and his followers have responded nobly to the call. It should bring a blush of shame to the faces of speakers who would try to defame the brave Irishmen who are sharing in the country's burden and shedding their heart's blood in the trenches and the time has arrived for the intervention of some other plan to obtain political pull.—Tweed Advocate.

LARGEST FISH LANDED WITH A ROD.

The tuna, weighing 710 pounds, which was captured by an English angler in Nova Scotia after a nine hours' fight, and which must surely be the heaviest fish ever landed with a rod, is the tunny that occasionally visits the coast of Cornwall. As an article of food this bully portion is extremely good when fresh, and the rest of the carcass, which looks like beef, can be seen for sale, salted, in most Mediterranean towns. Strange to say, though highly prized in England since the time of Herodotus, these gigantic horse-mackerel are seldom eaten in the United States or Canada. They are sometimes caught there for the sake of the oil, and the sport is quite exciting, because the monsters when hooked endanger the lives of the fishermen by dragging them overboard.—Dundee Advertiser.

Thrift and Drink

A FOOL AND HIS MONEY

BY GEORGE BARR McCUTCHEON.

"Carrie," he shouted, "come here a minute, will you?"

"Oh, do excuse that, Orson," came back from the porcelain closet. "You almost made me drop this thing."

"Well, drop it and come on. This is important."

I wiped the moisture from my brow and respectfully put my clinched fists into my pockets.

A minute later three females appeared on the scene, all of them dusting their hands and eyeing their noses in disgust.

"I never saw such a dirty place," said the foremost, a large lady who couldn't by any circumstance or fate have been anybody's wife but Rockworth's. "It's filthy! What do you want?"

"I've bought this thing here for seventy-five. You said I couldn't get it for a nickel under a thousand. And, say, this man tells me the ball seats here belonged to Pontius Pilate in —"

"Pavina, ma'," interrupted, with merely said that he sat in it. I am not trying to deceive you, sir."

"And after you've signed on this table," said Mr. Riley-Werkheimer. He addressed himself to a plump, young man with distorted beat and a twenty-two inch waist. "Maude, what do you suppose I found in the Roman-Testoni treaty? We'll catch you now, my friend," he went on, turning to me. "Have you a leg up in ancient history. She's an authority."

Miss Maude appeared to be raising her brain. It was difficult to ascertain.

"I mean the second treaty, after the fall of Nuremburg," I ventured.

"Oh," she said instantly relieved. "Was it really signed here, right here in this hall? Oh, father, we must have that table!"

"You are sure there was a treaty, Maude?" demanded her parent accusingly.

"Certainly," she cried. "The Testoni ceded Alsace-Lorraine —"

"Pardon me once more," I cried, and this time I plead guilty to a blush. "You are thinking of the second treaty, the one at Metz, Miss Riley-Werkheimer. This, as you will recall, antedates that one by several years."

"Thank you," she said, quite condescendingly. I was equal for a moment.

Of course, father, I can't say that it was signed here on this table as the young man says, but I do know that there was a treaty. I do wish you'd come and see the fire screen they found on the —"

"Let's get this out of our system first," said her father. "If you've been gulled by statistics and the proper proof that this is the genuine table, you can keep it."

"They rest easy, sir," I said. "We can take it up later on, The facts are"

"And this Pontius Pilate seat," interrupted Rockworth, biting off the end of a fresh cigar, "what about it? Got a match?"

"Get the gentleman a match, Britton," I said, thereby giving my valet an opportunity to do his exploding in the pantry. I can only suppose from that it is common history that Pontius Pilate spent a portion of his exile here in the shade of the ball seats. I hesitate to assume that he sat in this seat, being an old man unused to difficult starting. Eh, sir?"

"Buy it, Orson," said his wife, with authority. "We'll make a change in it if it isn't the right thing we can sell it to the secondhand dealers. What's the price?"

"A thousand dollars to you, madam," said I.

They were at once suspicious. While they were busily engaged in looking the seat over as the porters shifted it about at all angles I stepped over and ordered my workmen to resume operations.

"Here!" roared Mr. Rockworth. "Stop this beastly noise! What the deuce do you mean, sir, permitting those scoundrels to raise the dead like this?"

I moved forward apologetically. "They are raising the dead. The place is fairly alive with dead rats and —"

"Good Lord!" gasped Riley-Werkheimer. "We'll get the bubonic plague here."

"Well, let's move on upstairs," said Rockworth. Addressing the porters, he said: "You, fellows, put this out of the old Floradine mirror the count was telling us about."

"The count!" said I, frowning.

"Yes, the real owner. You can't stuff me with your talk about being the proprietor here, my friend. You see, we happen to know the count."

They all condescended to laugh at me. I didn't know what I should have said or done if Britton had not returned with a box of matches at that instant.

Almost simultaneously there appeared in the lower end a sturdy figure of eighteen.

"Say, these clubs are the real stuff, all right, all right. They're as brittle as glass. See what I did to 'em. We can have 'em spliced and rewound, and I'll hang 'em on my wall. All I want is the heads anyhow."

He held up to view a headless middle and beamed triumphantly upon a splendid cleek. My favorite clubel I could play better from a hanging lie with that beautiful branch than with any club I ever owned, and, as for the iron, I was deadly with it.

He lit a cigarette and threw the match into a pile of shavings. Old Conrad returned to his at that instant, and stamped out the incipient blaze.

"I shouldn't consider them very good clubs, Harold, if they break off like that," said his mother.

"What do you know about clubs?" he snapped, and I at once knew what class he was in at the preparatory school.

"It was ever like one of these, said I to myself. God rest the sage soul of my Uncle Silas!

The afternoon was no longer humorous. I could put up with anything but the unhandling of my devoted golf clubs.

Striding up to him, I snatched the remnants from his hand.

"You infernal cub!" I roared. "Haven't you any more sense than to smash a golf club like that? If you two cents I'd break this putter over your head."

"Father," he yelled indignantly, "who is this mucker?"

Mr. Rockworth bounced toward me. his cane raised. I whirled upon him.

"How dare you?" he shouted. The adieu squeezed.

It is expected me to cringe he was mightily mistaken. My blood was up. I advanced.

"Tens him, dadd" roared Harold.

But Mr. Rockworth suddenly altered his course and put the intended blow upon his left screen him and me. He didn't like the appearance of my rather large fists.

"You big stiff!" shouted Harold. Afterward it occurred to me that this intelligent appellation may have been meant for his father, but at the time I took it to be aimed at me.

Before Harold quite knew what was happening to him he was prancing down the long hall with my bony fingers grasping the collar. Coming to the door opening into the outer vestibule, I drew back my foot for a final aid to locomotion. Acutely recalling the fact that slippers are not designed for kicking purposes, I raised my foot, removed the slipper and laid it upon a taut section of his trousers with all of the melancholy force that I usually exert in slicing my drive off the tee. The boy never forgot the acquired spasm of pleasure his plaintive "Ouch!" gave me.

Then Harold passed swiftly out of my life.

Mr. Rockworth, re-enforced by four reluctant mercenaries in the shape of porters, was advancing upon me. Somehow I had a vague but unerring instinct that some one had blinked, but I didn't stop to inquire. Without much ado I wrested the cane from him and sent it sailing after Harold.

"Now get out!" I roared.

"You shall say for this!" he spurted.

"How dare you?" he shouted.

Happily I was able to keep my dignity at once.

In a jiffy half a dozen carpenters were at work constructing a substantial ladder out of scantlings, while I stood over them in serene command of the situation.

When the ladder was completed I mounted to the top and peered through the shattered window. It was quite black and repelling beyond. Instructing Britton and the two brothers to follow me in turn, I scrambled over the wide stone sill and lowered myself gingerly to the floor.

I will not take up the time or the space to relate my experiences on this first fruitless visit to the west wing of my abiding place. Suffice to say, we got as far as the top of the stairs in the vast middle corridor after stumbling through a series of dim, damp rooms, and then found our progress hopelessly blocked by a stout door which was not only locked and bolted, but bore a most formidable admonition to would be trespassers.

Pinned to one of the panels there was a daisy bit of white paper upon with these antiric words written across its surface in a bold feminine hand:

"Please keep out. This is private property."

Most property owners no doubt would have been incensed by this calm defiance on the part of a squatter, either male or female, but not I. The very impudence of the usurper appealed to me. What could be more delicious than her assumption of proprietorship in the stroke of a pen of at least two-thirds of my domicile and my every earthly goods? The height of waging war against her in the effort to regain possession of it? Really it was quite glorious. Here was a sappy, enchanting bit of feodalism that stirred my romantic soul to its very depths.

We returned to the courtyard and held a council of war. I was for the Schmicks on the grill, but they stubbornly disclaimed all interest in or knowledge of the extraordinary occupant of the east wing.

"We can smoke her out, sir," said Britton.

I could scarcely believe my ears.

"Britton," I said, "you have a brute. I am surprised. You forget there is an innocent babe, maybe a collection of babes, in there, and a dog. We shan't do anything beastlike, Britton. Please bear that in mind. There is but one way to get at the bottom of the matter. I will not be defied to my very nose. I will go in by the door, and a little out of joint. "It is a good nose."

"It is, sir," said Britton. And Poopendyke in a perfect ecstasy of loyalty shouted, "Long live your nose, sir!"

My German tenant was within their hats, perceiving that a demonstration was required without in the least knowing what it was about.

That night was very black and tragic, swift storm clouds scudding across the sky, now and then moon and stars. With a radiant lantern in the window behind and a pistol in my hip pocket, my pipe and my pencil. The storm was not far away.

I was standing over a serene contempt for the physical world, some there came to me a sound from above, a sound that sent a cold shiver down my back. It was the sound of a woman's voice speaking to me out of the darkness and from some point quite near at hand!

I looked about me, blinking, utterly bewildered. No one was to be seen. She laughed. Without really meaning to do so, I also laughed nervously, of course.

"Can't you see me?" she asked. I looked down at the spot from which the sound seemed to come—a perfectly solid stone block more than three feet from my right shoulder. It must have been very amusing. She laughed again. I replied resentfully.

"Where are you?" I cried out rather tartly.

"I can see you quite plainly, and you are very ugly when you scowl, sir. Are you scowling at me?"

I apologized, and replied truthfully, still searching for her. "Does it seem so to you?"

"Yes."

"Then I must be looking to the right direction," I cried impolitely. "You must be— Ah!"

My straining eyes had located a small, oblong block in the curve of the tower not more than twenty feet from where I stood, and on a direct line with my balcony. Then I could not at first see a face, but as my eyes grew a little more accustomed to the darkness, I fancied I could distinguish a head that might pass for one.

"I didn't know that little window was there," I cried, puzzled.

"It isn't," she said. "It is a secret loophole, and I have used it often in times of great distress. But, I can close it!" The oblong block abruptly disappeared, only to reappear a second later. I was beginning to understand. Of course it was in the beleaguered east wing. She was speaking again in a moment ago.

I resolved to be very still and formal about it. "May I inquire, madam, what you are doing in my box—my castle?"

"You may."

"Well," said I, seeing the point, "what are you doing here?"

"I am living here," she answered distinctly.

"So I perceive," said I, rather too distinctly.

"And I have come down to ask a simple, thp ding favor of you, Mr. Smart," she roamed.

"You know my name? I cried, surprised.

"I am reading your last book— Are you going?"

"Just a moment, please," I called out, struck by a splendid idea. Reaching inside the window, I grasped the lantern and brought its rays to bear upon the perfectly blank wall, which stared open mouthed and unbelieving. "You have been there I see, remaining all this?" I cried aloud.

My gaze fell upon two tiny holes in the wall, apparent to view by the bright light of my lamp. They appeared to be precisely in the center of the spot so recently marked by the missive pigeon. Even as I stared at the holes a slim object that I at once recognized as a finger protruded from one of them and wiggled at me in a merry but exceedingly irritating manner.

Sensibly I restored the lantern to its place inside the window and waited for the mysterious voice to resume.

"Are you so homely as all that?" I demanded when the shadowy face looked out once more. Very clever of me, I thought.

"I am considered rather good looking," she replied serenely. "Please don't do that again. It was very rude of you, Mr. Smart."

"Oh, I've seen something of you before this," I said. "You have long, golden brown hair and blue eyes."

She was silent.

"I am sure you will pardon me if I very politely ask who you are?" I went on.

The question takes me back to the favor. Will you be so very, very kind as to cease bothering me, Mr. Smart? I am very, very grateful, I do assure you, I know, feeling that at any moment you may rush in and—"

"Then I am in my own castle too?" she said sharply.

"There is ample room for both of us," she said sharply.

"I will take a month or six weeks, and I am sure we can get along very comfortably under the same roof for that length of time if you'll only forget that I am here."

"I shall very well do that, madam. You see, we are making extensive repairs about the place, and you are likely to be a serious annoyance if you do not grant your request. It will grieve me enormously if I am compelled to have you put out, but I fear—"

"Smoke me out?"

"Perhaps with sulphur," I went on resolutely. "It is said to be very effective."

"Surely you will not do anything so horrid."

"Only as a last resort. First we shall try other and neat wing. Failing in that, we shall rely on smoke. You will admit that you have no right to remain under my reservation."

"None whatever," she said rather plaintively.

I can't remember having heard a sweeter voice than hers. Of course by this time I was interested in everything that she was a lady, a cultured, high bred lady, and an American.

"Nothing thank you," the voice served its purpose. My tenancy seemed to dissolve into air. I sought to revive it by an injection of harshness into my own manner of speech.

"Then you should be willing to vacate my premises—or—here's where I began to show irresistible—to explain yourself."

"Won't you be serious?

I cleared my throat nervously. How will they ever get me out of this in a man's armor!

"I am willing to be—amenable to reason. That's all you ought to expect." A fresh idea took root. "Can't we effect a compromise, or—or something of the sort? All I ask is that you explain your presence here. I will promise to be as reasonable as possible under the circumstances."

"Will you give me three days in which to think it over?" she asked, after a long pause.

"No."

"Well, two days?"

"I'll give you until tomorrow afternoon at 5, when I shall expect you to receive me in person."

"That is quite impossible."

"Then I demand the right to go wherever I please in my own castle. You"—

"If you knew just how circumspect I am obliged to be at present you wouldn't impose such terms, Mr. Smart."

"Oh, circumspect! That puts a new light on the case. What have you been doing that you are so circumspect?"

She very properly ignored the banality. "If I should write you a nice, agreeable letter, explaining as much as I can, may I rely upon you to—"

"I prefer to have it by word of mouth."

She seemed to be considering. "I will come to this window tomorrow night at this time and—and set you free. Will that be satisfactory?"

"Very well," said I. "We'll let it rest till then."

And, by the way, I have something more to ask of you. Is it quite necessary to have all this sounding and harrowing going on in the course of the day? Frankly, I don't ask it on my own account, but for the baby. You see, she's quite ill with a fever, Mr. Smart. Perhaps you've heard her crying."

"I demand the right to go wherever I please in my own castle."

"The baby!" I muttered.

"It is nothing serious, of course. The doctor was here today and he reassured me."

"As a doctor here today?" I gasped.

She laughed once more. Verily, it was a gentle, high toned laugh.

"Will you please put a stop to the noise for a day or two?" she asked very prettily.

"Certainly," said I, too surprised to say anything else. "It—is there anything else?"

"Nothing, thank you," she replied. Then: "Good night, Mr. Smart. You are very good."

"Don't forget tomorrow—"

But the shadow disappeared with a sharp click, and I found myself staring at the blank, splashless wall.

CHAPTER V.

I Become an Ancestor.

TRUE to the promise she had extracted from me, I held off my hostilities for the next day.

They trooped in bright and hearty, considerably augmented by fresh recruits, who came to share the benefits of my innocuous prodigality, and I'll be a be a thousand I shall never again experience such a noisome half hour as the one I spent in listening to their malignant protests against my tyrannical supervision of the poor and needy, in the end I agreed to get them one and all for a full day's work, and they went away mollified, telling me a more pestilential lot Dover and heaven knows what to my back.

Punctually at 9 o'clock that evening I was in the tower, prepared for any lucky stars that it was a bright moonlit night. There was every reason to rejoice in the prospect of seeing her face clearly when she appeared at her secret little window. But she was a mysterious lady. It naturally occurred of that she was homely.

"Good evening," she said on opening the window.

"Good evening," said I, contriving to conceal my disappointment. "How is the baby?"

(To be continued.)

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Medicine, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

PINNACLE STREET PAVEMENT CAUSED SOME DISCUSSION IN CITY COUNCIL

Heated Arguments for Few Moments Last Night Over Bylaw—City Solicitor's Views on Pavement Petition—Case of an Invalid—Blowing of Train Whistles Near General Hospital Discussed—Sidewalks to be Built.

At the city council last evening was witnessed the first open dispute of the year, the issue of contention being the kind of pavement for Pinnacle street. For some moments about 11.30 o'clock there was high talking, but gradually it subsided.

It all occurred when Ald. Jas. St Charles brought in a bylaw for paving Pinnacle street with Trinidad Asphalitic concrete, notice of which had been given at the special session last week. Ald. Wallbridge arose objecting that the bylaw was not in order as the amended petition filed not comebefore the council and the engineer had not reported upon it. Two weeks ago it will be remembered, the city solicitor made some suggestions as to changes necessary in the petition

Mayor Panter ruled that the bylaw was in order.

Ald. McFee and Ald. Smith supported Ald. Wallbridge's view. Ald Smith wished to know why the bylaws of which he had given notice for Victoria Ave. and George St. were not ready.

The Mayor stated that objections to the petitions had been raised by the solicitor.

Ald. McFee appealed against the Mayor's ruling and as it was sustained called for the yeas and nays which resulted as follows—

YEAS—Ald. Duckworth
Ald Earle
Ald. St. Charles
Ald. Platt
Ald. Woodley
Total—5

NAYS—Ald. McCurdy
Ald. McFee
Ald. Smith
Ald. Wallbridge
Total—4

Mayor Panter said he was not trying to force the council. As his ruling had been sustained, he would agree to leave the consideration over for a week.

Ald. Wallbridge said "Go on with the bylaw" and hinted that if such process were taken, it would be stopped

The Mayor said such had been threatened last year, the trouble having arisen with new members of the council.

Ald. McFee rose at once to his feet "If you refer to me——"

Ald. Wallbridge interrupted, with the same remark—"If you refer to me, I demand an apology."

The Mayor motioned for quiet and said to the last speaker—"You'll get none. I may plainly tell you, I'm in favor of Trinidad Lake Asphalt because the ratepayers are asking for it"

Ald. Wallbridge—"I took no action last year"

Mayor Panter—"You tried to do something."

Ald. Wallbridge—"If you go ahead with the bylaw, I will do something" His Worship stated that he did not wish to force the hands of the council and never did. On request of Ald. Wallbridge he read the solicitor's communication regarding the original Pinnacle street petition. The city clerk Mr. Holmes answered a query of the mayor's saying he had examined the revised petition and found it satisfactory

On motion of Ald. Woodley, it was decided in accordance with Mayor Panter's suggestion to leave the bylaw over until next Monday.

When council opened its session a number of deputations were heard at the bar.

PINNACLE ST. PAVEMENT.

Mr. F. E. O'Flynn said Messrs. Foley and Gleeson had guaranteed that the city's credit would not be injured with the bonds for the proposed Pinnacle street pavement being placed on the market under present conditions. The G.T.R. was agreeable to the work, an official had said but their attitude would have to pass through the regular procedure. No tenders need be called for until the arrangement was completed with the G.T.R.

Rumors had been heard on the street that Foley and Gleeson were the only firm that could install asphaltic concrete. This was not the case as other firms built the same kind of pavement.

Mr. O'Flynn also referred to the merits of Pinnacle street.

Mayor Panter said: "After they get the debentures, would they agree not to sell them at a disadvantage to the city's credit

Mr. O'Flynn—"Quite willing."

Ald. McFee—"Would the firm be willing to tender on all kinds of asphalt"

Mr. O'Flynn—"I think not. Asphaltic concrete is what the tenderers call for."

Mayor Panter said some Pinnacle street owners want no experiment. They want the same kind as on Front street.

Mr. O'Flynn said since last appearing before the council he had been retained by Messrs. Foley and Gleeson. Before this he had represented a number of the largest ratepayers on Pinnacle street

Mayor Panter answered a question, re Ald. Earle's regarding a street in Peterborough.

Mr. O'Flynn "I believe the public were a deal of gratitude to the council of 1914 who put down asphaltic concrete on Front street"

Rev. S. L. Dupras and Mr. Chas. Smith approached the council asking for a crossing to his property at the corner of Green and Fenton streets

Ald. McFee thought the council would meet the request. The committee would meet the situation were first approached of the situation.

Mr. Charles W. Smith, who has several houses on Green street, asked on a walk on this street, whether grandstand or a line four feet wide board walk

Ald. McFee suggested a macadam walk. "You will have some relief."

Mr. Smith—"Could not the street be properly drained?"

Ald. McFee—"We can not build another street this year."

Mr. Gray of the Hoo-mas company addressed the council assuring them that the Rosmas Co. or a private individual would take the bonds for the proposed Victoria Ave. pavement at par. The Rosmas Company would not put the bonds on the open market to hurt the city's credit.

City Solicitor Masson's communication re the petitions for the construction of Rosmas pavement and macadam tarvia pavement on Victoria Ave and George street was as follows—

"Your petitions have one condition which cannot be fulfilled, namely the condition that they will not be assessed for any other pavements on any other streets in the City of Belleville in the future

"The council may exempt them from assessment for other pavements during the life of their pavement, but no further, that is, if the life of the pavement is ten years, they can be exempt for ten years.

"Another thing they ask for is a ten year debenture. The debentures cannot be extended for a longer period than the estimated lifetime of the pavement. If the estimated lifetime of the pavement is ten years, the debenture can be issued for ten years. If the life of the pavement is only estimated at three or four years the debenture can only be issued for that number of years.

"If you will furnish me with particulars of the citizens who are willing to take the bonds at par, if the pavements are built, I will prepare memorandum. The memorandum of course would be prepared and signed before the work is started. The consideration should be in consideration of the pavements being built that the property agrees to take the debentures at par."

"The price mentioned in the petition may be less than what the work can be built for but this is more for the engineer to pass on."

City Treasurer D. Price wrote asking for the employment of help in getting out the monthly statements.

Ald. Early said Mr. Price's duties had increased three-fold since he took over the city treasurership

Mayor Panter and Ald. Earle spoke in favor of providing help to the city treasurer as well as the other officials.

Ald. Wallbridge said this hiring of help should be stopped.

Mr. Price's request was granted such help to be governed by a committee consisting of the Mayor, Ald. Wallbridge and Ald. Woodley

An account of $20.50 for Mr. W. C. Daniels was passed.

The following granolithic walks were authorized to be built—

East side Chatham St. from Bridge to Queen

West side Coleman from Harriett to end of present walk

East side of Cedar from Catherine to Jane

East side Howard from Moira to Holloway

West side Moody from Pope to Wallbridge

West side Boswell street from Harriett to end of present walk

AN INVALID CASE

Two letters relating to a case of an invalid woman and destitution owing to drink and intemperance of her husband were read. The only place for her is the Home for Incurables but they ask a guarantee of $5 per week. The letters were written by Miss Bradley, city deaconess and by Mr. J. J. H. Flint.

Mayor Panter explained what he knew of the case. The woman had become a morphine fiend by taking the drug to ease pain.

"We are supporting a home for the friendless. Those in charge have refused the request of the charitable women. The council might order her taken in but would that be to the advantage of the home?"

Ald. Platt said as a humane body the council should see that the woman be taken to some home.

On motion its question was referred to Ald. Platt and Ald. Earle with power to act.

A request for a transfer license for the sale of tobacco at the corner of Bell street and Pinnacle street was granted

The W.C.A. corresponding secretary wrote asking McDonald St. be closed until buildings are erected there, because the whistles of passing trains at the crossing are a great annoyance to the sick patients at the hospital

The matter was referred to the city engineer and engineer.

The Bell Telephone wrote stating that the company desired to sign the petition for asphalt concrete on Pinnacle street

Mr. J. Lution requested that his name be withdrawn from the George street petition. Mrs. Lution had signed it during his absence.—Referred.

Mr. Driscoll of the Standard Paving Co. quoted by letter prices on asphaltic concrete—for heavy traffic streets 85 cts per square yard; for residential streets at 2.15.

Ald. Woodley asked if it was the intention of the public works department to oil the new roadways.

Ald. McFee—"It is, with the oil we got from the gas works"

The assessment rolls will be issued this week said Ald. McCurdy in answer to Ald. Duckworth.

Ald. Earle asked if the engineer had accepted any tender for the boat of the cannon on the park.

Mr. Evans said he had as yet received only one tender—$7 per.

Ald. Platt asked if all roads built this year had been built with the consent of the council.

Ald. Earle—Yes.

Ald. Earle spoke in favor of leaving trees intact in the way of sidewalks in places where lighting was good.

Ald. McFee asked if it were wise to pave Pinnacle street where there is so much city property.

Mayor Panter said the city had to keep the whole street in repairs as at present, whereas it would have to keep only its share of the debentures debt if a pavement were constructed

BYLAWS WERE AS FOLLOWS.

A bylaw to authorize the levying and collecting of the Provincial war tax in the City of Belleville for 1915

A bylaw to amend bylaw 1990, being a bylaw to provide for the appointment of a collector for taxes.

A bylaw to authorize the construction of sidewalks on certain streets as local improvements.

A bylaw to arrange for the payment of monies during the adjournment of the council

MOTIONS

Ald. Wallbridge—Ald. Smith "That the police commissioners be and are hereby requested to pass a bylaw taxing autos used as liveries the sum of $8"—Carried.

Council adjourned to meet on Monday evening.

A BUSY BAND OF POPULAR WORKERS ARE PILING UP VOTES

Biggest Increase Yet Reported--Changes in the Leadership in Several Districts--A Special Contest in Huntingdon Township--Districts IV. and V. Have Remarkably Close and Spirited Competitions for First Honors--The Voting Up to Date.

Saturday and Monday were days of unprecented activity at The Ontario office, counting, sorting and filing the huge mass of coupons sent in by active candidates in the Great Popularity Campaign. The coupons were also fortified in nearly every case with a generous supply of cash for subscriptions—particularly new subscriptions. The wide-awake candidates are not confining their attention to the collection of coupons but are bending every effort to secure for themselves the wheels which are the equivalent of new subscriptions.

Today's total shows a big advancement over any preceding aggregate and shows everywhere throughout the entire field unexampled activity and earnestness.

The amount of ingenuity displayed by some of the canvassers in getting subscriptions from some of the closefisted, but well-to-do citizens, and from some of the most ardent conservatives is truly amazing. Some of the interviews are highly amusing and we would gladly recount some of them were we permitted to do so.

Still in the Lead.

District I. still maintains its lead and Miss Hurley's many friends in both city and country have rallied to her support in a manner that seems to defy competition. Her energetic rival, Miss Bimford, keeps following closely, but has never yet quite been able to overtake the popular leader. The contest in this particular district is being watched with the keenest interest in city and country.

A Contest of Absorbing Interest.

District II. is also witnessing a contest of its own of absorbing interest. Miss Ruth Sinclair, who has been in the field only a few days is showing really marvellous ability as a contest worker. She is leading today and the votes to her credit is entirely due to her own effort, and not to any assistance from friends with long purses. She is determined to win, if win she does in just that way, that is to say by straight, honest, personal effort the same as the candidate with the most slender means in the whole field would have to employ.

Miss Gauthier, her popular rival is also piling up a most creditable vote and holds second postoitn. Miss Gauthier has been devoting time to the collection of coupons, but from this on will bend her energies to bring along the subscriptions which run into votes much more rapidly Master Jack Orrill is carrying on his campaign in his own way and is doing splendid work. He also has some influential friends who are going to back up Jack's efforts with the long-green argument.

An Unexamonable Calm.

In District III. there is an unexamonable calm that is in marked contract to the hustling activity all about. The workers here have not come into their stride but better results are looked for soon.

Surprises and Changes.

In District IV. There are changes and surprises and totals that vary with almost every succeeding hour. Among the dozen or more resourceful and earnest workers there is the utmost determination on the part of every person to win. In this district there are already highly successful and popular teachers enrolled on the staff of candidates—Miss Adams of Foxboro, Miss McKenna of Deseronto, and Miss Connor of Lonsdale. These are just the kind of tours that appeal to every young lady of cultured and refined tastes and they feel that their best efforts can worthily be expended for the opportunity to become members of The Ontario special party. As Mr. Sinclair had well said in one of his admirable letters, trustee boards should give the preference to teachers who have rounded out their education by a tour embracing a double journey across the American continent with a visit to the greatest expositions ever arranged in the history of the world.

Miss Adams, who is an indefatigable worker, retains her premier position. She is just a little in advanc of Miss Pearl Honeywell, a very popular young lady of Consecon, whose energetic efforts are shown in the fine total vote to her credit. After the leaders, at a small interval, comes Miss McKenna who is being ably supported by the people of Deseronto and the outlying section.

Miss Lawrence, Miss Henderson, Miss Watson, Miss Brennan, Miss Yorke and Miss O'Connor are all doing wonderfully well and a few hours' work or a few subscriptions would entirely change the standing.

Almost a Parallel.

The Contest in District V. is not less absorbing than in Dis. IV. In fact the conditions are almost parallel for here again nearly a dozen deeply earnest workers are energetically forging ahead for the first honors.

Mr. Harold Stinson, who has exceptional opportunities for canvassing is today in first position. Just a few votes behind is Miss Graham, of Wallbridge. And then, but a slight distance farther down, comes Avondale's favorite candidate, Miss Bates. Miss Lowery is just a little below this again, and so on down the list. It would require a person of prophetic vision to select the ultimate winner in District V.

Special Contest in Huntingdon.

Perhaps the most interesting feature of the entire Contest is a special contest that Moira in the Township of Huntingdon is having all by itself. Here two pretty and popular young ladies, cousins of one another, Misses Evelyn and Hazel Salisbury, have entered into a good-natured competition for first place in the Sixth District. In Saturday's report Miss Hazel led the entire district, while Miss Evelyn came third. But today positions are reversed, Miss Evelyn by sending in a long list of subscriptions has forged ahead to the leadership. All the people in that section including the young ladies themselves, are thoroughly enjoying the spirited rivalry. The best of feeling prevails and the interest deepens every day. Some of the friends are handing subscriptions to each, just to show that there is no partiality, but both ladies are showing exceptional ability as contest candidates and are collecting funds in a way that would shame any man who expresses a grouch about hard times.

Miss Maud Bailey is also making a most effective canvass in Rawdon township and her efforts are shown by the splendid total of votes to her credit.

Another worker who is doing remarkably well is Miss Murray of Springbrook. She has started later than some of the others but is meeting with a fine response in her district.

Miss Kerby of Stirling and Miss Lawrence of Tweed, and Miss Jean Thrasher of Stirling and Miss Benson of Ivanhoe are also well to the fore and may at any time advance to the lead.

Steady Work in Prince Edward.

The contest in Prince Edward or District VII. shows that earnest work is being done, but with no startling features. Miss Bass again advances to the lead with Mr. Thompson in second place, while Miss Belnap and Miss Wrese are close competitors. Miss Weller, a very popular young lady is also being actively supported by her friends, as is Miss Vera Thompson of Amelisburg. There is much speculation as to where the final honors will rest in Prince Edward.

A Close Race in District VIII.

In District VIII three ardent workers are making a close race for first position. In today's report Miss Archer of Marmora has arisen to the lead, but Mr. Cox and Miss Comerford are not very far behind. The people of Madoc and Marmora are watching the reports from their favorite workers with interest that deepens from day to day.

We would inform all candidates that weekly subscriptions that are changed to the daily edition and paid in advance will count as new subscriptions to the daily. For subscriptions paid in advance to the weekly we would now count half the unexpired time on the daily.

We will not however consider as new subscriptions daily subscriptions changed to the lower-price weekly.

There Goes My Last; I Have Given My All

As Mrs. Alex. Smith, Peterboro, kissed her khaki-clad boy good-bye she strove to keep back her tears, as she watched him board the train for Kingston Friday morning to join the 8th C. M. R. stationed at Barrieficld. Inquiry revealed the fact that Mrs. Smith has suffered all of her few years to leave the parental roof since the war broke out. With the exception of one in Scotland, all of them are now on active service, soon to be on the firing line. Private F. Smith is with the 39th Battalion at Sherncliffe, as is also Private J. Smith

Her last son, who departed Saturday, was private R. G. Smith, who enlisted for the 8th C. M. R.

Communication

The Editor of The Daily Ontario:
Dear Sir:—

From your report of the public meeting in the Armouries on Friday evening last, I note that under instruction the mail carriers have given a list of names of nine hundred residents in our city suitable for military service, and having heard some adverse comment regarding this source of information when printed Voters' Lists and City and Township Directories are in touch. As some doubt is expressed I make the inquiry about the quality of this information and what capabilities these men may have to specify enlistment availables.

Yours Respectfully,
Periscope.

TO ONTARIO CONTEST WORKERS

Owing to a very general demand upon the part of Contest Workers in the Rural Districts, The Ontario has complied with what seems to be but a reasonable request, and has decided to postpone the conclusion of The Panama-Pacific Contest for two weeks. That is to say the contest will end on August 19th instead of August 5th as originally announced. The Tourists will therefore leave Belleville on Monday August 23, instead of Monday August 9.

Workers in the country sections inform us that owing to the exceedingly heavy harvest and the exceptionally busy season of the year it has been absolutely impossible for them to canvass and cover more than a small section of their districts in the limited time at their disposal.

There will positively be no further changes of time, and every feature as originally advertised will be carried out to the letter, except that the time will be extended exactly two weeks.

This will relieve workers in the larger districts of the necessity of rushing everything through with inadequate time to make a proper canvass, and give them leisure to work out their plans which many have only now been putting into effect.

The time has been extended, but let no candidate who desires to win waste one moment, but let every bit its story of some fresh success.

Different and Better Clothes

The Two Piece Suit

This is the time of year when a man wants to wear as little as possible. If you wear one of our cool Two-Piece Suits, it's certain you won't "wear a worried look."

But there are two considerations in a Two-Piece Suit which call for the most competent tailoring. In the first place, the coat must be so tailored as to obviate the need of a vest. In the second place, as the fabrics are extremely light in weight, the tailoring must be done with the greatest skill.

Fabrics of cerefully selected Sun-Proof Serges, Worsteds, Homespuns, etc., etc.

If you'll step in and try on one of these cool Suits and then take a look in the mirror, you'll be surprised to see what a swell and comfortable lookipg fellow you are.

We've everything in wearables for a man's summer comfort.

Y.M.C.A. Boys' Camp Doings

On Wednesday evening Dr. Marshall and party motored out to pay us a visit. Dr. Marshall did a thing which in the minds of the boys established him as a proper candidate for Mayor. As soon as the fellows secured their franchise, this is what to did, presented to the boys the biggest and sweetest water melon they have seen for many seasons. Master Jack Marshall acted as Chief Carver. He made a great success of it. The fellows gave him three lusty cheers and a tiger. The boys then gathered around in their bodies blankets in front of the camp fire and each in turn entertained the rest with a humorous or thrilling story.

BOYS' CAMP FIELD DAY

Friday afternoon turned out to be the finest day imaginable. Nature made it appear glorious. The athletic field is located on a high elevation from which the spectators who gathered from the surrounding country could get a splendid view of the surroundings country. A GLORIOUS HIKE.

On Thursday morning all the boys of the camp agreed to go to the Trent Canal. "POP" Gifford put up a good meld in and of salmon sandwiches and each boy had to carry his own lunch ing the camp at nine o'clock they started out with the helpful thought regan which made everybody keep in step. Col. J. Ketcheson was in command and it is saying the least to say he made a fine ship commander.

While enroute the boys picked up all the information that was possible. Such as the different kinds of grain, cattle and points in farming, etc. Arriving at the dock the boys were not long in getting into their swimming suits and taking a header into the water. Some famous diving was indulged in, some fellows diving and swimming across the canal for the first time. After a good swim and after everybody had watched "Twig" Woodley take a high dive and "Dobby" fall to do the same, a good lunch was partaken of. After lunch in order to get rested for another swim, the boys all walked a wooden fence, climbed a bridge, climbed and tired themselves out. They then betook themselves back to the canal. Some more famous high diving and stunts were indulged in. The boys started for home and on their arrival at the camp they landed back at camp about all in.

Two Warships in Kingston Harbor

On Thursday morning, bright and early many persons were astonished to see two Canadian warships in the harbor. Out in the channel opposite the waterworks there was anchored the cruiser Gollineer and beside the Kingston Shipbuilding Wharf was the cruiser Vigilant. It seems that both cruisers had been given orders to be in Kingston harbor at the same time. The cruiser Gollinar has been engaged practically since the opening of hostilities along the Atlantic coast dragging for mines and the cruiser Vigilant has been stationed at Port Dover, on Lake Erie, guarding the Canadian fisheries. The latter boat formerly carried Marine duties as an agreement between the United States and Canada brought the elimination of these. Instead rifles are carried. Both cruisers are to remain in Kingston harbor until further orders, and according to some reports this city is to be made the headquarters at these boats, as this is where so many of the American foreign element land in Canada. The cruisers will be manned by reservists up and down the St. Lawrence river, between Kingston and Prescott.—Kingston Whig.

Important 1000 Island Transfer

The Batterman property on Larue Island has been sold to a Mr. Low, New York. It is understood the consideration was $55,000. This is one of the best properties on the Canadian side, being splendidly fitted up with electric light plant, waterbus plant, roomy yacht houses, etc. Mr. Low will not occupy his newly acquired property this season.—Gananoque Reporter.

"It Goes Well"

Lance Corporal Robt Caldwell, who enlisted at Cobourg and who was formerly of Campbellford, has written an interesting letter to the Editor of the Campbellford News, in which he says that in the French papers there has been the same heading over the war news for a few weeks. It is "On va bien." (It goes well.) He is with the machine gun section of the Second Battalion. It will be remembered that there was a Robt. Caldwell reported killed in action and at first it was thought to be the writer of this letter. That fortunately was not the case, in describing the last battle in which the Canadians were engaged he says:—

Two days after we had received the tobacco we went into the trenches and under a furious bombardment. Attacks were carried off by Canadians and Germans on our immediate left, indeed half our trenches had to be vacated so that the attacking troops could make the assault from there. During the complete engagement which, with its artillery preparation and the final bombardment, lasted some five days, I was busy, busy all keeping the enemy from repairing the damage done by the artillery. This was done by rapid fire on their parapets at irregular intervals and also on the first two nights. Later, during the assaults, with a continuous rapid fire maintained by the artillery we kept them from enfilading our troops as we dashed across the space between trenches. There were three attacks made before we could hold on our gains, so completely had the Hun consolidated his positions and so strong and extensive his counter attacks. We did not get off scot free for the enemy returned the artillery fire and in places our trenches were badly knocking wrecks. One of the boys from town said before we left the trenches, "Gee, I'm glad that the tobacco came in time." And so we were, for smoking proves one of the best reliefs you can get when under fire.

The Ontario Road Race

The annual Ontario Road Race for the beautiful Silver Cup donated by Messrs. Morton and Herity will be held, according to previous announcement, on Belleville's Civic Holiday, that is to say on Wednesday next. Already a number of inquiries have been received from those who propose to enter.

Last year the runners who entered were Jas. Alexander, Belleville; Percy Bowerman, Trenton; Sandy Mann, Belleville, and Olan. Shawman, of Trenton. The finish of the race was a "do" order measured.

James Alexander, Belleville's speedy marathon runner has now tied the race for two years in succession. We understand that he will again be a competitor this year, and if he wins the cup becomes his personal property But as several other anti-long distance runners are in the field, a fine contest is looked for.

The course is for three miles and will be the same as in previous years, that is to say start in front of The Ontario Office at 10 o'clock a.m. July 28th. Up Front street to Bridge, along Bridge to Albert, down Albert to Dundas, along Dundas a point below Hour of Refuge, and one and a half miles from Ontario office. Return by same route.

The race is open to all amateur runners in Hastings or Prince Edward Counties, City of Belleville or Town of Trenton

Other prizes for those in 2nd, 3rd and 4th places will be donated by Belleville merchants.

Tried Them and Found Them Good

That's Why Miss Renshaw Recommends Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Wiarton Lady Troubled With Kidney Disease Finds Relief and Cure in Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Wiarton, Ont., July 26—Special.—"I have found Dodd's Kidney Pills all that is claimed for them and can highly recommend them to all who are suffering from weak Kidneys. So says Miss Hannah E. Renshaw, an estimable lady living here. Miss Renshaw had Kidney trouble and found a cure in Dodd's Kidney Pills. Speaking of the troubles that led her to use Dodd's Kidney Pills, Miss Renshaw says.

"I had cramps in my muscles and very bad headaches. Some nights I got very little sleep. My skin was Lamb and came off in little scales.

"I had rheumatism at times and always a heavy feeling in the region of my Kidneys. There were dark circles under my eyes, my face was bloated and pasty.

"Reading in Dodd's Almanac led me to use Dodd's Kidney Pills, and I can't be too thankful that I did."

Miss Renshaw's troubles came from disordered Kidneys. That's why she found such complete relief in Dodd's Kidney Pills. They always cure Sick Kidneys.

Port Hope Boy Drowned

Oliver Moffat, the ten-year-old son of Mr. O. H. Moffat, was accidently drowned in Port Hope Harbour on Sunday afternoon about 4 o'clock. The little lad had been learning to swim recently and jumped into the harbour to bathe going beyond his depth. He over-estimated his ability and sank almost immediately. The body was recovered by Capt. McMahon, but efforts to resuscitate him proved in vain.

..Trial is inexpensive.— To those who suffer from dyspepsia, indigestion, rheumatism or any ailment arising from derangement of the digestive system, a trial of Parmelee's Vegetable Pills is recommended, should the sufferer be unacquainted with them. The trial will be inexpensive and the result will be another testimonial for this excellent medicine. So effective is their action that many cures can certainly be traced to their use where other pills have proved ineffective.

Off to Pricne Edward

Forth from the prairie, so boundless and wide,
We're homeward bound, homeward bound;
We've laid all care and our business aside,
We're homward bound, homeward bound;
We're off to Picton, to us it is dear,
Fathers and mothers, to bring you good cheer;
Warm is your welcome, your hearts are sincere,
We're homeward bound, homeward bound.
Merry the train that is speeding us through,
Pancakes we'll have and a pumpkin pie too,
Steak with good gravy that mother can make;
Dish, deep and brimful, of hot johnny cake,
Relished the more for the mother-love's sake.
Father will talk of the good olden days,
Driving away with a fine span of bays;
Picton to Bloomfield and Wellington Beach,
Sandbanks, returning so charming to each;
Then on the Bay sailing, to down to Long Reach.
Each one will gladly at home take a rest,
We're home at last, home at last;
Spending the time with the ones we love best,
We're home at last, home at last;
Treas'ring the words of the old folks alone;
Absence out West we'll attempt to shun,
Lingering lovingly round the hearth-stone,
We're home at last, home at last.
—Dr. A. E. Blakely in Picton Gazette.

Rev. Alfred Young Leaves Wellington

The Rev. Alfred Young, who for two and a half years has ministered to the congregations of the Friends Churches at Wellington and Bloomfield, has received an unanimous call to the pastorate of the Friends Church at Newmarket, and has accepted the invitation. Mr. and Mrs. Young have made many friends during their residence in Wellington, and the good wishes of all will follow them to their new sphere of labour.

Mr. Young takes up his work at Newmarket on the first Sunday in August, consequently he will say farewell to his present congregations on Sunday next, July 25th.

There will doubtless in the morning, and Bloomfield in the afternoon to bid God-speeed to Mr. and Mrs. Young. Mr. Young will give his last address at the Methodist church, Wellington, next Sunday evening.

Mr. Young's departure will be a distinct loss to the community in which he was a man of fine type of character, and his work and influence has been of great benefit to all those with whom he came in contact.—Picton Gazette.

Good Bass Fishing

Messrs. W. H. Hubbell, John Gehan and Lorne Hubbell had a great day's fishing at Crowe Lake last Friday. They brought home 34 fine bass, returning a number of smaller ones to the water. Some of these fish were very large and the whole lot were above the average. They also secured one 'lunge, three others getting away from them. A number of others also report an excellent day's sport.

Got Suspended Sentence and Joins the Soldiers

On Monday Reuben Graham and Lavern Wright, Bewdley, appeared before Judge Ward in the County Judge's Criminal Court charged with stripping horses of the hair on their tails and manes. Graham was found guilty and discharged, while Wright pleaded guilty. He came up before the judge and was let off on suspended sentence, he having agreed to sign up for overseas service. The Judge gave Wright some good advice, warning him that the offence to which he had pleaded guilty was punishable by several year term in penitentiary. Wright went out of court with Capt. Neilson who promised to look after him.—Cobourg Sentinel Star.

Child Fell Through Bridge and Drowned

A sad drowning accident occured at the head gates between MacIntosh Mills and Graham Lake on Sunday afternoon, when the four-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Moses Leeder lost her life. Four little children, three girls and a boy, were picking flowers, and were attracted to the gate seeing some flowers on the other side, ventured across. The youngest of the four fell through the slimit opening in the bridge. Her little brother, only six years, worked like a little hero trying to save his sister, while the other two ran for their parents. Medical aid was quickly summoned, but it was too late.—Gananoque Reporter.

Boys Got a Fright

While out berry picking the other day one of our local residents accompanied by his son and boy companion put up a joke that fairly scared the lads out of a year's growth, in fact the very mention of a "bear" startled them. When all were deeply interested in picking the luscious fruit the father shouted 'a bear' and started with his hat in his hand, to run it towards the clearing. With a scream of fright the boys dropped their pails and in less time than it takes to pen it they had gained the road where they stood trembling like the aspen leaf and could hardly be induced to go back when they were told it was only a joke. One of the boys vows that if he ever gets a chance he will lobb off on the old gentleman just to get even.—Tweed Advocate.

Trent Becoming Popular

Trent River is fast coming into its own again, after a season's quiet past month. The cottages are nearly all taken at this popular resort and the dancing pavilion is once more crowded every night by the young people intent upon having a good time.—Norwood Register.

Wrongfully Accused

Mr. Abner Mouck was summoned to Preston on Tuesday to answer to a charge of having run his auto in that place without the registration lights on the evening of July 3rd. In answering the summons he took with him Mr. R. Patterson as a witness and also sworn affidavits from other local residents to show that he was home on the date in question. On reaching Preston and upon the advice of Dr. Stafford Quinn he obtained legal counsel and it was fortunate that he did so, as Mouck seemed best on convicting his regardless of the evidence produced. We understand that Mr. Mouck was never in Preston until summoned there and it seems very clear that the official "spotter" of that little burg has been treated to an optical illusion, or simply got the wrong number. The court reserved judgment for 10 days. Mr. Mouck has been put to considerable expense and the party or parties responsible should be made to make restitution.—Tweed Advocate.

Horses Fed on Hemlock Bush

Mr. J. R. Johnson has just returned from a visit to Jamestown, N.Y., and among the side trips he took was one to attend the races at Warren, Pa. While there he had the satisfaction of seeing two Canadian horses carry off the money in the 2.11 and the 2.15 classes, with a field of thirteen and eight starters respectively. In the 2.15 class was a horse from London, Ont., Major Kelly, and although there were stiff odds against him, Dick's loyalty to anything Canadian impelled him to back the horse. After he had won this race and was leading in, he was mistaken for the owner, and was met with cries of "Canadian ringer." Dick's retort was prompt and characteristic. He said, "He's not a ringer, and more than that, I wintered him on hemlock brush. If he had had the same feed as the Kentucky horses he went up against he could beat an aeroplane." His remark "brought down the house," and afterwards he was pointed out as the man who raised horses on hemlock brush.

Mr. Johnson was very much impressed with Jamestown. It has two hundred establishments, and is the cleanest city he has ever been in.

Rest Place for U. S. President

Efforts are being made by a syndicate of prominent Washington men to purchase the summer home of George C. Boldt, known as Boldt Castle, on Heart Island, opposite Alexandria Bay. It is pointed out that the Thousand Islands would make an ideal place for the president to spend the summer, on account of the cooling breezes and the variety of entertainment afforded.

Should the president desire privacy it is only necessary to prevent any boats landing at the island and he could remain for days without being disturbed by outsiders. Though the Thousand Islands are on the northern frontier of the country it is but 24 hours' ride from Washington and the president could easily return to the capital if urgent business summoned him there.—Gananoque Reporter.

District 8 Cinched by Campbellford

Campbellford cinched O.A.L.A. intermediate district No. 8 on Wednesday, when they defeated Hastings in the latter place by a score of 5-6. This makes Campbellford's fifth consecutive victory and they expect to go a long way in the intermediate series.

A large number of fans accompanied the club to Hastings. Their car in some going with a load and several carryalls conveyed a crowd of boys. The game was fairly clean, although a few field fights marred the day's pleasure. Both teams played excellent lacrosse, the score being tied twice, in the second quarter at 3-3 and 4-4, but Hastings never led. The grounds which were very uneven favored Hastings as they were familiar with the humps and holes while our boys would stumble.—News

Auto Struck by Train

Going to Brockville on Monday an automobile owned and driven by J. McConnell, of Lyndhurst, and containing Mr. and Mrs. H. Mooney, their son Travers, Miss Alma Graham and Miss Beatrice Webster, of Lyndhurst, was struck by a westbound train at Glen Buell crossing. All the victims were taken on the train to Athens, and later Mr. McConnell was taken to the hospital in Brockville with his right leg fractured at the knee, and injuries to his head. Young Mooney, who sustained severe cuts about the head and eyes was also taken there. Miss Graham and the other occupants who were injured remained in Athens.—Gananoque Reporter.

Change in Management

Mr. Duncan Kerr, the genial manager of the St. Lawrence Hall Hotel, Campbellford, is retiring and the business will be taken over about the end of July by his son, Mr. Jas. Kerr, who returned this week from Edmonton. We predict for the latter a large patronage and goodwill which his father has enjoyed during the many years he has been in charge of this popular hotel.—News.

Military Notes

Recruiting in outside points has sprung up again with a great deal of activity. In two days no less than 17 recruits have been secured by a recruiting officer for the 49th Regiment.

The Fifteenth Regiment has taken up its recruiting quarters with the 49th Regiment in the tent on the Armouries lawn. A large placard at a desk reads "This is the city regiment office."

Sergeant Joseph Douch has received clippings from the Daily Express, London, which show the active part his old regiment, the 23rd London Regiment, is taking in the war. Sergeant Douch was formerly senior colour sergeant and musketry instructor of this regiment. This regiment carried three successive lines of German trenches in a charge that bids fair to come historic. The charge was made at a point where the regulars had failed three or four times. It took place at 6.30 in the evening with the bayonet. The German trenches were held by the Prussian Guard. The trench was occupied under great difficulties all night. Countless deeds of heroism were performed.

In the charge 157 men of the 23rd were killed. The Daily Express contains their names, many of them familiar to Bergt. Douch.

Harold Buchanan and Harold Ingram of the 26th Battery, C. F. A., Valcartier are in the city on a visit to their parents.

Pte. Arthur Moon of the 59th Battalion C. E. F., was in town yesterday.

Harry Symons recently went to Kingston with the 49th detachment to join the 8th C. M. R.

AWFUL ACT OF DEMENTED MAN AT PORT HOPE

Twelve-Year-Old Elsie Tate Murdered by Father During a Spell of Temporary Insanity.

PORT HOPE, July 27—(Special) — During a spell of mental strain, Edward Tate, Francis street, murdered his youngest daughter, Elsie, about six o'clock yesterday morning.

Tate had shown no signs of mental derangement and yesterday, as is his usual custom, attended the three services in the Salvation Army. At the close of the evening meeting he chatted with the comrades and to all appearances was quite rational.

During the night several cats congregated in Tate's back yard and their continual noise kept him awake. About a quarter to six yesterday morning he got up and chased the cats and after a little trouble caught his own. When bringing it to the house, the cat scratched his head and in a fit of anger Tate rushed to the woodshed, secured an axe, and cut off the cat's head. With the axe flourishing in the air, Tate proceeded to his house and up to his daughter's bed room. The little girl was lying on her left side, sound asleep. The father swung the axe with terrific force, striking her fairly across the right side of the neck, inflicting a terrible gash and severing the jugular vein. The blow must have been very heavy, as the one was sufficient to cause death, and the axe was very dull and the head quite loose on the handle. It is thought that the little girl met instant death and that she never realized what had happened. Mrs. Tate, in fear and trembling rushed to a neighbor's hour and probably thus averted another catastrophe.

The police were summoned and after Tate had washed and shined his shoes, he accompanied the officers without the slightest protest.

In the jail yesterday morning Tate at times, was quite rational, other times he wandered and turned hand springs all over the cell. When rational, he expressed his regrets at the tragic affair, and stated that he would willingly give up his life to protect the children. He could offer no explanation for the rash act and said it all appeared as a dream. It is known that Tate was very fond of his children and certainly must have been suffering a great mental worry when he committed the act.

In the Police Court yesterday morning, when the charge of murder was read, Tate stood with his head buried in his hands. He was not asked to plead and the case adjourned till Saturday. In the meantime he will remain in custody at Cobourg.

It was a sad, and sight to gaze upon the lifeless form of the innocent child. At the undertaker's parlors she lay clad only in her night dress, her face covered with blood, and her head almost severed from the body. She was a bright little child and of an exceptionally kind and loving disposition and was but twelve years of age.

Mr. and Mrs. Tate, parents of the prisoner, have been residents of Port Hope for many years and are held in the highest esteem by every citizen. This tragic affair comes as a great shock to them and much sympathy is extended by their numerous friends.

Coroner Addrich ordered an inquest and the jury viewed the body last evening at A. W. George & Son's private morgue.

BECKER MUST DIE; NEW TRIAL DENIED HIM

NEW YORK, July 29.—Justice Ford of the supreme court last night denied a new trial to Charles Becker, the former police lieutenant under sentence of death for instigating the murder of Herman Rosenthal, the gambler. This decision means that Becker must be electrocuted tomorrow.

Justice Ford announced his decision at 10 o'clock last night in his chambers on the top floor of a downtown office building where he had laboured for several days and nights on the briefs submitted for and against the application for a new trial.

Justice Ford's decision covered five full pages of legal cap paper, and contained about 1500 words. It goes into the details of the affidavits filed by the attorneys for Becker, and declares that the evidence proffered "is for the most part cumulative, and hence insufficient."

In conclusion the court says: "As I studied the authorities and examined the affidavits, the conviction has grown upon me that it (a new trial) could not be granted without disregarding the law and attempting to usurp the functions of another department of government. The motion is therefore denied."

The opinion dismisses the affidavits are immaterial and incompetent.

Becker laforsed.

OSSINING, N. Y., July 29.—Chas. Becker, in the death house at Sing-Sing Prison, last night received calmly the news that the appeal for a new trial had been denied. Deputy Warden Johnson told him of the failure of the appeal. Warden T. M. Osborne was much affected by the news.

Father Cashin, the condemned man's spiritual advisor, said later that Becker bore up well.

Becker had been waiting for some news, and when the deputy warden reached his cell, enquired: "Have I lost?"

Mr. Johnson replied: "Yes, Charlie I am very sorry to say you have."

Becker's voice was thick as he said: "I had been hoping against hope that I would win, and I am disappointed. I am not afraid to die."

WILL PUNISH THE TURKS FOR EVERY ATROCITY

LONDON, July 29.—The Earl of Crewe, Lord President of the Council, replying in the House of Lords yesterday to a question by Lord Bryce concerning the killing of Christians in Armenia by the Turks, said that information received at the Foreign Office showed that such crimes lately had increased, both in number and in degree of atrocity. They included, he declared, both wholesale massacre and wholesale deportations. were carried out under the guise of enforced evacuation. Similiar crimes he added, had been committed by the Turks against Christians on the Persian border.

The presence of the Germans and the influence they exercised had been the Earl of Crewe continued, "an absolute and unmitigated curse both to the Christian and Moslem populations. They have shown a most complete cynical disregard for the country and the people who inhabit it."

The Lord President of the Council said he regretted that it was impossible to take immediate steps for the suppression of such atrocities, but that those responsible for them will ultimately would receive just punishment.

Big Fire in Belfast Caused by Germans?

BELFAST, July 29.—A blaze of mysterious origin yesterday did $200,000 damage to sheds containing large stores of government supplies. Spies are suspected.

The shed was located near the Duffern docks. Besides large stores of fodder and other supplies, it contained a supply of flour, the gift of Canadian organizations to the British Government.

"In Alsace we have occupied two enemy blockhouses to the east of Linge kopf and Schratzmaenele."

The fighting here is in the principal Fecht Valley.

GERMAN ENVELOPING MOVEMENT DEFEATED.

LONDON, July 29.—Petrograd despatches this morning say reports from the front indicate the continued holding up of Von Mackensen's army in the influence they exercised had been the Earl of Crewe continued, "an absolute and unmitigated curse both to the Christian and Moslem populations. They have shown a most complete cynical disregard for the country and the people who inhabit it."

The Lord President of the Council said he regretted that it was impossible to take immediate steps for the suppression of such atrocities, but that those responsible for them will ultimately would receive just punishment.

COLONISTS TO BE SENT TO GERMAN SOUTHWEST AFRICA

LONDON, July 29.—A Reuter's despatch from Capetown says that General Smuts, Minister of the Interior of the Union of South Africa, in a speech dealing with the future of German Southwest Africa, announced that the government was planning to send there a strong body of colonists from British South Africa. Those who have borne the weight of the burden will have the preference General Smuts declared.

GERMAN CHANCELLOR'S SIGNIFICANT STATEMENT.

BERLIN, July 29.—The Imperial Chancellor Von Bethmann-Hollweg has returned from the general headquarters, but nothing regarding the results of his conference with the Emperor has been ascertained at present beyond confirmation of the statement that the German answer to the American Note will not be delivered for some time, if indeed it is decided to prepare an answer.

There is no chance whatever of formal abandonment of the submarine warfare on the present basis it is declared.

WAR COST TO FRANCE.

PARIS, July 29.—The first five months of the great war cost France exactly 6,403,000,000 francs ($1,280,000,000). This is shown by the report of the budget committee on supplementary military and naval credits just issued.

U. S. DEMAND PAYMENT FOR LOST STEAMER.

WASHINGTON, July 29.—State department officials are today drafting a note to Germany demanding payment for loss of the U. S. steamer Leeland torpedoed by a German submarine off the Orkney Islands last Sunday on the ground of violation of the Prussian-American treaty of 1828.

CORRUPT PRACTICES AMONG JAPANESE MINISTERS.

TOKIO, July 29.—Viscount Kanatake Oura, the Japanese Minister of Justice, suddenly resigned his position today following the investigation instituted by the Ministry of Justice into the bribery charges growing out of the parliamentary elections last March. His arrest is expected and the case involves several members and members of the Imperial Diet.

BRUSSELS TO PAY FOR DESTROYED ZEPPELIN.

PARIS, July 29.—Another fine of one million dollars has been imposed on the city of Brussels by the German authorities in consequence of the destruction of a Zeppelin dirigible balloon at Evere by aviators of the entente allies.

"JULIETS" TOMB NEARLY DESTROYED BY AEROPLANE.

ROME, July 29.—The Venice Gazzettino reports a thrilling battle between an Austrian aeroplane and Italian troops at Vercna in the course of which the aeroplane came near destroying the famous tomb of Juliet, known to the world through Shakespeare's play "Romeo and Juliet."

ALLIES WILL CHECKMATE BIG MOVE

ATHENS, July 29.—Enver Pasha issued an extraordinary order to all the troops on the Gallipoli Peninsula before the last big attack. It ran thus: "Soldiers you will fight with all your strength. At least you will resist as long as possible, for I can promise you within a few months' time I shall be able to thank you in your bosoms. The life of Serbia cannot now last longer than a month. Within that time the German army will crush her and will come to our aid."

"I learn that great pressure has been put on the Germans by the Young Turks to fulfil the promise to send German armies through the Balkans to the assistance of the Turkish forces. The Young Turks regard the achievement of that plan as the only hope for the present Turkish Empire in Europe.

A prominent military expert who has just completed a tour of the Balkan States and who latterly has been in Austria expresses to me the belief that such an effort will be the next great move on the part of the Austrians and Germans. Should this cross move be made it will have immediate and important results in the corner of Europe. It would be useless to give details that are known to a few here but it is permissible to say that counter-balancing events are moving rapidly and the enemy's plans may quite possibly be nipped in the bud by a surprising move, of which the public should hear at an early date.

Russians Strongly Hold Positions Along Narew

PETROGRAD, July 29.—The following official communication was issued by the war office today:

"On the Narew front there has been a violent artillery fire on the left bank of the river to the river Pruth. Stubborn fighting took place but did not result in any change. On the line of the front of the right bank of the Narew, we repulsed six attacks near the village of Budy (southeast of Pultusk).

"North of Maldane we assumed the offensive and captured 1500 prisoners.

"South of Sokal we have assumed the offensive against the enemy, who is crossing the river near Poriesk."

PREMIER SURE OF VICTORY FOR ALLIED CAUSE

LONDON, July 29.—Before adjournment of the British Parliament for a recess of six weeks, Premier Asquith in the House of Commons yesterday emphasized his confidence of the victory of the Allies in France and Belgium, of the Russians in Poland and of the Anglo-French expedition on the Dardanelles. He paid a particular tribute to the valor of the Russian army, saying that he did not think that in the whole military history had there been a more magnificant example of discipline and endurance and of both individual and collective initiative than had been shown by the whole Russian army in the past few weeks. The British fleet also came in for high tribute. It was today far stronger than at the beginning of the war and to its activity was due the fact that the seas are clear, or substantially clear.

Foes Unable to Budge Russian Defensive Line

LONDON, July 29.—Although the Germans are using very strong reinforcements of men and guns, they have not yet succeeded in breaking the Russian resistance either around Warsaw or in Kovno and Courland Provinces, in each of which sectors heavy fighting has been in progress for nearly a fortnight.

Except for the capture of the village of Gorzyrovo, on the Narew front and a number of prisoners and machine guns at that point and between Mitau and the Niemen, the German official report, issued today, does not claim any advance.

In fact, Gen. von Buelow, in the north, and Field Marshal Prince Hindenburg, who crossed the Narew at some points, are being held up by Russian counter-attacks, which, although probably costly to the Russians, show that there is still plenty of fight left in them.

American Marines to Land in Haiti

WASHINGTON, July 29.—American marines will be landed at Port au Prince, Haiti, to protect the lives and property of Americans and other foreigners. Instructions were sent to Rear-Admiral Caperton late yesterday by the navy department.

Enveloping Movement Broken Up

LONDON, July 29.—Petrograd despatches this morning say reports from the front indicate the continued holding up of Von Mackensen's army in the influence they exercised had been the Earl of Crewe continued, "an absolute and unmitigated curse both to the Christian and Moslem populations. They have shown a most complete cynical disregard for the country and the people who inhabit it."

The Lord President of the Council said he regretted that it was impossible to take immediate steps for the suppression of such atrocities, but that those responsible for them will ultimately would receive just punishment.

New British Note to United States

Two Turkish Vessels Sunk by Russians

Kills His Wife for Praising Enemy

PARIS, July 29.—Because she persistently praised Germany, Andre Barbier, a Lyons engineer, slew his German wife with a revolver last month. A court-martial today acquitted him on his statement that she daily ridiculed his patriotism and scoffed at the French Army.

SUBMARINE ANTIDOTES.

A writer in The Navy, the official organ of the Navy League, discusses at considerable length the question of protection against submarine attack. He observes that as regards the actual protection of warships themselves there are three leading methods. (1) net defence; (2) armoring outside of hull; (3) internal protection by transverse and longitudinal bulkheads coal bunkers, and strong pumping appliances.

In regard to nets, to be any avail against modern torpedoes, equipped with net-cutting devices, the netting would have to be so strong and heavy as to hamper the speed of the ship to an extent not to be contemplated—to an extent, indeed, which would actually invite destruction—and so for the present nets are of little avail.

As the writer puts it, "you cannot reconcile nets with speed. And this is a war in which speed plays an important part, both strategically and tactically. Look at any map of the areas in which hostilities are being carried out at sea. It will be realized then that this war is pelagic—that is, it is being worked out in four 'interior seas'—the North Sea and Baltic Sea in the northern area, the Mediterranean and Black Sea in the southern area. Under these conditions of 'interior seas' the hostile naval bases are brought close to each other, and rapid concentration of warships at any desired point by high speed must be employed. The time-distance scale of fighting is so contracted that speed must be available at the shortest notice. Could the fastest naval battle in history—the Dogger Bank action—have been fought out by our ships had the Lion been crawling about with nets down, for fear of some hostile submarine? The choice lies between Nets and Speed. Nets have proved worthless, so it must be Speed."

As to armoring the hulls, the main objection is the increased weight: "The use of armor on the submerged portions of the hull liable to torpedo attack has never been put into actual use in any warship, weight has been the greatest objection to its use. Last summer Professor Sir J. H. Biles read a very interesting paper on this subject before a joint meeting of three associations of naval architects and shipbuilders. The general consensus of opinion was against the adoption of armor in this form on the score of extra weight. Sir Philip Watts, K.C.B., roughly estimated that external armoring to the submerged portions of a modern battleship's hull would involve 3,000 to 4,000 tons extra displacement and an increase of 200,000 pounds in cost. A constructional difficulty is also said to lie in the application of the armor to the form of the hull, especially towards the end of warships." With respect to internal protection by sub-division, the losses experienced during the present war, in spite of the precautions which have been adopted in this way, have told their own tale.

THE ITALIAN POLICY.

The ultimate objects of Italian military policy have not yet declared themselves, but there seems to be, the Manchester Guardian points out, two possible directions which it may take. One view is that the best service which Italy can render to herself and the Allies is to occupy as much as she can of "unredeemed Italy" in the Tyrol, in Carinthia and Dalmatia. An aggressive policy of that kind would, it is now evident, consume the whole strength of the Italian army; but there is this to be said for it, that it keeps the Italian army where it would be most needed should the threats of a great Austro-German offensive stand for a real danger.

The other view of the sound military policy for Italy to pursue is that she should confine herself to a strictly defensive policy on her northern frontiers, and so keep a considerable fraction of her army for service elsewhere, whether in the Dardanelles or conceivably on the French frontiers. By a "strictly defensive policy," it is not, of course, meant, the Guardian explains, that the present policy of seizing the important strategic positions on the frontier is unwise. On the contrary, it would seem to be the true and defensive policy.

"The difference between a policy of offence and one of defence on this northern front would seem to lie rather in the use to which it is proposed to put the successes gained. The offensive policy would regard them at bases of attack later, and that would absorb all Italy's military strength. But in the alternative policy these points gained would be regarded mainly as advanced posts for the defence of Italy from invasion, which is very properly the main thing from the Italian point of view. Such a policy, if accompanied by a system of field fortification, might make Italian frontiers impregnable to attack and still leave over a great many men for offensive war outside Italy. Italy is not a good base for attack on Austria, and provided that she can make her frontiers secure her best offence might well be furnished on other military fronts."

The first indication of coming trouble between the Allies themselves is afforded in the case of Italy and Serbia. Serbian troops recently occupied Durazzo, on the Albanian coast of the Adriatic, but withdrew therefrom under pressure from Italy. Italy wants to control the Adriatic herself. The Serbians still hold a position, however, that dominates Durazzo. Is the history of the two Balkan wars to be repeated on a large scale?

The New York Sun, which has shown a knowledge in war matters equalled by few journals, does not look for an early end of the war. Germany, it says, shows no signs of exhaustion. Her harvest is good, her factories are at the maximum efficiency, and she is still able to place vast masses of men in the fighting line. On the other side, while Russia has suffered a series of severe defeats, her resources in men are practically inexhaustible. In the case of France, while that country has suffered a heavier drain than any of the Allies, the war is felt by her to be a battle for existence and every man and woman in France is still ready to fight to the last cartridge. Britain, the New York Sun considers, is the strongest of the Allies, and there the determination still is to see the war through.

Although the war is said to be one in support of the principle of democracy, there is little of that principle to be found in Russia, one of the principal nations of the Allies. Russia, says the Geo. Kennan writing in the New York Outlook, has a so-called Parliament, but the upper chamber, under complete control of the Czar, can override the popular chamber at will. This upper chamber has used the power it possesses to negative all really progressive measures adopted by the popular branch of Parliament. It has refused assent, among others, to bills to promote elementary education, to authorize private citizens to prosecute officials guilty of illegal actions, and has even blocked one designed to permit changes of religious faith. The provincial councils are not allowed to discuss national affairs, public meetings of a political nature are forbidden, and the newspapers of the country are restrained by a strict censorship.

The resignation of Zographos, Greek Minister of Foreign Affairs, can bear but one interpretation. He succeeded Venezelos when the latter was turned out of office by the coup d'etat executed by King Constantine, who is Kaiser Wilhelm's brother-in-law. Since then Venezelos has been returned to Parliament, receiving for himself and his policy an immense popular endorsement. When Parliament meets, Venezelos will be in control. He is the friend of the Allies, and wanted to throw the weight of Greek arms into the scales in their favor. He believes in the submission of Greece to the control of the Ottoman Empire. King Constantine is a very sick man, and when Venezelos resumes office he will be in no condition to repeat his coup d'etat of last March. The King may have to choose submission and abdication. Reinforcements from Greece will be cordially appreciated by the Anglo-French army on the Dardanelles shore.

THE COPY BOY ON RUSSIA.

I shall not rest my faith again on Russia and her fighting men
I'm off the romantic for good or whatsoever now they would tew follow them through all those towns is much like rooting for the browns

One's faith endeavors to be fast but cums a cropper at the last

I know not what is to that ails
the czar's great army that it fails
But this I do know true but sad whatever ails it ails it bad

It may be it is short of guns
God wot I only know it runs from hill to hill from stream to stream
Until it winds my poor esteem

it is tew laff I thought the bear would show the Germans up for fair
And in a fit of great prepense
I bet the sum of fifty cents

ah well I mite have guessed perhaps when russia yielded to the Japs
But who had thought that bets with care a dachshund could chew up a bear

Other Editors' Opinions

THE "WAYS OF FREEDOM."

It was a Frenchman, M. Lemaitre, who some years ago reminded the world that it would have to take the defects of liberty along with its blessings. The ways of democracy cannot be those of absolutism. Endless debate, political agitation, popular outcries, a certain amount of wasted energy—those things, said he, are the "moeurs de la liberte." We are often tempted to deplore what seems to be the inevitable inefficiency of a democratic form of government, and sometimes envy the relentless order and deadly precision of an autocratic organization; but we have to make our choice between the essential principles of the two. If we go in for political freedom we have to put up with some of its "ways" that are not pleasing. A tyranny is smooth working, but not for that reason would we prefer to be subject to it. With all its faults we love the political system of liberty.

These homely truths are just now getting a fresh and striking illustration in England. In the midst of a war which is straining the resources of the British Empire, partisan discussions break out violently, a bitter press campaign is set on foot against the Government a recasting of the Cabinet is forced, the wisdom of the entire military policy of the country is challenged, and it might seem to an outsider as if English public life were falling into chaos. These things are certainly not edifying. They make a bad impression abroad. What becomes of the boasted unity and the determination of England in fighting this war to a finish, if parties fall to quarelling, statesmen begin gibing at each other, and powerful newspapers set about railing like a very drab? Well, all that need be said is that this is the English way. It has been bred in the bone for centuries. That a man should not boldly say what he believes; that the Government should compel assent and put down critics by force—these are the unthinkable things in the long English tradition. It is asserting itself today, with the nation borne under the burden of war, just as it did in the Napoleonic War, the Boer War. It is one of he ways of English freedom.

If you want an example of the other thing, you have only to go to Germany, under war conditions. A "neutral" observer, with special knowledge and unusual facilities for obtaining information, has been writing to the London Times a series of letters on the state of mind of the German people. In general, he has given them high praise. So he does in his latest letter, in which he deals with the activities of the various classes towards the war. This is not easy to determine for several reasons. Occasional private complaints are heard but, as a rule, "official and semi-official versions of things are accepted blindly." Moreover, there is a "military prevention of all unofficial propagands adverse to the war." Many workingmen are discontented with their share in the huge profits of the war-industries, but "strikes are not permitted." It is known, too that the press is held under rigid government control. It is not merely a question of censorship of news, but of restricted editorial discussion. Suppression or suppression hangs over the head of the too daring newspaper, in short, almost all the means of free public expression are denied. A German merchant cannot even go out and offer a premium for gold; if he does, he is in danger of being at once clapped into jail. Such an overflow of bad temper and unpleasant charges against the responsible rulers as we are now witnessing in Great Britain would be wholly impossible in the Germany of today. The contrast between the two nations could not be more glaring. The German machine is running at high speed with scarcely a sign of friction; the English groans and creaks as if it were about to fall to pieces.

It is not. Everybody knows that these acrimonious debates—these unseemly squabblings—do not in the least indicate a relaxing in England's purpose. On the German comments show that the real significance of what is going on is not lost. At first, certain encouragement seemed to be derived by Germany from the English political upheaval. But second thoughts brought the reminder that such things had occurred before, and that they only represented England's customary fashion of floundering through to her object with a great deal of ill temper and much lost motion. The very men who are kicking up the needless row are the loudest in affirming that the nation is bound to see the war through. There is a great deal of political confusion and dust visible, but behind it all the attentive eye can see the unbroken British resolution.—New York Evening Post.

A FOOL AND HIS MONEY

BY GEORGE BARR McCUTCHEON

"Very much better, thank you," was so good of you to stop the work, mary."

"Won't you take off your veil and stay awhile?" I asked, politely fearful.

"It is not quite fair to me, you know."

Her next remark brought a blush of confusion to my cheek. I silly notion had indoced me to don my full evening regalia, sybtenil cost and all. Nothing could have been more badly crossly incongruous than my appearance. I was mad. I never felt more uncomfortable in my life.

"How very nice you look in your new suit," she said, and I was sure she was mufiled quality in her ordinarily clear, musical voice. She was laughing at me. "Are you giving a dinner party?"

"I usually dress for dinner," I lied with some haughtiness. "And so does Poupendyke," I added as an afterthought. My blush deepened as I recalled the attenuated blazer in which my secretary breakfasted, lunched and dined without discrimination.

"For Clematis, I presume."

"Aha! You do know Gretel, then?"

"Oh, I've known her for years. Isn't she a dear old dear?"

"I shall discharge her in the morning," said I solemnly. "She is a liar, and her husband is a poitroon. They positively deny your existence in any shape or form."

"They won't pay any attention to you," said she, with a laugh. "They are fixtures, quite as much so as the walls themselves. You'll not be able to discharge them. My grandfather said it the years ago and I believe it. After that he made it a point to discharge Conrad and the dog and leave Gretel every other day. As well try to remove the mountain. Mr. Smart. They know you can't get on without them."

"I have discharged her on a cook," I said triumphantly. "A new one will be here by the end of the week."

"Oh," she sighed plaintively, "how glad I am! I like a atrocious cook. I don't like to complain, Mr. Smart, but really it is getting so that I can't eat anything she sends up. It is jolly of you to get in a new one. Now we shall be very happy."

"By Jove!" said I, completely staggered by these revelations.

"I have decided it over, Mr. Smart," she went on in a businesslike manner, "and I think we will get along much better together if we stay apart."

Ambiguous remarks ordinarily reach my intelligence, but I was so stunned by preceding admissions that I could only gasp:

"Do you mean to say you've been subsisting all this time on my food?"

"Oh, dear me, no! How can you think that of me? Gretel keeps me from the food I buy. She keeps a distinct and separate account of everything, poor thing, and some day you will not find anything wrong with your bills, Mr. Smart. Never did you hear what I said a moment ago?"

"I'm quite sure that I did."

"I prefer to let matters stand just as they are. Why should we discommods each other? We are perfectly satisfied as we?"

"I will not have my new cook giving notice, madam. You surely can't expect her—for him—to prepare meals for two separate?"

"I hadn't thought of that," she interrupted ruefully. "Perhaps if I were to pay her—or him—extra wages it might be arranged," she added quickly. "We do not require much, you know."

I laughed rather shortly—meanly, I fear.

"This is most extraordinary, madame!"

"I—I quite agree with you. I'm awfully sorry it had to turn out as it has. Who would have dreamed of your being the place and coming here to upset everything?"

I resolved to be firm with her. She seemed to be taking too much for granted. "Much as I regret it, madame, I am compelled to ask you to evacuate—to get out, in fact. This sort of thing can't go on."

She was silent for so long that I experienced a slow growth of compunction. Just as I was on the point of slightly receding from my position, she gave me another shock.

"I don't think it would be awfully convenient if you had a telephone put in, Mr. Smart?" she said. "It is such a nuisance to send Max or Rudolph over to town every whipsitch on errands when a telephone—in your name, of course—would be so much more satisfactory."

"A telephone!" I gasped.

"Circumstances make it quite unwise for me to have a telephone in my own name, but you could have one in yours without creating the least suspicion. You are—"

"Madame!" I cried and sot no further.

"—perfectly free to have a telephone if you want one," she continued. "The doctor came this evening, and it really WASN'T NECESSARY. Don't you see you could have telephoned for me and saved him the trip?"

It was due to the most stupendous exertion of self restraint on my part that I said, "Well, I'll be liggered!" Her audacity staggered me.

"Madame," I exploded, "will you be good enough to listen to me? I am not to be trifled with. Tomorrow some time I shall enter the east wing of this building if I have to knock down all the doors on the place. Do you understand, madame?"

"I do hope, Mr. Smart, you can arrange to break in about 5 o'clock. It will afford me a great deal of pleasure to give you some tea. May I expect you at 5 or thereabouts?"

Her calmness exasperated me. I struck the stone balustrade an emphatic blow with my fist, sorely pesling the knuckles, and ground out:

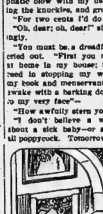
"For two cents I'd do it tonight!"

"Oh, dear; oh, dear!" she cried mockingly.

"You must be a dreadful woman!" I cried out. "First you make yourself at home in my house; then you refuse to stopping my wages, steal my cook and mensservants, keep us all awake with a barking dog, defying the law generally—"

"How awfully stern you are!"

"I don't believe a word you say about a cold heart and a bad doctor. It's all poppycock. Tomorrow you will find



"I am a very old man," he whined, yourself, bag and baggage, sitting at the bottom of this hill waiting for—"

"Wait!" she cried. "Are you really, truly in earnest?"

"Most emphatically!"

"Then I—I shall surrender," she said very slowly and seriously, I was glad to observe.

"You have the sore like it!" I cried enthusiastically.

"On one condition," she said. "You must agree in advance to let me stay on here for a month or two. It—it is most important, Mr. Smart."

"I shall be the sole judge of that, madame," I retorted, with some dignity, "for the way I went on, talking my brows, "how am I to get into your side of the castle? Schmick says he's lost the keys."

A good deal depended on her answer. "They shall be delivered to you in the morning, Mr. Smart," she said soberly. "Good night."

This little window closed with a snap, and I was left alone in the smiling moonlight. I was vastly excited, even thrilled by the prospect of a sleepless night.

"Britton," I said later, "I want to be at that I? o'clock sharp in the morning." Noting his polite struggle to control his astonishment, I told him of my second encounter with the lady across the way.

"She won't be expecting you at 7, sir," he remarked. "And, as for that, she may be expecting to call on you inst

PROMOTION PERIOD IN THE GREAT PANAMA-PACIFIC COMPETITION

Important Announcement to all Contest Workers—More Than Double Present Values for New Yearly and Two-Yearly Subscriptions—This Remarkable Offer Good Only for Eight Days—The Polling to Date.

Today The Ontario makes an important and gratifying announcement to all workers in the Great Panama-Facade Contest. Special inducements are offered to those who are willing to do some real hustling for a few days. We announced at the beginning of our Contest that work would win. We now put a premium on honest effort. We have now reached in our Great Campaign. The object of all newspaper voting contests is to promote circulation, to gather in the new subscriptions that not only mean an immediate cash payment, but a largely increased permanent circulation, and therefore a valuable business asset to the paper as a source of augmented revenues later on from the renewed subscriptions and advanced advertising rates.

THE PROMOTION PERIOD

As an encouragement and impetus to honest workers we make the following offer that will be

GOOD FOR ONLY EIGHT DAYS

Beginning at 9 o'clock a.m. Saturday July 31, and closing at 6 o'clock p.m. on Saturday August 7th, we will give increased values for new one-year and two-year subscriptions

MISS AGNES LAWRENCE.

Miss Agnes Lawrence of Tweed: is looked upon by many as the probable winner of District VI. Certainly her friends have rallied to her support in a splendid manner, and Miss Lawrence is worthy of all the assistance she may receive for she is a most estimable young lady who makes firm friends wherever she goes. Miss Lawrence is of a sprightly disposition—just the right type to win the friendly help that is later on translated into votes and tours. She has also excellent executive ability and knows how to organize her friends and secure a multiplication of her own efforts. The people of Tweed wish to see their town represented in The Ontario Panama-Pacific party and they will certainly second the good work of their popular young candidate in the only way that brings results.

to our daily and weekly editions as follows.

Daily Inside the City of Belleville—
One year	$3.00	5000
Two years	4.00	12000
Daily Outside Belleville—
One year	$3.00	3000
Two years	4.00	8000
Weekly Ontario—
One year	$1.00	1250
Two years	2.00	3000

Those vote values are more than double the previous schedule. Note the increase in each case. We will ask scarcely anything but one-year and two year subscriptions at these advanced rates. All periods for less than a year and all for more than two years will go at the announced schedule for July 15 to close of contest and upwards to another column.

The increased votes do not apply to renewals which remain as before.

These high values for one-year and two-year subscriptions are for eight days only and will positively will not be renewed again during the Contest. A dollar when applied on new subscriptions will never count so much again.

There is now held out a grand opportunity to all who take their candidature seriously to pile up a splendid reserve of votes.

This offer does not apply to any subscriptions paid in at The Ontario office before July 31st.

Candidates must pay in the cash at the office some time during the eight day period to avail themselves of this offer. They are not compelled however to hand in the ballots that accompanied the subscriptions. These ballots when certified at the office may be retained by the candidate and handed in at any time before the close of the contest.

The skilled campaigners build up a good reserve all votes to be used later on as occasion demands.

Now, then, Candidates, read over the foregoing announcement with the utmost care. Make sure you understand all the conditions thoroughly. If there is any point that is not clear write or phone The Ontario office and an explanation will be immediately forthcoming.

And then get busy. Improve each minute. We assure you most positively that there will be no such opportunity again before the close of the Contest to secure vote values.

Candidates should also bear in mind our previous announcement that subscribers who change from the Weekly to the Daily edition count as new subscribers to the Daily.

Today's report of the poll does not show quite as large a gain in the aggregate vote as did Tuesday's, but is quite as gratifying. The totals on Tuesday included the bulk of two weeks' accumulation of coupons and swelled the list. Today's increase represents dollars.

We must again remind several of our candidates of the folly and futility of collecting coupons and doing nothing more. Such expenditure of effort is entirely in vain for it will get nothing. It is subscriptions, particularly new subscriptions, that count. The coupons should be only incidental and supplementary to the real work of subscription taking. With the high values now offered for new subscriptions there will surely be a general abandonment of the coupon idea, for in time it is taken up in that way that sound be given to securing subscribers.

As usual there are many changes in the standing of candidates, particularly where the race is close. Often a single new subscription added to a candidate's total wiped a place that candidate several places higher up.

The count up to six o'clock last night follows:—

THE COUNTRY "BURYING GROUND."

(Written in memory of the U. E. Loyalists who rest in the old burying grounds around the Bay of Quinte.)

The lithesome grass now bows and waves,
Around these low, forgotten graves;
All day they breathe their sympathies
For noble souls, who lie as these.

And some have slept a hundred years
Those strong and sturdy pioneers;
With souls undaunted, bold and free
They spurned the fair rebellious land

They left the homes their labor won,
On which they'd toiled thro' storm and sun,
They left it all behind and turned
Their faces northward, all they'd earned

In that new land they cast away,
Nor would the rebel band obey.

No more their feet must hasten how,
Lads they forgot the idle plough,
For other hands the furrows turn,
And pile the stones, so hard and stern.

No more their rising hour they keep,
In their dim house they sweetly sleep
Unmindful now in their resting place,
They wait to see their Father's face.

Sweet airs are here and faded roses
Run into sephyrous spirit tunes,
That murmur soft, of quiet peace
Where sorrows fade and labors cease.

Sweet grasses grow and peal
The broken earth, and slowly steal
Along the raised unconscious sod,
That shows their souls are now with God.

G.T.R. FIRE COMPANY WILL HOLD THE R. WEDDELL TROPHY

Fastest Team in Hose Reel Race at Firemen's Tournament—Ladder Competition—Result of Yesterday's Games—Alexander Carried Off Ontario Cup

The fireman has been a big man in Belleville for the past two days and he was accorded a little of the public recognition he deserves for his services throughout the year. That Belleville will find the staff of fire fighters still more efficient and still more interested in their work, is evident as a result of the association in this city with visiting fire brigades at the annual convention and tournament of the Eastern Ontario Volunteer Firemen's Association.

Alderman James O. St. Charles, chairman of "fire works" and president of the tournament committee, made a two days' wonder and one of the busiest men in the city. He provided amusement and exhibitions for the visitors besides those on the program. Alarms were rung in for the local fire department on several occasions on Tuesday evening and the patrols of the local fire boys could form a good idea of the efficiency of the Belleville brigade and its fighting appliances. In the vicinity of No. 1 fire hall Alderman "Jim's" stentorian voice could be heard above the din of the fire corps issuing "marching" orders to his men. He was on the job from the time the first peaked cap came into town on Tuesday morning until the last one disappeared today on the receding railway coach platform. So much for the chairman's activity and hospitality. He was ably supported by Chief W. J. Brown, Captains Bert Campbell, Geo. Campbell and Robert Symons and their more hidden ideas of the Belleville men were carried away by the Eastern Ontario firemen.

Wednesday, Belleville's civic holiday opened with a lowering sky and not too fair a promise of a dry day. But while the aspect of the heavens kept some of the intending visitors away, it did not dampen the proceedings until late in the afternoon when the events of the tournament had been almost concluded. There had been at times evident a small shower but this was not sufficient to mar any of the plans of the day. Most of the shops had accepted the mayor's declaration of the day and were closed in accordance with his wish. So a holiday crowd was on the streets, full of activity and in readiness to take in the events of the afternoon. Trains from east and west brought in fairly large crowds, Napanee sending at least 300. Peddlers were on the streets selling buttons and firemen's trophies.

DAILY ONTARIO ROAD RACE

A large crowd gathered on Front street between the city hall and The Ontario office to witness the Daily Ontario Road Race of three miles. There were four entries, but only three started—James Alexander, who had won the race two years in succession, Charles Brooks and Allan Meagher. Alexander was again the winner and according to the conditions of the silver cup, carried off the trophy. His time was 18 minutes and 10 seconds. The second runner Chas. Brooks made the course in 19 min 26 secs. and Allan Meagher finished third in 20 min 51-4th sec.

THE PARADE

The parade which formed at 12.30 on the market square under the direction of Mr. Sandford R. Burrows was a most creditable one. The show of Belleville fire department and its fire fighting apparatus all decorated was inspiring to the citizens. The men looked spick and span in their fine uniforms bedecked with silver and gold.

The order of parade was as follows:

Marshall—J. J. B. Flint
15th Regiment Band,
McLaughlin Float with Mayor and officials
Belleville Fire Brigade
Central Band
Port Hope Fire Brigade
Kitties Band
Deseronto Fire Brigade
Napanee Band
Napanee Fire Brigade
Trenton Band
Trenton Fire Brigade
Smith's Falls Fire Brigade
Foxboro Band
Kingston and Belleville Baseball teams
Floats
Rube Band and Dark Town Brigade
The route of parade was up Front street, countring Brown's Foundry, and down Front, up Bridge street to the grounds.

AT THE GROUNDS

Mayor W. H. Panter, honorary president, was chairman of events at the fair grounds. He made a short address of welcome to the firemen and the spectators, promising a grand program to follow.

The big event of the tournament was the honored race for the Weddell Challenge Cup, in which the following six teams competed, Napanee, Trenton, Port Hope, Deseronto, Grand Trunk and Smith's Falls. In the intervals of the competition track events were run and a baseball game between Kingston Pooles and Belleville Ontarios took place. Napanee Fire Dept company which ran first made excellent time and seemed to be the winners for some time. Their time was 33 9-10th sec. Trenton having drawn second place then ran and was a little slower at 33 3-5th sec. Deseronto ran exceedingly well but lost at the hydrant and coupling. No time was allowed as they had missed the hydrant. But the Belleville G.T. fir. team put a kink in Napanee's pool by getting them up one half a second. Smith's Falls finished slower in 33 4-5th sec.

The prize of $100 went to the G.T.R., 850 to Napanee and $25 to Trenton. The G.T.R. team has the following officers—Chief Thos. Halbert, Capt. Jack Bellinger and coach and pacemaker Jack M. Phelan.

The time keepers were Jas. Ritchie, John A. Dorbridge and Percy Gifford. The starter was Capt. Bert Campbell and the judges were Chief Heaney, Trenton, Chief Elmer, Kingston, and Chief Brown, Belleville.

LADDER RACE

The ladder race was a snappy competition, much enjoyed by all spectators. The rules were—running 100 yards carrying ladder, raise it and go to fireman scale it. Port Hope won the race in 21 sec with case owing to the speed of its scaler. Deseronto was 2-5ths of a second slower, the G.T.R. was 3 seconds behind and Trenton 4 seconds.

The running events were closely contested and fine time was made in a number of events. A summary of the events is as follows—

The 15th Regimental band played all afternoon at the grounds.

The gate receipts amounted to somewhat over $800. There was a fair sized crowd on the grounds.

The Belleville police shut up some gamers which they considered rather in the nature of gambling.

Smith's Falls had in the procession the first horse of the great war, it's Love, a boy 14 years of age was wounded at Hill No. 60, in the shoulder. This lad ran away from home crossed the ocean as a stowaway and was accepted as old enough to serve. His relatives got busy and endeavored to get him discharged and ultimately succeeded but not until after he had fought in "Hill 60" battle and been wounded. The lad was dressed in khaki. He wore a banner in the parade telling of his services.

The young ladies of Quinte Chapter I.O.D.E. solicited contributions on the grounds for the purpose of purchasing a machine gun for the Canadian troops.

The committee who carried out yesterday's events so successfully was composed of—

Hon. Pres.—Mayor W. H. Panter
Pres.—Ald. J. O. St. Charles
Treas.—Arthur Jones
Sec.—Wm. L. Dopp
Parade Chairman—S. R. Burrows

Mrs. Madeline Rupert, a young married woman of Trenton was drowned in Trent river about noon yesterday. She left her home and walked up along the river to Lovering's, where she is some way off from the river. Two boys who witnessed the accident gave the alarm but before the body could be recovered, life was extinct.

The coroner after investigating the facts of the drowning decided that an inquest was how necessary.

She is survived by her husband and one child. She was only about twenty-one years of age and was a daughter of Mr. W. B. Smith, C. N. R. gateman. Mrs. W. Patrick of Trenton is a sister.

Bout at Armouries

There was a disappointingly small attendance at the ten round bout last evening in the armouries between the two colored boxers, Silas Green and Cleve Hawkins.

These men gave a very clever exhibition of the art of attack and defence and fought it was said, as there were no knock downs. Mr. Billy Mourhouse of Montreal was the referee. The bout lasted the full ten rounds.

A juvenile preliminary bout attracted much attention.

...These Pills Cure Rheumatism... To the many who suffer from rheumatism a trial of Parmalee's Vegetable Pills is recommended. They have pronounced action upon the liver and kidneys and by regulating the action of these organs act as an alterative in preventing the admixture of uric acid and blood that causes the painful disorder. They must be taken according to directions and used steadily and they will speedily give evidence of their beneficial effects.

Trenton Man Arrested

Three Trenton men came to town and were imbibing too freely. They were arrested and fined five dollars and costs each or 15 days. One of them was an unfortunate man of weak mentality, who sobbed in court. He had fallen at the G.N.O.R. depot from a truck to the hard concrete pavement and cut his face.

Different and Better Clothes

The Two Piece Suit

This is the time of year when a man wants to wear as little as possible. If you wear one of our cool Two-Piece Suits, it's certain you won't "wear a worried look."

But there are two considerations in a Two-Piece Suit which call for the most competent tailoring. In the first place, the coat must be so tailored as to obviate the need of a vest. In the second place, as the fabrics are extremely light in weight, the tailoring must be done with the greatest skill.

Fabrics of carefully selected Sun-Proof Serges, Worsteds, Homespuns, etc., etc.

It you'll step in and try on one of these cool Suits and then take a look in the mirror, you'll be surprised to see what a swell and comfortable looking fellow you are.

We've everything in wearables for a man's summer comfort.

A cough is often the forerunner of serious pulmonary affections, but there is a simple cure within the reach of all in Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, an old-time and widely celebrated remedy that should be given to at the inception of a cold, will invariably give relief, and by overcoming the trouble, guard the system from any serious consequences. Price 35c.

Knew the Catechism

Before the sermon last Sunday forenoon in St. Andrew's church, Rev. John T. Hall, on behalf of the Kirk Session, took occasion to make the presentation of a beautifully bound, illustrated copy of the Bible to Master Neil Blanconnette, as a prize for the perfect answering at one time of all the 187 questions of the shorter Catechism. In speaking of the excellence of the Catechism as a short and comprehensive system of religion he pointed out the fact that it was prepared over 250 years ago by the Westminster Assembly of divines, appointed by the British Parliament, and that only a small proportion of the divines were Presbyterian. Later it was adopted by the Presbyterians as the most perfect short system of relig'on known, and to its use in the religious education of the young may be attributed the general religious stability of this denomination.—Stirling News Argus.

Reeve of Gananoque Withdraws His Resignation

A special meeting of Council was held on Thursday evening, for general business, although the primary object of the meeting was to consider the resignation of Reeve Darling, which as announced last week, had been placed in the hands of the Clerk.

The matters which led the Reeve to take the step were discussed at some length and with some feeling, when a resolution setting forth that it was the unanimous opinion of the Council that he should be requested to reconsider his action, was carried, and Mr. Darling asked that he be given 24 hours to think the matter over before giving a final answer.

Every member of the Board spoke in laudatory terms of Mr. Darling and the work he had done in connection with town matters and promised individual support if he would remain in the Council.

Yesterday morning Mr. Darling withdrew his resignation and will fill out the terms for which he was elected.—Reporter.

Walking Stunts

Kingston Standard:—Five young provisional Heutenants of the P. S. I. made up their minds that they would see what a young soldier could do in the way of a day's marching. Yesterday morning, at 4.30 o'clock, they left the camp and struck out for Gananoque, and reached that place at eight o'clock, and took breakfast at the Gananoque Inn. At 10 a.m. they left the factory town for the camp, and between 1.20 and 2.20 they arrived back in camp. They walked about 32 miles, and outside of a few sore feet and a little stiffness, they are none the worse for their first big walk. Lieuts. Hill, Warren, Vanloon, Troop and Carter were the officers, and they all say that Lieut. Hill is a wonder on the walk and set the pace for the rest all the way down and back.

Just as soon as Lieut. Morison, of the 38th Battalion, heard of the feat of the officers of the provisional school and the record of Lieut. Hill in the march to Gananoque and back, he made up his mind that the 38th should retain the walking laurels of the camp, and on Sunday night at nine o'clock left the camp grounds for the factory town. Under the light of the stars the determined Scot headed for Gananoque, with a gait that would have done credit to Golding, the famous Canadian champion. Reaching Gananoque, Lieut Morison only arrived twenty minutes before starting on his walk back, and he reached camp at four o'clock yesterday morning before anyone was astir after doing the 32-mile tramp in six hours and fourteen minutes after leaving the camp on Sunday night. The record of Lieut. Hill was broken and the energetic pedestrian of the 38th Battalion was satisfied. When the officers of the P. S. I. went to Gananoque on Sunday they tarried in the place for a rest for two hours. Lieut. Morison was on parade yesterday morning as usual, and just as though he had only taken a walk to the city. There is likely to be more walking tests and matches, and it is whispered that Lieut. Hill will make another effort to break the tramp-to-Gananoque record. A walking match between the two lieutenants would be a very interesting thing for the camp for civic holiday.

Stifling Publicity

Reeve Greer at the last council meeting is reported as saying, "It would be just as well not to allow all this to get into the press." Why should anything pertaining to the town's business be stifled? In the past, as well as now too much of this sort of thing has occurred. The more the press publishes the lower will be the tax rate and fewer the adding machines!—Cobourg World.

Fire Delegates in Annual Convention

The sixth annual convention of the Eastern Ontario Volunteer Firemen's Association was held on Tuesday afternoon in the council chamber, city hall. The president, ex-Chief W. H. Hearn, formerly of Kenwonto, now of Trenton, occupied the chair. The representatives were form ten or twelve town or city fire brigades.

President Heaney called upon the Rev. R. C. Blagrave, D.D., of Christ Church, who offered up prayer for the success of the British and the Allied arms and for the firemen and the convention.

Mayor Panter extended on behalf of the council a cordial welcome to the delegates and gave them the freedom of the city. He paid a high tribute to the volunteer firemen to whom Ontario owes a great debt. It is well that they should meet in convention annually for the purpose of co-operating and pleasure. The chief magistrate hoped they would enjoy the sights and events in Belleville. The keys of the two fire halls he presented to them and in closing said he was that they should carry away very pleasant memories of the tournament and convention in Belleville.

President Heaney in a short address urged upon the firemen, co-operation.

Alderman J. O. St. Charles, chairman of the fire department expressed a welcome on behalf of the local fire fighters.

The association has $46.91 to its credit, according to the secretary-treasurer's books.

Mr. Hamilton of Port Hope suggested a change in the run in the hose reel and moved that the run for next year's tournament be from the Bridge-st. car—Run 200 feet to the hydrant, run off 100 feet, insert Y, run off 50 feet each branch and put on "goose-necks." This would make the event more interesting to spectators. Port Hope has been running an excursion every year but if the tournament is not made more attractive, fi may not be possible to get the crowd.

Objection to this resolution was taken on the grounds that the Wedell Trophy was competed for under the present rules.

In support of Mr. Southgate's view of the race it was mentioned that it was not the firemen who ran the race at present. The race would be more practicable. This present style of run is not firemen's work.

Chief Tilford of Cobourg suggested having another cup under conditions mentioned by Mr. Southgate.

Chief Vanalstine of Napanee fell in with the views of Mr. Southgate regarding the necessity of increased attractions, but said the Weddell Trophy was bound to the present rules.

It was finally decided in amendment made by Chief Vanalstine that a committee composed of the chiefs of Port Hope, Cobourg, and Trenton, be appointed to meet in Trenton in the near future to provide ways and means to put on an extra competition on the suggestions of the Port Hope delegates.

Chief Tilford—"Eliminate the professionalism and make it a contest for firemen only."

It was decided that "any company desiring to enter the association apply at the convention one year previous" That does not apply this year.

Eganville and Smith's Falls were admitted to membership.

Mr. William Senn of Eganville who had been connected with volunteer fire companies for 33 years mainly in Western Ontario, spoke against professionalism in tournaments and in favor of memorials to the legislature for the benefit of firemen. He thought that insurance companies should be made to give 2 per cent. of their premiums to a fund held by the legislature to equip those towns and hamlets not having up-to-date fire apparatus and thus lower insurance premiums.

Mr. James spoke on the proposed amalgamation of associations.

Officers were elected as follows—Hon. Pres.—Robert Weddell, Trenton.

President—Chief Vanalstine, Napanee.

Vice Pres.—Wm. Senn, Eganville.

Sec-Treas.—W. H. James, Trenton.

All the past presidents were made honorary members of the association.

Twenty dollars was voted to the secretary-treasurer for his services.

The convention expressed itself as in favor of the formation of a provincial association and the president and secretary were appointed to attend at Toronto.

Councillor Ireland and Councillor Loomis of Trenton hereupon invited the association to Trenton for the next convention. The invitation was accepted with thanks.

Votes of thanks were passed to Belleville Fire Companies for their hospitality after which the convention adjourned.

Oil is the Thing

About 14 miles of Peterboro's streets have been oiled to date and the general verdict is that it is proving an eminently satisfactory infestation. "The Examiner." "Housewives are particularly pleased with the oil. The odor is practically nil and is only noticeable when it is newly applied Once it has been applied there is no waiting with windows and doors closed on a hot, windy day for the appearance of the watering cart. A few minutes after a rain, the oiled road is practically dry, as the water is run off as if the road were paved.

Sent to Penitentiary

Pte. Thomas W. Foster was arrested between Belleville and Trenton by Chief-of-Police Graham, and was before Magistrate Rankin on July 6th on a charge of attacking a young girl named Ida Marshall, under 16 years of age. He was sent up for trial to the first court of criminal jurisdiction. He had exchanged his military uniform for a suit of civilian clothing and left his military uniform in a cemetery in the eastern part of Belleville. He was brought before Judge Madden on July 16th, when he elected to be tried and was sentenced on the following day to 15 months in the penitentiary. The Judge in passing sentence, made some severe remarks on the conduct of the prisoner and said that no acts of immorality would receive any leniency at his hands.—Napanee Beaver.

Passing of Well Known Napanee Lady

The many friends of Mrs. Sidney Warner were shocked to learn of her sudden death on Tuesday evening, while at Glen Island. She had been in poor health for the past ten years. The remains were brought to Napanee on the Str. Lamond on Tuesday evening. The funeral, which was private, was held from the residence of her son, Mr. Clarence M. Warner, Bridge street, yesterday afternoon, and the remains were taken to Wilton for burial.—Napanee Beaver.

Arrested in Peterboro

Two brothers, giving their names as McGrath, from Westwood, Asphodel township, were put off the C.P.R. train yesterday noon, at the corner of Maria and Burnham streets. They were staggering around, according to the evidence of the police officers who happened to be in that vicinity. Yesterday afternoon and last night they spent in the police station cells.

The pair explained to Magistrate Dumble this morning that one of them had lost his ticket and they did not have enough money left to pay the fare to Westwood. The other gave his ticket, but when his brother was put off he dismounted also. Two large bottles of villainous looking whiskey were produced by the officers as having been found in possession of the men.

Magistrate Dumble allowed them to go with the promise that they would get the next train out of town. The whiskey was returned to them as it was their property. Westwood is a local option territory but they said they always kept a little whiskey in the house for medicine. They promised not to drink again if let go.—Peterboro Examiner.

Some Crowd

What is the matter with the larger towns of Eastern Ontario that the good old game of lacrosse has none of its old time effects or hold upon them? At Hastings on Wednesday a crowd of 10,000 saw the home team go down to defeat to Campbellford, while if the same game were played at Peterborough to decide a championship, it is doubtful if one-third of that number would travel across the bridge to see.—Peterboro Review.

Good For a Hundred Years

The bridge adjoining the Warkworth mill, which has been closed from the travelling public during the past two months, will be ready for operation in a few days. The reconstruction has been long and weary, and some of the business men have been complaining bitterly of the hindrance it has been to their business; but it is not likely this bridge will cause any further trouble during the next century.—Journal.

Inside at a table sat the recruiting officers and car today made a tour of a number of streets, and his responses was more than was expected. "To Berlin" catchling the popular fancy.

Horsemen's Plight

James Goodwin, William Sanders, Mike Malone, Charles LaBelle, and W. J. Kobar, started out with race horses from the Montreal meet and ran into Belleville police station, but not because they wanted to. Three cars of racing horses were attached to a passenger train at Montreal and a large number of men claiming to be working for the owners got into the cars. At Cornwall, no less than fifteen or eighteen were chased out by the Grand Trunk people and at Belleville the authorities got after the others. They found a number asleep. The rules allow one man to six horses, but no less than 15 or 18 men were in the car. Some got away but the five mentioned above were arrested.

In police court this morning they were charged with entering on cars without tickets with intent to defraud the railway. They admitted being without tickets.

They were found guilty and Magistrate Masson told them he believed they were trying to beat their way.

Kobar, the sportsman, said they left Montreal in a hurry and did not have time to buy their tickets. Some had fallen asleep. They were ready to pay their fare. They worked with the horses at the Montreal meet They were following their employers to Toronto.

The magistrate fined them $20 and costs each or one month in jail at hard labor in default

Some of them had quite large sums of money on them.

Belleville Defeated Kingston Ponies

One of the finest games in amateur baseball ever witnessed in this city was that played yesterday afternoon between Belleville and the Kingston Ponies. Both teams were in the best of batting trim and hundreds watched with eager interest the match.

LaVoie's Mitt-Work in Centre Field.

There was not a hitch in the game. Belleville Ontarios won by 5 to 0, but the score was no criterion of the game for, while Kingston failed to tally any runs, their players were excellent in the field and it was only Goyer's magic work in the pitcher's box, the flawless work of the locals in the infield and outfield and the heavy batters of this city that shut Kingston out and raised the local score. Gerow's heavy three bagger was the first to score a man, and Millo Lane drive in to the eastern limits of the grounds where the ball was

Trial is inexpensive.—To those who suffer from dyspepsia, indigestion, rheumatism or any ailment arising from derangement of the digestive system, a trial of Parmelee's Vegetable Pills is recommended, should the sufferer be unacquainted with them. The trial will be inexpensive and the result will be another customer for this excellent medicine. So effective is their action that many cures can certainly be traced to their use where other pills have proved ineffective.

NEWS OF FALL OF POLISH CAPITAL EXPECTED HOURLY

Further Defence Unwise--Russia's Aim in Withdrawal--Activity of French Submarines--Turkish Artillery Resumed Heavy Bombardment --Bulgaria Conferring With Teutons--Kaiser Looks for Prolonged War.

WARSAW'S LOSS DISCOUNTED.

LONDON, July 30.—While official statements from Berlin Vienna and Petrograd do not indicate any break in the Russian lines, news of the fall of Warsaw is expected hourly.

Despatches from Petrograd indicate that further defense of Warsaw, the loss of which has been discounted in France, in England and in Russia itself, is considered unwise. Russia's chief aim is to move her armies intact to prepared positions in the rear. The German offensive from the north is said to be seriously menacing the Warsaw-Petrograd railway and may scatter the Russian forces.

FRENCH SUBMARINES DESTROY GERMAN VESSELS.

PARIS, July 30.—A despatch from Copenhagen says great damage has been done in the harbor of Zeebrugge held by the Germans by the French undersea craft. The French boats according to this report have destroyed German vessels in the harbor in some cases with loss of life.

TURKS SECURE HEAVY AMMUNITION.

LONDON, July 30.—The Times Mitylene correspondent says the Turks have secured large supplies of heavy ammunition and resumed a sustained artillery attack.

Two new German submarines which were brought overland are now ready for service in the Gulf of Smyrna.

A blockade of the coast of Asia Minor from the Straits of Scanalova is being vigorously maintained by the Anglo-French fleet.

FRENCH EX-MINISTER OF WAR WOUNDED.

PARIS, July 30.—Adolphe Messimy, former Minister of War was severely wounded in the thigh by a shell splinter while on the Vosges front where he was in command of a battalion of light infantry.

KAISER LOOKS FOR LONG WAR.

THE HAGUE, July 30.—The Nieuwe Courant publishes a letter from a German officer which contains the following: "The Kaiser lately visited our corps at dinner.. We sang the soldiers' song, 'We will meet again at home' thereupon the Kaiser rose and said: 'Dear comrades, you must not think this will be soon. You probably will see once more the roses blooming in the enemy's country.'"

'COAL MEANS LIFE" SO SAYS LLOYD GEORGE

LONDON, July 30.—Twenty-five hundred coal operators and representatives of the Miners' Union packed the London Opera House today at a national conference called by the British Government prior to the recess during which Premier Asquith will go to the coal supply.

The chief speakers for the government were Sir John Simon, and Mr. Lloyd George.

"Coal," said the Minister of Munitions, "means life for us and death for our foes. Steam means coal, effects mean coal, shells are filled with coal, the very explosive inside them is coal, and coal carries them right on to the battlefield to help our men. It is everything to us and we want more of it to win the victory."

Referring to the recent British casualty list of 350,000 officers and men Mr. Lloyd George said all these were victims of German coal "produced by the Westphalia miner working in cooperation with the Prussian engineer without reserve and without regulation."

The British navy which drove the German flag from the seas, the Minister of Munitions pointed out, owed its strength to coal.

The speaker said there were two schools—optimists and pessimists—but he believed in looking things straight in the face. He continued:

"Events in the east, whatever they portend, mean that we must put forth all our strength. They mean that a larger share than ever of the burden of struggle is to be cast on the shoulder of Great Britain. Do not shrink from it. We must pay the price of victory if we mean to get victory. The peril our country faces is great, the demand for coal is great, and the supply of labor is diminished. We must have more coal to win." The miners cheered Mr. Lloyd George enthusiastically.

Dardanelles Open Soon?

ROME July 30.—News has reached here that Turkey has only one month's stock of ammunition. Consequently the Italians believe the Allies will take the Dardanelles in relatively short time if Bulgaria and Rumania act energetically against centralized.

BECKER ASSERTED INNOCENCE TO END

ON EVE OF EXECUTION, HE ADDRESSED BITTER LETTER TO WHITMAN.

RESIGNED TO DOOM

Went to Electric Chair in Ring Used This Morning—Sent Photograph of Wife Over His Heart.

SING SING PRISON, OSSINING, July 30.—Charles Becker, who was put to death in the electric chair here this morning for the murder of Herman Rosenthal, the New York gambler. The former New York Police lieutenant retained his composure and protested his innocence to the last. He went to his death with a photograph of his wife pinned on his shirt over his heart.

OSSINING, N.Y., July 30.—The last hope of Charles Becker died when he was told early last evening that his wife had failed to move Governor Whitman to grant him a reprieve. This, Mrs. Becker asked of the governor at a conference she had with him at Poughkeepsie. Failing in her mission she motored here to break the news to her husband, but it had already reached him before she arrived. Almost at the moment the news was received the prisoner gave out a letter he had written to Governor Whitman, in which he attacked the executive for having, as he indicated, given in the newspaper statements which cast a "foul aspersion on my character," and for which he demanded a retraction.

In his letter the former police lieutenant again reiterated his innocence of the crime for which he has been twice convicted.

"To these charges and to all others, I answer," he part the letter read, "by repeating solemnly, on the brink of the world to which you are sending me before my time what was my constant answer while in the world: I am as innocent as you of having murdered Herman Rosenthal, or having counselled, procured or aided his murder, or having any knowledge of that dreadful crime."

The letter was mailed to Governor Whitman last night.

Becker seems coldly resigned to his fate.

...Father Curry heard Becker's spiritual confession at 6 a.m., and gave him the Catholic communion. At 8.40 he was led into the execution chamber.

Mrs. Chas. Becker arrived at Sing-Sing Prison by auto from Poughkeepsie at 11.30 last night. She went at once to her husband's cell to tell him of the unsuccessful result of her conference with Governor Whitman.

THREAT TO BLOW UP U.S. CAPITOL

WASHINGTON, July 30.—The Washington police kept a careful watch yesterday on all incoming trains and were in constant touch with the guards of the Capitol.

This vigilance was due to a letter received on Thursday by the Sergeant at Arms of the House of Representatives and Senate warning those officials that the Capitol building would be destroyed within the next twenty-four hours. Last night and the night before every room in the big building was closely scanned, the furniture overturned and any space that might be used as a resting place for a bomb or other missile.

So far there is no clue to the sender of the letter of warning to the officials. It is similar, however, to the "Parcel" letters threatening to destroy trans-Atlantic steamships.

AEROPLANE PILOT BURNED TO DEATH

PARIS, July 30.—With flames shooting up to a height of fifty feet, a Paris aeroplane on patrol duty dired to the earth shortly before 8 o'clock last night. A passenger threw himself from the machine and fell to the foot to the roof of a house. The pilot Benoit, came down with the aeroplane, but was burned to death before he could be rescued.

Thousands of people witnessed the catastrophe, which occurred over the densely populated quarter of Vaugirard.

The machine took fire at a height of 750 feet. It was then a mile from the bay aerodrome. With remarkable coolness, Benoit attempted to reach the bay grounds, but he was not high enough. Nevertheless he managed to swing the blazing machine down to waste land nearby, narrowly missing the roofs of houses and the signal posts of the belt railroad as he dired earthwards amidst the shrieks and cries of the horrified witnesses.

The passenger was rescued from roof and taken to the Boucicault Hospital a desperate condition.

Machine guns to be given by the citizens of Belleville. House to house canvass next week. The Municipal Chapter Imperial Order Daughters of Empire. Mrs. E. Gage Porter, regent, will be pleased to receive donations. jly27-31d

ROUMANIA IS STAUNCH FRIEND OF THE ALLIES

PARIS, July 30.—A report from Bucharest that orders had been issued to the Roumanian officials at Monastir assistant to make the most thorough examination of all freight cars owned by Austria-Hungary, Germany and Turkey, to prevent any possibility of the passage through Roumanian territory of munitions and arms, was officially confirmed today at the Roumanian legation in Paris.

It is reported that car loads of beer barrels packed in ice sent from Germany to Turkey were examined and the barrels found to contain war munitions. The freight cars are reported, to have been provided with false bottoms and walls, behind which arms were hidden. Every device know to modern smugglers is said to have been employed to pass arms and munitions through Roumania for the Ottoman troops.

Because of this state of affairs, the advices from Bucharest say, the Roumanian Government has requested the entente allied powers to lend it experienced customs examiners and detectives to assist in enforcing the prohibition of transit in munitions.

FRIDAY, JULY 30, 1915.

THE OCCASION AND THE MAN.

The message sent last week by President Wilson to Germany, in all respects, is one of the most remarkable of modern diplomatic documents. It is worthy of Sir Edward Grey himself. No higher praise could be accorded it. It is of considerable length, but every word, every phrase, every sentence, every thrust of argument or refutation which it contains, is chosen, framed, and presented so as to produce the strongest possible effect. It is to the last German Note, as the reply of a scholarly gentleman to the evasions and blusterings of a dishonest and sullen servant. It reveals President Wilson and his new Secretary of State as fully worthy of the unstinted confidence and support which they are receiving, from the American people. It shows them deserving of the warmest admiration of the nations of the world.

The voice of prejudged criticism, so often raised against President Wilson, of late, must now be silenced. To those of us who were naturally impatient, and, in consequence, little disposed to be just or considerate, it must be clearly manifest that the time taken in preparing this final American Note was time most valuably spent. It was time so spent not merely because of the perfection of the Note itself, but because of the opportunity which it afforded for the final consolidation of American public opinion.

Who among Britons would at present think of denying that the leadership of President Wilson, in the great crisis through which his Government and his country have been passing of late months, has been magnificent? Fortunate beyond measure, have been our American brethren to have had such a national leader at such a time. A rasher or less circumspect President might have hurried them into war at an earlier and less fortunate date. A less patriotic or more timorous President might have withheld them from it longer, or, perhaps, maintained indefinite peace at the price of lasting national dishonor. President Wilson has known how to do neither of these things. He has acted with deliberate, mathematical, thoughtfulness, with calm, methodical courage. He has allowed himself to be deflected from his chosen path neither by the insults and outrages of his country's enemies, nor by the hot-headedness of its too ardent citizens. He has not been moved by the threats or the fears even of his own political supporters and life-long friends.

President Wilson has succeeded in manoeuvering his country's enemies into exposing themselves openly as the enemies not only of the United States but of all mankind; and he is at last able to reply to them with the voice of the whole American people. He is able to tell them, with that voice, that their cunning subterfuges are vain. He is able to warn them, with that voice, that further breaches of international law will not be tolerated. He is able to tell them, definitely with that voice, what will be the consequences of further lawless acts on their part. In short, President Wilson has so acted as to win for himself a high place among the great men of the world, and to deserve lasting renown.

THE BATTLE SCENE.

The world's eyes are on the Russians in their defence of Warsaw, where the greatest battle of the Eastern campaign is being fought. A glance at the map will help to explain the situation. Before the Galician drive and the present invasion of Poland, the Russians occupied a front beginning at Kovno, passing east of Augustowo on to a large southeasterly curve east of Plock on to Kielce, thence a little east of south to the junction of the Dunajec and Vistula northwest of Tarnow. From the Vistula the line followed the Dunajec to the crest of the Carpathian mountains.

As the result of the activities of Mackensen and Hindenburg the line from Lomza passing east to Ossowiec, thence to Lomgustowo runs to Ossowiec, thence to Lomza, passes east of Ostrolenka and runs to Pultusk. From here, it goes to Novo Georgiewsk, passes around Warsaw east of Grojec to the Vistula, which it follows to Ivangorod. The Vistula is held from Ivangorod to near Lublin, where it curves to the east about eight miles south of that place and remains at more or less that distance from the Lublin-Cholm-Kovel line until the River Bug is crossed whence it dips south and east to Bukowina.

This Russian line is better served by railroads than the western part of Poland and according to the despatches is being well held. The Germans say that they are at Pultusk, and there is no proof that the guns of Novo Georgieswk are reported in touch with the German advance, as are thos of Ivangorod. From Ivangorod to Novo Georgieswk and Pultusk is the defending Warsaw circle, supported by every kind of field fortification long perfected, including barbed-wire entanglements to a depth of four miles—that is, a belt four miles wide has barbed wire fences bestowed in such a way as makes most difficult any forward movement by Germans in mass at any point without previous destruction of the barbed wire. The guns of the three fortresses as well as the twenty-one Warsaw forts will make things difficult in addition to the fortifications devised by Russian engineers since last summer.

The reports which are now being sent out by independent war correspondents in Paris to the Associated Press, and some American journals indicate that France has solved the munitions problem, and that so far as Joffre's armies are concerned there is no shortage of shells. The speeding up which has been done in Britain, under the leadership of Mr. Lloyd George, is also producing wonderful results, and we may take it for granted that when Kitchener is ready to launch his great offensive, for which he must have now in the neighborhood of three million men, there will be no lack of munitions of war.

While German submarines are engaged in the glorious work of murdering non-combatants women and children, and torpedoing cargo boats British submarines continue to penetrate into the mined harbors of the enemy, and sink warships and transports. The latest exploit in the Sea of Marmora, in sight of Constantinople, is a brilliant feat worthy of gallant sailors.

A RED, RED ASTRACHAN.

It's queer to think of harvest when it's half across the world;
It used to be beside the door where the kitchen smoke uncurled.
It's queer to think of binders in Canadian fields of wheat
And the humming and the drumming down the golden lanes of heat.
I think if I were home again I know what I should plan;
But no—I'd search the orchard for a red, red
 astrachan.

We've been dawdling days in trenches, we've been fighting through red nights,
But I'm thinking much this morning of some old
 Canadian sights;
There's a barn back from the roadway and a common long wire fence,
And a windmill and drive house, and a row of implements;
And, yes, I see it plainly—nearer than that sardine can,
A boy in an old orchard with a red, red actrachan.

They say we're to go forward; our artillery's talking Krupp;
There's a stir about this morning and the whole
 line's waking up;
But I'm thinking how my mother used to stir me from my bed
And ask me up the stairway if the horses had been fed—
It was in those harvest mornings I would see her with a pan
Heaped in the dim old orchard with the red, red
 astrachan.

It's only seas that part us, and a few swift miles of rail,
It's only miles between us, and a few swift days
 of sail;
But the changes and the changes and the changes that have passed
Since I turned the twenty corner and saw the old home last.
But through the changes, through them like a bayonet through a man,
There comes pressing quick a vision of a red,
 red astrachan.

War has handled us and hurtled us and we may be nearly in.
We've been mauled and spent and broken in a wild continuous din.
There's been wanting, there's been longing for a thousand, thousand things.
For the preciousness is precious that separation

STEEL THAT STAYS BRIGHT.

(From the Iron Trade Review).

A steel that will neither rust nor tarnish has been discovered and is being made commercially in the United States. The importance of this invention can hardly be exaggerated. Rust and corrosion are the great enemies of iron and steel. Cut through a lemon with your pocket knife and it comes out tarnished—corroded; stop the street cars even for a few hours, and the rails are yellow with rust. Various more or less clumsy expedients have been adopted to right this condition. For fine tableware, the metal is silver plated, galvanized or painted. Sooner or later, the coating fails, then rust and corrosion start their work of destruction. The loss of steel through rust in the United States has been estimated at 1,000,000 tons a year, valued in the crude, semi-finished state at from $30,000,000 to $40,000,000. The new stainless steel need not be plated or otherwise coated, and it stays bright under all conditions of weather and usage. For years scientists have been seeking such a metal for tableware, pocket knives, watch cases, for certain parts of typewriters, guns, sewing machines, automobiles, bicycles and for countless other uses. Table knives forged of this metal can be used with impunity to cut sold fruits, with no fear of stain, and the knife will remain bright without incessant scouring that is a bugbear to every household.

AS TO RECRUITS.

We very much fear that there is more truth than poetry in the declaration of Bishop Bidwell that, apart from the officers, a very large percentage of the men of the First Contingent who went over from Canada and did such gallant fighting around Ypres were Old Country men who had been here but a short time and were not Canadian born. So far as concerns the men who went from Kingston and this district—and their bravery is unquestioned—most of them were Canadians but taken as a whole the records prove conclusively that Bishop Bidwell is right in his statement that the majority were born in the Old Country. This, however, is perhaps not unnatural, because at the outset the men from the Mother Country, apparently realizing more quickly than some Canadians the seriousness of the situation, sprang to arms. Hence the large proportion of these men in the first contingent. In the second contingent, however, we do not believe the proportion is as great because by that time the Canadians were fully aroused.

What the proportion in the third contingent will be is impossible to say but we may as well admit the fact that the present response from Canadian-born young men is decidedly disappointing and that there are too many young Canadian men hanging round the corners and doing nothing who should long ago have enlisted. How they can be stirred up to a realization of their duty is now the problem and apparently a serious problem. We quite agree with the Toronto World in its declaration that "the young man who fails to take his place in the ranks at this time has an unhonored and a remorseful old age in front of him. He had better face the enemy today than his friends in years to come."

BIG GUNS OF A CENTURY AGO.

It would scarcely appear feasible that a shot weighing 800 pounds could have been employed a century ago; yet the Turks, who used the largest cannon in Europe, actually used guns of such calibre at that time. When Sir J. Duckworth passed the Dardanelles to attack Constantinople in 1807 his fleet was dreadfully shattered by the immense shot thrown from the batteries. The Royal George of 110 guns, was nearly sunk by only one shot; while another cut the mainmast of the Windsor Castle almost in two; a single shot knocked two ports of the Thunderer into one; the Repulse (74 guns) had her wheel shot away and twenty-four men killed and wounded by a shot; the ship being saved only by the most wonderful exertions. The heaviest shot which struck our ships was of granite, weighing 800 pounds and was 26 inches in diameter. One such shot took the [illegible] of the [illegible] stove in the whole starboard bow of the Active, and, having crushed this [illegible] thick of timber, the ball rolled [illegible] [illegible] all the crew standing aghast at this singular spectacle. One of these guns was cast in brass. It was composed of two parts, its breech resting against massive stonework, and the difficulty of managing such a monster would not allow of its being fired more than once.—Dundee Advertiser.

FRIDAY, JULY 30, 1915.

THE OCCASION AND THE MAN.

The message sent last week by President Wilson to Germany, in all respects, is one of the most remarkable of modern diplomatic documents. It is worthy of Sir Edward Grey himself. No higher praise could be accorded it. It is of considerable length, but every word, every phrase, every sentence, every thrust of argument or refutation which it contains, is chosen, framed, and presented so as to produce the strongest possible effect. It is to the last German Note, as the reply of a scholarly gentleman to the evasions and blusterings of a dishonest and sullen servant. It reveals President Wilson and his new Secretary of State as fully worthy of the unstinted confidence and support which they are receiving, from the American people. It shows them deserving of the warmest admiration of the nations of the world.

The voice of prejudged criticism, so often raised against President Wilson, of late, must now be silenced. To those of us who were naturally impatient, and, in consequence, little disposed to be just, or considerate, it must be clearly manifest that the time taken in preparing this final American Note was time most valuably spent. It was time so spent not merely because of the perfection of the Note itself, but because of the opportunity which it afforded for the final consolidation of American public opinion.

Who among Britons would at present think of denying that the leadership of President Wilson, in the great crisis through which his Government and his country have been passing of late months, has been magnificent? Fortunate beyond measure, have been our American friends to have had such a national leader at such a time. A rasher or less circumspect President might have hurried them into war at an earlier and less fortunate date. A less patriotic or more timorous President might have withheld them from it longer, or, perhaps, maintained inglorious peace at the price of lasting national dishonor. President Wilson has known how to do neither of these things. He has acted with deliberate, mathematical, thoughtfulness, with calm, methodical courage. He has allowed himself to be deflected from his chosen path neither by the taunts and outrages of his country's enemies nor by the hot-headedness of its too ardent citizens. He has not been moved by the threats or the fears even of his own political supporters and life-long friends.

These things Wilson has succeeded in manoeuvring his country's enemies into exposing themselves openly as the enemies not only of the United States but of all mankind; and he has been able to reply to them with the voice of the whole American people. He is able to tell them, with that voice, that their cunning subterfuges are vain. He is able to warn them, with that voice, that further breaches of international law will not be tolerated. He is able to tell them, definitely with that voice, what will be the consequences of further lawless acts on their part. In short, President Wilson has so acted as to win for himself a high place among the great men of the world, and to deserve lasting renown.

THE BATTLE SCENE.

The world's eyes are on the Russians in their defence of Warsaw, where the greatest battle of the Eastern campaign is being fought. A glance at the map will help to explain the situation. Before the Galician drive and the present invasion of Poland the Russians occupied a front beginning at Kovno passing east of Augustowo on to a large southeasterly curve east of Plock on to Kielce, thence a little east of south to the junction of the Dunajec and Vistula northwest of Tarnow. From the Vistula the line followed the Dunajec to the crest of the Carpathian mountains.

As the result of the activities of Mackensen and Hindenburg the line from Lomza passing east to Ossowiec, thence to Lomguszowo runs to Ossowiec, thence to Lomza, passes east of Ostrolenka and runs to Pultusk. From here it goes to Novo Georgiewski passes around Warsaw east of Grojec to the Vistula, which it follows to Ivangorod. The Vistula is held from Ivasgorod to near Lublin, where it curves to the east about eight miles south of that place and remains at more or less that distance from the Lublin-Cholm-Kovel line until the River Bug is crossed whence it dips south and east to Bukowina.

This Russian line is better served by railroads than the western part of Poland and according to the despatches is being well held. The Germans say that they are at Pultusk, and there is no proof that the guns of Novo Georgieswk are reported in touch with the German advance, as are thos of Ivangorod. From Ivangorod to Novo Georgieswk and Pultusk is the defending Warsaw circle, supported by every kind of field fortification long perfected, including barbed wire entanglements to a depth of four miles—that is, a belt four miles wide has barbed wire fences bestowed in such a way as makes most difficult any forward movement by Germans in mass at any point without previous destruction of the barbed wire. The guns of the three fortresses as well as the twenty-one Warsaw forts will make things difficult in addition to the fortifications devised by Russian engineers since last summer.

The reports which are now being sent out by independent war correspondents in Paris to the Associated Press, and some American journals indicate that France has solved the munitions problem, and that so far as Joffre's armies are concerned there is no shortage of shells. The speeding up which has been done in Britain, under the leadership of Mr. Lloyd George, is also producing wonderful results, and we may take it for granted that when Kitchener is ready to launch his great offensive, for which he must have now in the neighborhood of three million men, there will be no lack of munitions of war.

While German submarines are engaged in the glorious work of murdering non-combatants, women and children, and torpedoing cargo boats British submarines continue to penetrate into the mined harbors of the enemy, and sink warships and transports. The latest exploit in the Sea of Marmora, in sight of Constantinople, is a brilliant feat worthy of gallant sailors.

A RED, RED ASTRACHAN.

It's queer to think of harvest when it's half across the world;
It used to be beside the door where the kitchen smoke uncurled.
It's queer to think of binders in Canadian fields of wheat
And the humming and the drumming down the golden lanes of heat.
I think if I were home again I know what I should plan;
But no—I'd search the orchard for a red, red astrachan.

We've been dawdling days in trenches, we've been fighting through red nights,
But I'm thinking much this morning of some old Canadian sights;
There's a barn back from the roadway and a common long wire fence,
And a windmill and drive house, and a row of implements;
And, yes, I see it plainly—nearer than that sardine can,
A boy in an old orchard with a red, red astrachan.

They say we're to go forward; our artillery's talking Krupp;
There's a stir about this morning and the whole line's waking up;
But I'm thinking how my mother used to stir me from my bed
And ask me up the stairway if the horses had been fed—
It was in those harvest mornings I would see her with a pan
Heaped in the dim old orchard with the red, red astrachan.

It's only seas that part us, and a few swift days of rail;
It's only miles between us, and a few swift days of sail;
But the changes and the changes and the changes that have passed
Since I turned the twenty corner and saw the old home last!
But through the changes, through them like a bayonet through a man,
There comes pressing quick a vision of a red, red astrachan.

War has handled us and hurtled us and we may be nearly in,
We've been mauled and spent and broken in a wild continuous din.
There's been wanting, there's been longing for a thousand, thousand things,
For the preciousness is precious that separation brings;
But of all the things I've wanted since this ancient thing began,
I believe—I believe—the centre is a red, red astrachan.

For years scientists have been seeking such a metal for tableware, pocket knives, watch cases, for certain parts of typewriters, guns, sewing machines, automobiles, bicycles and for countless other uses. Table knives forged of this metal can be used with impunity to cut acid fruits, with no fear of stain, and the knife will remain bright without incessant scouring that is a burbear to every household.

AS TO RECRUITS.

We very much fear that there is more truth than poetry in the declaration of Bishop Bidwell that, apart from the officers, a very large percentage of the men of the First Contingent who went over from Canada and did such gallant fighting around Ypres were Old Country men who had been here but a short time and were not Canadian born. So far as concerns the men who went from Kingston and this district—and their bravery is unquestioned—most of them were Canadians but taken as a whole the records prove conclusively that Bishop Bidwell is right in his statement that the majority were born in the Old Country. A FOOL AND HIS MONEY

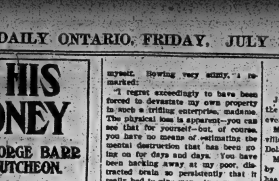
BY GEORGE BARR McCUTCHEON.



The new count, my innocuous predecessor, was not long in dissipating the great fortune left by his father, the worthy distiller. He had run through with the bulk of his patrimony by the time he was twenty-five and was pretty much run down at the heels when he married in the hope of recouping his lost fortune.

The Schmicks did not like him. They did not approve of him as lord and master, for was it possible for them to resign themselves to the fate that had put into young scapegrace into the shoes, so to speak, of the grim old baron Rothhoefen, who, whatever else they may have been in a high handed sort of way, were men to the core. This pretender, this creature without brains or blood, this sponging reprobate, was not to their liking, if I am to quote Conrad, who became quite forceful in his harangue against the recent order of things.

He, his wife and his sons, he sneered on, were full of rejoicing when they learned that the castle had passed from Count Hohendahl's hands into mine. I at least would pay them their wages, and I might, in a pinch, be depended upon to protect them when they were too old to be of any use about the castle.

In all attempts on my part to connect the lady in the east wing with the history of the ancient Rothhoefens were futile. I would not commit myself.

"Wal" said I, yawning in. helpless collusion with the sleepy Gretel, "we'll let it go over till morning. Call me at 7, Britting."

I went to bed, but not to sleep. It was very clear to me that my neighbor was a disturber in every sense of the word. She wouldn't let me sleep. For hours I tried to get rid of her, but she filtered into my brain and prodded my thoughts into the most violent activity. She wouldn't stay put. But finally I dropped off.

I was aroused from my belated sleep by the sound of mighty entrects and the tread of countless elephants. Too late I realized that the tourists were upon me! Too late I remembered to lock the door to my room had been left unlocked! One second and sixty-nine were huddled outside my door, dressing in the monotonous drivel of the guide who, in a shrill, penetrating voice and not the faintest notion of a conscience.

I listened in dismay for a moment and then, actuated by something more than mere fury, leaped out of bed and rushed across the room to lock the door. On the third stride I wished and hoped for a flying leap into the bed, scuttling beneath the covers with the speed and accuracy of a crawfish. Just in time, too, for the heavy door swung slowly open a second later and the shrill, explanatory voice was heard loudly into my lofty bed chamber.

"Come a little closer, please," said the mocker can with the cap. "This room was occupied for centuries by the masters of Schloss Rothhoefen. If it is a chamber. See the great bedroom! Ach. It has not been slept in for more than 200 years. The later barons refused to sleep in it because one of their ancestors had been assassinated between its sheets at the tender age of six. He was stabbed by a stupor who played him false."

A rewning beholder spoke up. "Can't we step inside?"

"If you choose, madame. But we must waste no time."

"I do so want to see where the old baron slept."

"Please do not handle the bedspreads and curtains. They will fall to pieces".

I heard no more, for the vanguard had pushed him aside and was swooping down upon me. A scary looking man led the way. He was within three feet of the bed and was stretching out his hand to touch the gourmand fabrics when I sat bolt upright and yelled:

"Get out!"

Afterward I was told that the guide was the first to reach the bottom of the stairs and that he narrowly escaped death in the avalanche of horrified humanity that piled after him, pursued by the puissant ghost of a six-year-old ancestor.

CHAPTER VII.

I Meet the Fox and Fall.

THE post that morning, besides containing a telegram from Vienna apprising me of the immediate embarkation of my four irreproachable augies in the guise of servants, brought a letter from my friends the Hazards, inquiring when my castle would be in shape to receive and discharge house parties without subjecting them to an intermediate session of peril from drafts, leaky roofs, damp sheets and vampires.

I sat down and looked about me in gloomy despair. No words can describe [illegible] I was serious in my attempts to repeating the word "manual." Morning in the midst of repairs is an awful thing. I looked, despaired and then dictated a letter to the Hazards, urging them to come at once with all their friends!

I needed some one to make me forget.

At 11 o'clock Poppendyke brought me a note from the chatelaine of the east wing. It had been dropped into the courtyard from one of the upper windows. The reading of it told me I had run into a stern, relentless decade. She very plainly announced that she had a headache and couldn't think of being disturbed that day and probably not the next.

My mind was made up in an instant. I would not be put off by a headache—which was doubtless assumed for the occasion—and I would be master of my castle or know the reason why, etc.

In the courtyard I found a score or more of idle artisans, banished by the scaffolding fourteen and completely forgotten by me in the excitement of the hour. Commanding them to fetch their files, saws, broadaxes and augers, I led the way to the mighty doors that barred my entrance to the other side. I stood over my toiling minions, and I venture to say that they never worked harder or better in their lives. By 5 o'clock we had the great doors open and swept on to the next obstruction.

At 2 o'clock the last door in the east antechamber gave way before our resolute advance, and I stood victorious and dusty in the little recess at the top of the last stairway. Beyond the twenty-fifth century portiere of a thirteenth century doorway lay the goal we sought. I hesitated briefly before opening them apart and making the final plunge. As a matter of fact, I was beginning to feel ashamed of myself. Suppose that she really had a headache? What an uncouth, positiveness brute I—

Just then, even as my hand fell upon the curtains, they were snatched aside, and I found myself staring into a vivid, uptilted face of the lady who had defied me and would continue to do so if my suddenly active perceptions counted for anything.

I saw nothing but the dark, indignant, imperious eyes. They fairly withered me.

In some haste, attended by the most disheartening nervousness, I tried to find my cap to remove it in the presence of royalty. Unfortunately I was obliged to release the somewhat cumbersome crowbar I had been carrying about with me, and it dropped with a sullen thwack upon my toes. In moments of gravity I am always doing something like that. The pain was terrific, but I clutched at the forlorn hope that she might at least smile over my agony.

"I sat bolt upright and yelled, 'Get out!'"

"I beg your pardon," I began, and then discovered that I was not wearing a cap. It was most disconcerting.

"So you would come," she said very coldly and very severely.

"It—it was necessary, madame," I replied as best I could. "You defied me. I think you should have appreciated my position, my motives—er—my"—

She silenced me—icily, heaven knows—with a curt exclamation.

"Your position! It is intensely Nassovian," said she, with fine irony. Her glare swept my horde of panting, wide eyed house breakers. "What a noble victory!"

It was quite time for me to assert myself. Bowing very stiffly, I remarked:

"I regret exceedingly to have been forced to devastate my own property in such a trifling enterprise, madame. The physical loss is apparent—you can see that for yourself—but, of course, you have no means of estimating the mental destruction that has been going on for days and days. You have been hacking away at my poor, distracted brain so persistently that it really had to give way, in a measure. this should account for my present lapse of sanity. Weak mindedness is not a crime, but an affliction."

She did not smile.

"Well, now that you are here, Mr. Smartigan"—I bowed so bad as to ignore what you are going to do about it?"

I reflected. "I think, if you don't mind, I'll come in and sit down. That was a dance of a rap I got across the toes. I am sure to be a great deal more bothered if I've got to get used to come in and see you. Incidentally I thought I'd step up to inquire how your headache is getting on. Better, I hope?"

She turned her face away. I suspected a smile.

"If you choose to bang your old castle to pieces in order to satisfy a masculine curiosity, Mr. Smart, I have nothing more to say," she said, facing me again—still confusingly, in my despair. Confound it all, she was such a slim, helpless little thing—and all those epithets I had used! Confound! "Will you be good enough to send your men away, or do you prefer to have it on hand in case I should decide it into my head to attack you?"

"Oh, I say, Miss Rothhoefen," I commanded hurriedly. As they crowded down the short, narrow stairway I restarted old Conrad and the two sons standing over against the wall, three very stinker Germs.

"Er—Conrad, you and do not dismiss your army," I said, blandly sarcastic.

"Oh, you dear old Conrad!" she cried, catching sight of the hitherto submerged Schmicks. The three of them bobbed and scraped and grinned from ear to ear. There could be no mistaking the interest they felt in my boy. "Don't look so sad, Conrad. I know you are helpless. You poor old dear!"

I have never been quite sure who took red less sad than Conrad Schmick. I rather peremptorily ordered him be gone.

"I will attend to you presently—all of you," said I. They did not move. "Do you hear me? I said I would attend to you! They looked stolidly at the slim young lady.

She smiled, rather proudly, I thought. "You may go, Conrad. I shall not need you. I will let you fetch up another scuttle of coal?"

They took their orders from her! "Very Jorry!" I said, looking after my trusty men servants as they descended. "I like this! Are they my servants or yours?"

"Oh, I suppose they are yours, Mr. Smart," she said carelessly. "Will you remain in now and make yourself quite at home?"

"Perhaps I'd better wait for a day or two," I said, frowning. "Your headache, you know. I must wait to see as well as"—

"Oh, no! Since you've gone to all the trouble I suppose you ought to have something for your pains."

"Really," I muttered, "I need a doctor to heaven I limped as I followed her through the door into a tiny hall.

"You are a most extraordinary man," she said, throwing open a small door at the end of the hall. "I am terribly disappointed in you. Instead of trying to be nice and sensible and amiable"—

"Oh, I'm not such a ninnyhammer as you might think," I muttered—and I testily, far from complimented.

"And now, Mr. Smart, will you be kind enough to explain why you have been to the pains of proceeding on your part?" she said, facing me sternly.

But I was dumb. I stood just inside the door of the most remarkable apartment it has ever been my good fortune to look upon. My senses reeled. Was I awake? Was this a part of the bleak, sinister, weather racked castle in which I was trying so hard to find a comfortable corner?

"Well?" she demanded resentfully.

"By the Lord Harry!" I cried, finding my tongue only to lose it again.

The room was completely furnished, bedecked and rendered habitable by a hundred and one articles that were mysteriously missing from any side of the castle. Rugs, tapestries, curtains of the rarest quality; chairs, couches and cushions; tables, cabinets and chests that would have caused the eyes of the most conservative collector of antiques to bulge with envy—and last but not least; stands, pedestals, bronzes, busts, porcelains—but why enumerate? On the massive oaken mantel was the bust of the priceless silver vase we had missed on the second day of our Pte A. W. Green of 32th Writes Interesting Letter to his Mother, Mrs. A. V. Green, Harry St.

The following letter was received by Mrs. A. V. Green from her son, Pte. A. W. Green with the 38th Batt. now in England.

Folkestone, Kent, July 11th, 1915

Dear Mother,—

I thought I would write you a few lines to let you know that I am well, hoping you are the same. I was down street this afternoon and I was surprised to see the hotels open and the stores also. You can drink from 12 p.m. till 2.30 p.m. and from 6 till 9. The stores are open all day. We had church out here this morning and two ministers preached. I hope you will get my money. This is a very hilly country. Coming over we passed under the bridge that collapsed in Quebec some time ago and killed so many. I would like some Senator tobacco, as I cannot smoke this stuff. I saw lots of icebergs coming over. We expect another load of Highlanders today. I fear we are going to wear the kilts I will send you some views of this place later. We have to be in at 9.30 p.m. We had kit inspection yesterday morning and have Saturday afternoon off. The money gets my goat and the trains drive me crazy to look at them. I fear we are going to Chatham for garrison duty but I believe we will stay here for some time. Remember me to all.

A. W. Green.

42 Recruits Are Drilling

In the past few days 42 recruits have come in to the 49th and 59th regiments at their recruiting tent on the armouries lawn. Twenty-eight of these are the 49th lot and five teen on the 15th rank. These still will not leave the city until the 77th battalion begins mobilization.

Lieut. McGregor was engaged this morning in drilling recruits on the armouries lawn. He had 36 men going through the preliminary manoeuvres.

Sergeant James McGlashan, cuistor of Belleville armouries, has returned from a trip to Toronto. He spent some time around the recruiting tents and offices and armouries in the different city and given great praise to the recruiting staffs there for the efficiency and persistency in bringing men to sign up. Every inducement is said to be made to the men who seem undecided and arguments are made which few can get away from. One recruiting officer will spot a man and question him and if he fails another approaches the civilian a few feet further on. Marked success is said to be the result of their efforts and it is no wonder the recruiting lists are swelling.

Most infants are a mystery to mothers, which cause great suffering, and if not promptly dealt with may cause constitutional weaknesses difficult to remedy. Bayside Women's Institute to Assist the Red Cross

The first meeting of the Bayside Women's Institute was held on Wednesday afternoon at the home of the President, Mrs. R. B. Mallory. Mesdames Lasier and Tehmans came out from Belleville, and told of the needs of the Red Cross, and suggested some lines of work that it would be possible for the Institute to undertake. This created much enthusiasm among the ladies, who resolved to make a canvass for members and to hold an open meeting in the near future to raise funds with which material may be purchased to make up supplies for the wounded. In the meantime work is being arranged for, as that knitting may be proceeded with at once. The next meeting is to be held on the third Wednesday in August at the home of the Secretary, Mrs. Fred Gardner. After the business had served dainty cakes and ice cream, the meeting was concluded by singing "The Maple Leaf."

The Largest Pickerel

Mr. John McBain, so far as we have been informed, bears off the palm for having the largest pickerel that has been caught in Moira lake this year. In length it measured 22 inches and weighed 4 1-2 pounds. Mr. McBain is to be congratulated on landing a pickerel of such dimensions or for that matter a pickerel of any dimension as owing to the illegal methods used by some fish hogs who frequent Moira lake it is almost impossible to get a mess of pickerel this season.—Madoc Review

Western Crops Good

Mr. Geo. H. Wilson, of the Lindsay Post, and daughter, Miss Jean, are home from a five weeks' trip to Vancouver. Mr. Mr. Wilson says the crops all along the G.P.R. seem to be in excellent condition and experienced farmers predict a bumper crop if weather conditions continue, to improve so that crops will properly ripen. Western provinces have had much rain and wheat growers have been nervous. The Lakes are Calling You

Tourists from all parts of the country are this year seeking the Muskoka district for recreation trips, and to those who have never before enjoyed the delights of these splendid steamers and unexcelled service we would call attention. This is particularly true of Lake Erie upon whose waters plies the Great Ship "ERIANDERE" daily between Cleveland and Buffalo. This great ship is 500 feet long, 60 feet 6 inches wide and has 510 staterooms and parlors de luxe accommodating 1800 passengers which equals the sleeping capacity of the largest hotels in the country. The splendid steamers "CITY OF BUFFALO" and "CITY OF ERIE" also ply on this route and with the Great Ship "ERIANDERE" establish daily service between Cleveland and Buffalo, leaving either city at nine o'clock in the evening and reaching destination following morning at 7.30

In point of expense these lake trips are by far more economical than travel by rail, and once one has tasted of their delights, succeeding vacations are sure to include a lake journey.

You can go now to almost any Eastern or Western point, far or near, on the C.P.R. Tickets sold by Dirtrewz of Belleville. 19264-d

Caught Stranger With Explosives Near the Kingston Gas Plant

On Monday evening shortly before dark a foreigner was rounded up in the outer of Avenue Tomas near the gas tank on Barrack stregt. Kingston and when found by Police Constables Cotter and McCarey he had a bottle filled with explosives. How he or this foreigner has been frequenting this place is unknown, but it was by chance that Mrs. Charles McCormick, who resides across the street, saw him slide through the window into the basement. It is also claimed that a fuse was found and everything was almost in readiness to carry out a dastardly plot which might have caused the loss of many lives besides a terrific fire. The two constables had a lively tussle with the foreigner before they finally landed him in Fort Henry.

They Eat Horse Meat at Oshawa

Monday night at a special meeting of the Oshawa Town Council a warm discussion took place over the appointment of a sanitary inspector for the town, Councillor Smythe strongly contending for a veterinary to fill the position in the course of his remarks he said he knew that horse meat had been sold in Oshawa as beef and he knew that meat from animals, which were not fit to eat were palmed off on the public; only a veterinary was capable of passing judgment in such cases He offered to produce evidence within a week to substantiate his statements.

DEEP INTEREST AROUSED BY THE ANNOUNCEMENT OF INCREASED VOTE VALUES

A Popular Movement to Encourage Workers and Stimulate the Promotion of the Campaign for New Subscriptions--Further Important Hints and Announcements to the Contestants Standing of Candidates Will be Given Again Tomorrow.

The announcement made in last night's Ontario in connection with the Panama-Pacific Contest of the increased values for new subscriptions has awakened a keener interest than ever in the Great Campaign for popularity honors. Some are regretting that they had not held back more of their new subscriptions already handed in, but that is part of the fortunes of war.

The thing to do is not to waste time in vain regrets, but to get busy hunting for more. There is plenty of room to work. Thousands in city and country have yet to be introduced to The Ontario and to ascertain from personal acquaintance what an excellent local paper it is.

The work of gathering in new subscriptions has in reality only begun.

The Ontario, like any other household necessity, should actually be in every household. You may subscribe and pay for other papers but you cannot buy in any other Journal the magnificent summary of city and district news found only in The Ontario.

Times are hard with some few people in the city where there has been unemployment, but that will soon be a matter of history. The wonderful crops now being garnered, the unprecedented prices are bound to create prosperity.

The railroads will have more business in a month or so than they can possibly handle.

Only last night we heard a gentleman lamenting the absence of grain elevators at Belleville. There is a huge grain crop and the problem will be to find storage for the export grain which will be awaiting shipment. It has been many years since Belleville required an elevator. The local crops were far from sufficient to feed the local stock and extensive importation was the rule.

This year the order will be changed. Vast quantities of wheat from the surrounding counties will be offered for export and prices are certain to be satisfactory.

Therefore abandon the pessimistic procession and get into line for the prosperity that is bound to come.

Our candidates should become the heralds of optimism and call attention to the foolishness of feeling depressed by hard times that no longer exist outside of the imagination.

To those who speak of the war as a time for hoarding, tell them that is just the time they need a good live newspaper to keep them informed in regard to the events of world-wide interest now transpiring in Europe. The newspapers are performing a great public service during the war at enormous expense to themselves and inadequate profits. Therefore to extend circulation is one of the most reasonable and useful propositions in the world.

We call the attention of our candidates once again to the greatly increased values we are now giving for one-year and two-year new subscriptions to daily and weekly.—

Daily Inside the City of Belleville:—
One year	$3.00	5000
Two years	6.00	12000
Daily Outside Belleville:—
One year	$2.00	3000
Two years	4.00	8000
Weekly Ontario:—
One year	$1.00	1250
Two years	2.00	3000

We repeat and emphasize that no such values will be offered again before the conclusion of the contest.

The offer is good only for eight days, starting Saturday, July 31st, and closing Saturday, Aug. 7th.

Now is the time for candidates to do their best work, for their efforts will never count so much again.

Now is the time for every person to help some hard-working candidate with a dollar or two dollars or three dollars for a year's subscription. If you are already taking The Ontario send it to some friend or former resident who would appreciate such a gift.

One candidate inquires if a subscriber who has paid for one year's subscription to The Ontario during the contest and who later pays for four years' extension of his time would entitle her to the full vote valuation the same as if it were all paid at once. The answer is that it does.

For instance John Jones of Frankford pays $2.00 on July 30th as a new subscriber and receives a ballot for 1000 votes. If he were to pay $3.00 more on Aug. 10th, he would receive a ballot for 11000 votes just the same as though he had paid $10 on Aug. 10th and received a ballot for 12000 votes.

From all quarters of the vast field come the most encouraging reports from the workers. Everybody who is expending the least little bit of energy and earnestness finds that subscriptions are coming with the greatest ease. The people delight to help and win the gratitude of the candidates who try to help themselves.

Mr. W. S. Clarke, who is taking photos for the candidates, informs us that some are slow in returning the proofs after sitting. As it takes several days after we receive the photo to get a cut made we must request all to make their selection and return proof with the utmost promptness.

We again call the attention of all candidates to the desirability of having a photo-engraving published as a most excellent means of promoting their campaign.

Miss Sinclair received a small but very gratifying endorsation of her candidature from some unknown friend in Toronto. She received a letter containing two unsigned coupons from some Toronto subscriber, who had seen her name in the list of candidates and who spent three cents for postage to forward the coupons.

The state of the poll will be published again tomorrow.

Shantymen's Christian Association

Rev. T. Joplin delivered a special address at Bridge St. Methodist church last evening, describing the work of the Shantymen's Christian Association. Mr. Joplin stated that the Association is doing its best for the two hundred and fifty thousand men in lumber, mining and construction camps. Many of the leading business men of Canada were once shantymen and serve on the Board. Missionaries carry twenty pounds of literature on their backs and hold services in cookhouses, bunk rooms, and by the wayside. They also minister to the lonely settlers scattered throughout the sparsely settled portion of Ontario, and other provinces. Splendid results have followed. The missionaries are heartily welcomed wherever they go. Mr. Joplin also stated that the association is doing special work in England and France. Mr. Wm. Henderson and others, are working in connection with the Y.M.C.A. in supplying comforts for both the Canadians and the prisoners of war. Splendid work is being done with the troops. Mr. Joplin is anxious to raise $100 in Belleville and all who can, should help. Letters, addressed to Mr. Joplin can be sent in care of the Belleville Y.M.C.A. On Sunday afternoon Mr. Joplin will speak at St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church Sunday School at 3 p.m. All heartily welcome.

Mr. Carnew continued that Mr. Hotar was a Austrian and did not help the peace. "We should let Col. Marsh investigate the matter."

SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Lesson V.—Third Quarter, For Aug. 1, 1915.

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson: I Kings x. 1-13. Memory Verses, 2, 3—Golden Text, Prov. xvi. 1.—Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

We saw in a previous lesson that Solomon's wisdom excelled all the wisdom of the east and of Egypt and that people came from all the earth to hear his wisdom (I Kings iv. 29, 31, 34; II. Chron. ix. 23). His writings are mentioned in I Kings iv. 32, 33. The Song of Solomon was probably written in the joy of his first love to the Lord in his younger days when he first became king. Proverbs reads like his more mature experience, and Ecclesiastes is the sad prospect of his sinful folly and sin after he had turned away from the Lord, for his services turned away his heart after other gods, and his heart was not perfect with the Lord his God (I Kings xi. 4). Although he was beloved of his God and among many nations there was no king like him, nevertheless even his old grandmother women came to sin (Neh. xiii. 26). After the dedication of the temple the Lord appeared to him a second time and assured him that His eyes and His heart would be perpetually upon that house because it was to be named there (I Kings ix. 1-14). What a precious assurance for all the redeemed to appropriate, for what was true of a building is surely true of those who are temples of the Holy Spirit. His and his people were warned, however, that if they forsook the Lord He would make them a proverb and a by-word among all people (I Kings ix. 6, 7). So we are warned that if the salt loses its savor it is good for nothing but to be trampled under foot of man. The lesson of today, which is specially traced in II Chron. ix. shows how it might have been if Solomon had continued faithful and how it will be when a greater than Solomon shall sit on David's throne and the glory of the Lord upon Israel shall draw all the nations. They shall come from Sheba, bringing gold and incense, and shall show forth the praises of the Lord, and the wealth of the nations shall be brought to Israel when the Mighty One of Jacob shall be their Lord and Saviour (Isa. ix. 1-3, 6, 11, 16).

The queen of Sheba heard of the fame of Solomon concerning the name of the Lord; therefore some one must have told. We know of a greater than Solomon and of a greater glory than he ever had, which our Lord and Saviour has left to us, and if all we are willing to receive Him and follow Him, but so few think it worth while to tell them of Him that the thousands of the people on the earth never heard Him. When the queen heard she came to see for herself if the report was true. She came with a great retinue and gifts of camels, spices and gold and precious stones. Such an abundance of spices never came to Jerusalem before, and she gave to Solomon 120 talents of gold, which, at $25,000 a talent, would be about $3,000,000. See verses 9 and 10.

According to verse 14, Solomon was in the habit of receiving 666 talents of gold yearly. That would be over $16,000,000 in gold alone. So we do not wonder that silver was as stones and nothing accounted of (verses 21, 27). The queen had many hard questions to ask Solomon, but he told her all. There was nothing hid from him that he could not tell her. And when she heard his wisdom and saw his buildings and his house and his servants there was no more spirit in her, and she had to acknowledge that while before she came she did not believe all that she heard, now she had to confess that his wisdom and prosperity exceeded all that she had heard and the half had not been told her (verses 4-7). It reminds us of us, Isiv. 4; 1 Cor. ii. 8, where we read that the things which God hath prepared for His redeemed exceed all.

The Spirit has indeed told us somewhat, but we are slow to receive it, and we are not like the queen, who said, "We cannot but speak the things which we have seen and heard" (Acts iv. 20). If the queen of Sheba carried back to Arabia with her a saving knowledge of the Lord that she heard then her visit was to some purpose, but if it was only to see and admire and wonder and give and receive gifts (verses 8-10, 13) then it was a mere passing affair and great only to human sight. From verse 22 we might conclude that she had learned to know the true God and was only moved by what she saw. From Isa. xxxix we learn that the visitors from Babylon did not learn from Hezekiah of the true God, the God of Israel, but only saw Hezekiah's greatness and his precious things. Christian friends may be a bit perplexed sometimes if the Lord should inquire after visitors and ask, "What have they been and heard in thine house?" (Isa. xxxix. 4.)

Solomon's gift to the queen of all her desire, whatsoever she asked, besides what he gave her of his royal bounty (verse 13), makes us think of Rom. viii. 32, "With Him freely all things," and of David's one great desire—that he might behold the beauty of the Lord (Ps. xxvii. 4). The more we become occupied with the glory of His kingdom and with the city of which the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are both temple and glory (Rev. xxi. 22, 23) the better we shall see things here in their true light.

"There are distinct fragments," Laura continued, "of embroidered stuff such as the Salvation Army girl might wear, and a piece of a man's tie, and a piece of a man's collar. Now, Craig, I'm not going to ask you any questions, but I'm going to tell you what I think. I think you've been in a fight with a Salvation Army girl, and I think you've been in a fight with a man who wears a tie with a horseshoe pin in it, and I think you've been in a fight with a man who wears a collar with a number 15 on it. Now, Craig, I'm not asking you any questions, but I'm telling you what I think."

"If You Move I Shall Shoot You!"

have been wearing. We put them on one side, but they ain't enough evidence. Lenora's idea is that you should get hold of Craig and hypnotize him into a confession."

"That's all right," Quest replied, "but how am I to get hold of him?"

Laura glanced once more carelessly around to where the guard stood.

"Lenora's gone up to the professor's again this afternoon. She is going to try and get hold of Craig and put him in the garage. If she succeeds, she will send a message by wireless at—what's o'clock. It is half-past two now."

"Well?" Quest exclaimed. "Well?"

"Then I think the guard, if you want to," Lenora went on. "I have seen you tackle worse cases. He seems dead easy. Then let me in the cell, take my clothes and leave me here."

Quest followed the scheme in his mind quickly.

"It is all right," he decided. "but I am not at all sure that they can really hold me on the evidence they have got. If they can't, I shall be doing myself more harm than good in this way."

"It's no use unless you can get hold of Craig quickly," Laura said. "He is getting the scares, as it is."

"I'll do it," Quest decided. "Call the guard, please."

She obeyed. The man came quickly. Quest looked at him steadfastly through the bars.

"I want you to come inside for a moment," Quest repeated softly. "Unlock the door, please, take the key off your bunch and come inside."

The man hesitated, but all the time his fingers were fumbling with the key. Quest's lips continued to move. The warder opened the door and entered. A few minutes later Quest passed the key through the window to Laura, who was standing on guard.

Without a word, and with marvelous rapidity, the change was effected. Laura produced from her handbag a wig, and all signs of Quest lay bare and had passed over to Quest. Then she flung herself on to the bed and drew the blanket up to her chin.

"How long will he stay like that?" she whispered, pointing to the warder, who was sitting on the floor with his arms folded and his eyes closed.

"Half and hour or so," Quest answered, "I don't bother about him. I shall drop the key back through the window."

Quest reached Georgia square at five minutes to three. A glance up and down assured him that the house was unwatched. He let himself in with his own key, threw Laura's clothes off, and, after a few momentary hesitation, selected from the wardrobe a rough tweed suit with a thick lining and spats. Just as he was trying his tie, the little wireless which he had laid on the table at his side began to record a message. He glanced at the clock. It was exactly three.

Quest's eyes shone for a moment with satisfaction. Then he sent off his answering message, put on a duster and slouch hat, and left the house by the side entrance. In a few moments he was in Broadway, and a quarter of an hour later a taxicab despoiled Jones of the entrance to the professor's house. He walked swiftly up the drive and turned toward the garage, hoping every moment to see something of Lenora. The door of the place stood open. He entered and walked around. It was empty. There was no sign of either Craig or Lenora!

Quest recovered from his first disappointment, stole carefully out and made a minute examination of the place. Close to the corner from which Lenora had sent her wireless message to him, he stooped and picked up a handkerchief, which from the marking he recognized at once. A few feet away the gravel was disturbed as though by the trampling of several feet. He set his teeth.

"I've got to find that girl," he muttered. "Craig can go to h—l!"

He turned away and approached the house. The front door stood open and he made his way at once to the library. The professor, who was sitting at his desk surrounded by a pile of books and papers, addressed him, as he entered, without looking up.

"Where on earth have you been, Craig?" he inquired petulantly. "I have rung for you six times. Have I not told you never to leave the place without orders?"

"It is not Craig," Quest replied quietly. "It is I, professor—Sanford Quest."

The professor swung round on his chair and eyed his visitor in blank astonishment.

"Quest!" he exclaimed. "God bless my soul! Have they let you out already, then?"

"I came out," Quest replied grimly. "Will you kindly listen to me for a moment, will you?"

"You came out!" the professor repeated, looking a little dazed. "You mean you escaped?"

Quest nodded.

"Perhaps I made a mistake," he admitted, "but here I am. Now listen, professor." And he told the story of the last few hours.

The professor's face was almost pitiful in its blank amazement. His mouth was wide open like a child's, words seemed absolutely denied to him. It was only by an obvious effort a tremendous effort to adjust his ideas.

"Craig locked up in my garage!" he murmured. "Craig guilty of those murders? Why, my dear Mr. Quest, a more harmless, a more inoffensive, peace-loving and devoted servant than John Craig never trod this earth!"

"Maybe," Quest said, "but where is he?"

The professor could do nothing but look around him a little vaguely.

"I am going back," Quest announced. "My only chance is to find Craig, and Lenora is alive or at liberty, she will communicate with me."

"May I come, too?" the professor asked timidly.

"Come by all means," Quest assented, "but first drive you down in your car. If you like."

The professor hurried away to get his coat and hat, and a few minutes later they started off. In Broadway they left the car at a garage and made their way up a back street which enabled them to enter the house at the side entrance. They passed upstairs into the sitting-room. Quest fetched the pocket wireless and laid it down on the table. The professor examined it with interest.

"You are marvelous, my friend," he declared. "All the resources of science at your command it seems incredible that you should be in the position you are."

Quest nodded coolly.

"Just one moment, professor, while I send a message," he said, opening the little instrument. "Where are you, Lenora?" he signaled. "Send me word and I will follow. I am in the own house for the present. Let me know that you are safe."

The professor leaned back, smoking one of Quest's excellent cigars. He was beginning to show signs of the liveliest interest.

"Quest," he said, "I wish I could induce you to discuss the extraordinary supposition of yours concerning my servant Craig. The man has been with me for the best part of twenty years. He saved my life in South America; we have traveled in all parts of the world. In fact, he has proved to be an exemplary, a faithful and devoted servant."

"Then perhaps you will tell me," Quest suggested, "where he is now, and what he has gone away? Yours, I was not look like complete innocence, does it?"

The professor sighed.

"I cannot stay here much longer, unless I mean to go back to the Tombs," Quest declared.

"Surely," the professor suggested, "your innocence will very soon be established?"

"There is one thing which will happen, without a doubt," Quest replied. "My auto and chauffeur will be found discovered. I have insisted upon inquiries being sent out throughout the state of Connecticut, and I am sure to find that the police are hard on the scent of that Salvation Army girl and the man. Unless they cut wind of this and sell me purposely, their arrest will be the work of my freedom. To tell you the truth, professor, Quest concluded, 'it is not of myself I am thinking at all just now. It is Lenora."

The professor nodded sympathetically.

"The young lady who shot Craig up in the garage?" he asked. "A plucky young woman she must be."

"She has a great many other good qualities besides courage," Quest declared. "Women have not counted for much with you, professor, but now, any more than they have done, I should think, with you, but I tell you frankly, if anyone has hurt a hair of that girl's head I will have their live, whatever the penalty may be! It is for her sake—to find her—that I broke out of prison and that I am trying to keep free. The wisest thing to do, from my own point of view, would be to give myself up, or rather bring myself to do that without knowing what the issue of that may be."

The professor nodded again.

"A charming and well-bred young woman she seems," he admitted. "I fear that I should only be a bungler in your profession, Mr. Quest, but if there is anything I can do, depend upon me. Personally, I am convinced that Craig will return to me with some plausible explanation as to what has happened."

Quest, for the third or fourth time moved cautiously toward the window. His expression suddenly changed. He glanced suddenly downward, frowned slightly.

"There're after me!" he exclaimed. "Sit still, professor."

He darted into his room and reappeared again almost immediately. The professor gave a gasp of astonishment at his altered appearance. His tweed suit seemed to have been turned inside out. There were no lapels now, and it was buttoned up to his neck. He wore a long white apron; a peaked cap and a chapleau of astonishing naturalness had transformed him into the semblance of a Dutch grocer's boy.

"I'm off, professor," Quest whispered. "You shall hear from me soon. I have not been here, remember."

He ran lightly down the steps and into the kitchen, picked up a basket, filled it haphazard with vegetables and threw a cloth over the top. Then he made his way to the front door, peered out for a moment, swung through it on to the step, and, turning round, commenced to belabor it with his fist. Two plain-clothes men stood at the end of the street. A police automobile drew slowly outside the gate. Inspector French, attended by a policeman, stepped out. The former looked searchingly at Quest.

"Well, my boy, what are you doing here?" he asked.

Quest cannot answer yet," Quest replied, in broken English. "Ten minutes already have I wasted. I have knocked at all the doors."

French smiled.

"You run along home," he said, "and tell your master that he had better leave off delivering goods here for the present."

Quest went off, grumbling. French opened the door with a master key and secured it carefully, leaving one of his men to guard it. He searched the rooms on the ground floor and finally ascended to Quest's study. The professor was still enjoying his cigar.

"Say, where's Quest?" the inspector asked promptly.

"Have you let him out already?" the professor replied, in a tone of mild surprise. "I thought he was in the Tombs prison."

The inspector pressed on without answering. Every room in the house was ransacked. Presently he came back to the room where the professor was still sitting. His usually good humored face was a little clouded.

With Marvelous Rapidity, the Change Was Effected.

"Professor," he began— "What's the matter, Miles?"

A plain-clothes man from the street had come hurrying into the room.

"Say, Mr. French," he reported, "our fellows have got hold of a newsie down in the street, who was coming along 'way round the back and saw two men enter this house by the side entrance, half an hour ago. One he described exactly as the professor here. The other, without a doubt, was Quest."

French turned swiftly toward the professor.

"You hear what this man says?" he exclaimed. Mr. Ashleigh, you're fooling me! You entered this house with Sanford Quest. You will have to tell us where he is hiding."

The professor knocked the ash from his cigar and inclined it to his mouth. His cheeks had become reated in front of him. There was a twinkle of something like fun in his eye as he glanced up at the inspector.

"Mr. French," he said, "Mr. Sanford Quest is my friend. I am here in charge of his house. Believing as I do that his arrest was an egregious blunder, I shall say or do nothing likely to afford you any information."

French turned impatiently away. Suddenly a light broke in upon him; he rushed toward the door.

"That d—d Dutchie!" he exclaimed. The professor smiled benignly.

He observed without a word, and left the room, locked the door securely, and made her way round to the other side of the garage—the side hidden from the house. Here, at the far corner, she drew a little pocket whistle from her bag and set it on the window sill. Very slowly she sent her message:

I have Craig here in the professor's garage, locked up. If our plan has succeeded, come at once. I am waiting for you.

There was no reply. She sent the message again and again. Suddenly, during a pause, there was a little tap upon the plate. A message was coming to her. She transcribed it with beating heart:

The Daily and The Weekly Ontario's Great Pacific Coast Trip Contest

JUST ONE SUBSCRIPTION

Did you ever stop to think what just one subscription from each friend of a candidate in The Daily and The Weekly Ontario Contest would mean?

Each one of the candidates in the race has a number of friends who have been assisting these candidates with their votes. This assistance has been a splendid encouragement to the candidates and it has been this help that has kept them to the forefront in the contest.

The closing weeks of the contest have arrived. All that is to be accomplished must be done within the next twenty days. More can be done in the space of these twenty days than in all the rest of the contest if the suggestions made here are followed out.

Just think what it would mean if each friend of the candidates should appoint himself or herself a committee of one to get a subscription from some friend, relative or neighbor.

Just one yearly subscription from 50 friends would mean fifty subscriptions. These subscriptions would mean many thousands of votes.

If one hundred friends should each get one little single subscription it would mean 50,000 to 100,000 votes for that candidate. It is wonderful what the one subscription plan could accomplish.

Anybody can get one subscription. You know of some friend or neighbor who would be glad to subscribe in such a worthy cause. They help the candidate to a magnificent trip and get the worth of their money in having The Daily or The Weekly Ontario delivered to them for an entire year.

See what it means if you will take this suggestion right home to yourself and immediately cast about in your mind where you will get that one subscription. Perhaps you can arrange it over the phone without any further trouble. Why not act immediately?

If each present reader of The Daily or The Weekly Ontario would act on the just one subscription idea it would accomplish more for the candidates in this race than all the work of the past month of the contest. The power of the one subscription votes would decide the race.

Try this plan. Help your candidate with one subscription. Surprise some hard-working canvasser, who is perhaps becoming discouraged, by handing over a subscription before the end of the week.

It may seem a small matter, but it will bring in more votes for your candidate than all the work so far done in the contest if each friend gets just one subscription between now and August 7th.

Kirwan Carrol Burr

In Amelsburg on Sunday, July 15, there passed away to the great beyond Kirwan Carroll Burr, in the 51st year of his age. He was born in Illinois in 1864, and was the son of Rev. W. E. and Mary G. Burr. Besides his widow he leaves two sons, Lorne Culbert and Ross Edison, also his father and mother, one brother, Will. J. Burr of Chicago, and three sisters, Mrs. Elwood Sager of Bedecarrels, Mrs. J. R. Morse of Attin, B.C., and Mrs. (Dr.) E. A. Kingston, of Lockport, Ill. He was not only energetic and prosperous, but a good citizen, and kind and generous to a fault. He tried to make the earth more beautiful and the world better for having lived. The funeral services took place at Burr's church and, interment in the adjoining cemetery. The Rev. T. H. Squires of the Baptist church, recently from England, officiated. His address was most beautiful and very impressive. It was like a heavenly benediction, and his song at the grave, by request of the deceased, was a fitting climax to the life of the departed and very comforting to the bereaved.

Russians Hold Enemy Firmly From Warsaw

LONDON, July 30.—Holding the enemy firmly between the Niemen and the Dwina, and on the Narew front, the Russians on Wednesday threw six Austrian regiments back across the Bug near Kamionka with the loss of 1500 men as prisoners in 24 hours' fighting, and with the loss besides of a great number of killed and wounded. The enemy's forces crossed the upper Bug on Tuesday and captured some of the Russian advanced trenches before they were encountered by the Russian reserves. The Austrian War Office last night claimed that they had crossed the Bug here and captured a Russian position, but omitted all mention of the disastrous ending of the expedition.

On the Narew front the Russian artillery inflicted enormous losses on the Germans, who were attempting to fortify themselves on the left bank of the stream and in the Skwa district. Considerable forces of the enemy which attempted to advance between the Narew River and the Oss were also defeated. Fighting on both banks of the Narew is reported in the direction of Rozan-Pultusk.

Enormous losses were inflicted on the Austrians and Germans in an engagement with German troops on the front between the Bug and Vieprz Rivers, when they attacked positions between Maldowa and Ostrovsky and east of the Volsiavits-Kovlakvitze region. Two Austrian attacks were also repulsed on the Bug River above Sokal.

Germans Treating Prisoners Better

LONDON, July 30.—The American ambassador's representative, reporting on a visit to prisoners in the camp at Hanover, Munden, says he found there Major Rimes, Durham Light Infantry, and Lieut. Bath, 48th Canadian Highlanders. "I spoke to both officers outside the hearing of German officers. They said their treatment had been in every respect correct and generous, and they had no complaints to make.

"It was gratifying to see the improvement accomplished since my last visit. Six hundred officer prisoners are here, but only the two named above are British."

There is also a report on the Giessen camp, where there are many Canadians. This camp is described by the visitor as the best organized, neatest and most contented camp he has yet visited. Many prisoners have been detailed for work in the surrounding country. The prisoners said such work was not hard, and those medically unfit were not required to undertake it.

It is known that the treatment of prisoners in Germany varies considerably according to locality. The representative of the American ambassador appears to have been directed to German "show" camps for easily understood reasons.

Mining Chief Feature of British Activities

LONDON, July 30.—An official communication telling of the recent operations in France and Belgium was issued here today. It says:

"Mining operations have continued on both sides during the last few days with intermittent artillery engagements, but there has been no infantry attack. The enemy exploded three mines in the neighborhood of St. Eloi and one near Givenchy. Only one of them did any damage, and in that case the damage was only slight.

"We exploded a mine on the 30th north of Zwartelen, which destroyed 30 yards of the enemy's parapets.

"On the 29th one of our aeroplanes shot down a German machine which fell inside our lines east of Zillebeke."

A cough is often the forerunner of serious pulmonary affections, yet there is a simple cure within the reach of all in Bickle's Anti-Consumptive Syrup, an old-time and widely recognized remedy, which if resorted to at the inception of a cold, will invariably give relief, and by overcoming the trouble, guard the system from any serious consequences. Particulars of Minden Fatality

Before the eyes of his wife, sitting on the cottage verandah, facing Scott's Lake, Minden, Ont., Bert Cooper, assistant physical director at the West End Toronto Y.M.C.A., fell dead from his rowboat into the water as a result of an attack of acute indigestion. Shortly after breakfast Cooper went out in a skiff with a little boy, who was pulling the oars, sitting at the stern of the boat with a paddle. They were only a short distance out from the shore when his wife, who had been watching them from the verandah saw him fall back into the water. It was first thought that he had been overcome, but an examination by a doctor after the body had been recovered showed that acute indigestion had been the cause. Mrs. Cooper accompanied the body to the city last night. It is now at Norman A. Craig's undertaking parlors, 1255 Queen street west, Toronto, and the funeral arrangements have not yet been made.

Bert Cooper was one of the city's best known athletes, and excelled in many lines of sport. He had been assistant physical director for the West End Y.M.C.A. for three years. He was 26 years old, and is survived by a widow, to whom he was married last September.

Saturday and Sunday in the Y. M. C. A. Boys' Camp

Saturday was not big day or flower-day out here. It was stump-day. We made as grotesque a collection of stumps as was ever seen. When they were gathered together they looked more like a convention of ostrich from its sons than anything else. The roots seemed to stick out in every conceivable direction! We gathered our specimens together over on Stan Nurse's roof garden. Saturday night Stanley's folks invited us all over to watch the stump fire, and for a Dutch lunch. They reserved the choice seats right in the dress circle. Pop Gifford had to patrol up and down on auto loop the fellows from going over and talking to the ladies on the other side of the garden. We sang more songs than we ever did at college and did our level best to appear well. A little later our efforts to be good were rewarded by Stanley's sister coming down our slide with a bountiful supply of refreshing refreshments. We certainly think Stanley's folks are all right. After another little song, we entered our ark and beat it back to camp.

Sunday morning we had an early service when Mr. Gifford held forth. In the afternoon we heard an account of one of Billy Sunday's striking sermons instead of the regular Sunday School lessons. In the evening Mr. Hess spoke on life careers in which he emphasized the essential things necessary in a fellow's habits in order to make an outstanding success.

AT THE LAST CAMP FIRE OF THE Y.M.C.A. BOYS

This last camp fire was the biggest and greatest of all. It attracted all the other campers about the lake to come over in their boats. One automobile party from Belleville sought us out.

The boys conducted an election, which resulted as follows—

Most respected boy in camp—E. Van Allan

Most polite boy in camp—G. Roberts

Best all round camper—M. Herity

Boy who talks least about himself—K. VanAllan

Boy with best table manners—Oliver Owen

Best humorist and best natured—Col. J. Ketcheson.

Most generous boy—A. Boyd

The election was followed by a humorous competition in peanut pitching into another boy's mouth. Billy Dusebberry and Ernest Taylor made their mark in this event.

Boys were asked to state what had they learned since coming to camp. Here are some of the replies—

How to paddle correctly.

How to tie a knot.

How to pole punt

Use of several birds instruments.

Gained facts about bridge building

Way we should not harm squirrels and chipmonks

Learned some new swimming strokes

How to distinguish grains in the field

Learned some new camp yells and songs.

Learned important things about sex hygiene.

How to tell mulberries

Learned why a strap with nails is tied on a calf's neck.

Learned more about fishing

Learned how they work the canal locks

Learned things about poison ivy.

Learned how to make a chipmonk's call.

Learned how to put the shot.

Learned how to tell King Bird's eggs

Learned names of birds

Learned how to raise stumps and big stones.

Learned how to make beds and keep tidy.

Learned how to properly row a boat

Learned different kinds of insects and butterflies.

Mr. Hess then gave us a camp firestory on "A Midnight Raid" after which prizes were awarded.

3rd prize for promptness and fatigue work—O. Owen.

2nd prize for promptness and fatigue work—K. VanAllan

1st prize in handicapped athletics—Marshall

2nd prize do—V. James

3rd prize do—K. VanAllan

The entire camp was then treated to several dishes of ice cream. And as the camp fire burns out and a new fire is re-kindled in the hearts of every boy as he forms fresh resolutions and new ambitions to strive to carry out many of the things he has learned since coming to camp, and it is our earnest desire to see every boy becoming a real "live wire" in our Y.M.C.A. this coming fall and winter. Don't be satisfied by being a mere "pounder," but get others to join, ever keeping the object before you that you are helping a noble cause and a Christian work, as well as "helping the other fellow." "Come on boys, get busy."

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

POPE SEEKS AN ARMISTICE

ROME, July 31.—"In the Holy Name of God, our Heavenly Father and Lord Jesus, whose blessed blood was given as the price for human salvation, we beseech you whom Divine Providence placed at the heads of the belligerent nations to end the bloody carnage which, for a year, has dishonored Europe."

The foregoing is the concluding paragraph of a new appeal which Pope Benedict V. has issued to the rulers of the belligerent powers of Europe to bring about peace. It was issued yesterday and is published today in the Observatore Romano. Pope Benedict reviewed at length the events of the past year, dwelling upon the absence of attention which his peace entreaties have secured."

"That today, the next anniversary of the outbreak of this tremendous conflagration, a more ardent plea arises from our hearts for a sudden cessation of hostilities," says the Pope. "The longer we cry for peace, the more loudly may this cry reach the people of neutral countries and their rulers inducing them to higher counsels."

This was the strongest plea that Pope Benedict has made since he succeeded the Papal throne although his efforts in behalf of peace have been untiring all the time.

"Brotherly blood is being shed on land and sea," continues the Papal petition. "The most beautiful regions of Europe, this garden of the world, are strewn with dead and ruins. Where once smiled factories and vineyards and fruitful fields, are now only the frightful guns of war pouring forth their ruin and death.

"Can any reasoning before God and man tremendous responsibility. Oh, you warriors, heed our prayer. Hark to the paternal voice of the vicar of the Eternal and Supreme Judge, before Whom all shall be called to account."

Pope Benedict invites the rulers of the powers at war to abandon the idea of mutual annihilation, as nations never die, but always prepare for revenge.

"Why not begin now to exchange views with the idea of ending the conflict" asks the Pope. "Blessed is he who will first raise the olive branch."

"The abundant wealth wherewith our Creator endowed these lands enables you to continue the war, but with what a price. Thousands of young lives are being shed there daily. Let the ruins of so many cities and villages and monuments erected by genius in commemoration of the faith of our forefathers answer the bitter tears shed within the privacy of home or at the foot of altars. No, the cannot be. The price of the struggle is too high."

The Pope ends by extending his blessing to everyone working for peace, be they Catholic or Protestant.

THE LUSITANIA AFFAIR CLOSED

NEW YORK, July 31.—Karl Von Wiegand sends the following despatch to the "World" from Berlin via The Hague:

More and more I get the impression from all quarters that the Lusitania incident has been closed as far as Germany is concerned. The consensus appears to be that President Wilson deliberately and intentionally slammed the door shut against any further exchanges.

In parliamentary circles I was told that any answer which Germany could give would tend only to make matters worse, strain the present delicate relations still more and increase the state of public feeling in both countries.

Berlin, July 31.—Via Amsterdam —Ambassador Gerard transmitted to Washington last night an important despatch believed to set forth certain views of the German government on submarine warfare. The despatch was sent after a conference between Mr. Gerard and Imperial Chancellor von Bethmas-Hollweg which took place Thursday afternoon.

Trieste Wrecked Garrison is Gone

ROME, July 31,—An uncensored despatch from Trieste says that over 200 houses and villas there have been looted and wrecked. Verdi's monument and other works of art have been destroyed. The city is practically empty. A majority of the Italian inhabitants have been arrested and interned.

The shops are opened at 9 o'clock in the morning and closed at sunset. The streets are without lights at night The wreck near the dockyard have been damaged by the Italian aerial bombardments. The city has virtually been evacuated, the garrison having been withdrawn and only the gendarmes left. These are requisitioning the scanty supply of foodstuffs.

The rupture between Turkey and Italy is inevitable. Turkey has ignored the Italian remonstrances and protests against the internment of Italians.

Use of the Italian language has been forbidden.

"Lion" is Reported Near Dardanelles

BERLIN, July 31.—(By wireless to Sayville)—Included in the news given out by the Overseas News Agency is the following:

The correspondent at Athens of the Vossische Zeitung reports that the British superdreadnought Lion has arrived in the harbor of Mudros on Lemnos Island. The Aquitania and the Mauretania, being used as troop transports, also are in this harbor.

"The Lion," the correspondent goes on to say, "received 'serious' injuries in a naval engagement last January off the Dogger Bank in the North Sea. She has been sent to join the Dardanelles fleet.

"The British battleship Agamemnon, badly damaged, also is lying in Mudros harbor."

May be Big Order For Mica Lenses

PITTSBURG, July 31.—Inquiries have been made by a representative of the local French Government among the manufacturers regarding the possibility of placing an order for sufficient mica to make 4,000,000 lenses for glasses to be worn by soldiers fighting in the trenches in Europe.

They assert that mica forms a protection for the eyes from gas and acid bombs, as it will not shatter when struck and is not susceptible to heat.

Germans Fight Hard to Recover Trenches

LONDON, July 31, —The following official statement was given out by the British War Office Friday night:

"This (Friday) morning the enemy began a bombardment of our trenches north and south of Hooge (east of Ypres, Belgium) and followed these by an attack with the flame projectors, delivered chiefly against the trenches recently captured by us at Hooge. By this means the enemy succeeded in penetrating our first line trenches on a front of about 500 yards. The fighting is still in progress."

Eleven Points Bombed by French Airmen

PARIS, July 31.—No fewer than eleven points were visited by French aviators and aerial squadrons last night and this morning and great destruction was wrought by the dropping of aerial bombs. German lines at various strategic points on the battle front were bombarded, as was also a factory at Dernach, Alsace, producing asphyxiating gas.

A raid of a squadron of 45 aeroplanes against the German petrol works at Pechelbronn, Alsace, encountered adverse weather conditions and only part of the fleet was able to reach the goal and dropped three bombs.

MACHINE GUNS.

We do not wish to criticise adversely any movement that will promote our military efficiency or assist towards bringing this war to an early termination. But we do think that the movement hat has been inaugurated in Belleville and elsewhere to provide machine guns for Canadian regiments is properly the business of the Militia department. Local and individual effort is more properly expended in the administration of the local needs from the Patriotic fund, and in such movements as the providing of additional comforts for our soldiers in hospital and camp.

The Conservative Toronto Telegram very pointedly remarks,—

Canada is today able to buy machine guns as fast as machine guns can be made. Popular and individual subscriptions will not add one weapon to the possible output of machine guns. The National Government should not divert the generosity of the people to works that the Government ought to undertake and complete. This war is going to last longer than the resources of the Patriotic Fund will last. Machine guns can be paid for out of the war taxes collected by the Dominion and Provincial Governments. There are soldiers to be supplied with comforts, there are soldiers' dependents to be visited with contributions from the Patriotic Fund. There are other works of necessity and mercy that have to be financed and will never be financed out of the war tax. Private liberality should leave the collectors of the war tax to supply machine guns to the soldiers and reserve private offerings of individual patriotism for services that the Provincial or Dominion Governments will never render to the soldiers or those dependent on soldiers.

Canada's soldiers are short of machine guns primarily because Canada's Militia Department and the British War Office was short of ideas. Officers commanding a Toronto regiment, speaking to a Canadian friend in London last October, said:

"I wish some rich men in Toronto would give our regiment fifty machine guns. It is murder sending troops into a modern battle with four machine guns to a battalion."

Canada offered no place in her militia administration to soldiers who had made a study of the conditions of modern warfare and realized that these conditions absolutely demand an abundance of machine guns. Canada's Militia Department was archaic. That Militia Department could not be expected to know more than the British War Office. Canada's forces went to the front with an inadequate equipment of machine guns, not because the country was short of money, but because the country was short of knowledge as to the need of machine guns.

SLAPPED IN THE FACE.

President Wilson's latest message to Germany was made public in the United States on Saturday morning last. It was received in Berlin on Friday last. Germany has not delayed her reply. On Sunday she caused to be torpedoed by one of her submarines, in the North Sea, the American steamer Leelanaw, which sank. The American crew of the Leelanaw were sent to the boats and managed to reach Kirkwall, Scotland.

The German Naval Department is at all times in close wireless touch with its submarines in the North Sea. It is highly improbable therefore, to say the least, that thirty-six hours or more after the receipt of the American Note in Berlin any submarine commander in the North Sea should have torpedoed any American vessel unintentionally or without authority.

The concluding paragraph of President Wilson's message was as follows:

"In the meantime the very value which this government sets upon the long and unbroken friendship between the people and government of the United States, and the people and government of the German nation, impels it to press very solemnly upon the Imperial German government the necessity for a scrupulous observance of neutral rights in this critical matter. Friendship itself prompts it to say to the Imperial German government that repetition by the commanders of German naval vessels of acts in contravention of those rights must be regarded by the government of the United States, when they affect American citizens, as deliberately unfriendly."

Comment upon such a situation as Germany has now "deliberately" caused, would be superfluous. There can be no further doubt as to German intentions. They mean to humiliate the American government and people to the very dust or force them into an immediate declaration of war. Will Americans consent to crawl or will they stand and fight? We think they can be depended upon to vindicate their national honor.

When anybody asks what the British fleet is doing, let him look at those huge German Atlantic liners lying up at Hoboken.

In the States there is a saying that "cotton is king." According to Lloyd George, in England coal is king. Long live King Coal!

It is reported that no answer will be made by the German government to the latest American Note. If it remains unanswered by submarine action as well as by written words, all may yet be well.

The hint is given that when the German armies get through with their Russian task they will turn their attention to the Balkans and make short work with the allies at the Dardanelles. But there is evidence that that Russian task will not be finished up soon.

The number of cattle slaughtered in Britain since the war began is greater than in any other period in the nation's history, and, as a result, if the war lasts a long time, the situation will amount to a famine, not only of meat, but of milk as well. Two plans have been suggested for meeting this condition. The first and most drastic proposed is that an order be issued prohibiting the slaughter of any animal without permission from the government.

Mr. Gerard, United States Ambassador to Germany, has called the attention of the German government to the fact that while almost all British subjects in Germany are interned, less than one-third of the Germans in Britain are interned, viz., only those who are not in a position to support themselves, and that in these circumstances it would not be surprising if the British Government should see themselves compelled to intern the many Germans still at liberty in England. He thinks that this state of affairs should be remedied.

SO SORRY.

As Jones came from his daily task,
About the time the daylight fled,
He met a person in a mask
Who held a pistol to his head.
"I'm sorry," said the person bland,
"But, sir, your watch is contraband!
I'm very, very sorry"—and
He shot poor Jonesy dead!

About the time the sun arose,
A lack of breath made Thompson wake,
To find a burglar at his nose
With chloroform he had to take.
And as he sank to death away,
He heard the burglar sadly say,
"I'm very sorry, but I slay
A livelihood to make!"

The fighter in the padded ring
Hit very far below the belt,
And gave his foe a back-heel fling
And on his manly bosom knelt.
"I'm very sorry thus to slip
A foul one over," was his tip,
"But-gee! I need the championship
Of—so to speak—die Welt!"

When Mike the bite peered from a door
And saw beneath the light his foe,
He emptied all his .41
And sent him where the gunmen go.
"I had to kill the guy this time,"
Said Mike, "but-do not call it crime!
Because I must assure you I'm
So sorry, don't you know!"

When Binks, in sliding to a base,
Shoved spikes in Jinks' diaphragm,
And opened furrows in his face
Like some one cutting up a ham,
The crowd with rage grew fairly black,
But Binksy stilled the yelling pack
By saying, as he waved them back,
"I'm sorry; yes, I am!"
—John O'Keefe in New York Times.

Other Editors' Opinions

THE ROMANCE OF EVERY DAY.

One who goes into the fiction alcoves of a public library and sees the romance-filled shelves wonders at the prolific invention of the professional romance writers. There is a world in itself of characters, of plots, of motives, of emotions, of successes and failures, of rewards and punishments.

But if, instead, one was able to read the unreal and unfamiliar in the familiarly crowded street car that carried him to the library, he might look upon the fiction alcoves as comparatively barren and unfruitful in the very elements with which it seems to abound. For all this world of invention on the fiction shelves is but a poor imitation of the rich romance that is all about us. It is written out and put into books for those who are blind to it, in their own lives, just as raised letters are provided for the blind who cannot read ordinary print.

Do you know the real life story of your next-door neighbor? Do you know even a tithe of his risings and fallings, his hopes and his disappointments, his involvements and his extrications, his struggles and his easetakings, his heroic sacrifices, his hideous fears, his real associations and his real delusions, his joys unutterable and his griefs unspeakable? You think his life is to you an open scroll, and yet you have never seen much that is romantic in him.

We live only on the crust or rind of our neighbor's lives. We cannot go below the surface.

There is to you no romance in your neighbor's life because you do not get the soul-deep romantic view of it. You cannot see what ought to be as plain as print before your eyes; and so you must go to the library shelves and get the raised letters of the blind in order to read romance, deemink it something unreal.

But there is no more true romance for you on the library shelf than there is in real life, so long as you have not the romantic conception, the sympathy with it as a thing that is actually all about you, the power of seeing the unfamiliar in the familiar the poetry under the prose.

The truth is that few lives are devoid of everyday romance, if we can but recognize it.—St. Thomas Times.

THE PEDDLING NUISANCE.

The practice of town and city retail concerns peddling their goods from village to village endeavoring to unload them on the people is not only nondescript but pernicious, and but every journal in the country that promotes the upbuilding of local enterprise and protection of home industry are vigorously opposed to it. Amongst others that have come out boldly on the subject is a Markham paper which commits as follows:—

"Some of the members of the Weston council are putting up a vigorous kick over peddlars coming into the town and doing business. They are right. The men who pay taxes and help to run a town are the men who should have what trade is going. If the county by-law permits a license being issued to allow this, the sooner those laws are amended the better. The merchants of our town help support our institutions, and these outsiders are allowed to come round periodically and sell their wares with very little expense to themselves and no profit whatever as far as the residents are concerned. Their goods are not sold at a loss to themselves, but by any means. If quality is considered the same goods could be sold very often at less money than these itinerant merchants get, but very often too if these same goods were sold by a resident merchant they would be returned to him but if the other fellow can go joyously on his way. Our council could take this matter up. They may not have power to redress the evil, but recommend to the County Council that they do it, might do some good."

We are proud to know that the Advocate does not stand alone in the matter of doing our duty to the local merchant by affording him protection and we do not hesitate to say that there is not a practical newspaperman on the list of rural weeklies who has not adopted this modern and progressive policy. Newspapers should practice what they preach, and make "Be loyal to your own community."—Tweed Advocate.

Trial is inexpensive.—To those who suffer from nervousness, indigestion, rheumatism or any ailment arising from derangement of the digestive system, a trial of Parmelee's Vegetable Pills is recommended, should the sufferer be unacquainted with them. The trial will be inexpensive and the result will be another customer for this excellent medicine. So effective is their action that many cures can certainly be traced to their use where other pills have proved ineffective.

occupancy, and it was filled with fresh yellow roses.

And so complete had been the rifling of her home by the devoted vandals in their efforts to make this ugly cosy and comfortable that they did not overlook a silver framed photograph of my dear mother.

I cried out, myself. "How—how cozy you are here," I said.

"Too cozily? I expect me to live in this awful place, without some of the comforts and conveniences of life, Mr. Smart," she said defiantly.

"Certainly not," I said promptly. "I am sure that you will excuse me, however, if I gloat. I was afraid we had lost all these things. You've no idea how relieved I am to find them all safe and sound in my—in their proper place. I was beginning to distrust the Bcumucks. Now I am convinced of their integrity."

"I suppose you mean to be sarcastic."

"Sarcasm at any price, madame, would be worse than useless. I am sure."

Pressing to the fireplace, I selected a lump of coal from the scuttle and examined it with great care. She watched me curiously.

"Do you recognize it?" she asked.

"I do," said I, resting my head on it. "It has been in our family for generations. My favorite chunk, believe me! Still there is room for another." Thereupon I tossed it into the fire. "Don't be shocked. I shan't miss it. We have plenty to burn, thank goodness."

She looked at me soberly for a moment. There was something hurt and wistful in her eyes.

"Of course, Mr. Smart, I shall pay you for everything—down to the smallest trifle—when the time comes for me to leave this place. I have kept strict account of—"

She turned away, with a beaten droop of the proud little head, and again I was abashed.

"Madame," I said, with considerable feeling, "I have behaved like a downright rotter indeed. I do not know why you are not why you are here, but I assure you it is of no real consequence if you will but condescend to overlook my insufferable—"

She threw forward me. The wistful, appealing look still lingered in her eyes. She sort nd nether lip seemed at it remember.

"I am an intruder," she interrupted, smiling faintly. "You have every right to put me out at once—your home, Mr. Smart. I have been very selfish and ruthless and inconsiderate, Mr. Smart. Of course, I'm a spoiled child. I always had my own way in everything. You must look upon me as a very bold, shocking, conscripting person, and I—I really think you ought to turn me out."

She came a few steps nearer. Suddenly it was revealed to me that she was the loveliest woman I had ever seen in all my life.

I am afraid that I stared.

"Turn you out!" cried. "Turn you out of this delightful room after you've had so much trouble getting it into shape! Never!"

"Oh, you don't know how I've imposed upon you," she cried plaintively. "You don't know how I've robbed you and bothered you!"

"Yes, I do," said I promptly. "I know all about it. You've been stealing my coals, my milk, my ice, my potatoes, my—my—why, you've stole and—here I gave a comprehensive sweep of my hand—everything in sight. And you've been to walk on tiptoe to keep from waking the baby, and"— I stopped suddenly. "By the way, whose baby is it? Not yours, I'm sure."

To my surprise her eyes filled with tears.

"Yes; she is my baby, Mr. Smart," she said, turning away.

CHAPTER VIII.

"The count—my husband."

My face fell.

"I—I—she couldn't have been a bad day over twenty-two. But she had a baby!

Facing me once more, she said:

"Doubtless you are very much puzzled by my presence in this gloomy old house. You have been making yourself a thousand questions about me, and you have been shocked by my outrageous impositions upon the generosity natives. I am here, Mr. Smart, because it is the last place in the world where my husband would be likely to look for me."

"Your husband? Look for you?"

"Yes. I shall be quite frank with you. My husband and I have separated. A provisional divorce was granted, however, just seven months ago. The final decree cannot be issued for one year."

"But why should you hide from him?"

"The—the court gave him the custody of our child during the probationary most not speak of him as a knave," she protested. "He doesn't like counts and such things."

"I see that it helps matters. A can hardly substitute the word 'brave' for the one I used." said I, trying to conceal my disgust.

"Please don't misunderstand me, Mr. Smart," she said haughtily. "I am not asking for pity. I made my bed, and I shall lie in it. The only thing I ask of you is your pity, kindness."

She seemed to falter again, and once more I was at her feet figuratively speaking.

"You are to discuss, in dread of something, madame!" I cried. "Consult me on your friend."

She shook her head resolutely. "For poor man! You don't know what you are in for, I fear. Wait till I have told you everything. Three weeks ago I laid myself open to the punishment between knew what else by abducting my little girl. That is really what it was, you know—abduction. The court has ordered my arrest, and all sorts of police persons are searching high and low for me. Now don't you see how perfil I if they find me here you will be in for dreadful predicament. You will be charged with criminal complicity, or whatever it is called, and—oh, it will be frightfully unpleasant for you, Mr. Smart!"

My expression must have convinced me. She couldn't help seeing the dismay in my face. So she went on quite humbly:

"Of course you have but to act at once and all may be well for you. I—I will go if you—if you command me to—"

I struck my knee forcibly. "What do you take me for, madame? Hang the consequences! If you feel that you are safe here—that is, comparatively safe—stay!"

"It will be terrible if you get into trouble with the law," she murmured in distress. "I—I really don't know what might happen to you. Indeed, I do not."

Suddenly a horrible thought struck me with startling force.

"Don't tell me that your—your husband is the man who owned this cow to up to it when I—I—" Count James Bobendahl?"

She shook her head. "No. He is not the man." Seeing that I waited for her to go on, she continued: "I know Count James Bobendahl, however. He is my husband's closest friend."

"Good heaven," said I, in quick alarm. "That complicates matters. He doesn't fit He may come here at any time."

"It isn't likely, Mr. Smart. To be perfectly honest with you, I waited so ill I heard you had bought the castle before coming here myself. We were in hiding at the house of a friend in the Lake region. I—I ran away—in an Austrian subject. His interests must be protected." She said it with a sweet air of her pretty lip. "You see, my father, knowing him now for what he really is, has refused to pay over to him something like a million dollars, still due for the marriage settlement. The count contends that it is a just and legal debt, and the court supports him to this extent: The child is to be his until the debt is cleared up, or something to that effect. I really don't understand the legal complications involved. Perhaps it were better if I did."

"I see," said I, scornful in spite of myself. "One of those happy intrigues. I suppose you became a bride in a throwa in for good measure with a couple of millions. Won't we see tears?"

"That's it precisely," she said, with the utmost calmness and candor. "Another rolling stone and American girl in exchange for a title, a lot of debts and a ruined life."

"And they always turn out just this way. What a lot of blithering fools we have in the land of the free and the home of the knave!"

"My father objected to the whole arrangement from the first, so you

Germans in the United States

Much has been said about the great German population of the United States, but when one looks up the statistics it becomes apparent that it is the nerve of that population, rather than its numbers, that makes it so assertive. It is a highly organized minority in a country where the vast body of the people do not feel that under the necessity of becoming aroused to active resistance to the agitation being carried on. From the United States census of 1910 as given in the World Almanac for 1915, we take these figures showing the Germanic (German and Austrian) population of the republic, i. e., those foreign-born, whether they have been in the country half a year or half a century.

Germany	2,501,121
Austria	1,174,924
Hungary	495,660
Luxemburg	2,043
	4,174,773

This falls very far short of the 20,000,000 which some say is the number of Germans in the United States. No doubt, however, those who put the estimate two or four times higher than the census officials figures include the children and grandchildren of those born in Germany.

From the same census returns it will be interesting to set off the British population of the United States as against that of Germany and Austria; i. e., those persons in the United States who were born in the British Empire as follows:

England	876,455
Scotland	261,034
Wales	23,479
Ireland	639,159
Can. and Newfoundland	1,301,146
	3,772,349

There are, too, in the republic, the following numbers from the allied countries:

France	117,336
Russia	1,182,175
Italy	1,343,070
Belgium	49,397
	3,112,455

Turkey is the ally of Germany, and there are 91,923 persons from that country in the republic, making the total population derived from Germany, Austria, and Turkey, 4,266,696.

Against this the total American population derived from the allied countries is 6,887,734. They far outnumber the Germans, and if one were to take into account the lineage of the American-born the Germanic percentage of the population would be considerably diminished. Even further back the comparison is carried.—Toronto Star.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Medicine, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

But Few Left of Old Second Battalion

Twelve Canadian officers and twenty-three privates reached Quebec on the C.P.R. liner Missanabie. There are only a few of the Second Battalion left" said Pte. Wm. O'Connor, whose home is in Toronto, but who was transferred to the command of Lieut.-Col. David Watson of Quebec. "After the battle of St. Julien we were joined up a less 1/3 of the men. We started a charge at 4.30 in the morning, led by Col. Watson himself. It was barely daylight when we started to rush. There was no shelter for us, and as we went on we had to dig ourselves in, the machine gun fire was so hot. In order to find the range, i. e., those foreign-born, whether they Five minutes we had to stop to dig ourselves to safety, and it was but poor shelter we had. As we lay there with the Germans concentrating their fire upon us. Col. Watson went through the trenches and told us to be steady and make a name for the battalion. 'Put your trust in God, my boys, said the Colonel, and we stuck to it. We saw not the trenches we were after, but I believe they were lost later."

FEW CHANGES IN THE STANDING OF CONTEST CANDIDATES

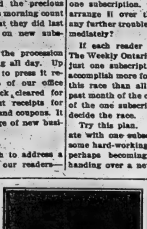
Today's Report Shows Few Additional Returns —All Workers Holding Their Subscriptions to Enable Them to Take Advantage of the Promotion Period Bonus of More than Double Value for New One-Year and Two-Year Subscriptions—What One Subscription Means.

Today's report shows the smallest net gain in votes since the opening of the Great Contest. Less than a dozen candidates have sent in returns and their friends have been equally remiss. But let no one imagine that lack of votes means lack of activity. Never since the opening day has there been such a scurrying among the workers and canvassers as has taken place since The Ontario announced on Thursday the generous bonus for new one-year and two-year subscriptions.

Everybody was holding back the bitherto-in-stock and the precious plunks that would this morning count more than double what they did last night when applied on new subscriptions.

But this morning the procession started and kept going all day. Up to the time of going to press it required the full time of our office staff to keep the desk cleared for action by writing out receipts for subscriptions, ballots and coupons. It has been a very deluge of new business.

Right here we wish to address a few timely words to our readers—



MISS PEARL HONEYWELL.

Among the candidates in District IV., Miss Pearl Honeywell of Cannifton is one of the most popular, as is evidenced by the position she holds in her credit in the recent reports. She is a daughter of Mr. H. M. Honeywell who was himself well known throughout the district some years ago as a public entertainer. Miss Honeywell is a very brightand energetic young lady and the successful gathering in of votes and subscriptions is first of all attributable to her own personal efforts and popularity. But she has been wise enough to enlist the support of her friends and in receiving from them much effective assistance. It is therefore no reason to predict with any show of certainty who will be the winner in District IV., but if loyal work and a well planned campaign are the factors that count, Miss Honeywell should not be very far from first position when the final report is made.

now or old.

Nearly everyone of our readers is deeply interested in the success of some candidate in some part of the wide field.

There is now offered a splendid opportunity to show friendship in the most practical way—when the friendly act will indeed cost you nothing, but will greatly benefit your friend.

The time has arrived today when a dollar counts more than it will at any time up to the close of the contest.

Did you ever stop to think what just one subscription from each friend of a candidate in The Daily and The Weekly Ontario Contest would mean?

Each of the candidates in the race has a number of friends and readers before entering these candidates with their votes. This assistance has been a splendid encouragement to the candidates and it has been this help that has kept them to the forefront in the contest.

The closing weeks of the contest have arrived. All that is to be accomplished must be done within the next eighteen days. More can be done in the space of these eighteen days than in all the rest of the contest if the suggestions made here are followed out.

Just think what it would mean if each friend of the candidates should appoint himself or herself a committee of one to get a subscription from some friend, relative or neighbor.

Just one yearly subscription from each friendo would mean fifty subscriptions. These subscriptions would mean many thousands of votes.

If one hundred friends should each get one little single subscription it would mean 50,000 to 100,000 votes for that candidate. It is wonderful what the one subscription plan could accomplish.

Anybody can get one subscription. You know of some friend or neighbor who would be glad to subscribe in such a worthy cause. They help the candidate to a magnificent trip and get the worth of their money in having The Daily or The Weekly Ontario delivered to them for an entire year.

See what it means if you will take this suggestion right home to yourself and immediately cast about in your mind where you will get that one subscription. Perhaps you can arrange it over the phone without any further trouble. Why not act immediately?

If each reader of the Daily and The Weekly Ontario would act on the just one subscription idea it would accomplish more for the candidates in this race than all the work of the past month of the contest. The power of the one subscription votes would decide the race.

Try this plan. Help your candidate with one subscription. Surprise some hard-working canvasser, who is perhaps becoming discouraged, by handing over a new subscription between now and August 7th.

The returns today are so meagre that the comparative standing of the candidates has in few instances been affected. Miss Shirley, Miss Sinclair, Miss Green, Miss Lowery, Miss Adams and Mrs. Bass retain the lead in their respective districts. But in District VI. Miss Hazel Salisbury by a splendid effort for two days has sent in a fine list of subscriptions and now goes from third to second place. Her sister Miss Evelyn Salisbury, is now a few votes behind and is temporarily in second place. This subordinate contest at Moira is easily the most interesting special feature of the whole competition, and will be eagerly looked for by every reader of The Ontario at each succeeding report.

Miss Jean Thrasher of Stirling, who is one of the youngest of the candidates, and likely to become one of the most popular, has also commenced an active canvass of her friends in District VI.

Marmora again takes precedence over Madoc in District VIII. and Miss Archer the popular music teacher of the former town has again come to the fore.

The contest among the three leading candidates in District VIII. which means also a contest between two towns, is having an interest all its own.

Following is the result of the poll at six o'clock last night.

The next report will be made in Tuesday's paper.

Invalided Home

Lieut. Gordon Graham, who was invalided home, arrived in Peterboro on Tuesday afternoon, and was accorded an enthusiastic reception. After a short stay he motored to Lakefield, en route to the parents' summer home at Bonny Castle. Lieut. Graham was gazetted as a private and was attached to a machine gun section of the 2nd battalion. He was promoted for conspicuous service on the field.—Norwood Register.

Sinclair's MID-SUMMER SALE Thursday, July 29th to Saturday, Aug. 7th Sinclair's

Prominent Farmer Accused of Stealing

William Dickinson, Esq., one of the most prosperous farmers in Hope Township, was summoned to the Police Court on Wednesday of this week on a charge of stealing on May 27 three steel rails the property of the C. N. R. The prosecution caused a profound sensation in both town and country because Mr. Dickinson is a gentleman of unimpeachable character, and his name is a household one for honesty and square dealing.

Mr. Dickinson, who was represented by Mr. D. H. Chisholm, pleaded "not guilty," and was ready to proceed with the hearing, when a chap named Detective Morden, who was never before heard of, arose and stammered out that he wanted an adjournment for a week. Possibly he wanted to go on a scouting expedition for evidence, and possibly hoped to find a spiteful neighbor or two.

The Times regrets exceedingly that we are not permitted to comment on this case which is still sub judice (under consideration.) According to law if we did, it would be construed as "contempt of court." This is the only reason why we are holding our peace.

The hearing was adjourned until Tuesday morning, July 27, at 10 o'clock.

Mr. Dickinson's defence is that he asked Mr. Howard Elliott, Station Master at Osaca, for permission to use the rails. It appears that there was a break-down at Mr. Dickinson's saw-mill, and that it was necessary to promptly repair the track on which the carriage conveys the logs to the saw. The ties were temporarily borrowed and Mr. Dickinson was willing to pay for them or return them. The rails were not taken in the middle of the night, as has been alleged.

It appears that two detectives came to Mr. Dickinson's place, and said they wanted to see his mill, as they intended building a mill. (Was this true?) Mr. Dickinson promptly showed them through the mill, and talked to them freely of the rails. They went away, and got busy before first seeing the Station Master at Osaca. We understand the railway authorities were anxious to abandon the prosecution, but one Morden secured an adjournment.

We are informed that the prosecution had its origin in spiteful retaliation on the part of a certain neighbor of Mr. Dickinson.

Wesley Clarke is one of the witnesses for the prosecution.—Port Hope Times

A Iowa Printer's Funeral Sermon

This was read over the grave of Arminius Kerns, a printer, who worked many years in Iowa, at San Jose, one Sunday afternoon:

"Old friends, here's one for remembrance. Think you not that as we, the craft, have this day borne you from our midst to the silent, lonely city of the dead, we recognize that we have laid away one of the truest, purest, warmest-hearted friends that ever walked with us down the aisle of life? Think you not that, with the moisture of the heavens over us, we, too, are shedding silent tears that the 'chase' of our companionship is broken; that the 'lines' of our being must henceforth run apart; that our presence is no longer a 'copy' among us; that your thoughtful though pleasant 'face' no longer illuminates or cheers our midst? And think you not of this partial truth when we, who have known you longest and best, do not temper our grief with the reflection that in the eternity to which you have gone, the pains, the sorrows the disappointments which were yours—not earned, but as blessings are over, and that, though the little 'space' between us be over so slight, it encompasses a freedom and a joy that you never found in this fond, real old world. There is no more 'night work.' Day has dawned. The sod we place over your grave will not be warmer than the memories you have left behind you. The rose and violet that will blossom beside the 'stone' that marks your resting place will give no sweeter perfume than the fragrant place you hold in the 'column' of our affectionate regard. The clouds that must forever hide you from our eyes but blot the bourne from whence no traveler returns, and to which the best of us must soon bear you company. Kerns, we shall miss you—the 'light' of other days. Keep the 'form' open. We are all soon 'dead.'

Chicago Buried 600 Victims of Disaster

Chicago, Ill., July 31.—Under streaming skies, Chicago buried its dead today.

The line and jury for the guilty in the Eastland catastrophe was mulled for a time. In its place bells tolled the city's sorrow. In offices, places, doors were closed. Over public and semi-public buildings flags drooped at half mast. Close to 600 of the victims were laid to rest.

So great were demands upon priests and pastors that funeral ceremonies were by sheer necessity, conducted over groups of bodies.

Conventional means of conveying the dead to their last resting places proved to be hopelessly inadequate. Many of the sad processions were led by coal, ice and express vans, swarthed in crepe.

Fraud in Collecting

Arthur Lambert, and Charles Martin, two boys aged 16 and 20 years, pleaded guilty in the police court this morning that they had been collecting money under false pretences. Yesterday afternoon the police came into possession of information which led them to arrest the young men. The complaint was that they had been selling flag buttons at 10 cents each on the understanding that a portion of the money was to be given to the Red Cross. This today they confessed was false, as they had made no such arrangement to contribute money to the Red Cross. They were remanded until Tuesday.

On Thursday the young men had put up a local hotel going the names of Joe Palmer and B. Craig of St. Catherines.

Russia's Giant Kettles.

Portable soup kettles that are in effect enormous vacuum bottles are one of the interesting features in the commissary equipment of the Russian army. After the soup has been prepared at a field kitchen in the rear of the army, it is put into these kettles, transported to the front, and served hot to the men in the trenches, the kettles being so thoroughly insulated against the escape of the heat that the soup will keep hot for hours. Each kettle holds rations sufficient for about 1,500 men.

FORCING THE STRAITS.

What It Will Mean When the Dardanelles Are Passed.

When the Allied Fleet forces the Dardanelles, reaches Constantinople and makes the way clear to the Black Sea, the public will then realize fully the value of the operations which have roused not little severe criticism. A first result of the achievement will be the restoration of communications between Russia and her Western Allies.

The fact is not generally realized that at the beginning of the war the entrance to the Baltic was blocked by the German fleet, the Dardanelles closed by the Turks, while Archangel, the only other outlet for Russia, was shut off by ice. The consequence was that there was no means of getting ammunition and other goods into Russia, and it is now fully recognized that the whole explanation of the Russian set-backs in Galicia lies in the simple one that big guns, huge stores of ammunition, and military equipment of all kinds are waiting until a means can be devised of carrying them to the vast armies. And it is the Allied Fleet which is attempting the task of opening a way for this purpose.

There are six, two other good reasons why the Dardanelles must be forced. The autumn of 1914, according to the story of "The Dardanelles" (Andrew Melrose), saw a heavy wheat harvest garnered on the shores of the Black Sea. It was a food supply of infinite value to the Allied forces at a time when the price of wheat was mounting by leaps and bounds over all the world. But so long as the Dardanelles are closed to our merchant ships, the Russian wheat must lie useless in the granaries. And so, if only to restore trading communications between East and West, the attempt on the Dardanelles had to be made.

The second reason why it is essential that the Dardanelles should be forced is that the Turks will be cut off from their supplies of weapons, munitions, and skilled advisers. There will be a rapid end of them as a fighting force, and a deadly menace to the whole of our Eastern Empire will be removed.

There seems no doubt that a plot has been hatched between the Germans and the Turks to rouse the fanaticism of the 100,000,000 Mohammedans into carrying on religious warfare against their rulers. The sultan has declared a holy war, and it is seriously reported that the Zeppelins are determined to kill the Mohammedan faith. That is why the Allies have decided to launch an attack at the very heart of Turkey in order that the so-called holy war will become, for the Sultan, a war of self-preservation.

Joffre Gets His Full Sleeps

A hearty, hale, most wholesomely sane man, well around the corner of the sixties, Joffre inspires none of the traditional habits of great commanders. He does not dictate three or four telegrams and letters at once. He takes more than three hours a day sleep. He does not eat in a rush at trams. Quite the contrary. He is a good feeder and a good sleeper. He gulps meals and seven straight hours of sleep from 9 at night until 4 in the morning are his routine. But in all the remaining seventeen hours of the twenty-four the entire French army knows that "the old man" is awake.

As to the final result, not the remotest shadow of doubt crosses his mind. He is as certain of victory as he is of his existence. To every man in the French army he has imparted precisely this same confidence. And so will the army say to him in the entire nation. "General Joffre knows we are going to win, therefore we know we are going to win." This is the beginning and the end of the French war creed.

A New Austrian Gun.

Austria is said to be employing a gun of remarkable type. It is mounted on an automobile capable of a speed of forty miles an hour, and carrying 144 shells. These shells, which are fired almost vertically, act partly like grenades and partly like shrapnel. Should they miss their actual target, they burst about 100 yards farther on.

DAIRYING IN EAST ONTARIO IS PROFITABLE

PRESENT IS A FAT YEAR—WILL SIX MORE FOLLOW?

CHEESE TRADE IS MORE BRISK

Output Much Larger This Year—$10,000 More Per Week to June at Belleville Than Last Year's Average—No Cows Exported.

(J. E. Munro in Toronto Globe.)

Talk of the goose which laid the golden egg, but she was no better proposition than a good cow if that latter be allowed to run in the pastures of the eastern Ontario dairy division. In no section of dairying the east and west of Ontario are the same. They are making money on both sides The cows are the same, the men are the same, and conditions are largely the same, although the most advantageous are with western Ontario. Belleville is the dividing line of the east. It is the center of the eastern Ontario dairying district. That same scene of the contented milch cows grazing in deep meadows of fields of splendid crops and good barns, is presented here.

Seven Lean Years Past.

When $10,000 a week more goes over the Belleville Cheese Board than it did last year, there must be more satisfaction and more money in the rural section, and there is. Thousands of dollars more will be paid to the farmers of the country this year than for many years. The farmers of Hastings and other counties have had their share of the "lean" years. The start of the eighth, and it is "fat." Will the six years to come follow out the simile? People were realizing that cheese and butter were the proper products of the district, although cheese was more prominent that butter, and consequently lowering of cheese prices was because of the large surpluses, and buyers were afraid to speculate, for fear of not getting enough enough how the export trade was going to keep up just at present. However, he had not the slightest doubt but that dairy high price would be maintained.

Far Larger Output This Year.

On the Belleville Cheese Board alone June the average amount of money was $10,000 more a week at 45,000, which is $10,000 over the average week of a year ago. With the heavy rains the pastures are keeping right on, and it looks very much as if there would be just as big an amount during July. The cheese output in the Belleville district has not been running for some years started again this season.

Crops Never Better, Say Farmers.

Peterboro' is about the northwestern point of the eastern Ontario dairy district. Here, as nearly all the crops were "never better," to use the words of the farmers themselves. To several sections of the county pure bred dairy and stock-raising are the leading lines, but in part of the county the dairyman is strong. All of these are prosperous. The "city" of Campbellford is "dairy" nearly altogether. There is a Cheese Board there, but there is also a big condensary, some lay and corn, are good. A poor field is the exception.

Holstein Still the Favorite.

Some farmers and others claim that the Holstein cow will lose some of the present popularity when the fat-test starts paying by test. Holstein men, however, claim they are not at all afraid. A good Holstein will be generally thought not as rich as that of the Ayrshire of Jersey. However there is a large number of them that she is the money-maker in sending milk to cheese factories when at present "will milk looks silky," as for as the payment is concerned. The Holstein men say they have been breeding for cows that give rich milk. They declare that they are convinced that it will test as much butter fat per cow, anyway, as the others The Holstein is the great favorite in the west, as she is in the west, and few others are seen in the fields

Move Champion Milkers

Mr. F. B. Madley, of Frankford, who has brook some of the greatest producing Holstein cows in the world, told The Globe that conditions were never better. He has more champions which he is bringing out to show the world what can be done in breeding for milk alone. Mr. Madley has also Canada's best bull, a record breaker last. It was necessary to get young grows seed, he stated. Some of the other large herds are in the same light.

The general crops in Hastings and Peterborough and surrounding counties are unusual. They haven't been better in years. Prices for everything is good, although the greatest thing here of course is the cheese prices.

Cows Kept in East

For some years the country has been scoured for dairy cows which were bought and shipped into western Ontario. This year there has not been a cow sent out.

"We couldn't get them at any price now," said one farmer to The Globe. To-day, if she is any good at all, is making her proprietor money now, and as long as she makes money the two will not part company. In the future, if they could get more, most farmers in this country would get them.

Oxford and Perth counties have the highest standard in this part, and this eastern section being in the same business, looks good too. There will be a lot of money left with the farmers this year from the cheese factories, and the heavy crops will insure a good return next autumn and winter.

Seymour Power Company Warned

In an address at London, Ont., Sir Adam Beck made a statement that practically gave the Seymour Power Co. a last notice that if they did not get busy and develop their property now no time would be lost by the commission in proceeding into direct competition.

"We are prepared to state to-night that two weeks ago we made an offer to these interests which are contained in the form of a letter.

"A London offer was made to this company, but I have reason to believe that it will be refused. I believe the companies on the commission will concur with me when I say that it is the last and final offer, and what I say that is finally refused we will go to the Minister of Railways and Canals and ask for these water powers we have been promised on the Trent Canal, dam 6 and 9, from which we can develop from 15,000 to 20,000 horse-power for the people in that portion of the province."

Exciting Experience

Mr. John Watt, Wellington, had an exciting experience the other day. A young lad visiting at Mr. Watt's home had been permitted to drive the horse rake. He had about completed raking a field when the rake collided with a fence and frightened the horses, a team of colts. The horses ran away. To stop them Mr. Watt got in front of the horses, but they would not be over him. He escaped serious injury by the wheel striking a cock of hay which smashed him from the rake.—Picton Times.

SELECT MEDICINE CAREFULLY

Purgatives are dangerous. They gripe, produce bad pains and fear the constipated condition worse. Physicians say the most ideal laxative is Dr. Hamilton's Pills of Mandrake and Butternut; they are exceedingly mild, composed only of health-giving vegetable extracts. Dr. Hamilton's Pills mean activity in the bowels, strengthen the stomach, and purify the blood. For constipation, bad headache, biliousness and disordered digestion no medicine on earth makes a comparable cure to-day as Dr. Hamilton's Pills. Try a 25c. box yourself.

Most infants's inmates by worms, which cause much suffering, and if not promptly dealt with may cause constitutional weaknesses difficult to remedy. Miller's Worm Powders will clear the stomach and bowels of worms and will so act upon the system that there will be no recurrence of the trouble. And not only this, but they will repair the injuries to the organs that worms cause and restore them to soundness.

Duke of Connaught

Made Trip in Kingston Over C.P.R. On a Special Train.

Kingston, July 31.—The special train over the C. P. R. with the coaches Canada and Cornwall, conveying the Duke of Connaught, arrived in the city early Thursday morning from Ottawa, and the train was left standing in the yards near the round house until 9.40 o'clock, when it was pulled into the station. Very few people knew at what time His Highness would reach Kingston, and as a result there were few people at the station when he arrived.

A few minutes after the train reached the station the Duke appeared in military uniform, and was met by Col. T. D. R. Hemming, officer commanding Barriefield Camp. After a few minutes chat on the station platform, they got into an automobile which was in waiting, and left for Barriefield Camp.

Story of Two Montreal Lacrosse Players

The name of Jeremiah Bernard Kenna in the casualty lists probably conveyed little to the majority of the hundreds of thousands of Canadians who scan the tragic column day by day, but as Jerry Kenna, first of the Shamrocks, and later of the Montreal club, he was known to many lacrosse fans in Toronto. He was killed in action on May 24th, and on the previous day, another well-known Montreal stick-handler from the Nationals, "Bobby" Ladercoute had fallen on the field.

Both joined the 23rd Westmount Battalion, which left Montreal in September, and after a few weeks training in England they were transferred to the 3rd battalion at the front. To replace men lost in the heavy fighting in April. They were among the first of the reinforcements to give up their lives, Kenna only having time to get to the front quickly that he purposely selected the corps which was likely to leave the soonest for the fighting line. Ladercoute died only the day before the news of his fate reached Montreal. Ladercoute had already signed an experience of wartime conditions before leaving Canada, for, while doing ancitry duty on the Grand Trunk bridge at Trenton last September, he was shot in the arm by two men lurking in the shadows. As soon as he recovered from this wound, he volunteered for active service.

Kenna's death recalled to his friends in Montreal an odd little story connected with his arrival in England. As the ship bearing the 23rd Westmounts entered the English port, another steamer going south passed them, and greetings could be exchanged. Leaping to the rail, Kenna yelled to the captain of the departing vessel:

"Are you going to Canada?"

"Yes," was the laconic answer.

"Then tell all the boys in Canada that Jerry Kenna is safe and well."

"I'll do that," called back the Canadian as the ships drew apart, but with little expectation of meeting anyone interested in so vague and general a message.

The outward bound steamer was one of the first to come up the river to Montreal in April. As the opposite came in sight she remembered the Canadian soldier who had hailed him and he told the incident jokingly to the first man he met, one of the customs employees.

"What was his name?" asked the customs man.

"Jerry Kenna," replied the captain. "Do you know him?"

"Mag's the time I've bodychecked him," said the customs man, who happened to be Hoddy Finlayson, one of the most famous of the lacrosse veterans.—Saturday Night.

Picton Man Had Very Close Call

Mr. H. B. Tully, of Picton was severely burned on the hands and arms on Tuesday afternoon. He was taking some some gasoline for domestic purposes from the Quinte Garage. He had the fluid in an open pail. He got into the car intending to drive around the corner to his home on Mary street. Realizing the chance he was taking he decided to leave the car and carry the gasoline home. In the hurry of the car some of the gasoline slopped over the hood and ran down to the exhaust pipe the heat of which caught it. Before he could throw the pail out the flames had reached it and his hands and arms suffered. His fingers were terribly burned and his clothing took fire. The men at the garage were quickly on the spot with sand and the flames were smothered. The car was not seriously damaged but Mr. Tully's injuries will lay him up for some time He had been enjoying his holidays for the past few weeks—Times.

Chicago, July 31.—Tragedy again has settled upon the Plamondon family, Chicago pioneers. This time the victim is Mrs. E. K. Plamondon, of 4,533 Jackson Boulevard, one of seven members of the family who were on the Eastland. All of the others were saved. The Plamondon calendar of tragedy now reads:

The Eastland disaster, Mrs. E. K. Plamondon perished.

Plamondon, 4,132 Indiana avenue, were thrown into the water when the Eastland capsized. Mrs. E. K. Plamondon was drowned. E. K. Plamondon's two daughters, Irene and Marie, are at St. Luke's Hospital. The remainder of the party went to their homes.

American Arrested

For Attempting To Leave Germany Without Passport.

Washington, July 31.—Harry L. Wilson, of Oregon, clerk to the American Consul-General at Berlin, has been arrested by the German authorities on the Danish frontier on the technical charge of attempting to leave Germany without a passport, it was learned at the State Department today. Wilson is relating it to President Wilson.

Wilson's real offence, it is understood, was issuing a passport to an Englishman as an American citizen, thereby enabling him to evade the German authorities. Wilson is not immune from German law, and the offence is believed to be grave. The State Department is investigating.

Idiot Regains Mind

Afflicted Youth Is Cured by Patch on Skull.

Lexington, Ky., July 31.—As a result of a trephining operation performed on him, Matt Byrne, an eighteen-year-old boy of Athol, Ky., has been reclaimed from idiocy.

When but four old Byrne suffered a fall, which is now known to have fractured his skull, and from that time on his mind has been that of a child mentally, amusing himself with strings, toys, etc. His right eye looked upward, giving him an expression of constant surprise.

Following the operation, which was performed at Jackson, the young man's mind has become brighter and his eye has been restored to its normal position.

These Pills Cure Rheumatism

To the many who suffer from rheumatism a trial of Parmelee's Vegetable Pills is recommended. They have pronounced action upon the liver and kidneys and by regulating the action of these organs act as an alterative in preventing the admixture of uric acid and blood that causes this painful disorder. They must be taken according to directions and used steadily and they will speedily give evidence of their beneficial effects.

Kultur Again Asserts Itself

Rotterdam, July 31.—Soon the people were the national colors on Belgium's national day the following proclamation by the German Governor has been posted in the streets of the town: "The way in which a part of the people behaved on July 21 and the way in which they wore the Belgian colors compel me to issue the following order: I forbid from today the wearing of Belgian colors under a penalty of five years' imprisonment."

Thrilling Story of a German Spy

Who Terrorized Campbellford.

Wild rumors were prevalent in Stirling on Friday afternoon as to the appearance here and mysterious disappearance of a German spy.

The story as related on Friday afternoon by an imaginative knight of the Grip was indeed a thrilling one A suspicious looking individual was seen in the vicinity and on his approaching the town was passed under arrest by our ever-vigilant constable and his grip searched. The contents proved that the suspicions were well founded for they consisted of no less than sixteen sticks of dynamite with all the necessary wires to produce a mighty explosion. It also contained a plan of the town, of the Dickson Bridge Works where shells are being made, and of the office of the Trent Valley Woolen Mill where large war orders for clothing material for the Army are being filled. The arrest was made, the spy incarcerated in the local gaol and the grip safely locked in Magistrate Payne's office.

On the following morning, when Constable Linn went to the gaol to see how the prisoner had passed the night, to his surprise, found the cell empty and no trace as to where his man had gone.

Upon going to the magistrate's office it was found that the grip had also mysteriously disappeared in the night. Then came the discovery and the rapid progress of the report soon created intense excitement. Automobiles were freely put at the command of the anxiously searching parties were soon formed and a determined effort was made to locate the mysterious and elusive stranger. Excitement was at white heat over our imaginative friend, finding the business men of Campbellford in no mood for entertaining the subject of any of his tempting discounts, boarded the afternoon train where he hopped on the platform at Stirling and landed in Stirling where he entertained his friends with the story of the thrilling events just now taking place here.

Up to the present no further particulars are these. On Wednesday afternoon Constable Linn was compelled to arrest a well known citizen on a charge of being drunk and disorderly. Upon being searched at the police station a large sum of money was found in his possession. Constable Linn was compelled to arrest a well known citizen on a charge of being drunk and disorderly. Automobile Was Totally Destroyed

The Midland Free Press says: Considerable excitement and commotion was caused in King Street Saturday night when an auto car belonging to W. Brownlee took fire and was totally destroyed. The fire appears to have occurred in a somewhat mysterious way. The owner ordered a long trip the following day and had placed an extra supply of gasoline in the car, which he had stored in a five gallon can in front of the driving seat. It appears that instead of having a cork in the can, waste had been used as a substitute and opposite the position of the driver, who was smoking a cigar, dropped some of the hot ashes from it on the waste, causing immediate ignition. Mr. Brownlee jumped from the car, but not before his clothing had taken fire, and before the flames could be smothered out by people on the street, he was quite badly burned. Strange to say the burning car continued its course down King street until it reached "Imperial" Laundry down-town office, where it crashed into the delivery car belonging to the laundry company, which it partially wrecked.

By this time the whole of the upper part of the car was on fire, and by the time a chemical extinguisher was secured from the fire hall and put in operation there was nothing left but the frame and gear, the latter suffered little. Although the fire did not reach the gasoline tank which contained the regular supply, or there might have been a bad explosion. The loss to Messrs. Bowman and Wass will be considerable.

Smallpox Cases at Beaverton

Advocate.—Several cases of a very mild form of smallpox developed in this locality during the past two weeks, the infection having been introduced from Toronto. The Health authorities of both the Township and village promptly got busy and isolated all possible carriers, and notified the Provincial Board of Health, whose inspector came to town Saturday, and after a careful scrutinizing of the matter reported that every possible precaution had been taken to prevent a spreading of the disease, of which no new cases have developed.

Hydro to Take Over Healey Falls Power

The Peterboro Review on Monday published the following: Telegraphic despatches say that Sir Adam Beck announces that he will give the Seymour Power Company just two weeks more to accept Hydro's offer for the Healey Falls dam, built and owned by the company. At the expiration of that time he will take over the dam. Unlike Burleigh Falls, this property was developed by the company at its own expense entirely, but no private corporation can be allowed to stand in the way of the people's interests and the people must have this power. Twenty-five thousand horsepower for electric railway and power purposes all low rates can be needed, and this new nulve is by no means too early. It will disappoint speculators and those who believe in private ownership for their own good, but it is a good thing for this district as a whole.

Sad Drowning Accident at Port Hope

The first drowning accident of the season occurred here on Saturday afternoon, when Oliver Moffet, the ten year old son of Mr. Oliver H. Moffet, met death. The little fellow had been learning to swim lately and becoming over confident, jumped into the east pier where another small boy how he could swim. It is supposed he became entangled in the weeds and was unable to free himself. The body was recovered in about twenty minutes by Captain John McMahon, but all efforts to revive life were unavailing.

The little fellow was of a bright, cheery disposition and his tragic death comes as a great blow to his parents who have the heartfelt sympathy of all in their hour of deep trial. The funeral took place this afternoon and was largely attended.—Guide.

A Little Boy Shot

In the Foot While Playing With a Rifle.

While playing with a rifle at Barker's Point, on the Rideau, Saturday evening, William Godwin, the 11 year-old son of Enoch Godwin, jr., Pine street, accidently shot himself in the left foot. The bullet passed through the child's instep and caused a considerable quantity of blood to be lost before arriving at the office of Dr. T. G. Bogart, where the wound was attended to. The little Godwin boy is a plucky little chap, and although he was feeling the effects of the shot on Monday, he was nevertheless up and around.—Kingston Whig.

Mystery at Buckhorn

74-Year-Old American Prominent Citizen Disappears.

The Buckhorn mystery deepens in connection with the disappearance of Van Sise, the seventy-four-year-old American army pensioner, who mysteriously disappeared recently, ostensibly to see his daughter, Mrs. Hynes. He went to the home of Mr. Bishop but left it suddenly a three o'clock one morning, and that was the last seen of him so far as known.

Whether the disappearance will turn out serious or not cannot be forecasted, but it certainly seems strange. It is one that should be investigated to the high degree of certainty. It is understood that the department of provincial police are taking up the matter with a view of starting an investigation.—Port Hope Guide.

Caught in Weeds and Had Narrow Escape

Mr. Richard Whitehouse, representative of the Nordheimer Piano Co., had a narrow escape from drowning while bathing at Little Lake, near the East City, one afternoon last week. He in some manner became entangled in some weeds and was unable to free himself. The weeds were drawn around him, waded out into the water up to her neck and pushed a plank out to Mr. Whitehouse, succeeding in rescuing him from his predicament.—Peterboro Examiner.

Caught a Turtle

One day last week a couple of campers, becoming dissatisfied with the fishing in Mollie's Bay, decided to seek new fields. Accordingly filled with stories of monster bass in the bay that lakes above Crookston the campers one went "Overland" to Snake Lake. The last half mile was traversed through muck, mud and slime, and the campers arrived a trifle the worse for wear. In fact, however, the goal was reached and for two hours the denizens of Snake Lake were offered the most dazzling array of food ever displayed on those waters. The fish, however, did not bite and the only "big one" to strike was a monster turtle. These gentlemen have now decided that in making preparations for a full course dinner soup must be the first consideration.—Madoc Review.

Hail Storm Did Damage About Campbellford

On Thursday afternoon of last week a heavy hail storm visited this section. The storm lasted about half-an-hour and the ground was covered with hailstones. Fortunately the storm was merely local and did not cover a very wide area in its sweep across the country. Campbellford seems to have been in the storm centre, little hail having fallen a mile east or west of the town limits. Mr. J. A. O'Connor states that hailstones could be seen at his place on Friday afternoon at five o'clock.

The storm did considerable damage to gardens and must also have been disastrous to grain crops that happened to be in its path.

Storms of similar nature are report ed to have occurred in other districts. We are informed that in a section of country north of Norwood, after a storm hail lay on the ground two inches deep.—Herald.

Rev. W.G. Clarke Has Large Congregations

Mr. W. P. Dale, Treasurer Bowmanville Methodist Church Official Board, reports that during the four Sundays of July the regular offerings of the congregation have exceeded the same month last year by over twenty-five per cent. Rev. Wilmot G. Clarke has been favored with splendid audiences at every service. Sunday last a large number partook of Sacrament the pastor being assisted by Rev. E. A. Tonkin.—Bowmanville Statesman.

Safe to Travel on Railways

It is pretty safe to travel on railways nowadays, according to the railway Commission's report upon the number of railway accidents during the past year. The chances against any particular passenger being killed on the railways last year were 1,449,866 to one. Of 46,185,968 people who travelled on railways, only 31 were killed and 339 injured. This does not apply to railwaymen who swelled the number of killed to 594.

Aviation Whiskey

The Cobourg Star says:—For about two weeks a drunk named Kelly from Colborne, has been hanging around Cobourg, drinking heavily So much booze did he consume that several times he has had the 'snakes.' He was staying at the Albion Hotel and on Saturday morning he evidently had a bad attack. He jumped out of the third storey window of the hotel to the ground, a distance of about thirty feet alighting on his back. Later he jumped through the same window, jumped up and ran up Division street, screeching at the top of his voice. Night Watchman Rourke and Albert Elliott endeavored in an automobile, overhauling him at the G.T.R. subway. He was taken to gaol and placed in a padded cell, and given treatment for the "blues." We have frequently heard of "squirrel," the kind that makes a man want to climb a tree, but this is the first time that the aviation brand, the kind that makes a man think he can fly, has been tried out in Cobourg.

Stealing Milk

Parties pasturing cows in Mathison's field south of the tracks, are complaining bitterly of the fact that their cows are being milked by some unknown, and the name of one has been given them as the guilty one. Prosecution, we understand, will follow should the offence be repeated. —Havelock Standard.

A Prize Bass

A small mouth black bass that should about capture the Toronto Star's prize-not for the largest fish caught in Ontario waters, was landed last week at Belmont Lake by Mr. S. T. Wilson of town. The big chap weighed 5 pounds and 14 ounces also measured 22½ inches long and 17¾ ins. around. The standard is having the big fish mounted and it will be seen in our window next week.—Havelock Standard.

HOW WOMEN AVOID OPERATIONS

By Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Cleveland, Ohio:—"My left side seemed so sore for several years that I expected to have to undergo an operation, but the first bottle I took of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound relieved me of the pains in my side and I continued its use until I became regular and free from pains. I had asked several doctors if there was anything I could take to help me and they said there was nothing that they knew of. I am thankful for such a good medicine and will always give it the highest praise."—Mrs. C. H. Gerrette, 7305 Madison Ave., Cleveland, Ohio.

Had a Narrow Escape

Brockville Man Tells How He Avoided the German Pirates.

How he was saved from being killed when the steamship Anglo-Californian was shelled by a German submarine on July 4th, is told in a letter by Leonard Kenville, Brockville, son of Mr. and Mrs. James Kenville, Brockville, who shipped on the Anglo-Californian at Montreal as a horseman.

Writing from Cardiff, Wales, under date of July 11, young Kenville gives details of his narrow escape from the German murderers. When the shells were coming too fast he took to the water and remained there until picked up by a motor launch. "I was about 150 feet from the German submarine and I thought they would blow me to bits," he says. "I, however, 'one fellow who I came over with from Montreal got killed and my other pal saved. Oh, we had some time on the 4th of July."

The Anglo-Californian is to remain in dry dock at Cardiff for ten days before she will be ready for return. Kenville is bringing home a piece of German shell which he found on the steamship.

A Strong Swimmer

A new record for time and distance swimming on the St. Lawrence river was hung up recently by Edwin C. Johnson, the exhibition dancer at the Murray Hill Hotel on Murray Isle.

Mr. F. Johnson swam from Murray Isle, by a circuitous route, to Thousand Island Park, covering three miles in all, landing in just 58 minutes straight. He used the single English over the entire distance.

Mr. Johnson hails from Brooklyn, and is considered one of the best swimmers on the river.—Kingston Standard.

Got Cold Feet

A court-martial will be held in the near future on a private in the 34th Battalion. This private was selected as one of the last draft for overseas service but at the last minute his nerve failed him and departed for home. The officers are highly indignant that such a thing should happen and bring disgrace on the battalion. It is the first case that has occurred; and came as a surprise as every other man was anxious to go overseas while this man was not. All soldiers detest the most, a coward. He will likely be given a good sentence and then be discharged.—Kingston Whig.

Queen's Hospital Likely to go to the Dardanelles

A cablegram to Dean Connell from England states that the War Office desires to send Queen's University Hospital to the Dardanelles. The work now being done by the hospital at Folkestone is most satisfactory. The staff has perfected its organization and is giving such excellent service that the authorities wish to make special use of it in the operations at the Dardanelles."

Is Maj. Bolster a Prisoner of War in Germany

An Oshawa man, Bugler Townsend, who was invalided home from the front stopped over here between trains on Tuesday morning. He was wounded in a rather peculiar way. A German shell struck the pile of sand bags in their trench and topped them over on him. His right leg was crushed and is a bad handicap just now, but he will be supplied by the Government with support. While here Townsend, who was in the second battalion with Major Bolster, stated that Major Bolster was a war prisoner in Germany. He was wounded in the head and legs.

Snake Stole Eggs

Mr. John W. Johnson informs us that for some time past he had been missing his eggs and was of the opinion that someone was stealing them. He was about to take steps to catch the thief when one day Miss Johnston found in the henhouse a large snake. The reptile was speedily despatched and the egg crop is turning out as usual. The hens' nests were at least three feet above the ground, but the traditional wisdom of the serpent stood him in good stead and he managed to get the eggs.—Campbellford Herald.

Weak, Tired, Depressed

That is the Usual Condition of Persons Afflicted With Anaemia

Anaemia is the medical term for poor, watery blood. It comes on from a variety of causes, such as lack of exercise, bad air, improperly ventilated rooms or workshops, poor digestion, etc. The chief symptoms are extreme paleness of the face and gums, rapid breathing and palpitation of the heart on slight exertion, headaches, dizziness and a tendency to hysteria, swelling of the feet and ankles, loss of appetite for food. All these symptoms may not be present, but any two, three or more anaemia which should be promptly treated with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Pink Pills make new, rich blood which stimulates and strengthens every organ of the body. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have made thousands of cases of anaemia in active and strong. The following is one of the latest: Mrs. Wm. Hamilton, wife of Rev. W. R. Phillips, Princetown, Ont., says: "Some years ago, while living in Ottawa, I had a severe fall a victim of anaemia. The usual symptoms were present and I became but a shadow of my former self. My appetite was poor, and the former pure, of many years' experience, tried all their knowledge suggested a change, but all to no avail. At last I was induced to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and before I had taken two boxes did their best for me, but without avail, so continued gradual decline and death was drawing near. Then I was induced to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Before I had taken one box I felt a change for the better, and by the time I had taken six boxes I was a well woman. I am now in the best of health, and can do my own housework, which for a long time was impossible. I am sure Dr. Williams' Pink Pills saved my life, and I cannot say too much in their praise."

Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

RECRUITING CAMPAIGN LAUNCHED IN KETCHESON WARD LAST EVENING

Attendance Rather Small, but Efforts Will be Redoubled – Rousing Addresses by Number of Speakers–How Belleville Measures up in Percentage of Recruits–The Need of the Hour.

"I do not know what has come over the boys of this city of late years. It is not cowardice. But whoever does not answer the call now, will regret it to the end of his days. And not only the boys, but the fathers and mothers, who refuse their consent. I believe the blame is with the parents"—Lt.-Col. S. S. Lazier.

"You men should be the proudest in Canada today to know that you have taken upon you the responsibility of saying, 'You are proud of it. And what is more, we are proud of you"—Mr. E. Guss Porter, K.C., M.P., to recruits last evening.

"I have the utmost respect for the men who are volunteering. They are not men of means. The men who should come forward are not answering. What would happen if a German army came to Belleville and an officer demanded the city's records and a tax on the threat of blowing up the city?"—Col. W. G. Ketcheson.

"After this war is over, there will be a great many who will regret all their lives that they did not enlist. Any mother will then realize that her son is marked for the rest of his life"—Capt. Dr. MacColl.

"It is too bad there are shirkers, but think of the other side! The pride of service! You men are not going to sacrifice, but to glory. The more there who go the sooner will the war end, and the fewer men will be slain. . . . I am sure Belleville will wake up. To you has been given the honor of initiating the recruiting movement"—Lt.-Col. W. N. Ponton K.C.

"There should be a meeting in every home in the city tomorrow. If we pledge ourselves to go into the work, uniting with sincerity we shall certainly succeed. We have got the work started. It has gone into our hearts, we will make of every one of you a recruiting sergeant or officer. . . . The men who should be instructed are the men who are not doing their duty"—J. P. Wills K.C.

A meeting the like of which has never been known in Belleville took place last evening in the High School auditorium. It was the opening gathering of the recruiting campaign in this city and was for the purpose of arousing interest in Ketcheson ward for some reason the fathers and mothers did not respond to the call of the chairman; perhaps the notice given was too short. That loyal band of musicians, Pipe Major Johnstone's pipe band did everything possible to arouse the public in the ward. They paraded to the armouries at 7.30, where about 36 recruits of the 15th and 69th regiments joined them, with Lt.-Col. Ketcheson and Lieut. Rogers of the 5th C.M.R. They marched through the streets of the ward playing Highland airs and arrived at the High School grounds about 8.10. There they rendered Scottish music and Pipe Major A. Johnstone played a pipe solo. Had it not been for the recruits, the gathering would have been a slim one and the speakers one and all referred to the condition of lack of interest.

Mr. J. F. Wills, K.C., chairman, called the meeting to order. "I regret," he said, "to see so few present. It is a sad thing that people are so thoughtless as to stay away from a meeting of such vast importance. The people may be indifferent but they will have to be stirred up. I am glad to see 50 stalwart men before me, volunteers to go and fight in our behalf." The chairman thanked Col. Ketcheson and Lieut. Rogers and the recruits for their attendance as well as the pipe band. On the platform with the chairman was Mr. E. Guss Porter, K.C., M.P., president of the Patriotic League, Lt.-Col. Lazier, Col. W. N. Ponton, Col. Ketcheson and Capt. Dr. MacColl.

Mrs. Wilmot sang "The Men of Harlech" in a most stirring fashion and was roundly applauded for the excellence of her effort.

"I must express my deep disappointment at the manner in which the residents of Ketcheson Ward have failed to respond to the call of the meeting" said Mr. E. Guss Porter, president. "It is a regrettable feature that the lady citizens believed to be patriotic should display so little interest in the young men who are going to the front. I hope it will be the last occasion during the campaign that I shall have to make such remarks.

"I am pleased to know that the ladies have been taking a great interest in the work, I regret to state I cannot say as much of the men of the city, the people who call themselves men. The good ladies have been working day and night, soliciting contributions in stores and fine weather, and what have the men done? Put their hands into their pockets and given a dollar.

"It is a shame, it is a disgrace to the men of this city, I am willing to take my share of the blame. I say this, every man should assume his responsibility on such an occasion as this."

CAMPAIGN MUST SUCCEED.

Mr. Porter hoped he could impress the necessity of success in efforts in recruiting in Belleville. "I am discouraged at the outset, but while discouraged, I am not downed. I am determined to redouble my efforts and when we have another meeting, I have no doubt our efforts will be attained.

"To you men, men I see before me here, have fell the necessity I have spoken of. The British Empire has enjoyed the distinction for over 100 years of being the greatest nation on the face of the earth, socially, financially, territorially, the greatest nation in population, the greatest in development in education, the sciences and arts and more important than all these, the British Empire is the greatest in the world, in its effort to establish the principles of freedom and liberty and by those principles to enlighten the whole world. Canada occupies the brightest place in the crown of the Empire, the greatest position outside the British Isles in development. A year ago without provocation our Empire was attacked and was forced into a fight to defend its honor. No more noble cause could be put before a nation to fight for—than that of honor.

"You men should be the proudest in Canada today to know that you have taken up the call (cheers). You are proud of it. You desire to be proud and what is more, we are proud of you. When a man surrenders comforts and takes his life in his hands, he deserves every credit and honor. I can only hope you will all return wearing the emblem of honor pinned on your breast by our noble King. God bless you." (applause)

WHAT IS TROUBLE WITH OUR YOUTH?

"The native born Canadians have not been responding as rapidly as they should," said Col. S. S. Lazier, explaining the cause of the ward meeting. The need of active recruiting is felt by all. Those present have either their sons at the front or they have none to send. Col. Lazier congratulated the young recruits before him. "No part of the civilized world is more interested, boys," said he, "than our own beloved Canada. If we do not succeed, we become a German colony." I congratulate you heartily, boys, and I hope you will all come back. If we could recruit 500,000 volunteers, it would have a great moral effect. I hope the war will be over, boys, before you can reach the front, but I am sure if you do arrive at the front, you will give a good account of yourselves."

"I do not know what has come over the boys of the city lately. It is not cowardice. But whoever does not answer the call now, will regret it to the end of his days. And not only the boys, but the fathers and mothers, who refuse their consent. I believe most of the blame is with the parents.

"I am glad none can in future days say of you, "There is a stain." The finger of scorn will be pointed at the shirker in after days.

"I hope that though this beginning is not very successful this city will see a stimulation of interest."

MEN OF MEANS NOT VOLUNTEERING.

Col. Ketcheson, was greeted with cheers by the soldiers and citizens. He had been most pleased to bring his recruits. "I have respect for the men who are volunteering. They are not men of means. One poor fellow came in tired and blank with travel. He was undersized, but was accepted. The men who should come forward are not answering. What would happen if a German army came to Belleville and a general officer demanded the city's records and a tax on the threat 'If you do not, I will blow up its city?' The men of means who have all at stake and everything to fight for are not responding.

"I'm surprised that the citizens of Belleville are not answering. I'm a farmer by profession. I have a good home. I have everything I require. But here I am working night and day for seven months.

"Our regiment has turned out 565 men and 25 of them are officers. There would be no prouder day than when I have a thousand such men. (cheers) It is the Canadian mother who will not let her son, or her husband go. The only reason I can see is that our people are not used to seeing our sons go forth to battle. But in England, some members of families are always on service.

I believe it is my blood. My grandfather fought in the war of 1812. Col. Ketcheson referred to Capt. H. D. Paxton, who has written him that the Canadians at the front were equal to the best British troops. "And I believe before me will be just as good." (Applause)

Mrs. Wilmot sang "Up From Boulevard", Mrs. A. E. MacColl acted as accompanist.

DEMONSTRATION OF RECRUITING

"That gives you an idea of what the Belleville boys are doing", said Capt. Dr. MacColl, after he had asked the Belleville born of his recruits to stand up; only 5 out of the 50 had arisen. Only one half of the recruits were Canadian born.

"Something has got to be done. I'm not surprised about Ketcheson Ward. Very few have gone. You could almost count them on your hand.

M. A. H. Walsh, "No, no, almost 30 have gone from this ward."

Everbody shall have an interest. We have about 200 short in this district and Ketcheson and another regiment has to be formed.

After the war is over there will be a great many who will regret it all their lives. Any mother will then realize that her son will be marked for the rest of his life.

PAY, ALLOWANCES, PENSIONS

Capt. MacColl gave a short abstract of the conditions of pay, allowances and pensions of privates and Officers enlisted in the C. E. F. The soldier receives $1.10 per day and is provided with all necessaries. "N. C. O's, receive up to $3 per day according to rank. A married man must assign one half to four fifths of his pay to his wife and adding the government sends a separation allowance to her of $20 per month. A similar salary dependent on any unmarried son is entitled to a separation allowance together with whatever he assigns of his pay. A soldier's wife should get monthly $20.50 to $16.50.

The Patriotic Fund provides the following allowances through local committees—

Wife or mother solely dependent $10.00 per month.

Every child from 10 years to 15 years $7.50 per month.

Every child from 5 to 10 years $4.50 per month.

Every child under five years $3.00.

To sum up a soldier's wife who has no other means of support will receive $20 separation per month, $20 government part of pay $16.50 to $20.50, patriotic fund $10 per month, total $46.50 to $50.50. With three children of varied ages the grants would amount to $61.50 to $71.50 per month.

The total amount for a solely dependent mother of an only unmarried son may be $30 to $50.

Pensions range from $75 to $24 per year. If attendant is needed the rate is increased one third. A married man if totally disabled may draw for wife $11 per month, for each child $5 per month. A widowed mother of a totally disabled soldier may draw the same as a wife.

Pensions rates for widows are $22 per month. For life, and for each child $5 per month.

There were two available boys on Queen street. They are on active service. Drive. The rest are under 19 years. In two years there will be half a company of them", said Mr. Wills. Still there is not enough interest manifested.

"I have kept faith with the heritage, Canada can say", declared Col. Ponton. Because of the Canadians' work, recruiting is growing in Canada. We are now realizing it is a grim struggle for our brave and dear ones, for the staggering flag and for what the flag stands for. George slew the dragon but you will slay the dragon that besathes neighbours gas. St. Patrick banished snakes from Ireland and you will banish the snakes of barbarism from Europe. And St. Andrew must not and cannot be put. You will be the inspiring of Down, you men in uniform.

Lieut. Rogers spoke of the coming of King and Country and their friendship. It is not for what we receive, but what we give. The honor side. The pride of having served. It was present at the battle of Berlin, when the Union Jack floated over the citadel of Berlin", will be the proudest remark in days to come.

"You are not going to sacrifice but to glory. The more men who go to the scene will the war end and the fewer men will be slain.

Col. Ponton produced a number of recruiting posters he issued by the British Parliamentary Committee. "I am sure Belleville will wake up. To you is given the honor of initiating the movement.

"Fill up he ranks but pile up the numbers." "Take up the Sword of Justice," were two inspiring messages.

"It's our flag, fight for it, work for it", read another.

That is the note from now on till the end of the war. The fact that the solemn league and covenant." It is to be accomplished by fighting men. That's what Belleville will see as a result of the campaign.

Miss Anna Pearce sang the song "What will the answer be?". Miss Elliott was accompanist.

Mr. Wills said "We have got the ball started. It has gone into your hearts. We will make of every one of you a recruiting sergeant or officer. We must go to the ladies and get them to say 'no shirker will ever receive any attention from us.' The men who should be ostracized are the men who are not doing their duty.

There should be a meeting in every home in the city tomorrow. If we pledge ourselves to go into the recruiting with sincerity we will surely succeed."

The meeting broke up with the National Anthem and cheers for the recruits.

It will Cover a Cold—Colds are the commonest ailments of mankind and if neglected may lead to serious conditions. Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil will relieve the bronchial passages of inflamation speedily and thoroughly and will strengthen them against subsequent attack. And as it eases the inflamation it will stop the cough because it allays all irritation in the throat—Try it and prove it.
